into the wilderness, and prayed." When many sought Him, He had more business with His Father than at other times. The people came to Him "to hear, and to be healed," and "on a certain day, as He was teaching," it is expressly stated that "the power of the Lord was present to heal them" (or "with Him to heal," R. V.). It was at this very time that "men bring on a bed a man that was palsied." (R. V.) The house was filled, the approaches were thronged, numbers were hanging on the words of Him who "spake as never man spake." They would not, or could not, give way to admit the sick man and his bearers to the presence of Jesus. But the four men who carried him were not to be foiled. They had come to bring their sick friend in contact with Jesus—they knew there was no other help for him, and so they resorted to an unusual mode of procedure. Ceremony is all right in its way, but when a man is sick or dying, when his life is at stake, ceremony has to be waived. They conveyed him by some means to the house-top, and having uncovered the roof and made a considerable aperture, which let the light of day down upon the crowd beneath, they put cords to the mattress on which the paralytic lay, and let him slowly down over the people's heads, then lower and lower, until gradually he found himself just at the feet of Jesus. It was a mute appeal, but irresistible. They made no apology: the right place for one who was bound was at the feet of the Deliverer. What was going to happen? The persevering friends looked down from above, expecting to see some miracle of healing, and that all the pains they had taken should not be in vain. But the man asked for nothing, and Jesus did not at first heed him. Those eyes which search the hearts and try the reins of the children of men, detected a disease far more malignant, far more deep-seated, than the palsy from which he suffered. "When He saw their faith He said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee."

"To Hear, and to be Healed."

What does an unsaved sinner need first to hear? Surely the message of pardon. And Jesus hastens to give this gift of gifts, this blood-bought pardon, to poor sinners. So deeply in earnest is He to forgive, that it was only "when He had by Himself purged our sins" that He could sit down "on the right hand of the Majesty on high." (Heb. 1:3.) No rest for Jesus till He had purchased pardon for the sinner. Oh the wondrous wealth of His forgiving love! Only as the Holy Ghost makes known to us our sins do we see the depth of His pardon. He tells us to forgive a brother who asks pardon seventy times seven times. But He exceeds even this. "Thy sins be forgiven thee!" What then? No condemnation? "There is therefore, now, no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." What a thrill of life from above enters an immortal soul when first the voice of Jesus speaks forgiveness! This the palsied man now knew.

The healing had commenced deep down in his soul. The palsied spirit was healed, the palsied body would soon follow. Oh how often is the healing of the body retarded because the purpose for which God permitted the sickness has not been accomplished. Eternal life is of more value than life in this world; the immortal soul of more value than the perishing body! God's order was observed here, "to hear and to be healed." God's promises of healing are always more or less connected with hearing His voice. "If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in His sight, and wilt give ear to His commandments, and keep all His statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee which I have brought upon the Egyptians, for I am the Lord that healeth thee." (Ex. 15:26; also 23:20-25; Deut. 7:12-15.)

There were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, who, hearing of the wonderful awakening which was taking place in Galilee, were come out of every town of "that province, and out of Judea,"

To Investigate

the manifestations of power of which they had heard. They did not come to learn, but to patronize, or to criticise, as occasion might be. Men who are wise in their own conceits cannot learn. They assume beforehand that they know all which is to be known, and, therefore, they approach every subject with suspicion. Oh how few of us have learned the lesson of the Child Jesus, to hear and to ask questions! The scribes and Pharisees "began to reason." Instead of being awed at the presence of God in their midst, they were so puffed up with self-conceit that they were glad to find something to which they might raise objection, "Who is this which speaketh blasphemies? Who can forgive sins but God alone?" The words were not spoken, but the Heart-Searcher "perceived their thoughts," and before He wrought any other miracle He shewed them that they were in the presence of a Master from whom they had no power to hide anything. "He, answering, said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts? Whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say, Rise up and walk?" A simple question, but one which exposed their powerlessness. In their hearts they had judged the Teacher in whose presence they were. He proposed material things as in spiritual things. If by His word He could make a paralyzed man walk, then they must know that by His word He had authority to forgive sins also. Thus He said, "But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins (He said unto the sick of the palsy), I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go into thine house." Every eye was on the prostrate man, and, in the presence of them all, "immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God." The supercilious critics were silenced. Who dared to say that the man's sins were not forgiven? Who could deny that his sickness was departed? Who could question the power of Jesus? The man who had lain mute before the Lord was now praising Him for a double salvation! "And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, saying, We have seen strange things to-day." Jesus had conquered, sin was conquered, sickness was conquered, critics were conquered, the multitude was conquered! It was a bloodless victory, won by Him who forgiveth sins!

A Test of His Authority

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Snow, the Snow, Thank God for Every flake of it! for it has spoiled the prophecies of ten thousand pessimists, who declared that next summer the crops would be small because the fields this season had no enrichment from the crystals, and that next summer would be a time of great sickness because the frosts have failed to kill the microbes, and the ponds are not cured of their miasma. We are happy to inform our readers that we expect next summer will be unusually healthy, and that the crops will be unusually large. Anybody out yesterday or to-day in this region knows that the frosts have done their work, and the snows have pronounced their benediction. I guess the long procession of the seasons has not broken down, and that the promise is still good: "Seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." We change the Episcopal prayer-book only a little, so as to make it fit the occasion, and say, "From all grumblers and growlers and pessimists, good Lord, deliver us!"

The Race Question is Now Agitating the people North and South. This question will never be settled by the professional politicians. All they do, whenever they touch it, is to make people mad. Any course of treatment that accomplishes nothing but profanity is a failure. After partisans have fully demonstrated before heaven and earth their incapacity, the gospel of Jesus Christ will come in and settle the question, and settle it gloriously, and settle it aright. Evangelism is the catholicon for all disorders, social and political. The world will after awhile discover its own impotency, and say to the Church of God, "Take these perplexities of state and nation, and do that which we have failed to do." Then the negro question, and the Chinese question, and the labor question, and all the other agitations will be calmed into eternal righteousness. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men."

Practical Joking has of Late Been Overdone. For genuine and healthful sport we have keen appreciation, but we cannot see the fun in pulling a chair from under a person, who falls and has lifelong spinal disease as a consequence; nor in aiming a gun at some one in play, not knowing that death would ensue from the fact that it was unexpectedly loaded; nor in the advertisement of the marriage of persons who are only friends, thus embarrassing families; nor in any of those styles of fun which annoy or perplex or hurt any human being. Nay, a man who will kick a dog or tease a cat or maul a mouse has in him all the elements of a first-class devil. The only reason that such a man does not fully develop diabolism is suppressing circumstances. Kindness is heavenly, cruelty is hellish.

Abraham Lincoln, the Son of our Beloved Minister Plenipotentiary at the court of St. James, has expired at London. I was in his father's house in a day of January, when the family, for the first time in months, had begun to hope for the boy's recovery. Mr. Lincoln told me then that Mrs. Lincoln had not for twelve weeks been fifty feet away from the bedside of her suffering boy. How much the life of the father and mother were bound up in the life of that boy only those of us can realize who were in that house during the days of languishing. He was a splendid boy. His father with pride showed me his picture, and told me many things that revealed the fact that he was as brilliant as he was beautiful. While he was sitting up in bed, I was told by a friend of the family, young Abraham busied himself in translating French into Greek, and this at fifteen years of age. The departure of such a bright and promising nature is a grief immeasurable. Let all who know how to pray beseech the Lord for the comfort of the bereft father and mother. What an inscrutable Providence that so many young persons who were born amid all disadvantages, and to whom life promises nothing but struggle and hardship, should live on to fight a battle from cradle to grave, and that one to whom life promised everything of comfort and usefulness should be taken! Surely, our thoughts are not as God's thoughts, but God is always right, and we must postpone for explanation that which is now inexplicable.

Opposition to the Admission of Idaho and Wyoming to statehood has arisen from two strange sources. The admission of Idaho originates with the Mormons in the Territory. The new constitution contains a strong test clause, and the Mormons perceive that if Idaho becomes a State with that constitution they will be disfranchised. They are, therefore, opposing admission, and Mr. Springer, of Illinois, is championing their cause. On March 5 he raised the curious objection in Congress that it was wrong to sanction a constitution under which a large and important class of citizens are disfranchised because their religious views are called in question by people with no religious convictions of their own. He seemed to have forgotten that the quarrel with the Mormons is not on the question of religious belief, but because they will not obey the laws. Justice Field, of the United States Supreme Court, put the case on its merits in delivering the report of the court to the committee. He said: "If the Mormons or any other persons belong to an organization which teaches and encourages acts defined by law to be crimes, they should not be entrusted with the franchise. Whenever the Mormon Church abandons its advocacy and practice of polygamy and bigamy there is nothing in this clause to prevent its members from voting." In the case of Wyoming, the difficulty is that of woman suffrage. The beer drinkers of the Territory are afraid of the clause in the new constitution according the right of voting to women. They contend that women are friends of total abstinence, and if they are allowed to vote the new State may be deprived of beer.

The Pan-American Conference, Whose Work is of more momentous importance to the business interests of this country than is generally realized, is now considering a plan for communication by the Pacific with the various States represented in the Conference and the United States. At present there are ports in which seven hundred vessels in a year arrive for trading purposes, and of those scarcely one carries the flag of the United States. Nearly all of them are European vessels, which do a profitable business with our Central and South American neighbors. The chief obstacle to increased trade is our prohibitory tariff, but a very formidable obstacle is the lack of communication. Our neighbors do not buy of us because they have little opportunity of doing so. The proposal for increased facilities, which is now before the Conference, includes the building of six iron or steel steamships, which shall ply between San Francisco and the western ports of Central and South America, as far as the most southern port of Chili. In order to secure regular service it is proposed to subsidize this line, the subsidy to be raised by the several countries in proportion to population. The United States on this basis will provide for four steamships, Mexico and Central America for one, and the other countries combined for the sixth. The entire yearly subsidy required will be about $600,000.

Anxiety About the Fate of Eight Men Imprisoned in a burning mine at Wilkesbarre, Pa., was felt throughout the whole country last week. On March 3 a driver-boy entered the Rock tunnel which connects a new mine belonging to the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company with the Stanton mine. The tunnel was driven on an incline for the sake of ventilation, and is seven hundred feet below the surface. Seven men were at work in the tunnel when the boy started in with two mules to bring out their loaded cars. He had not gone five hundred feet from the foot of the shaft when the naked light he carried on his head fired a heavy blower of gas that was escaping from a crevice in the coal. The flame was strong, and in a few moments the dry, half-rotten timbers of the sides of the roof had caught and were in a bright blaze. The boy at once realized the danger. He called to some men behind him to take back his mules, while he went on to warn the miners. He did not return, nor did any of the seven men come out of the tunnel. The fire made such rapid progress that if they had attempted to get out by the way the boy went in, the heat would have driven them back. It was hoped that they might have taken refuge in one of the gangways or have made their way into the Stanton mine, but no sign of their existence was given, and at last the company, having abandoned hope of saving them, decided to flood the mine. Before doing so, a party of brave men made their way into the mine from the Stanton side, and reached the place where the men were working when the fire broke out. Their tools were found, but they were in a position which indicated that the men had tried to escape by way of the tunnel in which the fire was raging. Had they fled in the opposite direction, toward the Stanton mine, they might have been saved. When the explorers made their report, the conviction that the eight men must have perished could not be avoided.

The Fatal Railroad Disaster on the Lake Shore Railroad near Buffalo, N. Y., on March 6 appeared to have been one of the very few unavoidable calamities that occur. The train was travelling from the West toward Buffalo, and was a few miles west of Hamburg, when the engineer discovered that broken coupling had separated the train into two parts, the placing the rear part, consisting of five heavy sleeping-cars, beyond the control of the brakes. The forward part of the train was quickly brought to a standstill, but though the brakemen in the rear part did their utmost with the handbrakes to check its speed, it went rushing on, being on a down grade, and crashed into the standing cars ahead. One car was telescoped, and the others mounted upon it, crushing it to splinters. There was a huge pile of wrecked cars full of human beings, and fire at any moment might break out. The officers of the train forced their way through at considerable risk, and extinguished the lamp and so averted that calamity. But six persons are known to have been killed outright, and about fifteen badly injured.

The Emperor of Germany is Pressing Forward his scheme for the International Labor Conference in spite of the rebuff administered to him at the polls. In addressing the Council of State he made a confession as to how the supreme difficulties of the social problem had unfolded themselves to him since he had begun the attempt to reach a practical solution of them. He declared that his aims were not ideal. He did not hope to discover some grand remedy for the cure of all social evils. He desired rather and simply that a determined effort should be made to find means to satisfy the legal demands and the just wishes of the working people. He expressed himself as being sanguine of some practical result from the conference. Conversing with members of the Council of State after the business, he referred to the project of creating through the conference a permanent international board of control empowered to convene international congresses to report how the condition of each country is affected by the international agreement to which the conference may consent. It is evident, however, that other Governments do not share his sanguine hopes. Both England and France are endeavoring to limit the scope of the inquiry and show a lack of enthusiasm on the subject that is ominous.

Disturbances in the Transvaal in South Africa are reported. It was predicted by persons who knew the country and the people of that land at the time when Great Britain withdrew her claim and recognized the Republic, that the Government would not be able to maintain order at home or peace with its neighbors. The first part of the prophecy appears to have been well founded, though it is possible that English residents may have had something to do with fomenting the disorder. Advice from South Africa, received last week, says that a serious demonstration has been made there against the existing Government. It appears that Mr. Kruger, the President of the Transvaal, attempted to make a public speech, but the crowd refused to listen to him, and he was compelled to retire. A mass-meeting was then organized, and resolutions were adopted denouncing the Transvaal Government. After the meeting the crowd proceeded to the government buildings and tore down the flag of the Republic. Subsequently a mob went to a house at Landdrost, where Mr. Kruger was receiving a deputation, and sang "Rule Britannia." The railings around the house were destroyed by the crowd, and the Transvaal flag which floated from a pole in front of the house was hauled down and trampled under foot by the excited people.

Revivals Everywhere Rejoice Our Hearts. We wonder not that the daily papers give account of them. We look at such work from a religious standpoint, but they look at it from a worldly standpoint, and find revivals of pure religion interesting and worth mention in reportorial and editorial column. Why not? There is more good speaking, and more stirring incidents, and more portable circumstances in a rousing religious meeting than in almost any other kind of meeting. Besides that, the secularities are mightily affected by evangelism. Let the people who groan about high taxes understand that when our populations are converted and live Christian lives the city, State, and national taxes will be lowered. Prisons out of use, criminal courts with little or nothing to keep them in session, almshouses almost vacant because the pauper ceases impoverishing families, the spirit of war driven out and no standing armies necessary, would all that lower the taxes? The most expensive thing on earth is sin, and the most economic thing is religion. We are glad that the world begins to appreciate the fact that while religion makes one right before God, it also makes him right manward. Hence the large attention now paid in secular journals to religious proceedings.

An Excellent Year's Work was Done Last by the Wetmore Home for fallen and friends' women in New York. The annual report of the institution, issued last week, shows that 251 girls were admitted, in addition to the forty in the home at the beginning of the year, making a total number of inmates for 1889 of 291. Of these sixty were sent to situations, thirty-seven were sent to friends, fifty-five to hospitals, and fourteen to institutions. Eight left at their own request, five were dismissed on bad conduct, three left without permission, thirteen were temporarily cared for, and fifty-one were inmates of the home at the close of the year. This was the largest year's work ever done by the home. The expenses were $11,467.55, besides contributions of clothing, literature, supplies, and furniture. There is scarcely any department of Christian work so Christlike and so valuable as this. It deserves the active and pecuniary sympathy of every Christian.

The Restoration of Speech to a Dumb Man has resulted from an operation recently performed in Roosevelt Hospital, New York, by Dr. McBurney. The patient is a well-known doctor of Rochester, N. Y. In August last he was thrown from a buggy, striking on his head. He was made unconscious by the blow, and when the doctors brought him to, it was found that his right arm and leg were paralyzed, and though he could understand what was said to him, he had lost the power of articulation. Under medical treatment there was a partial restoration of the use of his arm and leg, but he was still dumb. He was finally brought to Roosevelt Hospital and placed in the care of Drs. McBurney and Starr. After long and careful study in the case, they came to the conclusion that he was suffering from a clot of blood on the brain, and decided to perform an operation. The patient was placed under the influence of ether. A portion of his hair was shaved off, and a circle of the skull about an inch in diameter was raised. To the great satisfaction of the surgeons a clot was found and removed. Recovering consciousness the patient was able to speak, and is making satisfactory progress. A man ignorant of anatomy would have supposed that if an operation could help a dumb man it must be performed on his tongue or his throat, but the surgeons understood better where the cause of the trouble was located. It is so with the Great Physician. To those who submit themselves to Him, He gives a new heart in place of the heart from which proceeded the evil that defiled. (Matt. 15: 19.)

Prisoners Working With the Jailers Against common danger was the strange sight witnessed at Raymond Street Jail, Brooklyn, on March 2. One of the prisoners that afternoon noticed a peculiar sound in the wall of his cell, but thinking it was only a rat, paid no heed to it at first. As it continued and grew louder, he looked closely at the place from which it proceeded. He was horrified to find a line of fire eating its way up the woodwork and the radiator and making rapid progress. He once gave an alarm, and a keeper, coming with a pail, cut away the wainscot and flooring. Then he saw that there was imminent peril of the building being burned down, as the flames had spread over the floor, and were making their way to the ceiling. A fire-alarm was sent out, and while waiting for the engines, about a dozen prisoners went to work with buckets to extinguish the fire. They were as energetic and industrious as the jailers, and did effective work until the firemen arrived. The warden spoke in the highest terms of their exertions, and said it was mainly due to them that the building was so soon saved. The prisoners congratulated themselves on their escape from a dreadful death, which, as they were confined on the top floor, might have befallen them had the fire not been early discovered and speedily checked. But as they are still in prison, their lot does not furnish much reason for congratulation. It is not so with Satan's captives whom Christ delivers. They are not only saved from the dreadful doom prepared for the impenitent, but they are brought in this life into the glorious liberty of the children of God. (Rom. 8: 21.)

An American Lady Rejoicing in the Title of Countess deplores the step by which she took the title. A few years ago a handsome, distinguished-looking man took up his quarters in a hotel in Philadelphia. He described himself as Count von Bresendorf. He remained there some time, paying his way duly, but did not appear to have an income in keeping with his title. The daughter of the wealthy hotel-keeper, however, was fascinated by his manner and appearance, and still more by his rank. Eventually she married him, and for a year or two all went well. But recently her mother took a trip to Europe, and while in Berlin made some inquiries about the family of her son-in-law. She discovered that he was not a count at all, but the son of a small storekeeper of that city. The indignant woman hurried home and informed her daughter of the deception practiced upon her. A quarrel between the husband and wife resulted, and after a stormy scene he acknowledged his deceit. The wife tried to continue living with him, but his charm was gone. There were continual quarrels, and finally the husband left his home, declaring he would never return. On March 3 the wife was granted a divorce from him. Other American girls who have been attracted by a title have had reason to regret their marriage, even when no deceit has been practiced upon them. It is to be deplored that they are not more anxious to enter into union with Christ. He is King of kings and Lord of lords, and in union with Him they would enjoy eternal happiness. (Rev. 17: 14.)

A Young Man is Trying to Discover his Name in New York. Last week a well-educated and well-dressed young man called at a charitable institution and asked the managers to search their books for information respecting himself. His story is a very painful one. He had lived from infancy with a prosperous man and woman in Harlem, whom he had always supposed to be his father and mother. They had supported him, and had given him a good education, and the thought of their not being his parents had never crossed his mind, nor had it ever been hinted to him. Last year his supposed mother died, and recently her husband was laid in the grave. There was no will found, and the young man proceeded to take possession of the property as heir. He was astonished when his right was disputed by the aged man whom he had been accustomed to call grandfather. The old man told him that he was not the child of his son, but had been taken when only a few weeks old from a charitable institution, and adopted. The old man claimed the property as nearest of kin, and bluntly told the young man he had already had too much of the estate. The disclosure was a great shock to him, and he is now trying to discover who he is and who are his parents, as he does not even know his own name. It is improbable that he will succeed, owing to the peculiar circumstances under which as a babe he was taken into the institution. To him and to all friendless youths, however, a refuge is open which can never fail. Christ died that all who come to God by Him might receive adoption and become sons and heirs of God with Him. (Rom. 4: 5-7.)

How a Man Lost his Life through Pride is Described by an Ohio physician. He states that he was called to attend a man in Dayton, Ohio, who had formerly been in high position in the State. He had been away for some years but had returned in poor circumstances. He sought suitable employment, but without success. He tried his hand at any kind of business where he could find an opportunity, and finally was compelled to shovel gravel to get a crust for his wife and seven children. He worked at this for a few days, until one night he was brought home in a wagon unable to walk. The physician was called in, but it was too late to save him, and three days later he was dead. The man had actually starved to death. The family had been without money for nearly two weeks, during which time they subsisted on a few dry crusts divided between nine persons. The father was too proud, however, to make known his wants. His wife told a horrible story of his death, saying that while he lay dying, the children surrounded his couch and sobbed piteously for bread. When food was brought, the dying father was so far gone that he could not swallow. Not even the next-door neighbors knew that the family were suffering for the want of food. If the man would have humbled himself to ask the proper authorities for assistance, he need not have died. It is seldom that men are too proud to accept help in such an extremity, though in spiritual matters the case is only too common. One of the Christian worker's greatest difficulties is to persuade men who can never earn salvation to accept it as a free gift. (Eph. 2: 8, 9.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Duncan J. McMillan, D. D., President of the College of Montana, has been elected one of the Secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions.

Ten gentlemen have given an aggregate sum of $50,000 to the Central Young Men's Christian Union of Springfield, Mass., toward the erection of a new building.

Miss Susannah Warfield, of Groveland, Md., who died on March 2, has left all her property to found an Episcopal college, which is to be named after her. The endowment amounts to about $100,000.

Dr. L. W. Munhall began a series of meetings in the East New York Reformed Church on Sunday, March 2. Several denominations represented in the Twenty-sixth Ward of Brooklyn have united in these services.

The revival interest in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church at Newark, N. J., of which the Rev. F. G. Iglehart, D. D., is pastor, still continues. The results have been over one hundred and twenty conversions.

On March 3 C. D. W. Bridgman, D. D., of New York City, read a paper on "The Future State in the Old Testament" before the American Institute of Christian Philosophy, No. 4 Winthrop Place, New York.

The ninth National Convention of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor is to be held in St. Louis this year. From five to eight thousand delegates are expected to be in attendance. The dates fixed for the Convention are June 12, 13, 14, and 15.

The Methodists of Philadelphia have dedicated their new Deaconess Home. The movement is inaugurated in a pleasant three-story dwelling-house, No. 547 North Sixteenth Street. It has been tastefully furnished by donations of friends in the several city churches.

Mr. G. H. Bradt, a business man of Flint, Mich., is conducting a series of services at Bulter, Ind., which are being wonderfully blessed. Husbands and wives, with their children, have been brought to Christ. Already 141 persons have made a profession of faith, and the interest is increasing.

A deep religious interest is now prevailing in the Ohio Wesleyan University. Of the nine hundred and seven students in attendance this term, six hundred and twenty-eight were reported as Christians on the Day of Prayer. Since that day ninety students have been added to the Christian list.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman, pastor of the Hebrew-Christian Church, had the pleasure of baptizing another Hebrew convert on Sunday, March 2. This is the second baptism in a month. There are yet other converts who are looking forward to a like confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are asked to remind our readers that Union Bible conferences are held every Sabbath afternoon in the Calvary Baptist Church, Fifty-seventh Street, west of Ninth Avenue, New York. The purpose is to examine Bible facts and Christian evidences under modern lights, and the signs of God's hand in history.

Mr. D. L. Moody's Bible addresses are being continued this week in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, corner of Fifty-third Street, New York. They commence at 11:30 A. M. each day except Saturday. Tickets of admission may be had at the Y. M. C. A. building, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, or the Lecture room of the church.

A Congo native who has been taught to read and write has just sent a letter (his first) to the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is as follows: "Great and Good Chief of the Tribe of Christ, greeting: The humblest of your servants kisses the hem of your garment, and begs you to send to his fellow-servants more Gospel and less Rum. In the bonds of Christ, Ugalla."

We are glad to hear that the Rev. Stephen Merritt has accepted the office of Corresponding Secretary of Bishop Taylor's African Mission. It is a work for which he is well adapted, and which he will find not the less congenial because it will entail much gratuitous work. Mr. Merritt has just returned from Florida looking all the better for his sojourn in the South. He celebrated his fifty-seventh birthday last week.

PLEADING, NOT CONTRADICTION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"She said, Truth, Lord: yet." Matt. 15: 27.

A Happy Combination of Circumstances—The Meeting Between the Deliverer and the Sufferer—Faith's Athletic Exercises—The Woman Repulsed—Her Pathetic Argument—What it Teaches—I. Agree With the Lord—Acknowledge Unworthiness—Admit that the Lord Knows the Truth About Human Nature—Don't Cavil With Him—II. Plead With the Lord—Set One Truth Against Another—Doctrines Which Are Met by Others—Comfort From Hard Truths—III. In any Case Have Faith—He is a Shepherd—A Great Householder—A Splendid Faith.

DID you notice in the reading of this narrative of the Syro-Phœnician woman, the two facts mentioned in the twenty-first and twenty-second verses? "Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. And, behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts." See, Jesus goes toward the coast of Sidon on the land side, and the woman of Canaan comes from the seashore to meet Him; and so they come to the same town. May we find that case repeated this morning in this Tabernacle!

Our Lord was drawn toward this woman, but she, also, was driven toward Him. What made her seek Him? Strange to say, a devil had a hand in it; but not so as to give the devil any of the praise. The truth was, that a gracious God used the devil himself to drive this woman to Jesus: for her daughter was "grievously vexed with a devil," and she could not bear to stay at home, and see her child in such misery. Oh, how often does a great sorrow drive men and women to Christ, even as a fierce wind compels the mariner to hasten to the harbor! I have known a domestic affliction, a daughter sore vexed, influence the heart of a mother to seek the Saviour; and, doubtless, many a father, broken in spirit by the likelihood of losing a darling child, has turned his face toward the Lord Jesus in his distress. Ah, my Lord! thou hast many ways of bringing thy wandering sheep back; and among the rest thou dost even send and of sickness after them. This dog comes into the house, and his howlings are so dreadful that the poor lost sheep flies to the Shepherd for shelter. God make it so this morning with any of you who have a great trouble at home! May your boy's sickness work your health! Yes, may your girl's death be the means of the father's spiritual life! Oh that your soul and Jesus may meet this day!

The Black Dog of Sorrow

Now, you would suppose that as the two were seeking each other, the happy meeting and the gracious blessing would be very easily brought about; but we have an old proverb, that "the course of true love never does run smooth;" and, for certain, the course of true faith is seldom without trials. I never saw the Saviour before in such a mood as when He spake to this woman of great faith. Did you ever read of His speaking such rough words? Did such a hard sentence, at any other time, ever fall from His lips as, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs"? Ah! He knew her well, and He knew that she could stand the trial, and would be greatly benefited by it, and that He would be glorified by her faith throughout all future ages: therefore with good reason He put her through the athletic exercises which train a vigorous faith. Doubtless, for our sakes, He drew her through a test to which He would never have exposed her had she been a weakling unable to sustain it. She was trained and developed by His rebuffs. While His wisdom tried her, His grace sustained her.

Now, see how He began. The Saviour was come to the town, wherever it was; but He was not there in public; on the contrary, He sought seclusion. Mark tells us, in his seventh chapter, at the twenty-fourth verse, "From thence He arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into a house, and would have no man know it: but He could not be hid. For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of Him, and came and fell at His feet."

Why is He Hiding

from her? He does not usually avoid the quest of the seeking soul. "Where is He?" she asks of His disciples. They give her no information; they had their Master's orders to let Him remain in hiding. He sought quiet, and needed it, and so they discreetly held their tongues. Yet she found Him out, and fell at His feet. Half a hint was dropped; she took up the trail, and followed it until she discovered the house, and sought the Lord in His abode. Here was the beginning of her trial: the Saviour was in hiding. "But He could not be hid" from her eager search; she was all ear and eye for Him, and nothing can be hid from an anxious mother, eager to bless her child. Disturbed by her, the Blessed One comes into the street, and His disciples surround Him. She determines to be heard over their heads, and, therefore, she begins to cry aloud, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord, thou son of David." As He walks along, she still cries out with mighty cries and pleadings, till the streets ring with her voice, and He who "would have no man know it" is proclaimed in the market-place. The woman's noise was very distracting to everybody, and so the disciples came to Jesus, and they said, "Send her away, send her away; do something for her, or tell her to be gone; for she crieth after us; we have no peace for her clamor; we cannot hear Thee speak because of her piteous cries."

Meanwhile she, perceiving them speaking to Jesus, comes nearer, breaks into the inner circle, falls down before Him, worships Him, and utters this plaintive prayer—"Lord, help me." There is

More Power in Worship than in Noise;

she has taken a step in advance. Our Lord has not yet answered her a single word. He has heard what she said, no doubt; but He has not answered a word to her as yet. All that He has done is to say to His disciples, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." That has not prevented her nearer approach, or stopped her prayer; for now she pleads, "Lord, help me." At length the Blessed One does speak to her. Greatly to our surprise, it is a chill rebuff. What a cold word it is! How cutting! I dare not say, how cruel, yet it seemed so. "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs."

Now, what will the woman do? She is near the Saviour; she has an audience with Him, such as it is; she is on her knees before Him, and He appears to repulse her! How will she act now? Here is the point about which I am going to speak. She will not be repulsed, she perseveres, she advances nearer, she actually turns the rebuff into a plea. She has come for a blessing, and a blessing she believes that she shall have, and she means to plead for it till she wins it. So she deals with the Saviour after a very heroic manner, and in the wisest possible style; from which I want every seeker to learn a lesson at this time, that he, like her, may win with Christ, and hear the Master say to him this morning, "Great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

I. My first advice to every heart here seeking the Saviour is this,

Agree With the Lord.

In the Revised Version, we read that she said, "Yea, Lord," or, "Yes, Lord." Whatever Jesus said, she did not contradict Him in the least. I like the old translation, "Truth, Lord," for it is very expressive. She did not say, "It is hard, or unkind," but "It is true. It is true that it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs. It is true that compared with Israel I am a dog: for me to gain this blessing would be like a dog's feeding on the children's bread. Truth, Lord; truth, Lord." Now, dear friend, if thou art dealing with the Lord for life and death, never contradict His word. Thou wilt never come unto perfect peace if thou art in a contradicting humor; for that is a proud and unacceptable condition of mind.

Remember, dear friends, that if the Lord reminds you of your unworthiness and your unfitness, He only tells you what is true, and it will be your wisdom to say, "Truth, Lord." Scripture describes you as having a depraved nature: say, "Truth, Lord." It describes you as going astray like a lost sheep, and the charge is true. It describes you as having a deceitful heart, and just such a heart you have. Therefore say, "Truth, Lord." It represents you as "without strength," and "without hope." Let your answer be, "Truth, Lord." The Bible never gives unrenowned human nature a good word, nor does it deserve it. It exposes our corruptions, and lays bare our falseness, pride, and unbelief.

Cavil not at the faithfulness of the Word. Take the lowest place, and own yourself a sinner, lost, ruined, and undone. This woman took the very lowest possible place. Great faith is always sister to great humility. It does not matter how low Christ puts her, she sits there. "Truth, Lord." I earnestly recommend every hearer of mine to consent unto the Lord's verdict, and never to raise an argument against The Sinner's Friend. When thy heart is heavy, when thou hast a sense of being the greatest of sinners, I pray thee remember that thou art a greater sinner than thou thinkest thyself to be.

We should be the more ready to give our assent and consent to every syllable of the divine word, since Jesus knows us better than we know ourselves. The Word of God knows more about us than we can ever discover about ourselves. We are partial to ourselves, and hence

We are Half Blind.

Our judgment always fails to hold the balance evenly when our own case is in the weighing. Nothing can be gained by cavilling with the Saviour. A beggar stands at your door and asks for charity: he goes the wrong way to work if he begins a discussion with you, and contradicts your statements. If beggars must not be choosers, certainly they must not be controversialists. If a mendicant will dispute, let him dispute; but let him give up begging. If he cavils as to how he shall receive your gift, or how or what you shall give him, he is likely to be sent about his business. A critical sinner disputing with his Saviour is a fool in capitals.

Now, mark this: if you find your heart agreeing with what Jesus says, even when He answers you roughly, you may depend upon it, this is the work of grace: for human nature is very upstart, and stands very much upon its silly dignity, and therefore it contradicts the Lord, when He deals truthfully with it, and humbles it. Woe be to the crown of pride which rivals the Lord Christ! If, my hearer, thou art of another mind, and art willing to own thyself a sinner, lost, ruined, and condemned, it is well with thee. If thou art of this mind, that whatever humbling truth the Spirit of God may teach thee in the Word, or teach by the conviction of thy conscience, thou wilt at once agree therewith, and confess, "It is even so;" then the Spirit of God has brought thee to this humble and truthful and obedient condition, and things are going hopefully with thee.

II. And now my second point is this: although you must not cavil with Christ, you may Plead with Him.

"Truth, Lord," she says; but she adds, "yet." Here, then, is my first lesson: set one truth over against another. Do not contradict a frowning truth, but bring up a smiling one to meet it. If a truth looks black upon me, I shall not be wise to be always dwelling upon it; but it will be my wisdom to examine the whole range of truth, and see if there be not some other doctrine which will give me hope. David practised this when he said of himself, "So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before thee." And then he most confidently added, "Nevertheless I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand." He does not contradict himself; and yet the second utterance removes all the bitterness which the first sentence left upon the palate.

For instance, I meet with men who say, "Oh sir, sin is an awful thing; it condemns me. I feel I can never answer the Lord for my iniquities, nor stand in His holy presence." This is assuredly true; but remember another truth: "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all;" "He was made sin for us, who knew no sin;" "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." Set the truth of the sin-bearing of our Lord over against the guilt and curse of sin due to yourself apart from your great Substitute.

Some are stumbled by the sovereignty of God. He will have mercy on whom He will have mercy. He may justly ask, "Shall I not do as I will with my own?" Beloved, do not dispute the rights of the eternal God. It is the Lord, let Him do as seemeth Him good. Do not quarrel with the King but come humbly to Him, and plead thus, "O Lord, thou alone hast the right to pardon; but thy Word declares that if we confess our sins, thou art faithful and just to forgive us our sins; and thou hast said that whosoever believeth in the Lord Jesus Christ shall be saved." This pleading will prevail. The same key which locks will also unlock very much depends on the turn of the key, and still more on the turn of thy thought.

This brings me to a second remark:

Draw Comfort From a Hard Truth.

Take this advice in preference to that which I have already given. The Authorized translation here is very good, but I must confess that it is not quite so true to the woman's meaning as the Revised Version. She did not say, "Truth, Lord: yet," as if she were raising an objection, as I have already put to you; but she said, "Truth, Lord, for." I have zone with the old translation, because it expresses the way in which our mind too generally looks at things. We fancy that we set one truth over against another, whereas all truths are agreed, and cannot be in conflict. Out of the very truth which looks darkest we may gain consolation. She said, "Yes, Lord; for the dogs eat the crumbs which fall from their master's table."

Do I hear you say, "How can I have hope, for salvation is of the Lord?" Why, that is the very reason why you should be filled with hope, and seek salvation of the Lord alone. If it were of yourself, you might despair; but as it is of the Lord, you may have hope. Do you groan out, "Alas! I can do nothing?" What of that? The Lord can do everything. Since salvation is of the Lord alone, ask Him to be its Alpha and Omega to you. Do you groan, "I know I must repent; but I am so unfeeling that I cannot reach the right measure of tenderness?" This is true, and therefore the Lord Jesus is exalted on high to give repentance. You will no more repent in your own power than you will go to heaven in your own merit; but the Lord will grant you repentance unto life; for this, also, is a fruit of the Spirit.

A Ground of Hope.

Beloved, when I was under a sense of sin I heard the doctrine of divine sovereignty, "He will have mercy on whom He will have mercy;" but that did not frighten me at all; for I felt more hopeful of grace through the sovereign will of God than by any other way. If pardon be not a matter of human deserving, but of divine prerogative, then here is hope for me. Why should not I be forgiven as well as others? If the Lord had only three elect ones, and these were chosen according to His own good pleasure, why should not I be one of them? I laid myself at His feet, and gave up every hope but that which flowed from His mercy. Knowing that He would save a number that no man could number, and that He would save every soul that believed in Jesus, I believed and was saved. It was well for me that salvation did not turn upon merit, for I had no merit whatever.

I will not give you further instances and particulars; for time would fail me. I leave you just there with this advice: it is not yours to raise questions, but submissively to say, "Truth, Lord." Then it is your wisdom to set one truth over against another, till you have learned the better plan of finding light in the dark truth itself. God help thee to catch honey from the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock, by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

III. Thirdly, in any case, whatever Christ saith doth not say,

Have Faith in Him.

Look at this woman's faith and try to copy it. It grew in its apprehension of Jesus. First, He is the Lord of mercy: she cried, "Have mercy on me." Have faith enough, dear hearer, to believe that thou needest mercy. Mercy is not for the meritorious: the claim of the meritorious is for justice, not for mercy. The guilty need and seek mercy; and only they. Believe that God delighteth in mercy, delighteth to give grace where it cannot be deserved, delighteth to forgive where there is no reason for forgiveness but His own goodness. Believe also that the Lord Jesus Christ whom we reach to you is the incarnation of mercy: His very existence is mercy to you, His every word means mercy; His life, His death, His intercession in heaven, all mean mercy, mercy, mercy, nothing but mercy. You need divine mercy, and Jesus is the embodiment of divine mercy—He is the Saviour for you. Believe in Him, and the mercy of God is yours.

This believing woman might have been cheered by another theme. Our Lord said to His disciples, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." "Ah!" thinks she, "He is a shepherd for lost sheep. Whatever His flock may be, He is a shepherd, and He has bowels of compassion for poor lost sheep; surely He is one to whom I may look with confidence." Ah, dear hearer! my Lord Jesus Christ is a shepherd by office and by nature, and if you are a lost sheep this is good tidings for you. There is a holy instinct in Him which makes Him gather the lambs with His arms, and causes Him to search out the lost ones, who were scattered in the cloudy and dark day. Trust Him to seek you; yea, come to Him now, and leave yourselves with Him.

Further than that, this woman had a faith in Christ that He was like a great householder. She seems to say, "Those disciples are children who sit at table, and He feeds them on the bread of His love. He makes for them so great a feast, and He gives to them so much food, that if my daughter were healed, it would be a great and blessed thing to me, but to Him it would be no more than if a crumb fell under the table, and a dog fed thereon." She does not ask to have a crumb thrown to her, but only to be allowed to pick up a crumb that has fallen from the table. Is not that Splendid Faith?

And now, canst thou exercise such a faith? As for me, I believe my Lord to be such a Saviour that I can trust my soul wholly to Him, and that without difficulty. If I were good I could not trust in Jesus. Why should I? I should trust myself. But because I have nothing of my own, I am obliged to live by trust, and I am rejoiced that I may do so. My Lord gives me unlimited credit at the Bank of Faith. I am very deeply in debt to Him, and I am resolved to be more indebted still. May you come to this point, all of you; that Jesus is abundantly able to save.

You have been a thief, have you? The last person that was in our Lord's near company on earth was the dying thief. "Oh!" but you say, "I have been foul in life; I have defiled myself with all manner of evil." But those with whom He associates now were all of them once unclean; for they confess that they have washed their robes, and made them white in His blood. Their robes were once so foul that nothing but His heart's blood could have made them white. Jesus is a great Saviour, greater than my tongue can tell. "Look unto Me," saith He, "and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else." Look! Look now! Look to Him alone; and as you look to Him with the look of faith He will look on you with loving acceptance, and say, "Great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt." Thou shalt be saved at this very hour; and though thou camest into this house of prayer grievously vexed with a devil, thou shalt go out at peace with God, and as restful as an angel. God grant thee this boon, for Christ's sake. Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Recorder Behind the Curtain.—"I Heard of a man who, during a time of religious persecution, was apprehended and brought to trial. After one or two minor examinations, he was at last brought before the tribunal that would condemn him to death or set him free. Just beside the prisoner, and in imitation of the custom at the Spanish Inquisition, was a curtain, behind which there sat men taking down every word he uttered. The prisoner was not supposed to know this, but a friend had warned him that such was the case. As he came in, and glanced towards the curtain, he thought to himself, 'Now, I must speak carefully, for, by my own speech, I shall be condemned or acquitted.' And by their own words and actions will every person, when brought before God's bar of justice, be either blessed or condemned."

Ladies Converted Like their Coachman.—Mr. M'Lauchlan said: "I was once staying in a family where the coachman got converted. Not long afterwards the two ladies by whom he was employed became anxious about their souls, and for five days they were in great distress. When I had shown them the way of salvation they asked, somewhat tremulously, 'And must we be converted in just the same way as our coachman?' 'Yes,' I replied, 'just in the same way.' They held back for some time, but at last they saw that in God's sight there was no difference between them and their coachman. Both were sinners, and deserving of God's wrath both in this life and that which is to come. They came to our common Father, and, pleading the merit of the finished work of Christ, received salvation. Kings and beggars stand on the same platform before God. In His presence all distinctions sink into insignificance."

Filling an Empty Church.—"I Heard of a Minister who, after some years' ministry, had almost preached his church empty. One by one the congregation had dropped away, until only a handful of saints remained. One Sunday, as the pastor was going up the pulpit steps, a church officer, in imitation of something he had read, put a paper into his hand. On gaining the pulpit, he opened it and read: 'Sir—We would see Jesus.' He preached from a text about Christ that day, for he had been losing sight of Jesus. A new life was given to that church, and a glorious revival set in. About three months afterwards, as the minister was about to address the congregation, now crowded to the doors, a second paper was put into his hand, and on it was written, 'Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord!' Oh, the beginning, the centre, and the end of all true preaching of the gospel is Jesus. Without Him there is no good news; and no learned platitudes will ever give a sinner salvation."

Drink, Remorse, and Suicide.—An Evangelist said: "I well remember a young man whom I rejoiced to think I had been instrumental in rescuing from drunkenness and bringing to a knowledge of the truth. For years he was a total abstainer and steady worker. When his first child was born, the men in the workshop urged him to treat them. He was unwilling, but it being the custom among them, he did not wish to appear mean, so he yielded. His old passion was rekindled. He could not stop. He must have more drink. For a few days he continued to drink to excess, then, seized with a fit of remorse, he poisoned himself. His widow came and told me the sad story. The sight of her grief and distress would have melted a heart of stone. Who made that mother a widow, and that baby an orphan? You who tempt your fellows to their downfall are guilty of murder—murder of their souls if not of their bodies, though alas, too often, both body and soul are overwhelmed in the one great devastating flood."

How Janet Got Her Glass.—Mr. M'Lauchlan said: "While I was engaged at a certain church in Glasgow, one of the deacons came to me and said, 'Do you think that Mr. So-and-So and his wife'—naming a couple who had applied for church-membership—are all right?' 'What makes you think otherwise?' I inquired. 'Well, I am afraid they are drinking people. I was passing their home on Sunday morning, and just looked in to see them, and found they had not a loaf of bread in the house. They had been drinking on Saturday night, and had not a penny left, and I had to supply them with food.' We found out afterwards that the worst was on Monday morning. As the man got up he said to his wife, 'Oh, Janet, I wish I had a glass this morning.' 'Well,' was the answer, 'if I were a man I would have one at once.' 'But, Janet, have you a plan for getting it?' he asked. 'Take off your coat,' she said, 'roll up your sleeves, and go up the street as if you were at work. Mr. S., the saloon-keeper, will be sure to be at the shop door, and is sure to ask you in.' The man did as his wife advised, and as he passed the saloon the bar-tender was there washing his window. He looked round, and noticing the man's shirt-sleeves, said, 'Hulloa, Sandy, are you working? Just come in and have a glass!' 'But I have no money,' said the man. 'That's all right; you will pay it on Saturday,' the bar-tender answered. He went in, and had not only one glass, but two. As he entered his own house he said, 'Well, Janet, you are a first-class wife; I have had two glasses of whisky through your cleverness,' and as he spoke he turned round to put on his coat; but, to his surprise, no coat was there. When he asked where it was, Janet answered, 'Do you think I did not need my glass as well as you?' While he was out she had pledged his coat, in order to get drink." Such are the cunning stratagems of people who are set upon drinking whisky."

The "Down Grade" of Drink.—The Rev. Jas. Wells observes: "Near a gate one day some girls were busy with their skipping-rope. One of them was a perfect picture of rosy health and buoyant glee. Her dress showed that she was nursed in the lap of luxury, and anyone seeing her bright innocent face would have predicted a future of happiness for her. Alas! Not long ago a poor woman stood in my study. 'I am Miss —,' she said, 'and I hope you'll—' 'You Miss —!' I exclaimed, in tones of astonishment. She let drop the tattered discolored shawl which covered her head; and, in spite of the matted hair and blood-shot eyes, I recognized the once fair girl with the skipping-rope. But what a change! Her feet were stockingless, and almost shoeless on that stormy winter day. She was trembling from cold and hunger. She wore only a few unwomanly rags, all of which were borrowed. She confessed she had pawned for drink her every article of clothing. She had tasted no food that day, and on the previous one had had only one pennyworth of broth, bought with a borrowed penny. Yet fortune had once smiled on her. She once had money of her own, and a lady's maid too."

The Late Count Andrássy, the Hungarian Statesman. (See page 165.)

A Bishop's Robes Towed Across a South African River.

And there she stood, all the fair promise of her young life trampled in the dust. 'What has brought you to this?' I asked. 'Nothing but drink,' was her reply. 'When you first knew me (she was then about seven or eight years of age) three or four of us girls used to buy porter with our pocket-money, and drink it in a woman's house, and that is why I am here to-day.' Her words might have melted a heart of stone. She begged for food, and for another chance. Some Christian ladies took her by the hand. That day her clothes were redeemed and given to her; and a widow took her to her own home, and showed her a mother's love. But in a week or so she grew restless and broke away. She was sought for, but not found, and what has become of her I know not. O women, if by your total abstinence one sister could be saved from such a fate, is it not your duty for their sakes to abstain from all intoxicating beverages?"

A Church Without Conversions.—A Christian worker says: "A gentleman, some time ago, went to his minister and said, 'I have been twenty years in your congregation, sir, and still I am unconverted. I hear that in a certain church God is using its pastor mightily for the conversion of souls, and as I want to be converted I am going to that church.' The minister wished him to stay a little longer, and in the course of his persuasion said, 'You know the man was at the pool of Siloam thirty-eight years before he was cured?' 'Yes,' was the reply, 'but I think twenty is long enough, and I may be in eternity before the thirty years are completed. And, excuse me, but there is a little difference between me and the man at the pool; he heard of others being saved, but in all the twenty years which I have been in your church I have never heard of a single person being converted.'"

A BISHOP'S ADVENTURE.

(See Illustration.)

THE correspondent in Africa of a daily journal relates an amusing incident in the labors of a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which occurred recently. He states that the bishop had arranged for a confirmation service at a village on the extreme borders of his diocese in South Africa. He had to make a journey of five hundred miles across the country, in which he was delayed considerably by the bad state of the roads. There had been a season of heavy rains, and travelling was unusually heavy work. However, he arrived, on the day previous to that fixed for the service, within sight of the village. But an unexpected difficulty presented itself. The shallow stream between him and the village had been changed by the rains into a broad, deep river. There was no boat nor raft to be had. The bishop waited until the next day, hoping that some means of crossing the stream would be found; but without avail. The day of the confirmation service broke, disclosing the river as high as before. The bishop being a punctilious man in the matter of keeping his engagements, was not to be thwarted. He is an excellent swimmer, and he decided to breast the stream. His companion, a physician, persuaded a native to loan them a tub, in which the bishop's robes were packed. The bishop and he then undressed and put their clothing in the tub. The bishop, plunged into the stream and succeeded in reaching the other side in safety. There he sat among the rushes, waiting for the doctor, who swam across towing the tub by a rope which he held with his teeth. The triumph was complete. The service was held according to appointment, and the bishop, who has overcome many spiritual obstacles by faith and prayer, has now another victory to his credit won over physical obstacles by his natural vigor.

THE SOLDIER'S HEARTBREAK.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text for March 23.

(See illustration on page 171.)

I NEVER saw an attitude more expressive of poignant sorrow than that of a soldier of whom I caught glimpses as I passed under the over-hanging foliage of a country lane one summer evening. He had thrown his bundle on the ground and was leaning on a low wall. When I first saw him I thought he was asleep, but as I drew nearer I could see that his body was convulsed with sobs, and my ear caught the sound of low moans, as of one in agony. There was a poor cottage beyond the wall, where, if the man was really sick he might have help and shelter. So I quickened my steps and was soon at his side.

"What is the matter, my friend?" I said, laying my hand gently on his shoulder, for my steps did not arouse him. He looked up almost fiercely as I touched him, and turned upon me a face as woe-begone as I had ever seen. It was weather-beaten and strongly marked, as if by hard living as well as by long exposure to wind and sun, but it was still a handsome, frank, brave visage. He was evidently about to tell me to mind my own business, or to give me some such rough greeting, but seeing only kindly concern and sympathy in my eyes he restrained it. "Can I help you in any way?" I asked; "you seem to be in trouble."

"Ah, sir," he said, "trouble enough, but not of the kind you or any one can help. I have brought it on myself, and I must bear it myself. God help me!"

The three words were probably a common expression with him—a mere habit of ejaculation, not a prayer—but they afforded an opening for direction. "Yes," I said, "that is good. When human help fails God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble. I am glad to hear you call upon Him. There is no comfort like that He can give."

"Ah, sir, that is only my way; I didn't mean it;

it would be no use for me to look to Him. I am not the kind of man for that. If I were, He could do nothing for me now, unless He could bring the dead to life."

"He will do that one day, my friend. That is a sure promise. Who is it that you have lost?"

"All who ever really loved me. I wish I could die myself, I was just wishing I had brought a pistol with me, when you touched me. There's nothing left to live for now."

"Tell me your story, my friend," I said; "it may relieve you to tell it. If I can do nothing else I can give you my sympathy. I know what trouble is by experience."

We sat down together on a rustic seat near the old wall, and the soldier said: "It is easily told but no one can tell the heartbreak there is in it. I was born in that cottage. My father and mother were hard-working folks, but as good as gold. I was their only son. They had others, but they died young, as I wish I had; I had only one sister. She was a good bit older than me; the boys came between us—those who died, I mean. Well, the old people, I suppose, were real glad to have a boy to live at last, and they made no end of fuss over me. I was a good-looking youngster, though you wouldn't think so to look at me now. My mother, kinder spoiled me, perhaps. Anyhow, my father took a notion she was doing it. So he got rather strict with me when I was about ten or twelve. But looking back now, I see he loved me. Oh, sir, they both loved me, and I—oh, my God, what have I done?"

The poor fellow stopped, covered his face with his hands, and wept bitterly. After a few minutes he looked up again and went on with his story.

"My sister went into the Squire's family. The Squire's wife took a fancy to her and trained her to be a lady's maid, and when they went to live in Europe, she went with them. It was pretty dull at the old place after she was gone, and I used to sit out in the evening to play with the village boys. They were not any of them very good lads, and somehow, I liked the worst best. We got into mischief pretty often, and my father would hear of Mother used to shield me all she could, but I had to stand a licking every once in a while. They were both pious, and I used to hear them pray for me at night after I was in bed. Mother would come and kiss me, and cry over me, and beg me to be a good boy."

His voice was breaking again. He controlled himself by a strong effort.

"It's no use trying, sir; I can't tell it you. I'm ripping my very heart open. Let me cut it short. Things went from bad to worse, and when I was fifteen I ran away. I knocked about for a time, and out of work, and at last, after a pretty long drinking spell, I was out of work and hungry. I made up my mind to go to sea, but I had not a money to get to the coast, so I took the next best thing by flinging myself away: I enlisted in the army. I was in Canada then, and it was a British regiment that I joined. I did not care what became of me. Well, I have been everywhere since then. In India, in Egypt, in Ireland, with the regiment. Fourteen rough years of it. I had a bad spell of sickness last year, and while I was lying in hospital I made up my mind that the first thing I did if I got over it and got my discharge, should be to come home and see the old folks. I was softened, and I used to please myself by thinking of how my mother would rejoice at seeing me, and how I would work for them and make up for all my bad treatment by keeping them in comfort in their old age. I wouldn't write because I meant to take them by surprise. The thought of that meeting grew on me till I was like a boy again. I thought how I should tell them that I was sorry for all the past; and I could hear my mother forgiving me, and my father thanking God for bringing his son back. I painted it all and dwelt on it day and night, on sea and land, all the way home. Well, sir, I came here this afternoon, and instead of seeing the old folks, as I pictured, there was the empty house, and the bills on the walls telling of the sale of the furniture a month ago. Yes, sir; I'm just a month too late. They are both dead, and my heart is clean broke."

I let him have his cry over, and then I persuaded him to come with me to the hotel where I was staying, and be my guest for the night. He was docile as a child, but utterly despairing. He listened quietly as I tried to show him that his sin had been against God, and that it was more important to get His forgiveness than that of his parents even if they had lived. He was apathetic until I spoke of the joy of his mother and father in heaven if, through Christ, he had God's pardon, and went to meet them there.

"Is that possible?" he asked, looking up quickly. It was the first time he had shown any interest in what I was saying, and I saw I had struck the right note.

"Not possible, but certain," I answered, "if you are in earnest in seeking it."

"Thank God! then there is hope yet," he said.

He listened intently now while I explained to him what sin really is. How every wrong done to others is a rebellion against God. How our whole lives are a rebellion against the holy and loving God while we are unreconciled to Him, and how Christ died to bring us into peace with Him. How all sins against men sink into insignificance beside the stupendous guilt in His sight, and how His forgiveness is the first and chief thing to be sought. I illustrated the idea with a story of a mutiny in a regiment in time of war, and he caught the principle directly. The man was really anxious. Even the thought of his parents was dwarfed by the concern for God's pardon. Like the Pharisees, but in a better sense than they had, he realized that none "can forgive sins but God alone," and he knelt with me and humbly begged for pardon through Christ. He rose from his knees a saved man, and there was a peace and joy in his face that transfigured him.

I was much agitated by the long interview, and wanted to be alone. He readily consented to go to bed, while I went out to walk in the still summer night, as my habit was. My steps unconsciously led me to the spot where I had seen him first, and I stood leaning on the old wall, and looking at the cottage. As I stood lost in thought, the keeper of the hotel passed and recognized me.

The Returned Soldier's Disappointment.

"Thinking of buying the old place, sir?" he asked, jokingly.

"No, I was thinking of the poor old folks who used to live here, I have been hearing about their troubles to-day. Ah well, they are better off now."

"Yes," he said, "they are doing finely. It's a great surprise for them."

"What do you mean? I was told they were dead."

"Dead! oh no, nothing of the kind. They are well and hearty. Their daughter has had a little property left to her by her old mistress, and she has come back here to live. She has quite an elegant house over yonder, and she made the old folks sell up their sticks of furniture and go to live with her. They're all right."

"Thank God," I said, reverently, "Like the palsied man who was brought to Jesus for healing only, and received pardon too, my poor friend will now have a second blessing."

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 172.)

The Famous Governor.

MR. JOHNSON, who has been already referred to, occupies a somewhat similar place among the founders of Boston to that which is conceded to Governor Carver among the Pilgrim Fathers of Plymouth. He was a man of considerable wealth, and highly connected in England. He was one of the largest contributors to the original cost of the settlement, and removed to Salem among the first band of emigrants who were tempted by the securities for their liberty and religious privileges which the destination of the royal charter seemed to furnish. He was accompanied by the Lady Arabella, his young and devoted wife, a daughter of the noble house of Lincoln; but, alas, ill-fitted by the delicacy of her early nurture to brave the dangers and hardships of a new colony.

The rank, and the generous liberality of Mr. Johnson naturally led the colonists to look up to him as a leader. No feeling was then stronger in the breasts of Englishmen than that reverence for rank, when allied to corresponding virtues, which includes some of the best features of the old patriarchal state, and is peculiarly calculated to exercise a beneficial influence in a new colony. Those, however, who have been brought up amid the refined delicacies and luxuries to which the wealthier ranks of society are accustomed, are ill-fitted to contend with the thousand hardships and privations that must be endured by the first settlers in the wilderness. So it proved with him whom local historians still name with reverence as the father of Boston.

The Lady Arabella lived long enough to share in such homely comforts as the first log hut of Salem could afford. With generous fortitude she encouraged the desponding settlers, and smiled at the rude substitutes furnished by her new home for the comforts which had been familiar to her from childhood. But she was too delicate an exotic to transplant to the unprepared soil. She wasted under slow-consuming sickness, and was one of the first buried at Salem. Her loss was deeply mourned by the colonists, and visibly preyed on the health of the sorrowing husband. Notwithstanding this, however, and the sad tie which such an event was calculated to create to the place which held the dust of one so dear, Mr. Johnson accompanied the band of emigrants who abandoned Salem and selected Charlestown, the colonial seat of Government, for their place of settlement; and he again joined the survivors who hastily deserted it when a death-plague seemed to threaten the destruction of all.

He lived long enough at Boston to aid in the distribution of its first lands, and to build a house on the lot appropriated as his own share of the soil. The ground allotted to the "Father of Boston" is still pointed out by the citizens of that flourishing sea-port. The court-house now appropriately occupies the site of his dwelling, and his grave was the first which consecrated the burying-ground, where it is still pointed out as one of the memorials of the founders of the State. The esteem in which he was held among the companions of his toil and the sharers in his trials is shown by the terms in which his loss is mentioned by the early historian of the settlement.

"He was endowed with many precious gifts, and a chief pillar to support this new-erected building, so that at his departure there were many weeping eyes, and some fainting hearts, fearing the failure of the undertaking." In life he was the greatest furtherer of the plantation, and by his bequest a benefactor of the infant State. It is not, perhaps, an altogether inappropriate destination that the chief portions of "Johnson's lot" is still occupied only with the little mounds which mark the resting-place of successive generations who have gathered around the grave of the founder of Boston.

But the true father of Boston was Governor Winthrop. He was a man of more enlightened views, and juster ideas of the basis of true liberty, than were acceptable to the stern Puritan colonists of Massachusetts. He did much to temper the severity of their proceedings, when ecclesiastical discipline was converted into civil law. It is an enviable tribute which Williams, the martyr-advocate of toleration, bears to the memory of the Governor of Massachusetts, while suffering from the intolerance of its laws: "That ever-honored Governor Winthrop privately wrote to me to steer my course to the Narragansett Bay, encouraging me from the freeness of the place from English claims or patents. I took his prudent motion as a voice from God." But more of him hereafter.

Meanwhile the following summary of Governor Winthrop's character is furnished by the historian of the Settlement of Boston. "A more interesting character than Winthrop is scarcely to be found in American history. Some of my readers have often seen his portrait in the State-house. He was tall and well formed, his visage long, a high forehead, with dark blue eyes, and dark hair worn in the form of a wig. His countenance beamed benevolence and wisdom. Made a justice of the peace in his native town in England at the early age of eighteen, he grew up in the exercise and art of government. His prudence, patience, courage, and energy made him the successful pilot of the ship of state in the uncharted waters into which she was launched.

"The best part of a community," said he, "is always the least; and of this least part the wiser is always the less." He was liberal in his natural disposition, and it was with reluctance that he yielded to the reigning spirit of intolerance in religion. Having been applied to in his last illness to sign an order for the banishment of a minister, he refused, saying he had done too much of that already. In private life he was frugal and temperate, hospitable, and exceedingly generous to the poor.

"One hard winter complaint was made to him that a person frequently stole wood from his pile. 'Does he?' said Mr. Winthrop; 'send him to me, and I will take a course with him that will cure him of stealing.' The man appeared, trembling under the terrors of the law. 'Friend,' said the Governor, 'it is a cold winter, and I doubt you are but poorly provided with wood. You are welcome to supply yourself at my pile until the winter is over.'

"His religion shone out through all his life, and gave a higher lustre to his character. He was zealous for truth and righteousness. Often would he bear witness to the minister in the congregation; and frequently he visited the neighboring towns to prophesy, as it was called, that is, discourse religiously. His character was admired, not only throughout New England, but in the mother country, and at the court. Charles I. remarked of him that it was a pity that such a worthy gentleman should be no better accommodated than with the hardships of America.

"A wonderful control of his own passions was a proof of the grace of God in him, and associates him in the mind with that other great model of virtue which will for ever adorn our country. On a certain occasion, one of the officers of the colony wrote him a 'sharp letter,' complaining of his official acts. He handed it back to the messenger, after he had read it, remarking that he 'was not willing to keep such a letter of provocation by him.' Not long afterwards, while the colony was suffering from scarcity of food, the same gentleman sent to buy some of his cattle. The Governor sent them to him, begging that he 'would receive them as a token of his good-will.' The gentleman wrote back, 'Sir, your overcoming of yourself, hath overcome me.'

"This admirable temper he carried in all his public life. Cotton Mather says of him that he had 'studied that book, which, professing to teach politics, had but three leaves, and on each leaf but one word, and that word was moderation.'

He died at the age of sixty, worn out with public cares and domestic afflictions. New England owed much to his moderation. It would have been well had the state been more completely under his control. The deputy-governor, Mr. Thomas Dudley, studied law in his youth, and had borne a captain's commission in the service of one of the German States during the continental wars. He attached himself to the Nonconformists after his return to England. His views coincided far more completely with the general opinions of the colonists than those of Governor Winthrop. He several times held the office himself, and was almost always elected deputy when Winthrop was chosen Governor. "He was," says the historian of Boston, "a man of sound sense, sterling integrity, and uncompromising faith. He was rigid in his religious opinions, and went far beyond Winthrop in enforcing the sectarian laws of the state. He considered that the various opinions that were struggling to manifest themselves from time to time tended to licentiousness; and he was desirous that it should be inscribed on his gravestone, that he was no friend to unlimited toleration, which he called libertinism."

The following quaint but very characteristic lines, embodying his protest against toleration, were found in his pocket after his death:

"Dim eye, deaf ear, cold stomach, show
My dissolution is in view;
Eleven times seven near lived have I,
And now God calls, I willing die,
My shuttle's shot, my race is run,
My sun is set, my day is done;
My span is measured, tale is told,
My flower is faded and grown old;
My dream is vanish'd, shadow's fled,
My soul with Christ, my body dead.
Farewell, dear wife, children, and friends,
Hate heresy, make blessed ends,
Bear poverty, live with good men,
So shall we live with joy again.
Let men of God in court and churches watch
O'er such as do a toleration hatch,
Lest that ill egg bring forth a cockatrice,
To poison all with heresy and vice.
If men be left and otherwise combine,
My epitaph's, I died no libertine."

With such a colleague, it needed all Winthrop's liberality to moderate the severities of Puritan discipline. Governor Winthrop proved himself well suited for the ruler of the new settlement; nor did he want efficient coadjutors, whose virtues are still recorded in the annals of the State. The survivors did not despair amid the difficulties that surrounded them. Like the pioneers of Plymouth Bay, their trust was still unshaken, and they doubted not but the God of heaven had better things in store, though the ways of His providence seemed dark, and the blessings of liberty were being purchased at a costly price. It was not in vain that the brave settlers looked forward to brighter days. They had many friends still in England; nor were they, like the founders of Plymouth, dependent on the niggard returns of merchant adventurers. Ships arrived from time to time, laden with provisions and needful stores, and bringing fresh emigrants to fill the vacancies created by death and desertion. Their dangers and difficulties were far fewer than those experienced by the solitary band of exiles from Leyden. They were speedily able to constitute their civil and ecclesiastical systems, and to establish themselves into a well-ordered state, the beneficial influences of which were shared, in some degree, even by the founders of Plymouth, though their worst dangers and difficulties were already at an end.

The government of the new State was necessarily moulded in consistency with the peculiar views of its founders. It was a religious settlement, and the ecclesiastical and civil rights of its members became, accordingly, as completely interwoven as those of England were when the Queen assumed to be Defender of the Faith and supreme head of the Church. One of the first procedures was to enter into what was styled "A Church Covenant." On the 30th of July, 1631, while the colonists still held their headquarters at Charlestown, a solemn day of fasting and prayer was observed. The public services were conducted in the open air; after which the following Covenant was signed in the name of the whole community, by Governor Winthrop, Deputy-Governor Dudley, Mr. Johnson, and the Rev. Mr. Wilson:

"In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in obedience to His holy will and divine ordinance, We, whose names are here underwritten, being by His most wise and good providence brought together into this part of America, in the Bay of Massachusetts, and desirous to unite into one congregation or church, under the Lord Jesus Christ, one head, in such sort as becometh all those whom He hath redeemed and sanctified to Himself, do hereby solemnly and religiously, as in His most holy presence, promise and bind ourselves to walk in all our ways according to the rule of the gospel, and in all sincere conformity to His holy ordinances, and in mutual love and respect to each other, as near as God shall give us grace."

It was, in fact, the constitution of the colony as a religious republic, and it stamped an enduring character on the history of New England. The government of the colony of Massachusetts, as finally settled, was vested in a Governor, Deputy-governor, board of Assistants, and Deputies from each town. At first they constituted one deliberative assembly, but when the dependencies increased, and the number of representatives became proportionably great, they were formed into two houses, modelled to a considerable extent after the Parliament of England. One most momentous element, however, was infused into the political scheme of the Republic. No man was entitled to a vote at any election, unless he was a member of the church. This test was not immediately felt to be irksome where nearly every member of the community was already possessed of the requisite qualification, and it cannot surprise us that it should have been adopted.

The Puritan Fathers of New England were actuated by no visionary schemes of republican liberty. They sought only permission to hold and to carry out their own views, and from the very first they laid it down as an essential element in their scheme of policy to exclude from the settlement all who differed from them in religious opinions, or who refused to be subject to their ecclesiastical discipline. It is unnecessary to remind the reader that this singular union of ecclesiastical and civil polity was afterward productive of many evils to the colony. But it must not be overlooked that this novel establishment of a state religion and of a civil constitution, wherein the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments were the acknowledged basis of legislation, was not adopted without protest.

Most men love extremes. It is rare indeed to find the happily constituted mind that can hold fast to the golden mean which stands fast between the oscillating points of the balance. Yet, with self-complacency and faith in our own moderation, we look back on these strugglers, and smile as we see them with like complacency appeal to

"His golden scales, hung forth in heaven, Which quick up-fly and kick the beam!"

Among the passengers that crowded the Puritan fleet which bore onward to the land of promised liberty there was one, "a young minister, godly and zealous, having many precious gifts," who, with the keenest sympathy for the doctrinal faith and ecclesiastical polity advocated by the Nonconformists, could yet conceive of a higher good than the absolute supremacy of these, as the unbending rule of life in the new state. Roger Williams was little more than thirty years of age when he landed, on the 5th of February, 1631, at the old port of Nantasket, as Hull was called by its Indian owners. He was a Puritan, and a fugitive from England, but his sagacious intellect could discern the spirit of intolerance, whether it decked itself in the white surplice and the cassock of Prelacy, or assumed the demure gown of Geneva. He had perceived, amid the strife of opinions and the struggle of rival sects for supremacy, the force of the Scripture's golden rule—the new commandment which Christ gave to His Church, and which includes in its comprehensive summary the whole spirit of the Decalogue graven of old on the tablets of Sinai—"Do to others as ye would that men should do to you." He sought, in the land of promise, a far nobler liberty than that of making it an occasion of bondage to others.

He was not, indeed, perfect. In his desire to divorce the civil from the spiritual power, so as to destroy the source of those evils which he most dreaded in the new state, he undoubtedly ran to some extremes. He maintained that it was wrong for a magistrate to tender an oath to an unregenerate man, "for he would thereby have communication with a wicked man in the worship of God, and cause him to take the name of God in vain." With still greater austerity, he publicly taught "that it was not lawful for an unregenerate man to pray, or for a good man to join in family prayer with those he judged unregenerate." Another opinion of his will not probably sound quite so heinous in modern ears as it did to his old New England auditors, when he told them that the charter of Charles I. was utterly worthless, for the King of England had no right to cede to them the possessions of the Indians. But if ever man had established the right to hold his own opinions unchallenged it was Roger Williams.

His lofty principles of unqualified toleration were scorned and condemned by his fellow emigrants, because they were altogether in advance of his age. Cromwell, perhaps, more than any man of the seventeenth century, was capable of appreciating them, yet it may be doubted if even he had so early discerned the true spirit of liberty. It was the great doctrine by which the Protector of the Commonwealth of England afterward sought to secure her liberty, and to prove himself her protector against her foes, and against herself, no securing the liberty of the Puritans by giving supremacy to Nonconformity, but uprooting Nonconformity as well as despotism, by extending equal liberty to all.

(To be Continued.)

Hood's Sarsaparilla
peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared a Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Issowa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a allar combination, proportion and process, ng to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not eased by other medicines. It effects remark-cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
he best blood purifier before the public. It eates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dys-eas, Billousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, renal Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feel-creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
met peculiar and unparalleled success at
oe. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, sa, where it is made, that whole neighbords are taking it at the same time. Lowell gists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers.
d by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by
L. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar

He is a fool who makes a wedge of his Yet such ridiculous things are done y day. Think for instance or attempt-to clean house without

SAPOLIO.

YS! Speakers; Dialogues; Books of Games, Sports and Amusements, Charades, aux, etc. Catalogue sent free on application to THE DEWITT PUBLISHING HOUSE,
33 Rose Street, New York.

ATTENTION, MOTHERS! Has your BABY any of these Symptoms?
Twelve Questions of Vital Importance to Mothers. For BABY'S sake read what fol-1st, Are your baby's cheeks wan and pale?—2d, Is it losing in weight?—3d, Is it ined to be puny and feeble?—4th, Does its flesh lack firmness?—5th, Is it fretful and ish?—6th, Is it inclined to sleep all the time?—7th, Does its milk pass through it unsted?—8th, Does it seem to get little or no nourishment from its food?—9th, Is it troubled feeding with throwing up its food or with colic?—10th, Is it recovering from illness?—
Is it backward about cutting its teeth?—12th, Has it symptoms of cholera infantum, as vomiting or diarrhoea, with great weak-and debility?—In all these conditions cial results—either alone or added to its regular diet. BOVININE is a pure Raw Extract—the vital principles of Beef concentrated.

TRUMPET PEALS.
Collection of Timely and Eloquent Extracts

From the Sermons of the
V. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.
Collected and classified by Rev. C. L. kwood, with the consent of the author.
pages, besides very copious indexes for rence of the best and most popular of Doctor's writings. Containing also a erb

Portrait of Dr. Talmage, an elegant view of the New Brooklyn Tabernacle
e being built; also the Doctor's letter
m Syria, with account of the baptism he river Jordan, and other particulars.
ld by subscription only. A lady or gentle-n wanted in every city or town to act as nt. Liberal inducements. Application ould be made immediately. For particers apply to the publishers, BROMFIELD & CO.,
658 Broadway, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTEY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.
A few good men to sell our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full information address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

Bermuda Bottled.
"You must go to Bermuda. If you do not I will not be responsible for the consequences." But, doctor, I can afford neither the time nor the money." "Well, if that is impossible, try SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE NORWEGIAN
COD LIVER OIL.
I sometimes call it Bermuda Bottled, and many cases of CONSUMPTION,
Bronchitis, Cough or Severe Cold
I have CURED with it; and the advantage is that the most sensitive stomach can take it. Another thing which commends it is the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites which it contains.
You will find it for sale at your Druggist's but see you get the original SCOTT'S EMULSION."

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.
VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA
"Largest Sale in the World"
Ask your Grocer for it, take no other. [62]

BUSH'S FLUID FOOD
BOVININE will produce the most regular diet. BOVININE is a pure Raw Extract—the vital principles of Beef concentrated.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Absorbs all impurities from the blood.
Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.
Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Cures Billousness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhoea, Malaria, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, &c.
Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.
Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Smallpox,
"Yellow, Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers."
All druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $2.00.
HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO.,
Box 2112. St John St., N. Y.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.
EGGLESTON'S ELASTIC TRUSS
Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

RUPTURE CURED
with our Improved Elastic Truss worn with ease night and day, retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York.
$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons perferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities.
E. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.
AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable
firm; large profits,
quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, New York.

PEARLINE
Less House-Cleaning More Health
Less Annoyance More Comfort
Such is the experience of women who use Pearl line for housecleaning, and the degree of health and comfort is largely due to the way they use it. Directions for saving labor on every package. Delicate women can clean house by its aid; children will be a help, and husbands will never know the work is going on—out of the way, and they will be ignorant of it. It is bosh to say that Pearl line hurts the clothing, the paint or the hands. Numbers of people clean their teeth with it; many babes have been washed with it from their birth; the most delicate of laces and linens have been subjected to the severest of tests. Everything washable, and everybody who must do this work, is benefitted by reason of the use of Pyle's Pearl line. It's the modern soap. You'll know it and use it sooner or later. Your grocer keeps the goods.
Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearl line, or "the same as Pearl line."
IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous.
Beware
164 JAMES PYLE, New York.

BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION FOR 1890 Contains one regular size packet each of the rare and lovely blue Torenia Fournieri,—the gorgeous new Shirley Poppies,—the fragrant Little Gem Sweet Alyssum,—many varieties mixed of Choice Double Asters,—the unequalled strain of Burpee's Superb Camellia-Flowered Balsams,—Finest Mixed Chinese and Japanese Pinks,—Extra fine Mixed New and Beautiful Ipomoeas,—Choice Mixed Fancies,— Fordhook strain of Superfine Petunia Hybrida, —and twelve grand New Sweet Peas Mixed, in all TEN VARIETIES best new and popular ANNUALS for 25 cts.
or FIVE GEM COLLECTIONS mailed for $1.00.
Try to get up a Club. Illustration and directions for growing printed upon each packet. Purchased separately at retail, the ten packets in our 25 cent Gem Collection would cost 85 cents, and this SPECIAL BURPEE'S SEEDS.
OFFER is made to induce all to try BURPEE'S SEEDS.
ORDER NOW BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1890, handsomely illustrated with —and ask for THE BEST SEEDS! including NEW VEGETABLES and FLOWERS of real merit, which cannot be obtained elsewhere.
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S
ROSES AND SEEDS
We offer postpaid at your door
the LARGEST STOCK of ROSES in America, all varieties, sizes and prices. New CLEMATIS and CLIMB-ING VINES. New Hardy FLOWERING PLANTS. New Summer FLOWERING BULBS.
ALL THE FINEST NEW ROSES, New CHRYSANTHEMUMS, GLADIOLUS, TUBE-
ROSES, New MOON FLOWERS, New and Rare FLOWER & VEGETABLE SEEDS.
New GRAPES. Satisfaction guaranteed. OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., handsomely illustrated.
Write for it FREE. It will pay you to see it before buying. Goods sent everywhere by mail or express.
THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Rose Growers and Seedsmen, West Grove, Pa.

SCOTT'S FLOWERS
41 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1890, with a lovely Colored Plate of Beautiful New Roses. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

SEEDS.
My Annual PRICED CATALOGUE is now ready and mailed free to all applicants. It contains all the leading and most VEGETABLE, FARM
AND FLOWER SEEDS.
Besides all the desirable novelties of last season, and nearly every thing else in my line of business.
ALFRED BRIDGEMAN,
37 East 19th St., New York City.

BAILEY'S
Compound light-spreading silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Catalogue and price
free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 118 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

The GREAT CHURCH LIGHT
FRINK'S Patent Reflectors for Gas or Oil, give the most powerful, softest cheapest & Best light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room, Get circular and estimate. A Liberal discount to churches and the trade.
Don't be deceived by cheap imitations.
I. P. FRINK, 551 Pearl St., N. Y.

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.
Beecham's Pills
For Bilious and Nervous Disorders.
"Worth a Guinea a Box"—but sold for 25 cents,
BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR
CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Comfortable. Successful where all Remedies fail. Sold by F. H. COOK, only, 663 Broadway, New York. Write for book of proofs FREE.

SIT STILL.

"Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall." REVEREND 18.

Sit still, my child. 'Tis no great thing I ask,
No glorious deed, no mighty task;
But just to sit and patiently abide,
Wait in My presence, in My word confide.

But oh! dear Lord, I long the sword to wield,
Forward to go, and in the battle field
To fight for Thee, Thine enemies o'erthrow,
And in Thy strength to vanquish every foe.

The harvest-fields spread out before me lie,
The reapers toward me look, and vainly cry—
"The field is white, the laborers are few;"
Our Lord's command is also sent to you."

My child, it is a sweet and blessed thing,
To rest beneath the shadow of My wing;
To feel thy doings and thy words are nought,
To trust to Me each restless, longing thought.

Dear Lord, help me this lesson sweet to learn,
To sit at Thy pierced feet and only yearn
To love Thee better, Lord, and feel that still Waiting is working if it be Thy will.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla is due to the tremendous amount of brain work and constant care used in its preparation. Try one bottle and you will be convinced of its superiority.

St. Louis, Mo., April 23, 1899.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO. We have now used your Reflector about three months. It is very satisfactory. Our audience room, 50x60, and the ceiling about 32 feet at the highest point, is lighted admirably by your 60-inch Reflector. Very Respectfully, J. H. HOLMES, Chairman Building Committee Third Congregational Church.

WILD MARCH MUSIC,

Gentle and sweet melodies, sacred and secular songs, and all other kinds of music are in our thousands of books and millions of sheet music pieces!

YOUNG PLAYERS' POPULAR COLLECTION (Pap. $1. Bds.
$1.25) New, bright and easy. 143 Piano Pieces.

WHITNEY'S ORGAN ALBUM (S. B. Whitney, 33 fine Organ pieces for Manual and Pedal, by 20 distinguished composers.

A helpful, useful friend to pupil and teacher is MASON'S PIANO-FORTE TECHNIQUES and W. S. B. Matthews. This admirable system of scales, arpeggios and all other needed technical exercises, with good directions, holds a high place in the esteem of thorough teachers, and should be everywhere used.

Our thoroughly good, genial and practical School Music Books are widely known and used. Do you use them?

SONG MANUAL Book 1, Primary. (30 cts., $3 doz.);
Book 2, Medium. (40 cts., $4.20 doz.);
Book 3, Higher Classes. (50 cts., $4.80 doz.) by L. O.
Emerson, is his last and best book, and a rare good book for schools.

MOTION SONGS (25 cts., $2.28 doz.) by Mrs. Boardman, is a delight to teachers and children.
Any book mailed promptly for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

HOLY LAND PARTY
Sails March 19, per "City of Paris." $520.

Spring Parties to Europe. Send for pamphlet.
Gaze's "Tourist Gazette," 75 cents. HENRY GAZE & SON, Sole Passenger Agents for the New Nile S. S.
Co., 940 Broadway, New York. Established 1844.

VICTORY AT LAST!
Self-threading Sewing Needles.

The blind can use them. Invaluable for falling sight. Finest needle made. Millward's Gold Eyes; do not cut the thread.
Sample paper 10c.; 3 for 25c.; 12 for 75c.
NEW ENGLAND NOVELTY MFG CO., 24 Portland Street, Boston, Mass.

WEIGHTS AND WINGS. By CHAS. F. DEEMS,
D.D. Introduction by Bishop John F.
Hurst, D.D. Elegantly illustrated. Agents wanted everywhere. Distance no hindrance. Liberal terms.
Send for circulars. Full particulars on application.
WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Pub., 13 Cooper Union, N. Y.

25¢ PRINTING UTILITY.
A WHOLE PRINTING OFFICE, COMPLETE AND PRACTICAL,
Just as shown in cut. 3 Alphabets of finest Type, Barrels of Indelible Ink, Pad, Tweezers, in neat case with catalogue and directions "HOW TO BE A PRINTER." Send any name, print cards, paper, envelopes, etc., mailed free. Worth 50c. The best gift for young people. Postpaid only 25c. 3 for 75c.
6 for $1. Agents wanted. Ingersoll & Bro., 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City.

Send 2c. stamp for postage.
Easter Music Free The Echo Music Co., LaFayette, Indiana.

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address
on a postal for free sample copy of Phrenological Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "That Boy of Mine, and What to do with Him."
Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 71 Broadway, N. Y.

BUFFALO LITHIA

SPRINGS OF VIRGINIA. THE PORTABLE HOT SPRING.

THIS WATER GOES TO HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, AND HOT SPRINGS, VIRGINIA, RESIDENT PHYSICIANS AT HOT SPRINGS USE IT IN THEIR OWN CASES, AND PRE-SCRIBE IT FOR PATIENTS FOR GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM, GRAVEL, RENAL CALCULI, AND ALL DISEASES OF URIC ACID DIATHESIS.
ITS VALUE IN BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

Dr. Algernon S. Garnett, Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark.

"My experience in the use of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is limited to the treatment of Gout, Rheumatism, and that hybrid disease, 'Rheumatic Gout' (so called), which is in contradistinction to the Rheumatoid Arthritis of Garrod.

"I have had excellent results from this water in these affections, both in my own person and in the treatment of patients for whom I have prescribed it. Of course the remedial agent is its contained Alkalies and their solvent properties.

"Hence it is a prophylactic as well as a remedy in Nephritic Colic and forming Cal-culi, when due to a redundancy of Lithic Acid."

Dr. Wm. B. Towles, Professor of Anatomy and Materia Medica in the Medical Department of the University of Virginia. Former Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Va.:

BUFFALO LITHIA SPRING No. 2 belongs to the ALKALINE, or, perhaps, to the ALKALINE-SALINE Class, for it has proved far more efficacious in many diseased conditions than any of the simple ALKALINE waters.

"I feel no hesitancy whatever in saying that in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Stone in the Bladder, and in all diseases of Uric Acid Diathesis, I know of no remedy at all comparable to it.

"Its effects are marked in causing a disappearance of Albumen from the urine.
In a single case of Bright's Disease of the Kidneys I witnessed decided beneficial results from its use, and from its action in this case I should have great confidence in it as a remedy in certain stages of this disease."

Dr. T. B. Buchanan, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark.:

"Send me five cases BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, SPRING No. 2. I have made use of this Water for GOUT in my own person, and prescribed it for patients similarly suffering, with the most decided beneficial results. I take pleasure in advising Gouty patients to use these Springs."

The Late Dr. Thomas P. Atkinson, Ex-President Medical Society of Virginia:

"I have been a frequent visitor to the celebrated Hot Water Resorts, and also at the Buffalo Lithia Springs. Close observation of the action of the different Waters has satisfied me that among sufferers from Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, and diseases generally dependent upon a Uric Acid Diathesis, a much larger percentage are relieved by the Buffalo Lithia Water than by any of the Hot waters. Experience has shown this water to be a powerful agent for the removal of Vesical Calculi. It has proved equally efficient in effecting the solution and preventing the deposition of the Phosphatic and the Uric Acid Sediment.

"When used at an early stage, while enough of the renal structure remains to answer the purpose of purifying the blood, it is of decided efficacy in BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS, and, indeed, in some cases where the destruction of the Kidney has been greater, its use has resulted in partial restoration and prolongation of life."

Water in Cases of One Dozen Half-Gallon Bottles, $5.00 per Case at the Springs.

THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor,

Buffalo Lithia Springs, Virginia.

Concert Temperance Exercises.

The National Temperance Society has just published a new book of Temperance Exercises, or Helps for Entertainments. Suitable for Day-schools, Bands of Hope, Loyal Legions, Juvenile Templars, and all children's organizations, which will be found useful and helpful for all workers among the young.
12mo, 160 pages. Miss L. Penney, Editor. Cloth,
50 cents; paper covers, 25 cents. Address, J. N.
Stearns, Publishing Agent, 59 Reade St., New York.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label). Palmer, Mass.
WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell
"The Christian's Legacy."
One young man started on the 13th of December and ordered 59 copies before the 31st of December.
102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York

THE ONE GOSPEL

OR,
The Combination of the Narratives of the Four Evangelists in one Complete Record.

Edited by Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D.
12mo, Flexible Cloth, Red Edges, 75 Cents
Limp Morocco, Full Gilt, $2.00.

Without taking the place of the four Gospels this book may be an aid in their study—a summary wholly biblical, whereby the reader may at one view, see the complete and harmoni-cal testimony of four independent witnesses.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by
THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers
740 & 742 Broadway, New York

MEXICO

Contributions in aid Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly nee-ed, and can be mailed the address of BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEAT
43 Bible House, New York.

PIANOS $150 to $1500
ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. N.Y.

PRICE $180. They Lead the World
Sent for trial in your own home.
ABSOLUTELY PERFECT
Guaranteed Six Years.
DON'T BUY
A POOR PIANO!
Cat. Free.
MARGAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.
$35 to $50

ORGAN
$35 to $50

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken pleasure by delicate persons and children, who using it, are very fond of it. It assimilates with food, increases the flesh and appetite, builds up the nervous system, restores energy to mind and creates new, rich, and pure blood,—in fact, re-newes the whole system.

FLESH, NERVE, BLOOD, BRAIN.
This preparation is far superior to all other preparations of Cod-liver Oil; it has many imitators, but equals none. The results following its use are its becommendations. Be sure, as you value your health, get the genuine. Manufactured only by Dr. A. B.
Bor, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Pe-
tea. A TRIAL ORDER
3 1/2 pounds of Fine Tea, 3
Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunder, Young Hyson, Mixed, Pe-breakfast or Sun Sun Choby mail on receipt of $2.00. Interesting and state what kind of you want. Greatest inducement ever offered for orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Lungs Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

HENRY L. REDFIELD,
INSURANCE CO.
100 Broadway, New York

AGENTS: F. B. TREAT'S Catalogue
Send for new books. Shots at $2.75
Targets, by T. L. Cuyler, 10c.
$2.50. Quick can be
pay. Also, Mo-Home & Hes-400 best authors
by T. L. Cuyler, 10c.
192,000
Curiosities of Bible $2 By Mail F. B. TREAT

ALL THIS for $1.00

An Ice Cream Freezer, (the best in the A Keystone Culinary Beater and Mixer (6 cake, bread, etc., etc., whipping cream, eg-and a thousand other things.) A 50c. Cook-PAINE, DIEHL & CO., PHILADELPHIA

SHORTHAND Private instruction by practical reporter. 20 years' ex-No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book an-lars free. FRANK HARRISON, Steno-239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 12. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF ULYSSES GRANT HOUSTON, and Picture of His Baptism in the Jordan by Dr. Talmage.
TREATMENT OF PARENTS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
JESUS AND THE SABBATH. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
New Zealand Hero—A Sick Mother's Suffering in India—A Mexican Belle—A Grateful Japanese Father—The Work in Lone Wolf's Camp—The Practice of the Presence of God—A Party of Four—A Heathen Prophecy—The Conversion of a Lady in India—A Soldier's Shelter from Bullets.

THE CRAFTY ENEMY. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
THE DECEM - REGAL CONFEDERACY. By Thomas Neatby.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF JOSE M. P. CAAMANO.
Gems from New Books: Why the Immigrants Come—How They Used to Come.
PICTURE OF MONTEVIDEO.
THEODORE VINCENT'S THERAPEUTICS. (Ill'd.)
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. (Concluded.)

the Baptism in the Jordan by Dr. Talmage of Mr. Ulysses Grant Houston, of Manhattan, Kans., on Dec. 6, 1889.

THE BAPTISM IN THE JORDAN

On December 6, 1889.

Dr. Talmage and His Party in Jericho—Associations of the City—Meeting with Another American Party—A Pleasant Journey Together—Arrival at the Dead Sea—The Effect of Its Waters—The Ride to the Jordan—A Request by One of the Party—Preparations for Performing the Rite of Baptism—An Appropriate Hymn—Native Witnesses—The Sheik Affected—The Ceremony—Local Tributes to Mr. Houston.

THE picture on the preceding page is engraved from one of a number of photographs brought home from the Holy Land by a member of Dr. Talmage's party, several of which we hope to reproduce in this journal at appropriate times. This picture represents one of the most solemn and deeply interesting incidents of Dr. Talmage's tour—that of the baptism in the river Jordan of Mr. Ulysses Grant Houston, of Manhattan, Kans., a theological student, whose portrait accompanies the illustration. The baptism took place on December 6, 1889, in the presence of two friends and travelling companions of Mr. Houston, and of Dr. Talmage's party, with their dragoman, muleteers, and an Arab sheik, who had been retained to protect the travellers on their journey. Such precautions are necessary now in the neighborhood of Jericho, as they were in the Saviour's time, when "a certain man going to Jericho fell among thieves."

The Journey

commenced at Jericho. This is the third of the cities which have borne that name, and was the city of our Lord's time. The first of the three was that of Rahab, to which the spies went, and which was destroyed by Joshua. The second was built by Hiel, who paid the penalty pronounced by Joshua (Josh. 6:26) against the man who should rebuild the city. His eldest son died when the foundations were laid, and his youngest son died when the gates were set up. There it was that Elisha "healed" the spring of water (II Kings 2:18-21), and near there Zedekiah the king was defeated, and his eyes put out. (II Kings 25:5.) The third city was built under Herod the Great, and improved by Archelaus, who diverted a stream of water from Nœra to water the plain, and it became a city of palms. It was located about half an hour's journey from the site of the earlier city. This Jericho still flourished in Christ's time, and there He wrought the cure of the blind man (Matt. 20:30), and paid His memorable visit to Zaccheus.

From this place, so rich in sacred historical associations, Dr. Talmage and his party set out, mounted on horses, in a southeasterly direction for the north of the Dead Sea and the River Jordan. About half an hour's ride brought them to Riha, or the modern Jericho, a collection of houses built in modern style, and boasting a hotel of some pretensions, whose chief support comes from foreign visitors to the Holy Land. As they passed the hotel three travellers emerged from it whose dress and manner suggested their being Fellow Countrymen.

The suspicion was confirmed when their leader greeted Dr. Talmage in English. It appeared that he was a Bostonian, and he expressed the pleasure it would afford him and his companions, as they also were going to the Dead Sea and the Jordan, to make the trip in company with the preacher's party. The Bostonian frankly said that he had been concerned in the publication of a hostile criticism on Dr. Talmage's sermons, but he trusted that would not prevent their good-fellowship on such an excursion. In this view Dr. Talmage good-humoredly concurred, and the two parties rode on together in company. In such a scene, and on a road so hallowed by the most wonderful and momentous events of Bible history, merely personal concerns were forgotten in the solemn Associations of the Locality.

Surrounding them were the mountain-peaks on which Jacob must have looked when with his "staff he crossed this Jordan," and again when he returned, having "become two bands." Over that road the children of Israel must have passed when, having miraculously crossed the Jordan, they went toward Jericho to make their strange processions around its walls. That was the last earthly scene on which the eyes of Elijah rested when, over against Jericho, beyond Jordan, in a chariot of fire, with horses of fire, he "went up by a whirlwind into heaven." And still more impressive was the thought that He who went about doing good had passed this way, had looked upon the same scene, and had worked miracles in those same surroundings.

Little remains now by that road to please the eye. Everything appeals to the imagination and the associations of the past. Ruins are everywhere, and even the structures which still stand, modern as they are, seem to have been built out of the ruins of more imposing edifices, degenerate descendants of far nobler predecessors. Only nature is beautiful there, and she will put on a more intense loveliness still in that coming time when "the mountains and the hills shall break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands." Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name; for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

Conversation on the subject that was uppermost in all minds—the past glory and present decadence of the country—occupied the party as they rode through the scenes whose names and associations had been familiar to them from childhood. The remarks of the new acquaintances proved that they were well read in Bible history, as well as generally intelligent. About an hour's ride brought the party to the shores of about which so many strange stories have been related by travellers. It is an inland sea about forty-six miles long, and ten wide at its greatest width. It receives the waters of the Jordan at its northern end, but has no known outlet. The tradition that its exhalations are so poisonous that birds flying over it are overcome and fall into it dead proves incorrect, as the visitors saw several flocks of them pass over it unharmed. But no fish live in it; and on tasting the water it was found to be much more saline than ordinary sea-water, and to have a peculiar taste not unlike sulphuric acid. Several members of the party laved their hands and faces with the water and found that when dry a perceptible deposit of salt remained on the skin. The region bears marks of natural convulsion, especially the deep ghor or chasm by which the Jordan flows into the sea. The whole aspect gives color to the belief that the sea owes its existence to a sunken depression, and that its placid waters lie over the site of the cities of the plain which were destroyed because of the moral degradation of their inhabitants. It is still a gloomy, desolate scene, shunned by the Arabs, and having no village or human habitation on its borders.

The Dead Sea,

The River Jordan,

to the Christian the most interesting stream in the whole world, was not far away, and the travellers, after spending half an hour on the shores of the Dead Sea, remounted their horses and rode thitherward. In about three-quarters of an hour their eyes were gladdened by a sight of the river. Not a great river, certainly. Its length from source to mouth is only 200 miles, and only 136 in a straight line. Its width varies from 45 to 180 feet, and its depth from 3 to 12 feet. An insignificant river, truly, but how rich in associations! Its waters have been parted to let the great host pass through dryshod. (Joshua 3:15, 17.) They parted again when Elijah and Elisha passed through (II Kings 2:8), and they gave the first proof that the spirit of Elijah had fallen upon Elisha. It was in its despoiled waters that Naaman, the Syrian, dipped seven times, and was cleansed of his leprosy. (II Kings 5:14.) But still more precious are its New Testament associations. In one of its numerous quiet eddies John baptized when "all Jerusalem and all Judea went out to him and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins" (Matt. 3:5, 6), and—crowning glory of all—in its waters the God-man Himself was baptized, and as He came up those very banks the heavens opened and the voice of God Himself proclaimed His Sonship. (Matt. 3:16, 17.) It was indeed a privilege to stand upon those banks, and one that was evidently appreciated by every member of the party.

On the way Mr. Houston had fallen into conversation with a member of Dr. Talmage's party, and had delicately broached a request which was evidently a matter of very strong desire on his part. He said that he had often heard Dr. Talmage preach, and had been much blessed under him. He would count it a high privilege to be baptized by him, and a still greater privilege if the rite could take place in the Jordan. His desire was communicated to the Doctor, and he cheerfully consented. Three o'clock was the time set for the ceremony, and meantime the tents were pitched, and one of the servants who could swim tested the bottom of the river for a suitable place for the ceremony, as there are deep places at intervals near the banks, and an accident was possible.

It was a delightful day, and though the month was December, the temperature was that of a summer day. At the hour appointed, Dr. Talmage emerged from his tent clad in a long brown robe borrowed for the occasion from the sheik. It was not unclerical in shape, though somewhat short for the Doctor's tall form. The candidate for baptism had secured a long white robe from the Nubian attendant of his party, and thus clad, came to the bank where Dr. Talmage, and the other members of the party waited. It was an interesting group, composed of the American ladies and gentlemen, the sheik, the muleteers and other attendants.

The Service

was opened by singing. No hymn-books were at hand, but the ladies of the party had provided for that deficiency while the tents were being pitched and the Doctor and Mr. Houston were robing themselves. They had written out from memory the stanzas, so appropriate to the occasion and the scene, which now rose in cadence on the river bank:

On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye
To Canaan's fair and happy land,
Where my possessions lie.

O the transporting, rapturous scene
That rises to my sight:
Sweet fields arrayed in living green,
And rivers of delight!

When shall I reach that happy place,
And be forever blest?
When shall I see my Father's face,
And in His bosom rest?

It was a solemn scene; even the sheik was affected by it. To the surprise of the Americans he prostrated himself on the earth and prayed to Allah, as if the spirit of worship could not be resisted. As the singing ceased, he rose and closely watched the ceremony. Dr. Talmage then led in prayer, invoking the Divine presence and blessing. Opening his Bible, he then read from the third chapter of Matthew the account of the baptism of Jesus. The customary questions to the candidate were asked, and satisfactory answers were given. Dr. Talmage then read his commission in Matthew 28:19, 20, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," etc. Looking the candidate squarely in the face, Dr. Talmage said: "In this historic river, which parted three times to let God's people pass dryshod, in which Naaman plunged seven times for healing from disease, and from the banks of which Elijah ascended in equipage of fire, and in which Christ was baptized, and which for ages has been the symbol of the division between earth and heaven, I baptize thee." Then taking the candidate by the hand, he led him into the water. Reaching the sufficient depth he immersed him three separate times, repeating the usual formula: "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, after which he pronounced the benediction. At the close of the ceremony Dr. Talmage said: "The ordinance was observed under the direction of no particular denomination of Christians, and no particular Church could be responsible for it, I feel it my duty to report what I did to the Church universal."

After the ceremony, and when Dr. Talmage and Mr. Houston had resumed their usual attire, the latter went to Dr. Talmage and thanked him for acceding to his request; and said, reverently, that it would be a blessed and hallowing memory while he so long as he lived. Dr. Talmage took of his note-book and wrote a baptismal certificate stating the time and place of the administration of the rite, which he handed to Mr. Houston.

The Candidate.

Concerning the young man who was thus baptized, and whose portrait appears on the first page of the News, of New Haven, Conn., says that last summer he was under the tuition of Prof. W. V. Haskell of that city, making a special study of New Testament Greek, with the intention of entering Yale University, but had deferred entering for time. A deeply interesting work of art, "one of the most interesting that it had ever been the writer's good fortune to see," designed and executed by Mr. Houston, was in October, 1889, on exhibition in the Yale Reading-Room. The News says: "It Houston has also patented an 'Educational Model of the Universe,' which presents very ingenious methods of illustrating the movements of the human body, and also material illustrations of mental and moral truth. The model is now at the Northwestern University, in Chicago. His invention for illustrating the movements and positions of the planets of our solar system is very ingenious. In the same mechanism are represented a heavenly plane, a terrestrial plane, a spiritual plane, a vicious plane, a plane of art, a commercial plane, and a portion of a celestial plane exterior to a portion of the solar system. Ex-President Porter is greatly interested in his mechanism for representing the free action of the will, and other mental and moral truth. Prof. Thayer, of the Howard Divinity School, has also shown great interest in the work. When in England, Prof. Drummond and many of the English scholars became interested in his work."

A MEXICAN BELLE.

A GRAPHIC description of a beautiful Indian girl from the pen of Mrs. Lew Wallace, appears in a contemporary. It shows how lovely a coporeal form may be the abode of a soul untaught and untrained. It is very sad to think how many such girls and bright boys there are in Mexico who might be won for Christ if Bishop H. C. Riley had sufficient funds to multiply the excellent schools he has in Mexico, and from which already several have come forth to preach the good tidings of salvation. Mrs. Lew Wallace says:

"There passes my window at this moment a young Indian girl from Tezuque. She is dark but comely, and without saddle or bridle sits astride her burro in cool defiance of city prejudice. Gayly dressed, with ready and quick smile, showing the whitest teeth, we call her Bright Alfarata, though the interpreter says her true name is Rising Moon. Neither of us understands a word of the other's language, so I beckon to her. She springs to the ground with the supple grace of an antelope, and comes to me, holding out a thin, slender hand the tint of Florentine bronze, seats herself on the window-sill, and we converse in what young lovers are eased to call eloquent silence. Her burro will not stray, but lingers patiently about, like the lamb she resembles in face and temper, and nibbles the sweet grass which fringes the acequia. I think his mistress must be a lady of high degree, she wears such a holiday air, unusual with Indian women, and is so richly adorned with beads of strung perikinkles. She wears loose moccasins—shoes of lence—which cannot hide the delicate and shapely outline of her feet, leggins of deer-skin, a skirt reaching below the knee, and a loose waist of cotton. Her head has no covering but glossy jet-black hair, banged in front, and is tricked off behind the ears in the shape of a wheel, which resembles the handle of a cup—the distinguishing fashion of maidenhood now, as it was more than three hundred years ago. Tied by a scarlet cord across her forehead is a pendant of opaline shell, the lining of a mussel-shell. Our pueblo belle wraps about her a flowing mantle which has followed the march of progress."

A NEW ZEALAND HERO.

It is the fashion for worldly persons to speak lightly of the value of missionary work in heathen lands. An incident commemorated in a stained-glass window is a standing reproof to all such cavillers. The window is in the Cathedral of Exeter, England, of which the good Dr. Selwyn, the famous missionary to New Zealand, afterward became Bishop. It was presented by army officers who had served in New Zealand, as a mark of gratitude for the Bishop's kindness when he and they were in that country. One of its panels depicts the Bishop in the act of pouring out the longed-for water of the well of Bethlehem, procured for him by "the three mighty men" at the risk of their lives. This medallion commemorates the similar heroic action of a Christian Maori, who had been a pupil of Dr. Selwyn's when he was in New Zealand. His Maori, Henere Taratoa, when the war broke out felt bound to join his tribe. He was placed in charge of a fortified village known as the formidable "Gate Pa." The British troops stormed the place and were repulsed with great slaughter. Several wounded officers were left inside the village, and some of them feebly moaned for water. There was no water to be had, the nearest being within the British lines. At night this young Christian Maori crept down, at the risk of his life, within the line of English sentries, filled a vessel with water, and carried it back to the pa to refresh his dying enemy's lips. The next day the British again stormed the place, and Henere was killed. Whoever might speak lightly of Christian missions after that, it would not be the wounded British officer, who, as he refreshed himself with the cooling drink, had reason to bless God that Bishop Selwyn had taught a young Maori to obey the Master's command, "If thine enemy thirst, give him drink."

A GRATEFUL JAPANESE FATHER.

IN Tsuruga, Japan, where the Rev. Theodosius S. Tyng recently commenced mission work, is located the headquarters of the idolatrous Shinshu religion. It was a most discouraging field of labor, but Mr. Tyng now writes to the Spirit of Missions a most hopeful report of his success and future prospects. He says: As a matter of course the opposition to Christianity is stronger than in any other part of the country; but the religious spirit is also stronger, and though our work may be slow, we are likely to have here very earnest and steady Christians when once they are brought in. So far the work has developed with most unexpected rapidity. Our first service, in a theatre, was held at the end of June, and I have already baptized five adults and three children. They are all from one family—a retired physician and his wife, with a married son and daughter-in-law, daughter, and three younger children. The father, who had before been favorable to Christianity, was greatly influenced to become a Christian by the remarkable reformation under the influence of the Gospel of his son, who had before been very dissipated. The older man is possessed of some means, and has offered to give a kura, or fire-proof storehouse, to be turned into a church. It is 30 x 48 feet in size, strongly built, and will answer its purposes admirably. Of course I am delighted to have the church, and still more delighted with the earnestness which has led this man to make such an offering to God on the very day of his baptism. He will contribute something also toward fitting up the building, and I hope to have it ready for use very shortly.

A SICK MOTHER'S SUFFERING IN INDIA.

IN a little pamphlet issued by Mrs. George D. Dowkontt, the wife of the devoted servant of Christ, who is training medical missionaries in New York for service in heathen lands, she cites several incidents in proof of the fact that in the cause of mercy and common humanity there is awful need of intelligent, trained Christian physicians of both sexes to go out. One of these incidents is from the pen of Miss Emma J. Cummings, M. D., who is laboring as a missionary in India. That lady says:

"I shall never forget (I wish I could) one experience that I had; I was called up at midnight to see a woman in the last stages of puerperal fever.

"I found her tossing and muttering in a delirium that ran into stupor and then death. I did what I could to make her comfortable, bathing the hot skin, and moistening the parched lips, etc., then inquired if the child—born seven days before—were living. One of the women answered indifferently, 'Yes, it's alive yet.' I asked where it was, and she replied, 'Oh, it is in there,' pointing to another room, 'but never mind the baby; it's not worth while to do anything for it; it is nothing but a girl.'"

"I went in at once, and found the poor little thing lying on a rough cord bedstead, with only one thickness of thin cloth beneath it. It had never been washed, and for four days had not been fed, and every tiny bone was visible through the drawn skin.

"Physician though I am, my eyes filled with tears as I took up the little skeleton. I did what I could to save, but a merciful Father took the little soul to where it would be loved and developed, even though it had been 'only a girl,' and as I thought of the blessed change I thanked Him that my efforts had been unavailing. The mother died a few hours later, but I wonder if you ladies, in your refined homes, can imagine the death scene in India? No sooner did they learn that death was near, than neighbors began to swarm in, until the miserable hut had twenty or thirty in, all vying with each other in groaning, shrieking, smiting their chests, and screaming. In vain I showed them that the noise was torture to her poor brain, and that her head began to roll from side to side again. I could not even keep them from throwing themselves full weight on her poor chest, laboring harder and harder in the effort to get her breath, and when I wanted to give a few drops of medicine, but failed because her jaws were already set, I turned cold and faint to see her own mother strike her to compel her to swallow. I saw that I could do no good, and as the strain was too severe to be borne unnecessarily, I left her two hours before she died, but the scene haunted me for months."

The International Medical Missionary Society which Dr. Dowkontt has organized has several students in training for the work abroad. They are taught medical science by Dr. Dowkontt, and they gain experience by accompanying him in his missions of mercy to the homes of the poor in New York. Contributions to aid the Doctor in his work may be sent to him at 118 East 45th St., New York.

THE WORK IN LONE WOLF'S CAMP.

OUR readers will be pleased to learn that the mission in the Indian Territory which, through their gifts, the Rev. W. F. Re Qua has been enabled to establish, is prospering. Chief Lone Wolf has sent his own son to Mr. Re Qua's school, and all the children are making progress and showing an eager desire for knowledge. Three more teachers, who are able to maintain themselves, have volunteered to this truly Christian work, and are now laboring there for Christ, teaching the Kiowa children and their mothers the doctrines of the gospel and the arts of civilization. The Kiowa women are learning to cut out and make garments, and are delighted with the accomplishment. Mr. Re Qua writes in excellent spirits about the work, and expresses his conviction that in one or two years at most the mission will be self-supporting. Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who has contributed to this enterprise must feel thankful that he made the sacrifice. It is a truly missionary, Christ-like work right at our own doors, for the Kiowas were in utter darkness when Mr. Re Qua went among them. The good, self-denying missionary, who, with his devoted wife, quitted his comfortable home and gave up his regular salary to go out to this arduous work, has been sustained almost entirely by the readers of this journal, and we earnestly hope that they will continue to regard it as their concern, and keep him in the field. He requests us to gratefully acknowledge in his behalf $417.35 received from our readers last year. Also six barrels and four boxes of clothing. Mr. Re Qua and his wife are full of faith and hope, and make light of the hardships through which they have passed. They believe that God has called them to the work, and will support them in it in the years to come. McAlester is now a money-order office, so that such of our readers who may prefer it may now send money-orders or cheques, instead of currency, to him. His address is, Rev. W. F. Re Qua, McAlester, Ind. Ter.

"THE PRACTICE OF THE PRESENCE OF GOD."

SPEAKING of her religious experience in a meeting of God's people, held in New York a short time ago, Mrs. J. F. Willing, the accomplished wife of a Methodist minister stationed in that city, related the following account of the way in which she was led to an even and blessed state of walking with God. "What we get of the Lord," she said, "we get by faith. I used to have a great many ups and downs in my life of entire devotion to God. I held my consecration intact to the limit of my knowledge, and I trusted hourly that Christ cleansed my soul, but my experience was variable. A friend came to me at Lake Bluff, where we were summering, and began to tell me of revelations of Christ to her heart that quite staggered me. She had lived with me; and I never knew anybody whose profession of perfect love would more surely stand the microscope, but I was afraid she was getting a little fanatical. We went East together to some camp-meetings, and the Lord took hold of me one night to show me the defects in my trust. In His light every little fault—'infirmity,' as I had called it—seemed a fearful blotch. For five mortal hours I was under that calcium light, and it seemed as though soul and body would part under the pressure. At last I was reminded that according to my faith it would be done unto me. So I took 1 John 5:14, 15. I said, 'It is according to His will He hears me, and I know that I have the petition that I desire of him.' So, without an iota of feeling that it was done, I asserted that Christ was now my Saviour from all these things that so surely perplexed me; and He would keep me in what a barefoot Carmelite lay brother of the seventeenth century called 'the practice of the presence of God.' From that hour there have been no more ups and downs."

TREATMENT OF PARENTS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon preached last Sunday Morning,
March 16, 1890.

"A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."
Prov. 10:1.

The Significance of Bible Names—Parents Sometimes the Cause of Unfilial Conduct—An Experience in a Farm-House—Why Vice-President Wilson Changed His Name—Reasons for Forbearance—The Trials of Parents with the Boys—A Mother's Cakes in a Hospital—How a Foolish Son Makes Heavy-Hearted Parents—He Hurts the Family Pride—The Trust of a Great Name—Comes in Old Age—Is Heinous Ingratitude—The Memory of an Old Cradle—Means Spiritual Disaster—Mother in Heaven Waiting News.

ALL parents want their children to turn out well. However poorly father and mother may have done themselves, they want their sons and daughters to do splendidly. Up to forty years of age parents may have ambitions for themselves, after that their chief ambitions are for their children. Some of the old-time names indicate this. The name of Abner means "his father's lamp." The name Abigail means "her father's joy." And what a parental delight was Solomon to David, and Samuel to Hannah, and Joseph to Jacob! And the best earthly staff that a father has to lean on is a good son, and the strongest arm a mother has to help her down the steep of years is of a grateful child.

But it is not a rare thing to find people unfilial, and often the parents are themselves to blame. Aged persons sometimes become querulous and snappy, and the children have their hands full with the old folks. Before entering my profession I was for three months what is called a colporteur. One day in the country districts I stopped at the house of a good, intelligent, genial farmer. The hospitality of such a country house is especially pleasing to me, for I was born in the country. This farmer and his wife were hardworking people, but tried to make their home agreeable and attractive. The farmer's father, about sixty-five years of age, and his grandfather, about ninety, were yet alive and with him. Indeed, there were for the farmer had some little children playing about the room. We gathered at the dining-table. After the blessing was asked the farmer put some of the meat upon his plate and courteously passed it to me, when his father of sixty-five years of age cried out to his son, who was at least thirty years of age: "Why do you not pass the meat as you always do, and let us take it off the plate ourselves? you are trying to show off because we have company." Meanwhile his grandfather of ninety sat with his hat on at the table, his face unclean, and his apparel untidy. Still the farmer kept his patience and equipoise, and I never think of him without admiration. He must have had more grace than I ever had.

Four Generations in the House,

Because people are old they have no right to be either ungentlemanly or uncanny. There are old people so disagreeable that they have nearly broken up some homes. The young married man with whom the aged one lives stands it because he has been used to it all his life, but the young wife, coming in from another household, can hardly endure it, and sometimes almost cries her eyes out. And when little children gather in the house, they are afraid of the venerable patriarch, who has forgotten that he ever was a child himself, and cannot understand why children should ever want to play "hide and seek," or roll hoop, or fly kite, and he becomes impatient at the sound from the nursery, and shouts with an expenditure of voice that keeps him coughing fifteen minutes afterwards, "Boys! stop that racket!" as though any boy that ever amounted to anything in the world did not begin life by making a racket!

Profligate Parents.

Indeed, there are children who owe nothing to their parents, for those parents have been profligates. My lamented friend, good and Christian and lovely Henry Wilson, Vice-President of the United States, in early life changed his name. Henry Wilson was not his original name. He dropped his father's name because that father was a drunkard and a disgrace, and the son did not feel called upon to carry such a carcass all his life. While children must always be dutiful, I sympathize with all young people who have disagreeable or unprincipled old folks around the house. Some of us, drawing out of our memories, know that it is possible, after sixty or seventy or eighty or ninety years of age, for the old to be kind and genial; and the grandest adornment of a home is an aged father and an aged mother, if the process of years has mellowed them. Besides that, if your old parents are hard to get along with now, you must remember there was a time when they had hard work to get along with you. When you were about five or seven or ten or twelve years of age what a time they had with you! If they had kept a written account of your early pranks and misdoings, it would make a whole volume. That time when you gave your little sister a clip; that time when you explored the depth of a jar of sweet things for which you had no permission; that havoc you one day made with your jack-knife; that plucking from the orchard of unripe fruit; that day when, instead of being at school, as your parents supposed, you went a-fishing; and many a time did you imperil your young life in places where you had no business to climb or swim or venture. To get you through your first fifteen years with your life and your good morals was a fearful draft upon parental fidelity and endurance. Indeed, it may be that much of this present physical and mental weakness in your parents may have been a result of

Your Early Waywardness.

You made such large and sudden drafts upon the bank of their patience that you broke the bank. They were injured in being thrown while trying to break the colt. It is a matter of only common honesty that you pay back to them some of the long-suffering which they paid to you. A father said to his son, "Surely no father ever had as bad a boy as I have." "Yes," said the son, "my grandfather had." It is about the same from generation to generation, and parents need to be patient with children, and children dutiful to their parents. Taking it for granted that those who hear me to-day have had a good parentage, I want to urge upon all the young the fact that the happiness and longevity of parents much depend upon the right behavior of their children, and I can do this no more effectually than by demonstrating the truth of my text, "A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."

A Visit to a Hospital.

Perhaps some young man astray may be brought back by a thought of how they feel about him at home. A French soldier lay wounded and dying in the hospital at Geneva, Switzerland. His father, at home, seventy years of age, heard of his son's suffering, and started, and took the long journey, and found the hospital; and as he entered the son cried: "O father, I am so glad you have come to see me die." "No," said the father; "you are not going to die; your mother is waiting for you, and I am going to take you home; I have brought you money and everything you need." "No," said the soldier, "they give me here everything that is nice to eat, but I have no appetite, and I must die." Then the father took from his knapsack a loaf of rye-bread such as the plain people of his country ate, and said, "Here is a loaf of bread your mother made, and I am sure you can eat this; she sent it to you." Then the soldier brightened up, and took the bread and ate it, and said, "It is so good, the bread from home, the bread that my mother made!" No wonder that in a few days he had recovered. O young man, wounded in the battle of life, and discouraged, given up by yourself, and given up by others, the old folks at the country fireside have not given you up. I bring you bread from home. It may be plain bread, but it is that bread of which if a man eat he never again shall hunger. Bread from home!

The Family Pride.

Carrying out the idea of my text, I remark that a reckless or dissipated son makes a heavy-hearted parent because it hurts the family pride. It is not the given name, or the name which you received at the christening, that is injured by your prodigality. You cannot hurt your name of John or George or Henry or Mary or Frances or Rachel, because there have been thousands of people, good and bad, having those names, and you cannot improve or depreciate the respectability of those given names. But it is your last name, your family name, that is at your mercy. All who bear that name are bound, before God and man, not to damage its happy significance. You are charged, by all the generations of the past and all the generations to come, to do your share for the protection and the honor and the integrity of that name. You have no right, my young friend, by a bad life to blot the old family Bible containing the story of the marriages and births and deaths of the years gone by, or to cast a blot upon the family Bibles whose records are yet to be opened. There are in our American city-directories names that always suggest commercial dishonesty or libertinism or cruelty or meanness, just because one man or woman bearing that name cursed it forever by miscreancy. Look out how you stab the family name! It is especially dear to your mother. She was not born under that name. She was born under another name, but the years passed on and she came to young womanhood, and she saw some one with whom she could trust her happiness, her life, and her immortal destiny; and she took his name, took it while the orange blossoms were filling the air with fragrance, took it with joined hands, took it while the heavens witnessed. She chose it out of all the

Family Names

since the world stood, for better or worse, through sickness and through health, by cradles and by graves. Yea, she put off her old family name to take the family name you now wear, and she has done her part to make it an honorable name. How heavy a trouble you put upon her when, by misdeeds, you wrench that name from its high significance! To haul it down from your mother's forehead and trample it in the dust would be criminal. Your father's name may not be a distinguished name, but I hope it stands for something good. It may not be famous, like that of Homer, the father of epic poetry, or Izaak Walton, the father of angling, or Aeschylus, the father of tragedy, or Ethelwold, the father of monks, or Herodotus, the father of history, or Thomas Aquinas, the father of moral philosophy, or Abraham, the father of the faithful, but your father has a name in a small circle as precious to him as theirs in a larger circle. Look out how you tarnish it!

Further, the recklessness and dissipation of a young man are a cause of parental distress at a time when the parent is less able to bear it. The vicissitudes of life have left their impression upon those parents. The eye is not as clear as once, nor the hearing as acute, nor the nerves as steady, nor the step as strong, and with the tide of incoming years comes the weight of unfilial behavior. You take your parents at a great disadvantage, for they cannot stand as much as they once could. They have not the elasticity of feeling with which once they could throw off trouble. That shoulder, now somewhat bent, cannot bear as heavy a burden as once it could. At the time when the machinery getting worn out you put upon it the most terrific strain. At sixty and seventy years the vitality not so strong as at thirty or forty. Surely they are descending swiftly without increasing the momentum. They will be gone soon enough without your pushing them away. Call in all the doctors who ever lived since Hippocrates raised medicine from a superstition to a science, and they could not cure the heartbreak of a mother over her ruined boy. There may be as some suppose, enough herbs on earth, if discovered, to cure all the ailments of the body; but not one save a leaf from the tree of the heavenly Paradise can cure a wound made by a foolish son who the heaviness of his mother.

The Down Grade of Life

Perhaps it is a good thing that cruel treatment by a child abbreviates a parent's life; for what there desirable in a father's life or a mother's if its peace is gone? Do you not think death something beneficent if it stops the mother's heart from aching and her eyes from weeping, and say, "You need not bear the excruciation any longer. Go and sleep. I will put the defence of a marble slab between you and that boy's outrages. Go now where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest"? At the departure of such mothers let the music be an anthem instead of a dirge. While you and I hear no sound, yet there are at this moment tens of thousands of parental heart-breaking. All care was taken with the boy's schooling, all good counsels given, and the equipment of a sober and earnest and useful life was provided, but it has all gone, and the foolish son has become the heaviness of his mother.

The Ingratitude of It.

Much of the poignancy of the parental grief arises from the ingratitude of such behavior. What an undertaking it is to conduct a family through the ailments and exposures of early life. Talk about the skill demanded of a sea-captain commanding a ship across the ocean! That requires less skill than to navigate a young soul safely across the infantile and boyhood years. The sicknesses that assault, the temptations that trap, the anxieties that are excited! Young man, you will never know what your mother has suffered for you. You will never know how your father has toiled for you. You have been in all their thoughts, in all their plans, in all their prayers, from the time your first breath was drawn to this moment's respiration. What they could do for your health, what they could do for your happiness, what they could do for your mind, what they could do for your soul, have been absorbing questions. To earn livelihood for you has not always been an easy thing for your father. By what fatigues of body and what disturbances of mind, and long years of struggle, in which sometimes the losses were greater than the gains, he got bread for you, paying for in the sweat of his own brow and the red drops of his own heart's blood! He looks older than he ought to look at his years, for it has been work, work, work. Many a time in the battle, but then he looked at your helplessness and the helplessness of the household, and then he served himself up anew and said: "By the help of God I will not stop; my children must have home and education and advantages, and a comfortable living in the world, and I must get a little something ahead, so that if I am taken away these help-ones will not be turned out on the cold charities of the world." Yes, your father has been a good friend to you. He has never told any one, and he never will tell any one, of the sacrifices he has made for you. And he is ready to keep right on until that hand that has been toiling for you all these years shall come the very numbness of death. You cannot afford to break his heart. But you are doing it. Yes, you are. You have driven the dagger clear in up to the hilt.

He Felt Like Giving Up

And your mother—I warrant she has never told you much about the nights when you were down with scarlet fever, or diphtheria, and she slept not wink, or falling into drowsiness, your first cry awakened her, and brought the words, "What is my dear?" Oh, if the old rocking-chair could speak! Oh, if the cradle could only tell its story of years! And when you got better, and were fretful and hard to please, as is usual in convalescence, she kept her patience so well, and was as kind as you were unreasonable and cross. Oh, midnights motherly watching, how can you keep silence? Speak out and tell that wandering young man the story that he so much needs to hear.

By the bye, I wonder what has become of

Our Old Cradle

in which all of us children were rocked! I must kiss my sister when I see her next time. We were a large family, and that old cradle was going good many years. I remember just how it looked. It was old-fashioned and had no tapestry. Its sides and canopy all of plain wood, but there was a great deal of sound sleeping in that cradle, and many aches and pains were soothed by it as it rocked to and fro by day and night. Most vividly I remember that the rockers, which came out from under the cradle, were on the top and side very smooth, so smooth that they actually glistened. They must have been worn smooth by a foot that long ago ceased its journey. How tired the foot that pressed it must sometimes have got! But it did not stop for that. It went right on and rocked Phebe the first, and for DeWitt the last. And it was a cradle like that, or perhaps of modern make and richly upholstered, in which your mother rocked you. Can it be that for all that care and devotion you are paying her back with harsh words, or neglects, or a wicked life? Then I must tell you that you are the "foolish son who is the saviness of his mother." Better and ask her forgiveness. Kiss her on the lips that have so often prayed for you. Kiss her on the forehead that so often ached for you. Kiss her on the eyes that have so often wept over you. Better right away, for she will be dead before long. And how will you feel then after you realize it is your waywardness that killed her? Romulus made law against patricide, or the slaying of a father, fratricide, or the slaying of a mother, because he considered such crimes impossible, and for six hundred years there was not a crime of that sort in Rome. But then came Lucius Ostius, and slew his father, proving the crime possible. Now, do you not think that the child who by wrong behavior sends his father to a premature grave is a patricide, and who by misconduct hastens a mother into the tomb is a matricide?

Go Home and Kiss Her,

The heaviness of parents over a son's depravity is all the greater because it means spiritual disaster and overthrow. That is the worst thing about it. In the pension regulations a soldier receives for loss of both hands or feet $72. For loss of one hand and one foot $36. For loss of a hand or foot $30. For loss of both eyes $72. But who can calculate the value of a whole man ruined body, mind, and soul? How can parents have any happiness about your future destiny, oh young man gone astray? Can such opposite lives as you and they are living come out at the same place? Can holiness and dissipation enter the same gate? Where is the little prayer that was taught you at your mother's knee? Is the God they loved and worshipped your God? It is your soul about which they are most anxious, your soul that shall live after the earth itself shall be girdled with flames, and the flames, dying down, will leave the planet only a live coal, and the live coal shall have become ashes, and then the ashes shall be scattered by the whirlwinds of the Almighty.

"But," says some young man, "my mother is gone; my behavior will not trouble her any more."

"Oh that those lips had language! Life has passed

With me but roughly since I heard thee last."

What! Is she dead? How you startle me! Is she dead? Then perhaps

You Have Her Picture.

Hang it up in your room in the place where you oftenest look. Go and study her features, and while you are looking the past will come back, and you may hear her voice, which is now so still, speak again, saying: "From my heavenly home, my dear boy, I solicit your reformation and salvation. Go to the Christ who pardoned me, and He will pardon you. My heaven will not be complete till I hear of your changing. But I will hear of it right away, for there is joy up here when one sinner repenteth; and oh, if the next news of that kind that comes up here might come up regarding you, oh my child of many tears and anxieties and prayers! Come, my boy, do you not hear your mother's voice? O my son, my son, would God that I could die for thee! O my son, my son! Young man! what news for heaven would be your conversion. Swifter than telegraphic wire ever carried congratulations to a wedding or a coronation would fly heavenward the news of your deliverance; and whether the one most interested in your salvation were on river-bank, or in the temple, or on the battlements, or in the great tower, the message would be instantly received, and before this service is closed angel would cry to angel: "Have you heard the news? Out yonder is a mother who has just heard of her wayward boy's redemption. Another prodigal has got home. The dead is alive again, and the lost is found. Hallelujah! Amen!"

THE CONVERSION OF A LADY IN INDIA.

AN account is given by Miss Fulton in the Indian Female Evangelist of the conversion of a Hindoo lady, a Begum, named Pujari, who is the first-fruit of her zenana work. This lady was gentle and refined, the wife of a man leading a wicked life, but, up to the time of her conversion, not unkind to her. She had learned to read, and derived much comfort from the Scriptures. Miss Fulton says: "As she had been ailing for some time, I advised her to go to Lucknow to be treated by Dr. Alice Marston. Strange to say, her husband took her to the hospital there. At the Zenana Mission Hospital the Begum heard more about the Saviour she was beginning to love; and though she returned to her home, she now began to think seriously of coming out and declaring herself a Christian. This desire could not remain concealed from her husband, and then began a course of persecution which eventually drove her from her home. She used to sit up late at night reading her Testament, and he would taunt her and call her a 'purdit' and a 'saint.' He told her if she became a Christian she would soon be begging on the streets! He even threatened to poison her. But He who said, 'Not a hair of your head shall perish,' was watching over this poor persecuted woman. Four times she went to the hospital in Lucknow, each time meaning to leave her home and confess Christ, but she yielded to her husband's entreaties and went back to him, not to receive the kindness he promised, but to be treated more cruelly than ever. About three months ago, Pujari Begum finally left her husband, and went to her mother in Lucknow. Being familiar with the Medical Mission Hospital, she found her way there, and declared her intention of being baptized. From the hospital she sent me a letter, and I at once sent the teacher she knew, and brought her here. I expected to see a trembling, agitated woman, but, instead of this, there she was, calm and quiet, and when I asked her how she was so, she said, 'I am wondering at myself, but I have given myself to Jesus, and He is giving me this peace.' The next day Mr. Baumann came, and she confessed her faith publicly by baptism.

A REMARKABLE HEATHEN PROPHECY.

THESE are times of marvels in missions. Here is an incident of the work of the Baptist Missionary Society among the Telugus by Rev. Dr. Clough. He was making a visit at Ravalporum, a village thirty miles from Ongole. When he reached the village, he pitched his tent at a spot where, unknown to himself at the time, a fakir some twenty-five years before had prophesied that a teacher from God would at some time pitch his tent, and would bring a message to the people from God. It seems this fakir who made the prophecy ordered the people to keep three big pots of ghee (clarified butter), and give them over to the teachers whom God would send them. So when Dr. Clough pitched his tent on the designated spot, the people brought the pots of ghee, and asked him what he was going to do with them. He took them, and stuffing old rags into each of the pots, lighted them, making a great blaze throughout the night. This attracted the people, and they came in crowds, and the golden opportunity was seized for preaching Christ. Hundreds heard the word of salvation in the light of this blaze, before which idols were brought out and broken in pieces. The preaching was continued until dawn, and for some days subsequently. It was a remarkable scene, and it is believed many saving impressions were produced. Nearly 1,500 of these Telugu people are reported to have received Christian baptism since the beginning of 1889.

A SOLDIER'S SHELTER FROM BULLETS.

CHRISTIAN workers are often surprised that many persons who attend our churches, and who profess to believe the doctrines taught there, and who do not doubt that the day of God's wrath will yet come upon the earth, do not seek the safe shelter of Christ's atoning sacrifice. Too often they are trusting in their own merits, their church-membership, or unstained moral character as their refuge in the day of judgment. Over and over again, the Bible teaches the worthlessness of such a shelter. It is seldom in worldly affairs that men trust in an obviously inadequate protection, but one such case is described by General F. A. Walker in his History of the Second Army Corps, and the foolish man who figured in it is a good illustration of all who are sheltering themselves in any refuge out of Christ. General Walker says in his description of the battle of Fredericksburg:

It happened that some members of the band of a new nine-months' regiment, whose colonel had ordered "the music" to remain behind while the fighting men went over the bridge, strolled up the bluff, attracted by curiosity; and the fellow whose business it was to beat the big drum set it deliberately down, and cast his eyes in an interested way over the exciting scene—the river wreathed in the smoke of a hundred guns, the city beneath, torn by their bursting shells, the broad plain, and the heights beyond bristling with intrenchments.

Altogether unused to war, the genial recruit had no conception that, at such a distance, he could be in any danger, until suddenly the fire of a battery was turned upon the corps staff close by.

When three solid shot had struck the ground, throwing the mud ten feet into the air, and as many shrapnel had burst in front, sending their fast-spreading fan of bullets whistling over the bluff, a sense of the situation struck our new friend, and, with ludicrous precipitancy, he ensconced himself behind his drum, where, though the case would not have shed a pistol-shot, he cuddled up with an apparent feeling of relief and security, which, fortunately, was not disturbed by the impact of a three-inch ball.

"The Christian Herald" Binder.—Numerous applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely. A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

THE DECEM-REGAL CONFEDERACY.

By Thomas Neatby.*

The Identity of the Beast—The Roman Empire With Satanic Head—The Ten Kings in League—Anti-Christ their Federal Head—The Little Horn's Blasphemies—The Beast Held Responsible—The Great Persecution—Some Will Come Out of it Undeiled.

IN Revelation 13 and 17 a beast is brought before us, which is evidently the Roman Empire in its last form. In Revelation 13 we read, "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the names of blasphemy." The leading features here identify this beast with the fourth beast of Daniel. Here there is no mention of other beasts, for they had disappeared. Moreover, it is this one with which the Spirit is occupied, because in it into open revolt against God, and it is upon it that judgment is executed. There are several things of solemn importance here said of this beast, which we have not yet seen. The most momentous is that which we find in the latter part of verse 2, "and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority." This is never said of the Roman Empire in its first form, although the Lord Jesus Christ suffered under it, and although it put to death thousands of His saints. However cruel it was, however wicked were its rulers, it is never said that Satan gave the power to the empire then ruling the world. On the contrary, Christians are told in Romans 13 that the powers that be are all ordained of God. It was from God that the Roman Empire received the power it wielded in its first state, that which existed when the New Testament was written. It inherited providentially the supreme authority, committed by God directly to Nebuchadnezzar. Its future form it will owe its greatness and its authority to Satan.

Satan Leads Gentile Power

The Revived Empire.

That the Roman Empire will exist again, and with this striking and frightful difference, will become very clear to you in comparing with the portion we are considering chapter 17 of this book. The "seven heads and ten horns" serve to show that the beast of chapter 17 is the same as the one we are looking at. In verse 8 we have, as distinctly as can be put, the fact that there was a time when the Roman Empire existed, a time of non-existence, and a time of existence anew. In this third condition, the re-existent state—if I may use the word—it will come out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition. This is a truth of awful solemnity! The kingdoms of Europe that formerly belonged to the Roman Empire will be again united as kingdoms under an Imperial head, but it will be by Satanic power, and its end will be "perdition."

In verse 12 we read, "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." We saw that there were ten toes in the image of Daniel. That these ten toes represented kings, or kingdoms; we gathered from the words, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom." They formed, however, a part of the one image; that is, there was imperial unity. It was in these toes that the image was struck by the stone. Now here we have the same thing under another figure. Instead of ten toes in the image we have ten horns upon the beast. This we have seen also in Daniel 7, where the prophet is told that

The Ten Horns are Ten Kings.

The Spirit of God tells us once that these ten horns are ten kings, and adds, "which have received no kingdom as yet." They will receive power as kings one hour with the beast. That is to say, during the same period of time as there is a united empire there will be ten kingdoms. This will be an entirely new thing. Here it is so clearly brought out that I call your attention to it again. There has been a Roman Empire. It had its day and was broken up. Various kingdoms were formed, but the empire ceased to exist. By-and-by this Empire will be resuscitated. Its form will be different, for with an emperor there will be ten vassal kings. This is perfectly clear from the verse just read. It accords entirely with the figure of toes in the image, and with the vision of Daniel 7. We have already seen that it is in this condition that the stone strikes that part of the image which represents Rome, but it destroys the whole image. The judgment before the Ancient of Days tells the same tale in language too clear to require any further comment. We must now see its end, as presented in this chapter.

* From his Lecture in the Prophetic News; for sale, price six cents, at this office.

But is this indeed the end of the "most Christian" nations of Europe? Will kingdoms which now profess the name of Christ give their power to the beast, and with him be led by Satan into Open War With the Lamb?

Will all the boasted improvements and progress of the day in which we live end thus? As surely as the living God knows the end from the beginning! Do I say it lightly, my brethren? God knows! I blush and grieve for the future of Christendom, for the fast-approaching day of Satan's power in the land through which we pass as strangers and pilgrims to our heavenly home.

The world cast out Christ; it now professes His name. Was the world changed when it took upon itself the profession of Christ? No doubt Christianity civilized the nations of Europe and it became respectable. Thank God for His providential goodness as well as for His rich and precious grace to souls! But has national Christianity made the nations cease to love the world? Have the nations of Christendom written the sentence of the Cross upon "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and pride of life?" Is the world around us—Christian in name though it be—is it affianced to a rejected Christ? Does it even wish to be? Nay, it would rather forget Him who had not where to lay His head, and make itself happy in the scene of all His woes. Nominal Christianity answers its present end. It lulls the conscience and leaves it at liberty to seek its rest and pleasure in present things. It gives also a tone and saivuty to the world which ministers to its comfort; but so little is the world changed, that a very brief space of time will suffice for it to abandon the forms of Christianity. This it will do, as we read in II Thessalonians 2, when the Holy Ghost has led the heavenly Bride to her Lord. But not that only. The powers that are now ordained of God in His providence will give their power to the beast, to whom Satan gave "his power and his seat, and great authority."

We can now turn back to look at one or two important points in the description of the Beast which the Spirit of God gives in chapter 13. "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world

Wondered After the Beast."

That a great empire like Rome should rise to great splendor and gradually decline and even become extinct has caused no surprise. It is the history of all great empires. But, that it should rise again, that it should embrace in its vast extent ten kingdoms with apparently conflicting interests, and that it should reach a greater splendor than ever it attained before, will indeed astonish the world. Tell the world that this is about to happen; tell the "Christian" world that such will be the case; point them to the clear testimony of Scripture here that it will be so, and they will not believe you. How will they then wonder after the beast, when they actually see him! "And which gave power unto the beast." Satan has so far gained his point. He is worshipped in the person of the beast by those who lately professed the name of Christ. "And there was given to him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given to him to continue forty and two months." This recalls the little horn of Daniel 7, both in his blasphemous character and in the time he is permitted to rule. When we considered the passage in Daniel we saw that the little horn assumed such a preponderance in the empire as to control it and bring down the judgment of God upon the whole. So true is this that the Spirit of God here attributes all the blasphemy of the little horn to the beast, that is, to the future great Latin empire, without giving the history of the little horn itself which we find detailed in the prophecy of Daniel.

They Worshipped the Dragon

It is, however, sadly sufficient to know, as we are taught here, that the great empire of the last days will speak "great things and blasphemies" against the living God. It will be infidel. The principles are already at work which will culminate in this. Alas, that we should have to say it! infidelity rears its hideous head in this so long privileged country, so sadly indeed as to be, to a spiritual mind, an evident prelude of the day we are considering. The platform, the club, the scientific society, the schools, great and small, the pulpit, alas! the family circle, where once a breath of the sad miasm of hell would not have been tolerated, all abound now with infidelity more or less pronounced. Ah me! that I should have to say it of the land of the Bible, the bulwark of orthodox Christianity! And it is called progress! True, all too true—but toward what end?

The Future Empire

will not be infidel only. It will be a blasphemer "against God, to blaspheme His name, and His tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven." Open revolt against God! Positive blasphemy of His name! Surely we bow our heads in deepest worship as we contemplate the contrast! Apostate Christendom blaspheming God and His habitation, some living stones of which will only recently have disappeared from the streets of the very cities which shall resound with the praises of the beast and the worship of the dragon. But why this wrath against the Church and the saints? Because God has taken to Himself the habitation of His eternal counsels of grace, and bidden the guests to the marriage supper of the Lamb. The casting down of Satan is but the natural consequence in divine counsels of the entrance of these saints into their heavenly home. God will no longer tolerate "wicked spirits in heavenly places." (Eph. 6.) They are cast down forever. Hence the rage of Satan. Hence his determination to make himself worshipped upon earth. Hence his blasphemy against God "and His tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven." Woe to the inhabitants of the earth!

Pagan Rome has persecuted the saints. Christian Rome has outdone it in shedding the blood of the saints. No wonder that Satanic Rome shall

"War with the Saints."

For God will have His saints even in that dark, rebellious, and blasphemous day. There will be those who come "out of the (the article should be read here) great tribulation and washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

"And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship Him, whose names are not written, from the foundation of the world, in the book of life of the slain Lamb." Thank God, even in that dark day He will have His witnesses. There will be those who will not "worship the beast, nor his image, neither receive his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands." God knows them all, has their names in the book of life. We find from Rev. 20:4 that they have part in the first resurrection, that is, the resurrection of life, and that they live and reign with Christ a thousand years.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Why Immigrants Come.*

THE course of immigration into the United States may be pictured as a succession of waves. There is always a flood and an ebb, but the succeeding tide is, as a rule, higher than the preceding one. The movement increases, though it does not do so by regular gradations, and there is no sign that we have reached the end of it, or even the end of the increase.

Since 1820 over fifteen million persons have come to this country, and more than one-half of these have come since 1870. No cause that works merely on the disposition or the sentiments can account for such a movement. Some part has been due to political discontent, but that is no longer a determining influence. Political discontent is not so widespread in Europe to-day as it was in 1846. The Socialists do not look upon the American republic as any nearer their ideal than the monarchies of Europe, and they find no better treatment here than at home. Again, it is no potato famine now, as it was in 1846. It is true that in the history of immigration we can trace the effect of economic distress in Europe in increasing immigration, and of economic distress in the United States in decreasing immigration. The great Irish emigration in 1846, and the great German emigration of 1850 were undoubtedly due to famine in the old countries. So also immigration to this country was decreased by the commercial disasters of 1836-37, by the civil war of 1861-64, and by the commercial depression of 1873. But absolute famine is not so frequent in Ireland as it was once, and mere har-

* From Emigration and Immigration. A study in Social Science. By Prof. Richmond M. Smith, of Columbia College. Professor Smith leaves unexplored none of the details of the problem, and none of the considerations which bear upon it however remotely. The result of his study is to place in the clearest light the scientific justification and necessity for a change in our entire public policy with regard to immigration. Pp. 31. Price $1.50. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

mes extend over the world, and are commonly it as keenly and at the same time in the United tates as in Europe. Doubtless the immigrant es expect to better his economic condition by e migration, but it is not the direct pressure of ant or the definite knowledge of how he will gain at leads him to change his domicile.

Trials of Early Immigrants.

Mr. Friedrich Kapp has given a vivid account of e sufferings of the immigrant during his voyage id upon his landing in New York, previous to the ssage of the passengers' acts and the establish- ent of the board of Commissioners of Emigration. he vessels were small sailing vessels; the emi- ants were crowded into the space between-decks, hich was seldom more than five feet in height, id sometimes less, lighted and ventilated only by e hatches, which were battened down during bad ather; sometimes the orlop-deck below that was o used for passengers. The emigrants were ligned to provide their own food and cook it at e galleys, which were insufficient in number for e passengers, so that there was a constant strug- e to get to them, and the food was badly cooked, ne filth, bad air, and insufficient nourishment ve rise to disease and sickness, against which ere was no adequate provision for medical treat- ent. The emigrants were at the mercy of the utality and greed of the officers and crew of the ip, and often suffered corporal punishment, or ere put on a small allowance of food. The voye- lasted many weeks, often months; the mortal- was enormous, often ten, and sometimes twenty, r cent.; and those who arrived were sick, or en- abled and unable to take care of themselves, and ickly became applicants for admission to the hos- tals and almshouses of the State. Many of these evils have been remedied by the stitution of steamships for sailing vessels, by hich the voyage is shorter and the space and ac- commodations more generous. Legislation has o been invoked to protect the immigrant.

CHRIST AND THE SABBATH.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for March 30, Luke 6: 1-16; Golden Text, Heb. 4: 3, 10.

God's Rest in Creation—Rest the Time of Renewal—Mary's Place of Rest—The Sabbath Always a Relation to God—A Commemoration of Deliverance—The Law of Rest—Sabbaths of Weeks and Years—Suffering Entailed by Violating the Law—The Pharisaic Spirit—Censorious Critics—The Lord of the Sabbath—Faith Producing Obedience—Power Given—A Night of Prayer.

God set man the example of Sabbath keeping. On the seventh day (of the creation) God ended his work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it He had rested from His work which God created and made." (Gen. 2: 3.) If God can rest, surely His children can rest too. If He who has the universe to uphold can stand aside from His labors, so can those whose share of work is so infinitesimal. There is a dignity in God's resting, so unlike the feverishness of fleshly worry. God blessed the day of rest more than all the six days of labor, for it is the day of His satisfaction in His works. It is then we have learned and entered into the great rest that "we which have believed do enter into it," and that "he which hath entered into it, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from His," that God can have satisfaction in us.

Rest is the Time for Renewal of soul and body. Just as the weary brain, the nerves which have been upon the stretch, the over-worked muscles, etc., receive new vigor when the body is resting, so our faith in God and our love to Him are renewed just when and while we lie in Him, and cease from our own works, from initiating anything, that we may simply follow His leading, and do only those "good works which God hath before prepared that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 10.) It is not in ceaseless activity, but in Mary's place at the Master's feet, that we are renewed and strengthened.

God gave man the rest time before He gave him labor; He sanctified the Sabbath before He put man into the garden "to dress it and to keep it." He provided rest for His creatures before the weary strife with thorns and thistles began after the fall. The Sabbath had ever a relation to God, and the atonement rested the convicted sinners whose sins were confessed over the head of the scapegoat (Lev. 16: 21) in their God, who had provided the atonement for them. God's Sabbaths were given, first, because of His own rest on the seventh day (Ex. 20: 11); secondly, in commemoration of deliverance from Egypt, "Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and a stretched-out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." (Deut. 5: 15.) Again, God's Sabbaths were "a sign between Me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them, . . . that ye may know that I am the Lord your God." (Ezek. 22: 12, 20.) "It is just so in the Sabbath of the soul, which comes from 'the law of the Spirit of life,' or the law of faith, by which we enter into His rest and cease from our own works. True deliverance from Egyptian bondage, 'the law of sin and death,' comes only as we rest in God; it is the sign that God does sanctify us when we can rest in Him and trust 'the power that worketh in us' rather than our own poor efforts; it is the attitude of soul in which we can truly 'know the Lord our God.' So much did the Lord insist on this that He instituted Sabbaths of days, of weeks, of years, and of jubilees, that so the principle of rest should pervade His rule over His people. One of the sins for which He so constantly reproved His people was the disregard of His Sabbaths, "Ye bring more wrath on Israel by profaning the Sabbath." (Neh. 13: 18.) "The adversaries . . . did mock at her Sabbaths." "The Lord hath caused the . . . Sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion." (Lam. 1: 7; 2: 6.) "My Sabbaths they greatly polluted; then I said I would pour out My fury upon them." (Ezek. 20: 13.) "Thou hast despised Mine holy things, and hast profaned My Sabbaths. Her priests . . . have hid their eyes from My Sabbaths." (Ezek. 22: 8, 26.) It was for this very sin that the children of Israel were carried into captivity "until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years." (II Chron. 36: 21.) Oh how much of the captivity of God's children to sickness of body, and to the thwarting and friction of circumstances, arises from the want of a rest of soul, which would enable God

Law of Rest,

To Lead Rather Than to Compel

His child into the path which He sees safe for Him! The true Sabbath rest is comprised in calling the Sabbath (God's rest) "a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable . . . not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words." (Isa. 58: 13.) As we rest in the Lord, our own is merged into His own; He leads, we follow.

Jesus was passing through the corn-fields on a Sabbath-day, and "His disciples plucked the ears of corn and did eat, rubbing them in their hands." Probably the larder of Him who "had not where to lay His head" was not very lavishly supplied, and they were simply satisfying the natural cravings of appetite. The law permitted them this. "When ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not make a clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, neither shalt thou gather any gleanings of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them unto the poor and to the stranger; I am the Lord your God." (Lev. 23: 22.) But "certain of the Pharisees," whose object in accompanying Jesus was but to cavil and to criticise, "said unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the Sabbath-days?" How strange it is that some men seem as though they could not open their lips but to wound others! Did they not know that even at the Pass-over feast, when no manner of work was to be done, the one exception was made, "Save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you?" (Ex. 12: 16.)

Jesus answered them, as He so often did, by Scripture: "Have ye not read so much as this, what David did when himself was an hungered, and they that were with him; how he went into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful to eat, but for the priests alone? And He said unto them, That the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Could not Jesus have worked a miracle, and shown that His disciples could be as independent of earthly nourishment as He was during the forty days of His temptation? Undoubtedly He could have done so, but the disciples, in such a case, would not have learned that men would take exception to them on the most trivial grounds, because they were His disciples, and that God's Word of truth, and no words of their own, could answer such objectors. "The Son of man is but He has not constituted His people lords of the Sabbath, and a great deal of the Sabbath desecration of the present day comes from the idea of man that he is his own master; that he can do as he will, and he does as he wills. If anyone has a question about what he should or should not do on the Lord's day, which is generally now observed as the Christian Sabbath, let him go to the Lord of the Sabbath, and settle the matter with Him.

Lord Also of the Sabbath."

"On another Sabbath He entered into the synagogue and taught; and there was a man whose right hand was withered; and the scribes and Pharisees watched Him, whether He would heal on the Sabbath-day, that they might find an accusation against Him." To what an extent must their jealousy of Jesus have come, for them to look on Him with such an object! Oh, how desperately wicked is the heart of man! These leaders of the people were not intent to prove what was good in Jesus, and then yield to it if it were of God; they were mortified that there was nothing in the work of Jesus which could reflect credit upon them, they were no gainers by it, but rather losers, as it showed up their powerlessness so much by contrast. But "He knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst." It was

An Appeal to His Faith.

While the man stood there under the eyes of the whole company, Jesus asked a question of His critics: "I will ask you one thing: Is it lawful on the Sabbath-day to do good, or to do evil? To save life, or to destroy?" "To do good, or to do evil!" Jesus counted the healing of sickness by His own divine power, doing good. There are thousands of Christians who condemn the Lord's own healing in our day as strongly as the scribes and Pharisees did when He was upon earth, and avoid those who take the Lord at His word. "Looking round about upon them all, He said unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand." Now was the test of faith; now it was a question whether he should look at his helpless hand, or at the mighty power of Jesus. He obeyed, and with the obedience came the power, "his hand was restored whole as the other." The Healer of withered hands can heal withered souls too; withered faith and withered love are all within His power. What effect had this miracle upon His critics? Were they convinced? It is not miracles which convince; it is the Holy Ghost alone. Instead of being convinced "they were filled with madness," enraged with anger, "and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus. What had He done? 'Broken the Sabbath,' they would say. But He had neither taken doctor, nor nurse, chemist, nor electrician from the rest of their Sabbath; He had but spoken two sentences; but the work was done. When men are enraged 'God is our refuge and strength; a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear.'" (Psa. 46: 1, 2.)

"It came to pass in those days that He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." Jesus needed to His Father in His resting spirit. We need time to hear what the Lord our God shall say to us. Jesus, the Anointed Man, needed to take counsel with His Father as much as we do, but He availed Himself of this glorious privilege of power more than most of His disciples do. He had important business on hand; His own testimony was being rejected by the men of position, and He would ordain other witnesses, and send them out with the same power which His Father had committed unto Him. But He could not choose one without distinct direction, and thus He took all night to ascertain His Father's will. "And when it was day He called unto Him His disciples, and of them He chose twelve, whom He also named apostles," or "sent ones." They were a very imperfect set of men. He did not choose them for their goodness; their future history revealed a great deal of evil in them; He loved them not for what they were, but for what He would make them. He saw in them the faith which would accept His teaching, and, such as they were, He chose them. His Father had given them to Him, and, as His Father's gift, He took them, and loved them, and trained them for His service.

Time to Listen

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

CURRENT EVENTS.

What a Delight to an Editor to Come in and sit down beside his readers and talk familiarly about the affairs of life! He who stands before a congregation on Sabbath sees the people amid conventionalities, and others are looking on, and both speaker and hearer are somewhat in reserve. Not so when the reader of a family newspaper sits down in his chair by register or fireside, and takes in what the editorial pen says to him. How are you getting on, reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD? I warrant that the world is not treating you as kindly as it ought. Well, it has treated others before you very much as it treats you. One good thing about it is that you are not dependent upon it for happiness. If a man keep his heart right he has sources of happiness that the maltreatment of the world cannot be foul. Beside that, out of these bitter weeds he extracts a honey. There are many classes in the Lord's school, but those students learn the fastest who read their lessons by the light of the furnace. It is wonderful with how little of this world a man can get on, and live usefully and die well. Pluck up courage, dear reader. We shall have many a fine talk together, before we get through, on all these matters. Many of the perplexities we will explain, and those which are beyond solution we will adjourn to the high place, where we shall understand all, and find out that the best things that ever happened to us were our trials. But, in comparison with those who have had it so much harder than you ever had it, your misfortunes and hardships, at the last, will be found to have been hardly any trials at all. Meanwhile, let us cheer each other on. What one does not think of in the way of hope and promise, the other will call to mind. May pen and voice and smile always be found on the right side!

The Romance of Crime has Had the Wind knocked out of it by the recent decision of the courts that there shall be no newspaper report made of the cases of death-penalty by electric stroke. The baneful effect of minute and graphic accounts of the departure of criminals from this world has been evident, and productive of more crime. No! the scoundrel may have benefit of clergy and all kindnesses from jailer and sheriff, but no opportunity for display of mock heroism, no time to formally and conspicuously forgive the relatives of the man he murdered, no chance to ask the audience to meet him in heaven. There have been assassins who, because of bouquets sent them and the curious eyes that looked upon them, and the skilful reportorial pencils sharpened to take down their dying utterances, were really the martyrs of the law, and worthy of commemoration. Thanks for the decision of the courts throwing complete privacy over the departure of miscreants.

The Adulteration of Food Still Goes on, Notwithstanding the protests. Honest old-fashioned butter has melted and run out of the world, and instead thereof we have trichinosis in all styles served up morning, noon, and night. All the ailments of the brute creation set before us in raw shape or done up in puddings and pies and gravies. Even the candies that we bring home to our children, under chemical analysis, are found to be crystallized disease. Lozenges of red-lead and sweetened death. Coffee and teas, the innocent beverages of millions, are so depraved that we feel like saying with Charles Lamb, when an unseemly mixture was placed before him, "If this be coffee give me tea, and if this be tea give me coffee." Even the medicines to which we appeal in time of dire distress, through apothecarial admixture fail us and kill when they ought to cure. Alas for the clum in the bread, and the chalk in the milk, and the gloss in the sugar, and the Venetian red in the cocoa! If a man not at all bigoted, but very liberal, on the subject of temperance wants to imbibe some inspiration to help him fight down the fanaticism of teetotalism, and he goes up to the counter and pays for an honest drink, he swallows and smacks his lips over cocculus indicus and potash and cochineal and blue vitriol and other delectables, some of these things put in the beverage to make it hot, and some to make it red, and some to make it mix, and some to make it counteract the fatality of the others. What a state of things when even an honest drink is impossible!

Marriage for Fun is Again Reported. Two young folks think it will be a great joke to go through the marriage ceremony with no idea of going into life-time companionship. Then the case goes into the courts, and judges and lawyers put their wits together to get the two fools parted. It is much easier to tie a knot than to untie it, as many have found out. The frequent occurrence of mock-marriage is a result of the frivolous talk about life-long alliance. Older people speak lightly of the conjugal relation, and young people are led to carrying on still further the jocularity. When people marry, they marry for heaven or hell. When that fact is understood sham weddings will be less frequent, and marriage will be taken out of the realm of mirth into one of sincerity and earnestness.

If Young Americans, Wanting Quills to Write with, have plucked the American eagle till, featherless and with an empty craw, it sits on the top of the Rocky Mountains wishing it were dead, the English have paid quite as much attention to the lion. You see it done up in every shape, sitting or standing, everywhere. The fountains are guarded with lions; the entrance of houses flanked with lions; the signs of stores adorned with lions, fighting lions, sleeping lions, crying lions, laughing lions, couchant lions. English artists excel with this animal. When French and German sculptors attempt one, it is merely a lion in the abstract, too weak to rend a kid, and never having seen a jungle. But lying on the base of Nelson's monument in Trafalgar Square are four lions, that look as though they had a moment before lain down there and curled their long tails peacefully around, or had just stopped there a few minutes to see what was going on at Charing Cross and the Cockspur. On the top of Northumberland House is a lion with mouth open and tail extended in rigid rage, so that it is uncertain which way to run, as you know not with which end he will assault you. There are more lions in London than in Numidia. Beef and mutton are liked well by the Englishman, but for regular diet give him lion.

That Mr. Wanamaker's Postal Telegraph scheme is practicable was proved on March 14, when Mr. J. M. Seymour, a member of the New York Exchange, and representing a number of well-known capitalists, appeared before the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and said they were prepared to establish a postal telegraph at the terms and rates proposed in the bill prepared by the Postmaster-General, or a uniform rate of twenty-five cents per message. These capitalists, he said, were the owners of a system of telegraphy by which with but few wires many circuits could be worked. They would ask the Government for the right to build and maintain lines on post-roads, to be exempt from Federal and State taxation. It would require about $7,000,000 to equip a postal system under the terms of the Wanamaker bill.

The Chief Difficulty in the Solution of the Behring Sea question appears to have been removed by the withdrawal of the claim that it is a closed sea, under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. It was understood that Mr. Blaine had insisted on this claim, and it was well known that England disputed it. Mr. Bayard did not believe that the claim could be substantiated, because in 1822 Mr. Adams protested in the name of the United States against the claims of Russia for jurisdiction. The United States had not acquired Alaska at that time, and the claim of Russia for jurisdiction over the sea was based on her possession of Alaska. If, as Mr. Adams contended, the possession of Alaska did not confer on Russia jurisdiction over the sea, it cannot confer it on the United States. It is stated, however, that apart from the authority of Mr. Adams, Mr. Blaine has been convinced that the claim is wrong in principle, and that he has therefore abandoned it. It will now, therefore, be possible for our Government to arrive at an agreement with England for the protection of the seal fisheries, which caused so much trouble last year.

Apprehensions of a Most Disastrous Flood were prevalent last week in the West and South. The Ohio and all its tributaries were very high, the Upper Mississippi and Missouri rose, and rain fell heavily at the beginning of the week in Missouri and in the Northwest. The snowfall in the mountains was known to be very heavy, and the mild winter makes it a certainty that this snow will melt early. This was regarded as an omen that an immense volume will be poured down upon the streams that were already full. On Thursday the lower part of New Orleans was flooded, and reports from St. Louis, Memphis, and other cities described the country as being for miles under water. Much stock and property had been lost, but happily there was no report of loss of life. At the end of the week it was hoped that the worst was over. There was a marked decrease in the volume of water, and the levees, which have been strengthened, were holding out. The danger had by no means passed, but the indications were less alarming.

A Government Crisis Developed in France on March 14. On the preceding day, during the discussion in the Senate of a commercial treaty with Turkey, the Prime-Minister, M. Tirard, made a motion which the Senate rejected by a majority of seventy-eight. M. Tirard deemed the vote, though on an unimportant question, equivalent to a refusal to vote confidence in the Government. He then tendered his resignation to President Carnot, but the latter persuaded him to remain in office until after Easter. A Cabinet meeting was held the next day to discuss the situation, at which M. Tirard reconsidered his determination to remain, and after the meeting was over he went to the Palace of the Elysée, President Carnot's residence, and tendered the resignations of all the members of the Cabinet. He has held office but little more than a year.

Ghastly Prison Statistics Come from Siberia and give indirect confirmation to the recent charges against the Russian Government, which have been denounced as Nihilistic slanders. Dispatches from Tomsk, the central Siberian depot for prisoners say that the prison now holds 490 healthy and 27 sick exiles, but that in 1886 the number of exile brought to the prison was 16,184, of which only 14,966 were transported further into the interior. In 1887 the arrivals numbered 14,277, in 1888 they numbered 15,015, and in 1889, up to September they numbered over 12,000. Of these prisoners there were taken to the interior 13,522 in 1887, 14,239 in 1888, and 11,000 in 1889. The daily average number of prisoners in 1888 was 1,380, and the daily average number on the sick-list was 396. A majority of the sick had typhoid fever. An official report declares that, owing to a lack of room, hundreds of sick-beds had to be placed in the open air while the temperature was as low as six degrees Reaumur, and that in consequence of this exposure the mortality among the sick was enormous.

A Remarkable Prognostication of the Future of Europe was made last week by the distinguished French statesman, Jules Simon, to the Paris correspondent of the New York Herald. Referring to the advance of socialism in all lands, especially in Germany, he said: "I shall not see the day, any you may not see it, but the day is coming when the autocratic Powers of Europe will be forced to unite against a united socialistic army, and to stand or fall together. Your ancestors in the New World were able to build up out of fragmentary governments what is to-day the United States of America. Why may not our descendants in the same way succeed in establishing the United States of Europe? He believed that the German Emperor's rescript and his proposals for an international conference on the labor question, would promote socialism, though evidently intended to overthrow it. He said: "The Emperor fancies in his inexperience that by showing himself conciliatory and philanthropic he will win the socialists from their discontent. But he is mistaken. He will find the socialists are so constituted that the more you concede them more they demand. . . . Already I can hear the mutterings of what must be the struggle of the future, the bitter struggle between the many and the few; between the toiling millions who have thus far suffered silently, and those who have made them suffer; between capital and labor; between luxury and starvation; between misery and wealth. No human being can avert that struggle, but human power may do much to hasten its approach."

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $27. They were from: South Manchester, Conn., $10; N. Y. City, $5; Natick, Mass., $3; Interbury, N. H., $1; Lewistown, Pa., $1; Occidental, Cal., $1; Providence, R. I., $1; Chicago, Ill., $3; Minneapolis, Kan., $1; Carlyle, Ill., $1. We have on hand many letters from ministers to whom we were, by means of this fund, enabled to read the paper, which express their appreciation of the paper. We quote from one: "I cannot tell all the good it has done me and my little congregation; please accept my thanks, and if possible let me continue to get the paper this year. I can say that no colored preacher of the South will be more thankful than I; also I have a neighbor that has in one of the February numbers, and he puts in claim for the same paper if you can possibly send it to him."

An Invitation to Three Months of Bible Study issued by Mr. D. L. Moody. The Bible Institute of Chicago, of which he is the head, has been fortunate enough to secure the services of Prof. W. Moorhead, of Xenia, Ohio, for the months of April, May, and June. Prof. Moorhead's reputation for suggestive, thorough, and stimulating Bible teaching is well known. Mr. Moody's invitation to all ministers, evangelists, theological students, and other Christian workers in all parts of the land is to wish a new inspiration in the study of the word of God, to come to Chicago for the entire three months, or a portion thereof, and take advantage of the great opportunity. The new building the Institute is open; and those who come will, far as possible, be accommodated in it. Those who desire rooms in the building should send their names and references at once to the Supt., R. A. Grey, 80 W. Pearson St., Chicago. Those who cannot be accommodated in the building will find furnished rooms near at hand, and can board in the institute restaurant. Four dollars per week will cover all necessary expenses.

The Use of the Type-Writer Has Given Needless offence to a church member in Illinois. A letter in a contemporary says that a short time ago a man living in a rural district was bereaved of his wife. His pastor being absent from home, but hearing of his loss, wrote him a letter of condolence and directed him to the promises of God specially applicable to the trial through which he was passing. It was a long letter, for the clergyman deeply sympathized with the widower, and was anxious that he should have all the alleviation of his sorrow that religion could give. He wrote it, however, on his type-writer, and when the bereaved man received it he cast it away in disgust. He was not familiar with the instrument, and said as he threw the letter down unread, "It is only a circular that he sends to everybody." Even had it been so, the letter might have been just as valuable as one specially prepared for him. The same disposition frequently expressed still more serious mischief. Christian workers have no greater difficulty in dealing with persons under conviction of sin than to convince them that the invitations of the gospel and the offers of salvation are intended for them, and are not vague general expressions meant for others. (Acts 13: 26.)

A Romantic Girl in Chicago has had to Confess her disillusion in the very court room in which she lived under the illusion. The Chicago Tribune says that in October, 1888, a handsome man of gentlemanly manners was tried for murder. At his first arraignment a girl of respectable family who had some business in court, saw him and fell in love with him. His situation and the story of the desperate struggle which he slew his victim fascinated her. She sent him flowers, and helped him to employ skillful counsel in his defence. Her admiration of him grew, and when he offered to marry her she consented. He escaped conviction for murder, but was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. Before he went to the penitentiary the marriage ceremony was performed. The wife secured a position as matron of a charitable institution, and supported herself during her husband's imprisonment. By her intercession and the influence she secured, her husband received pardon at the end of one year. She welcomed him joyously on his liberation and took him to her home. They have lived together four months, and it appears they have been sad months for the wife. She told the story in the court-room in which she first saw her husband. He was in the dock again, and this time his wife was his accuser. She said that she was afraid to live with him any longer, for he had already made ten deliberate attempts to kill her. He had tried poison, had tried to asphyxiate her by turning on the gas in her bedroom when she was asleep, had tried to cut her throat, and in other ways had attempted to end her life. She bitterly regretted marrying him, and begged that she might be protected from his violence. The desperate character of the man which had won her admiration at the first, seemed less admirable when it was vented on herself. A similar discovery is made sooner or later by every one who is drawn in spite of God's warning by a love of sin into close alliance with sinners. (Judges 23: 13.)

A Fatal Order to the Miners in the Burning pit at Wilkesbarre, Pa., is now said to have been given by some one. As was stated in these columns last week, the eight men in the tunnel when the fire broke out on March 3 might have escaped had they taken the turn to the adjoining Stanton mine instead of that which led to the place where the coal and timbers were burning. It is now reported that in going to the fire they were acting in obedience to orders. The driver-boy whose carelessness in carrying a naked light caused the fire, and who was sent on to warn the men at work in the tunnel, carried to them, also; it is stated, an order from some person in authority to come and fight the fire. The men would not know the extent of the conflagration, nor the hopelessness of any attempt they might make to extinguish it, and would naturally obey instead of making good their escape in the opposite direction. As the boy who is said to have carried the order is one of the dead, the fact may never be clearly established. If the order was really given, the person who gave it must have made a very grave error of judgment, or have been more concerned about the saving of the property than about the saving of the men's lives. In either case the result has been a melancholy and useless sacrifice of human life. Unhappily, men sometimes lose their souls in the way these poor men lost their lives. In the battle of life, when fierce temptation assails the soul the only safe course sometimes is to fly from it at any cost of position or property, rather than to stay and fight against it with human strength. (Matt. 5: 29, 30.)

A Somnambulist on Broadway, New York, startled a policeman on March 10. While going his rounds before daybreak he saw a lady strangely clad walk briskly up Broadway and approach the Fifth Avenue Hotel. She had on a light gray wrapper over a night-dress, and only a pair of thin slippers on her feet. Her hat was set on awry, and there was a general appearance of déshabillé about her, unusual with pedestrians on that thoroughfare. She carried a riding-whip, which she flourished in a threatening manner. Her eyes were wide open, but had a vacant look. The policeman put his hand on her arm and asked her where she was going. For reply she screamed and sank down half fainting. She explained that she must have been walking in her sleep, for she had no recollection of rising from her bed, or of the two miles she had walked. She accounted for carrying the whip by saying that when she went to bed she was feeling very angry with a rival, and she supposed that in her sleep she had set out to horsewhip her. The policeman took her back to her home, where it was learned that she was subject to somnambulism. Whether she would have assaulted her rival had she met her in her sleep cannot now be known; but it is unlikely that she would have done so in her waking senses. Control of the angry passions may be lost, however, in other ways beside that of sleep. Hard words are often spoken, and wicked crimes committed, by persons whose minds are momentarily unbalanced by long brooding on their wrongs. Even Christians too often forget that retaliation and the punishment of those who injure them was forbidden by their Lord. (Matt. 5: 38-40.)

Two Citizens of Georgia Have Been the Victims of a crafty trick in New York. The Times, of Calhoun, Ga., states that a circular was recently received by a man in Gordon county, whose character is not of the highest, from New York. It set forth in guarded language that spurious bills of various denominations were for sale at ten cents on the dollar. He and another man of similar reputation put their money together and came on to buy five hundred dollars' worth of the counterfeits. They were met by the vendor on their arrival in New York and conducted by devious ways to a room in a squalid quarter of the city. There the bills were shown to them. The imitation was so exact that the Georgians could not tell the counterfeits from the genuine notes. They paid their $500 and received $5,000 in the spurious paper. They were just leaving with their prize when four men broke into the room and, showing their policemen's shields, placed the Georgians and the men they had been dealing with under arrest. They were searched and the counterfeit money seized. The captors showed their prisoners the statute providing a long term of imprisonment for any person found with counterfeit money in his possession, and prepared to take them to police headquarters. The Georgians pleaded for release, and finally they were allowed to depart on condition that they left the State within twelve hours. They did so promptly, and it was not until they were far on their way home that they realized that they had been tricked. The arrest had been a farce, and the men who had captured them were not detectives at all, but confederates of the vendors of the spurious money. Many a man has been similarly duped by the great enemy of souls. The riches he gains at the cost of his soul he has to leave in the midst of his days, and finds at the end that he has been a fool. (Jer. 17: 11.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Judson Memorial chapel at Mandalay, Burmah is completed to the roof.

The Baptist national anniversaries are to be held next May in Chicago. It is many years since that city was chosen for these gatherings.

The proceeds of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday collections in Brooklyn, N. Y., amount to $5,267. The money was distributed last week among eleven hospitals.

The official report of the Evangelical Alliance Conference, held in Boston, has been published by the Baker & Taylor Company, under the title National Needs and Remedies.

A proposal is before the British Parliament to pass a law prohibiting any person performing or singing in a Variety theatre unless he or she holds a license which can be withdrawn for improper behavior.

Mr. E. W. Bliss is holding meetings at Plattsburgh, N. Y. The Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist churches are uniting in the work. A large number of Sunday-school children are among the converts.

Evangelist Avis held very successful services at Paterson, N. J. last week. His meetings, for women only, were held in the Union Baptist Church, and large numbers came to listen to his earnest and faithful words.

Mr. Hammond has been laboring at Centralia, Ill., since the middle of February at the united invitation of the ministers of that city. The Opera House has been crowded daily, and the Spirit of God has been present.

A fourteen days' mission is being held at St. Luke's Methodist Episcopal Church in New York. The meetings are conducted by various pastors in alternation. A deep interest has been aroused, and much good has already resulted.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, leaves for China early in March. He is to take part in the general conference of delegates and representatives of the Evangelical Protestant Missionary Societies to be held in Shanghai in May.

The Annual Convention of the Christian Alliance was held last week in Rev. A. B. Simpson's Gospel Tabernacle in New York. There was a large attendance of friends from all sections. The meetings continued throughout the week, and were of a deeply spiritual character.

The Margaret Strachan Home for friendless and fallen girls held its seventh anniversary on March 17. A business meeting was held in the morning when the reports were read, and a public meeting in the evening at which many prominent ministers and laymen spoke in high terms of the value of the work done in the Home.

Mr. D. L. Moody stated his idea of socialism in his address at the Collegiate Church, New York, on March 11. He said: "Why don't some of the people who have made their fortunes stop, and go out into the highways and byways, and help the poor fellows who are famishing there? That's my idea of socialism, and it's founded on the teachings of Christ Himself."

Chaplain Jones continues his successful labors among the sailors in Cleveland, O. In his little mission chapel on River Street he frequently has an audience of two hundred seamen. Chaplain Jones was himself a sailor for seventeen years. Subsequently he was a bar-tender, and worked in a saloon just opposite where his mission is. His first religious impression was received in the Cherry Street Mission, New York.

Mr. D. L. Moody has been conducting an interesting series of services at Princeton University. On March 9 he held five services and on March 10 four services. In the mornings he spoke to students only, in the Seminary chapel and in the evenings in the First and Second Presbyterian Church. At the earnest request of his friends in New York, Mr. Moody is continuing his Bible Readings this week in the Collegiate Church at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, at 10:30 A. M.

THE CRAFTY ENEMY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day: lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." Heb. 3:13.

The Greatest of All Evils—Sin the Peril to be Dreaded—I. Its Power to Deceive—In Its Approaches—In Its Adaptation to Circumstances—In Its Object—In the Names it Assumes—In Its Promises—II. Its Hardening Power—By Familiarity—By Security—By Unbelief—III. To be Fought Against—By Faith—Confession—By Exhortation—The Lord's Keeping.

SIN is the greatest evil in the universe. It is the parent of all other ills. All manner of evils draw their bitterness from this fount of wormwood and gall. If a man had every possession mortal could desire, sin could turn every blessing into a curse; and, on the other hand, if a man had nothing for his inheritance but suffering, but stood clear from all sin, his afflictions, his losses, his deprivations, might each one be a gain to him. We ought not to pray so much against sickness, or trial, or temptation, or even against death itself, as against sin. Satan himself cannot hurt us, except as he is armed with the poisoned arrows of sin. Lord, keep us from sin. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." There is no evil like the evil of sin: deliver us from it, O Lord!

Alas! we are sadly prone to sin, and evil has great influence over us. When I say this, I refer not only to those who are "dead in trespasses and sins," in whom sin is the great reigning power, for they are the servants of sin; but I refer also to the people of God. Even we that have been born again, and are, in a measure, sanctified by the Spirit of God; even we, I say, have a fleshly nature, whose tendencies are evil, whose desires draw towards sin. How soon we slip! How much we need to be held up! How ought we daily to cry for grace, lest we also should be "hardened through the deceitfulness of sin"! Upon that subject I am going to speak this morning, dwelling, for the most part, upon "the deceitfulness of sin."

I. First, then, sin has

A Singular Power

to deceive. We have only to look back to the beginning of our race to be sure of this. Eve, in the garden, was pure, intelligent, and filled with good dispositions: her faculties were well balanced, for no original sin or natural depravity had put her mind out of order. Yet that lovely woman, without a taint upon her heart or will, perfect as she came from her Maker's hand, was overcome by Satan, who embodied in himself the deceitfulness of sin. The serpent played his part right cunningly with the woman, and soon withdrew her from her loyal obedience to the Lord God. She began to question, to parley, to argue, with rebellious suggestions, and after a while she put forth her hand, and she took of the fruit, which had been forbidden, and she gave also to her husband with her, and he did eat. If man in his perfectness was so readily deceived by sin, what think you of yourself, fallen and inclined to evil as you are? Will not sin soon deceive you?

The deceitfulness of sin will be seen in several points, to which I call your attention. Its deceit may be seen in the manner of its approaches to us. Sin does not uncover all its hideousness, nor reveal its horrible consequences; but it comes to us in a very subtle way, offering us advantage. Intellectually, it comes with a question, or an inquiry. Ought we not to question and to inquire? Are we to receive everything implicitly? The question is, however, full often the thin end of the wedge, which Satan drives home in the form of carnal wisdom, doubt, infidelity, and practical atheism. The practice of sin may be encouraged by a doubt as to its penalty. "Yea, hath God said?" is the speculative question which is meant to undermine the foundations of godly fear in the heart. How tiny a drop of sinful distrust of God's Word will poison all the thoughts of the soul!

The Gate of Imagination.

Sin frequently comes as a bare suggestion, or an imagination; an airy thing, spun of such stuff as dreams are made of. You do not think of committing the fault, nor even of talking of it; but you think of it pleasantly, and view it as a thing bright and lustrous to the imagination. The thought fascinates, and then the spell of evil begins its deadly work: thought condenses into desire, and desire grows to purpose, and purpose ripens into act. So slyly doth sin come into the soul, that it is there before we are aware of it.

I have known a sin insinuate itself by the way of the repulsion of another sin. A man has wasted his substance in profligacy; and by way of repentance, in after days he becomes a miser—greedy, wretched, living only for himself and his hoard. So have I seen the publican reform and develop a Pharisee. The pendulum went sadly far in this direction, and now, to make amends, it swings too far the other way. The shivering fit follows upon the burning heat—it is but the same fever of sin in diverse phases. A man will fly from pride to meanness, from moroseness to jollity, from obstinacy to laxity. Thus the shutting of one gate may open another, and one sin may crawl in as another creeps out. You set all your guards to keep the northern border, and the enemies come up from the south, taking you at unawares. You pursue a virtue till you hurry into a vice, and shun one evil so much that you fall into a worse.

Sin has a way of adapting itself to us and to our circumstances. One man is of a sanguine temperament, and he is tempted to speculate, to gamble, and ultimately to become dishonest. Another man is of a sober frame of mind, and he is tempted to be melancholy, disputatious, peevish, rebellious against God. To the young man sin will come with fire for passions, which are all too ready to blaze; to the old man sin will come with the chill frost of parsimony, or the frost of sloth, or the canker of care.

Sin's Quiver

has an arrow for the rich, and a dart for the poor: it has one form of poison for the prosperous, and another for the unsuccessful. This master fisherman in the sea of life does not use the same bait for all sorts of fish; but he knows the creatures he would capture. If sin find thee poor as an owl, it will tempt thee to envy, or to steal, or to doubt God, or to follow crooked ways of gain. If sin find thee abounding in riches, it will follow quite another tack, and lure thee on to self-indulgence, or to pride, or worldly fashion. Satan knows more about us than we know about ourselves: he knows our raw places and our weak points, and in what joint there was a breakage in our youth.

Next, sin is deceitful in its object, for the object which it puts before us is not that which is its actual result. We are not tempted to provoke our Maker, or wilfully cast off the authority of righteousness. We are not invited to do these things for their own sake. No, no: we are moved to do evil under the idea that some present good will come of it. In every case, this object is a piece of deceit. Evil does not lead to good, nor sin promote our real profit: we are fooled if we think so. Yet, in most cases, the man does not commit the sin with the design of breaking the law of God, and defying his Maker, but because he fancies that something is to be gained; and, in his judgment, he better understands what is good for him even than the Lord God, by whose wisdom he ought to be guided.

Sin is deceitful, next, in the names it wears. It is very apt to change its title: it seldom cares for its own true description. Fine words are often used to cover foul deeds. We read, at times, in the newspapers, of or possibly half a dozen: in such cases there is always a reason for it. Sin has many names by which it would disguise its real character. In his "Holy War," Mr. Bunyan tells us that Covetousness called himself by the name of Prudent-thrift; Lasciviousness was named Harmless-mirth; and Anger was known as Good-zeal. Nowadays, anger is known as "proper spirit," and infidelity is "Advanced Theology." Almost every sin, nowadays, has a pretty name to be called by on Sundays, and silver slippers to wear in fine society. The paintbrush and the powder-box are much used upon the wrinkled countenance of sin to make it look fair and beautiful. To-day, "worldliness" is "being abreast of the age;" false doctrine is described as "advanced thought." Indifference to truth is liberality, heresy is breadth of view. Yet names do not alter things.

Gentlemen Who Have an Alias,

Sin also shows its special deceitfulness in the arguments which it uses with men. Have you never heard its voice whispering to you, "Do not make much ado about nothing. Is it not a little one? There is no need to boggle over so small a matter as this. It is not right, but still, it is a mere trifle, unworthy of notice. Do it! do it!" My friends, can there be such a thing as small sin? The point of the rapier is small, and for that reason the more deadly. Then will sin raise the question, and say, "Is this really wrong? May we not be too precise? Are not the times changed? Do not circumstances alter the command?" Sin is great at raising difficult points of casuistry. "Are there not some points of view in which this act may be allowable, though from more usual points of view it must certainly be regarded as an unhallowed thing?" He that wills to do wrong is eager to find a loophole for himself. He that has begun to seek an excuse is on the border-land of the enemy.

With feeble minds the argument is, "Beware lest you be singular. As well be out of the world as out of the fashion. When you are at Rome you must do as Rome does." Weak minds are plentiful, and to these, to be thought singular and odd is a thing to be dreaded and shunned: they must be in the swim, though the water should be of the foulest.

Sin will also flatter a man with the notion that he can go just so far, and no farther, and retreat with ease. He can tread and yet be innocent. Another person would be in great danger; but this self-satisfied fool thinks that he has such power over himself, and that he is so intelligent and so experienced, that he can stop at a safe point. This moth can play with the candle and not singe its wings. This child can put its finger between the bars, and yet never burn himself. I know you, my self-contained friend, and I know you boast that you can stand on the edge of a cliff and look down upon the foaming sea, and while other people's heads grow giddy, your brain is clear and your foot is firm. You may try the experiment once too often.

The Verge of Crime,

Then sin will suggest, "Well, you can soon make up for lost time. Live nearer to God, and be more useful! and then your little divergence will soon be made up." It even ventures coarsely to propose price for pardon. "Give something extra to the good cause, and make amends for offences." The old Popish idea of purchasing pardon by some extraneous piece of religion comes up in many forms.

The deceitfulness of sin is seen again in its promises: for we shall not go far into sin without finding out how greatly it lies unto us. It promises liberty and the man who yields to it becomes the veriest slave. It promises light, and the man gives up the old faith to go after the new light, and before long the darkness thickens about him into sevenfold midnight. Sin promises elevation of mind and spirit, and before long the wretch is worldly, pleasure-loving, grovelling, superstitious.

Thus will sin, by any means, by all means, endeavor to keep men under its tyranny, so as to work their ruin. Let no man in this place think that he cannot be deceived; he is already deluded by his pride. Let no woman dream that she has come to such a state of perfection that she cannot be deluded by sin; she is even now in imminent peril.

II. I want you, in the second place, to notice very carefully that this deceitfulness has over the heart: "Lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." How does this come about? Partly through our familiarity with sin. We may look at hateful sin till we love it. It has the eye of a basilisk, and its gaze is fascinating. At first you are shocked by sin; but if you see every day it will cease to distress you. Persons who have never heard profane language are greatly grieved as they go down the streets of London; and yet even good people who live in certain localities come to hear it without horror. This is one of the sad influences of sin: it makes the heart horny and contact with it.

A Hardening Power

Security in wrong-doing leads also to this kind of hardening. A man has been dishonest; he has found out, and he suffers for it. I could almost thank God, for now he may cease from his course. But one of the greatest curses that can happen to a man is for him to do wrong with impunity: he will do it again, and again, and again, and he will proceed from bad to worse. I am always glad when I hear of a young gambler whose pocket is cleaned out at his first venture: if he is any wit he will quit the way of destruction; at least we hope he will. But if he gains at first he will stake more and more, and become a confirmed gamester. It is just so with sin: its deceitfulness is assisted by a man's being able to go a little further and a little further without any great hurt appealing to come of it: for the heart grows used to the increasing heat, and is hardened to it, till he can live in a furnace heated seven times hotter by sin. Sinners descend by an inclined plane till they fill themselves far down in the abyss, and think it impossible to rise out of it.

In time comes in the help of unbelief. When a man begins to doubt his Bible, to doubt the atonement, to doubt the wrath to come, and so on, there generally a cause for it; and that cause is not always intellectual, but moral and spiritual. "There is something rotten in the state of Denmark;" "I am something rotten in the heart, and this makes nothing rotten in the head. Very naturally a man does not like that truth which does not like him. That which condemns him he tries to condemn. A truth makes him uneasy, and so he tries to doubt it, and the tone of discover a stale objection which will answer his man, and enable him to set up in business as a believer. Then he ceases to feel the preaching; as a rule, we only feel under the gospel in proportion as we believe it to be true; and if we persuade ourselves that it is all a myth, or a fiction, we have made a pillow for our guilty heads.

Society Soon Helps Him

O sirs! your hearts are every day either softening or hardening. The sun that shines with vehemence melts the wax, but it, at the same time, hardens the clay. The effect of the gospel is always sent in some degree: it is a savor of life unto us, or else a savor of death unto death, to all who hear it. You cannot listen to my plain rebukes and earnest warnings without growing worse, if you do not grow better. Pray God to give you a lively conscience, and when you have it, do nothing to offend it.

II. Now I conclude by a practical observation, that this deceitfulness of sin, and this tendency to become hardened, need

To Be Fought Against.

What is it to be done? I will not keep to my text now, but enlarge the scope of my discourse by going into the context. The way to keep from hardness of heart, and from the deceitfulness of sin, is to believe. We read, "To whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believe not?" So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief. Believe!—faith has saved you. Believe! faith will save you! Believe!—faith brought you to Christ. Believe!—it will keep you to Christ. Believe against the present temptation. Believe against all future deceitfulness of sin. I shall find that, just in proportion as faith grows in me, the deceit of sin will be baffled.

The next advice I would give is this—if you would be saved from the deceitfulness of sin confess it honestly before God. It is necessary to lay bare your heart before the living God. Though sin call itself another name, do thou call it by its right name. When thou hast sinned, make no excuses for thyself; but with weeping and lamentation cry, "Lord, I have sinned." Tell the Lord all the evil connected with your transgression, and try therein to spy out and humbly learn the villany of thy heart, the wickedness of thy nature, the crookedness of thy disposition, the loathsomeness of thy corruptions. Remember that sin may appear sin: it cannot appear in a false light.

A Delicate Duty.

But now the text itself says, "Exhort one another daily," from which I gather two lessons. First, an exhortation from others; and, secondly, practical exhortation to others. I have known people of this kind: that if a word is spoken to them, however gently, as to a wrong which they are doing, their temper is up in a moment. Who are they that they should be spoken to? Dear friend, who are you? You should not be spoken to? Are you such a hypocrite and such an outcast that your Christian brethren must give you up? Surely you do not intend to bear that character. I have even known persons take offence because the word has been spoken from the pulpit too pointedly. This is to take offence where we ought to show gratitude. "Ah," says one, "I will never hear that man again! it is too personal." What kind of a man would like to hear? Will you give your ear to one who will please you to your ruin, and flatter you to your destruction? Surely, you are not so foolish! We ought to be able to take a loving exhortation from our brethren and sisters. We must do so if we are to be preserved from the deceitfulness of sin. Another eye may see for me what I cannot see for myself. Reproofs should be given with great tenderness; but even if they wound us, we must bear them. "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil." Let us be thankful that some saints are so well enough to give themselves the pain and trouble of exhorting us.

And then let us endeavor, if the Lord is keeping us by His grace, to "exhort one another daily." We are not to scold one another daily, nor to suspect one another daily, nor to pick holes in one another's coats daily; but when we see a manifest fault in a brother, we are bound to tell him of it in love; and when we do not see any fault of commission, but the brother is evidently growing lax and cold, it is well to stir him up to great zeal by a loving exhortation. Wisely said, a word may save a soul from declension and sin. A good fire may need a little stirring. The best of believers may grow better by the communications of his friends. Alas! we do not care enough for the souls of our brethren. If we thought more carefully of others, we should probably think more carefully about ourselves. "Exhort one another daily."

But oh, dear friends, after all that I have said, he is well kept whom the Lord keepeth. Commit yourselves unto the Lord, the Holy Spirit, who is able to keep you from stumbling. Let us, by a renewed act of faith, hand ourselves over to the Lord Jesus, that He may save us. You that have never done so, I pray that you may be moved to it. You cannot keep yourselves. If you have been greatly deceived by sin, yet come to Jesus now, who can undeceive you, and undo the damage you have suffered. Trust in Him who is the faithful and true Witness, to deliver you from all falsehood and sin, and to keep you true to the end. The Lord bless these words of mine, which, however feeble, have been earnestly meant for your good, for Jesus' sake!

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Hero of Balaklava.—An Evangelist Relates: "I was speaking at a meeting in Edinburgh, assisted by an old soldier who had been in the Balaklava charge during the Crimean War. At the time of that famous event he was not only a soldier of the Queen, but also a zealous warrior in the service of his heavenly King. He said that in the morning, just before the charge, he took off his soldier's cap and had a prayer-meeting down in his heart, as he commended himself to God's keeping; and he testified that God gave him strength and steadfastness. He rode through the Russian soldiers, fearing no one, and knowing they had no power to harm him except it was his Father's will. Yes, God can give the needed strength for all our battles in life, whether it be to face a battery, to encounter the world in our family or workshop, or subdue the evil one in our hearts. God has all power, and He gives to each of His children according to their requirements."

The Sweep's Song in the Chimney.—A Christian worker says: "When I was a young lad I heard of a little boy, a chimney-sweep in the city of London, who, as was the custom then, went bodily up the chimney. One morning, while engaged ascending a chimney, he sang in a sweet, clear voice, 'There is a fountain filled with blood,' etc. A lady in the house wondered where the music was coming from. As she could see no one she paid great attention, that she might discover the whereabouts of the singer. By-and-by the little fellow came to the words,

'And there have I, though vile as he,
Washed all my sins away.'

Just then he got to the top of the chimney, and, flourishing his broom, he cried, 'Hallelujah! I am saved!' The lady heard him, and rang the bell, and inquired of the servant where the voice was coming from. Being told, she ordered her to bring the boy in. In a few minutes, clad in his sooty clothes, the little fellow stood in the drawing-room before the lady. 'How can you sing like that?' she asked. 'Oh, ma'am,' was the reply, 'I am so glad that Jesus has saved me, and that I can sing always and everywhere for Him.' And that little chimney-sweep, by his song, was instrumental in bringing that lady to Christ."

A King's Daughter in Disguise.—Mr. Thomson relates, "I was in Greenock the other day at the funeral of an earnest worker for the Lord, whom it had pleased Him to call away. On my return journey a fellow-mourner told me of a gentleman who had been laboring for Christ in Glasgow, with evident success. At the close of one of his meetings a poor lost woman waited behind to be spoken with. It was so late before she decided to accept Christ's salvation, give up her evil ways, and live for Him, that there was no home open that night to which to take her. The gentleman was in some perplexity, when a lady worker by his side said, 'Do not trouble; I will take her home with me.' She was taken to the lady's house, and after some refreshment, as they were sitting in the drawing-room the lady's son came to the door and was about to enter. He started in surprise to see his mother speaking to the woman, and recovering himself, was about to retire, when his mother recalled him, saying, 'Come in. This is a king's daughter whom you see; though at present, it is true, she is somewhat disguised!' Ah, when we Christians are down-hearted, or about to commit some mean action, if we would but remember that through faith in Christ we are sons and daughters of the King of Glory, we should do nothing that would bring shame on the name of our Father."

A Sect Consisting of One Man.—Mr. D. J. Finlay observes: "Some time ago I was in Ayrshire, and there I met an old man who had come through a strange religious experience. He was gray-haired, with a long white beard that gave him quite a patriarchal appearance. At one time he had been a Presbyterian Church member, but becoming dissatisfied with something he saw there, he left that church and joined the Open Plymouth Brethren; but becoming discontented with them, he withdrew to the Close Brethren; but even there he thought he saw corruption in their midst, and being unable to turn them to his way of thinking, he withdrew and formed a small sect of his own. Soon fresh dissensions broke out, and again there was a rupture; the old gentleman, leaving all religious bodies, he and his son, with their wives, met alone for worship in a private room. One would have thought there could have been no further schism, but at the time I saw him he had just parted from his son and formed a sect consisting of himself alone. That man was a Christian, but of a very narrow kind; but God's religion is not narrow, all religious bodies have their places in it; the one essential thing being that they believe and act upon the belief that Christ has died to save them, and they accept the salvation He offers. We pertain neither to Cephas nor Paul nor Apollos; all belong to the one glorious Church of Christ."

How a Chinese Preacher Fell.—Mrs. Leavitt, the all-round-the-world temperance evangelist, says: "Just before I arrived at the town of Shanghai, in China, there had been a church trial of one of the finest native preachers, a giant in learning and debate, a good and holy man, zealous for his Master's cause; but he had fallen, through strong drink. He was found guilty and deposed from his church. When the sentence was pronounced, the late minister stood up and asked permission to say a few words. Permission being granted, he said, 'I do not find fault with your judgment. It is just. I have disgraced the church and Christianity, but I would say this in my defence: I did not intend to be a drunkard, and did not deliberately take to drink. I was feeling over-wrought, almost done up, with the mission labors, and told my condition to a brother missionary—one of you who to-day sit in judgment on me. He said he knew exactly how it was, and whenever he felt in a similar condition he took a little wine, which he found did him good, and he advised me to do the same. I followed his counsel, and gradually the habit of drinking grew upon me until it has brought me to this.' When may we expect the cause of temperance to be victorious? Surely not until the Church of Christ is aroused to a sense of its duty on this question, and places itself boldly in front of the temperance army."

The Hostess and the Guest.—Mr. Hamilton observes: "Not long ago I heard of a minister who had been the pastor of a large congregation, but falling, through drink, he had been obliged to resign his charge. Then, filled with remorse and shame, he left his home, his children, and his wife, and fled to Liverpool, where he hoped to hide from all who knew him. But tidings reached his friends of where he was, and to what state he had sunk; and a lady, a member of his congregation, and a personal friend, resolved to make an effort to reclaim him. She went to Liverpool, found where he lived, and making her way through a densely populated and filthy court, came to a narrow and shaky staircase, at the top of which was the minister's room. She knocked at the door, but receiving no answer, she pushed it open and walked in. At first she could discern nothing in the darkness, but soon she discovered in a corner of the room her former pastor, clothed in rags, lying on a heap of straw. She spoke kindly to him, urging him to give up drink and begin his life anew. The man started up, shrieking almost in a frenzy, 'You ask me to give up drink! You, at whose house I dined Sunday after Sunday, and who with your own hands mixed me the glass of brandy and water, when striving to give it up, and overcome the demon within me, I refused it. You have been the ruin of my soul; leave me!' And the man fell back exhausted. When, in mistaken kindness, you press liquor on any one, you know not what you are doing. As Christians, you are your brother's keeper."

Jose M. P. Caamano, of Ecuador.

View of Montevideo and Its Bay.

A Dying Girl's Despair Cured.—An Evangelist said: "I lately visited a dying girl. Her life had been singularly blameless, but she was much afraid of death. 'All is very dark,' she said, 'Christ seems very far off.' She was very weak, and could not speak much, so I gave her only one text, 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.' 'My heart is so very hard,' she said. Battling for breath, she brought charge after charge against herself, but still I kept to my text and repeated it after each. The words became firmly fixed in her mind, and took deep root in her heart. On her death-bed she sent special thanks for the text by which all her fears had been driven away. Oh the good news! God gave His only begotten Son, that 'whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

The Deadly Coils of the Serpent.—An Evangelist said: "I lately visited a friend who lived in a very large house and filled a good social position. I found him half intoxicated, and talked nonsense to me about the days of 'auld lang syne.' The evil genius of alcohol has since robbed him of his fine house and social position, and made him a bankrupt. I heard lately that the grasp of the serpent had tightened upon him, and now he is a ne'er-do-well among the unemployed. And all through drink! He despised teetotallers, and gloried in his liberty to take liquor or want it, but soon the servant became the master and a cruel tyrant. Do not such tragedies, enacted before our eyes, alas, only too often, call upon all to link themselves with the Gospel Temperance cause, if not for their own sake, at least for the sake of their neighbors?"

JOSE M. P. CAAMANO,

Delegate from Ecuador to the Pan-American Conference.

ONE of the most intelligent and sagacious members of the Pan-American Conference is Mr. Caamano, of Ecuador. He is probably the most popular man in his own country, and has been honored with the election to the Presidency. His career has been an adventurous one. He was born in Guayaquil October 5, 1838. He began the study of law and theology in the seminary of his native city, and was educated in Quito. Subsequently he was mayor of Guayaquil and chief of the custom-house service. Having conspired against the Dictator-General, Veintimilla, he was banished in 1882. The punishment, however, did not quench his patriotic ardor. He went to Lima, organized a revolutionary expedition, and on April 17, 1883, returned to Ecuador. He organized a division and joined the forces that were besieging Guayaquil about the middle of May. The place was taken by storm by the combined forces under Caamano and three other generals. A provisional government was appointed until the national convention could meet with Caamano as president ad interim. On February 7, 1884, he was elected President of the Republic.

He is the leader of the Conservative party; but even his political opponents voted for him. On February 6, 1886, an attempt was made to assassinate him and he narrowly escaped death by throwing himself into a river. Under his administration, telegraphs, railroads and institutes of sciences, several colleges, and many new schools have been added to the resources of Ecuador.

MONTevideo.

(See illustration.)

THE capital of Uruguay, a picture of a part of which is here given, is one of the most modern and handsome cities on the South American continent. It is built on a peninsula but little more than half a mile in width, having the river on one side and the bay on the other. Towering above it is the mountain which is the landmark of the city. "I see a mountain," said the discoverers, and the exclamation in Spanish is Montevideo, the name which the city has borne ever since. Of the population of 800,000 which the whole of Uruguay contains, fully one-fourth are to be found in Montevideo by day, and in the city and its suburbs by night. The suburbs extend along the base of the mountain and skirt the bay. The people are Spanish or of Spanish extraction, though of late years there has been a large influx of Italians, who do the drudgery of road-making and most of the rough work of the city. Business has attracted also many Americans and English, and their number is rapidly increasing. The influence of their presence is seen in the activity and bustle of the streets. In no other South American city is there seen so much energy as in Montevideo.

The streets are wide, and are laid out with as much regularity as in a modern city of the United States. The buildings are of stone, and not a few are ornamented with shafts of polished granite. Its chief street, the Julio, is one of the finest thoroughfares on the continent. It runs through three plazas or squares, in one of which stands the beautiful cathedral, with its two towers and imposing front. The city enjoys an excellent climate. It is nearer to the equator than New York by about seven degrees, and in the coldest winter the thermometer seldom falls below freezing-point. It is astonishing that the visitor may see in the harbor the flags of every European nation flying from the mast-heads of ships, but not the Stars and Stripes. Very seldom, indeed, does an American ship visit the thriving port, and the trade is left for the competition of the peoples on the other side of the Atlantic.

THEODORE VINCENT'S THERAPEUTICS.

(See illustration on page 189.)

COMING home was a trying experience for Theodore Vincent. College life was nearly over. On once more would the gray old walls of the venerable seat of learning receive him as a student. At the close of this vacation he would go back to college pass his last term there, receive his degree, and then commence his career. But first there were these few weeks at home. As the train by which he travelled passed well-remembered landmarks his thoughts went back to his previous journeys homeward. Then his dearly loved father was alive, the life and light of the home, beloved by all in it, the guide and friend of each. He was dead now, and his body had been lying in the cemetery nearly a year. Theodore was at his funeral, and once, since then he had been home for a few weeks' vacation. It was a house of mourning then, and it was natural that it should be so. His mother and sister were overwhelmed by their loss, and were still weeping familiar objects in the house and home recalled their dear departed to their memory. Every day they spent an hour at the grave mingling their tears, a talking of the wisdom and goodness of the Lord. That was exactly what Theodore expected, and he could fully sympathize with their grief.

Theodore himself had been prostrated by the bereavement; but he was a young man among young men, and the natural elasticity of spirit recovered quickly. His father was no less sincerely mourning his love and admiration for him were in no way diminished, but he could be cheerful and enjoy the college sports and pastimes again. He was, however, aware that his mother and sister were still under the dark cloud. The letters that his sister Lydia regularly sent to him revealed that no ray of sunshine had reached them. Theodore believed that they were becoming morbid, and that it was his duty to arouse them to a better, brighter life. He knew the task would be difficult, that it would bring their reproaches upon him, but it would be better for them in the end, and he was fully determined on making the effort.

Both mother and sister were in tears when he arrived. It reminded them of former homecomings, when he whom they mourned had been foremost in preparing to welcome the young man. Though the summer sunshine, and the glory of flowers and foliage, made all bright outside the home, there was gloom and sadness within. A hushed, subdued, chastened air pervaded the house, and the two ladies started and almost shuddered at the clear, firm tones of Theodore's voice and the ringing laugh. A wan smile from his mother, a suppressed laugh, in which there was no mirth from his sister, were all that his utmost efforts could duce. They liked nothing better than to go over again their remembrances of his father's words and ways, and weep over their loss. Vincent and her daughter were looking pale and thin, and their appearance confirmed Theodore's conviction that their grief continued too long.

"Come sister mine," said Theodore, the next day, "how shall we spend the vacation? Let us make a programme. I propose we hire a little carriage and take mamma to visit all our old-time resorts, and you and I will do some walking besides. Both you and mamma need some out-door air to bring the color back to your cheeks."

"Neither mamma nor I care for these things now, Theodore. We rarely go anywhere except to the cemetery and to church. You course will want some more lively society, and you have plenty of friends; but you must not expect us to join you. We cannot get."

"No, I do not expect or wish to do that. I do not forget, sister. I want you to remember a better way. Papa would be pained if he saw how your lives saddened. Nothing good can come of all these tears."

"Oh, I think there may, for me, any rate," said Lydia. "I am trying to reach a higher plane than I ever knew of before. I have more of my own heart since I have been in retirement. I have myself under discipline, and I know now how much evil there is to be eradicated. I have been thinking of going into some religious house, where I could give my whole time to self-mortification and penance. Oh, Theodore, since papa died, a life of mere pleasure and amusement seems impossible!"

"I do not think much of a conception of duty that would impel a girl to leave her widowed mother and shut herself up in a nunnery. Who has been talking to you?"

"There is no daily service at our church, so I have been to the Catholic church every week-day for some time. One of the fathers there has been very kind to me. You would call him an ascetic, I suppose, but to me he seems like one of the mediæval saints. He has helped me very greatly."

The entrance of Mrs. Vincent put an end to the conversation for the time. Theodore devoted himself to cheering her and diverting her thoughts to her own position and prospects, the one subject which in a mother so tender and loving had any chance of rivalling the one that had too long held her captive. But his sister's state troubled him, and later in the day he put on his hat and strolled through the garden alone, to think it over. Evidently the girl was treading the hard and futile road of self-salvation, which must end either in despair or Pharisaic conceit. He gathered mechanically, most unconsciously, a few flowers as he walked and meditated. A turn of the path brought him in view of the house. He looked up and saw his mother and sister watching him. Lydia stepped forward to join him, and he quickened his steps to meet her.

"Look at these," he said, putting the flowers in her hands. "See what open air and sunshine have done for them. What beauty! what fragrance! the close air of a room they would not have been at they are. Believe me, your soul is like them; it does not need seclusion. It is they who cease from their own works who 'enter into rest.'"

Lydia made no reply, but she took the flowers, and the brother and sister returned to the house, where Mrs. Vincent had to listen to her son's persuasions to join him in an excursion. He would make no denial, and though up to the last moment he resisted, he had the satisfaction of driving her and Lydia through country roads redolent with the scents of the sweet summer air. A perceptible change for the better marked the family gathering at night in the cheerfulness of both ladies, which encouraged the young man to hope for success in the line of treatment he had planned.

Theodore Vincent Prescribes for His Sister.

"What did you mean by ceasing from work, Theodore?" asked his sister when they were alone. "Must not we strive to enter in?"

"Not in your way. The morbid introspection you are fostering can never bring rest or peace or attainment. Nothing but dissatisfaction comes from looking inward. You must look out and up. In Him your strength lies. Look to Him, believe in Him, trust Him and you will find rest, because He undertakes for you. When you have experienced that rest you will not want to shut yourself out of the world, but you will want to point poor overburdened souls to the same source of joy. It is with that as with this morbid grief over dear father's death; you do not live your love. You could better show your love for papa by cheering and comforting mamma as he used to do; you can prove your love for God by doing good to His children and telling sinners the way to Him."

The brother and sister had many such talks during the weeks of Theodore's vacation. By slow degrees, too, he enlisted his mother's interest, first in one or two widows in the village, who, being in like trouble with herself, were comforted by a sympathy which only a widow could give; and afterward other afflicted homes had her visits. In cheering others she was cheered herself. There was no more talk on the part of Lydia either, of retirement from the world. She was too happily occupied, and besides, through faith she had entered into rest about herself. When Theodore went back to college he left a home transformed by the peace and joy which come from faith and service.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 17.)

The Apostles of Toleration.

"ROGER WILLIAMS," says Bancroft, "announced his discovery under the simple proposition of the sanctity of conscience. The civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control opinion; should punish guilt, but never violate the freedom of the soul. The doctrine contained within itself an entire reformation of theological jurisprudence: it would blot from the statute-book the felony of nonconformity; would quench the fires that persecution had so long kept burning; would repeal every law compelling attendance on public worship; would abolish tithes and all forced contributions to the maintenance of religion; would give an equal protection to every form of religious faith; and never suffer the authority of the civil Government to be enlisted against the mosque of the Mussulman or the altar of the fire-worshipper, against the Jewish synagogue or the Roman cathedral.

"It is wonderful with what distinctness Roger Williams deduced these inferences from his great principle, the consistency with which, like Pascal and Edwards, those bold and profound reasoners on other subjects, he accepted every fair inference from his doctrines, and the circumspection with which he repelled every unjust imputation. In the unwavering assertion of his views he never changed his position; the sanctity of conscience was the great tenet, which, with all its consequences, he defended, as he first trod the shores of New England; and in his extreme old age it was the last pulsation of his heart."

A man can hardly commit a greater crime, according to the standard of his contemporaries, than that of being in advance of his age. It is an offence most hard to be forgiven; and assuredly the New England of that seventeenth century, upon which America now delights to look back as the cradle of liberty, was fully as little prepared as England to pardon the advocacy of the doctrine of perfect toleration, which, even in the nineteenth century, neither America nor England have altogether carried out. It is the shame of England that the conscientious religious opinions of a good subject can still be a bar to literary honors, and a disqualification for civil office. It is not for either nation to cry shame on the other. Let their emulation be still which shall first win the noble goal of liberty that is the aim of both.

Roger Williams contended in vain with good men, strong in the sincerity of convictions which they had already endured much to maintain. The Puritan legislators of New England enacted that the observance of public worship was a duty every member of the community owed to the state. No difference of opinion could excuse regular attendance at the parish church, nor could either the unwillingness of worldly men, or the scruples of tender consciences, win any relaxation from the law which subjected every member of the community to taxation for the maintenance of the religion of the majority. In addition to this, the adopted creed became a necessary qualification for the meanest civil office, and no test act was ever enforced more stringently in the worst time of England's Stuart rule than this was under the Puritan governors of New England.

They had indeed this apology, that they had acquired the land as a refuge for themselves, and had endured not a few privations and sufferings, that they might establish there an asylum wherein English Nonconformity might be free to plume its wings, and soar, unrestrained by any shackles but its own. The discriminating reader will not fail to give them every advantage of this apology, nor will he refuse a just admiration for the uncompromising spirit with which they acted up to their imperfect views; although he still must own that they were two centuries behind the liberty of our age.

The evils consequent on the establishment of dominant Puritanism in the colony of Massachusetts, came to a height when the advocate of perfect toleration was chosen by the people of Salem as their pastor. All the worst consequences that had sprung from the religious intolerance of the High Church party in England, were repeated under new forms in America. By a decree of the General Court, Roger Williams was banished from the colony. In the depth of winter, under storms more fierce than those that assailed the Pilgrim Fathers when they landed from the Mayflower, he had to skulk for many weeks amid the intricate wilds of the leafless forest, glad when he discovered a hollow tree to shelter him from the pitiless blasts of the north wind, laden with ice and snow. But "the ravens," said he, "fed me in the wilderness." The wild Indians protected the outcast; and through his long life he never forgot the debt of gratitude.

Williams removed at length to Rhode Island. Five companions, who shared with him the large views of liberty for which he had endured such sufferings, followed him thither; and there, with the advice of the benevolent Governor of Boston, and beyond the reach of the charter of Massachusetts, the martyr of liberty founded a new settlement, to which he gave the name of Providence. The history of Roger Williams has been written by his opponents. Tardy and grudging justice has been rendered to his memory. The eulogists of New England have been fain to magnify his errors, or to conceal his wrongs. England may now be proud that she gave birth to such a son, while America rejoices that amid the wilds of the New World he found at length a shelter, where it was not held a crime to acknowledge no judge of conscience but God.

The history of the Pilgrim founders of New England properly closes when their work as the pioneers is done. Difficulties, indeed, still beset the path of the colonists, and some of these of no ordinary character. In 1633 a number of ships, ready, with their emigrant passengers, to sail for New England, were stayed by an arbitrary order of Council, and forbid to depart, "because of the resorting thither of divers persons known to be ill-affected, not only with civil but ecclesiastical government at home." It has even been said that Charles and his wise councillors arrested a ship in the Thames some few years later, which, but for their interference, would have borne Hampden and Cromwell to exhaust their mighty energies contending with the difficulties of an infant settlement;—a pregnant theme for reflection, did we not remember that men are but the tools of Providence. Yet how different had all the new centuries of England's history been, with her Hampden and Cromwell building log huts in Massachusetts Bay!

Wiser men than Laud would have thought England well rid of a few ship-loads of ill-affected persons. But the pedant priest flattered himself that the nation could be ruled with a pedagogue's rod; and by and by he even volunteered to extend the discipline of his ferule to the New England colonists. In 1635 Archbishop Laud was commissioned with irresponsible power to remodel all matters, civil or ecclesiastical, belonging to the colony; and things proceeded so far that a writ was made out against the Governor, Deputy-governor, and assistants of the Corporation of Massachusetts Bay; and even the valued charter was revoked.

Mr. Winslow, one of the first Governors of Plymouth, visited England, and petitioned the Council to check some grievances which were felt to be injurious by the colonists. The Archbishop forthwith interfered, denounced Winslow as a separatist, had him clapped in durance in the Fleet; and fortunate it was for him that the Archbishop's hands were too full of more pressing work to allow him to attend to the "scandalous license" of the colonists, otherwise his escape would have been less easy than with only seventeen weeks' imprisonment.

But the miseries of England were the life of the colony. While the long death-struggle of despotism was tugging at the vitals of the mother country, and her liberty trembled in the balance, the colonies were slowly acquiring the needful strength and consistency that enabled them to cope successfully with the agents of restored despotism. With these early annals of New England we need not intermeddle. They belong to the history of the colony, and of the great nation into which it is now incorporated; they belong also to the history of the nation from whence they sprung; but they form no portion of the legitimate annals of the Pilgrim Fathers.

' The Pilgrim Fathers are at rest;
When summer's throned on high,
And the world's warm breast is in verdure dressed,
Go, stand on the hill where they lie.
The earliest ray of the golden day
On that hallowed spot is cast;
And the evening sun, as he leaves the world,
Looks kindly on that spot last.

" The Pilgrim spirit has not fled;
It walks in noon's broad light
And it watches the bed of the glorious dead,
With the holy stars by night.
It watches the bed of the brave who have bled,
And shall guard this ice-bound shore,
Till the waves of the Bay where the Mayflower lay Shall foam and freeze no more."

We run little risk of over-estimating the influence of the Pilgrim Fathers on the history not only of their direct descendants, but of the whole Saxon race who now fill the vast continent from the river St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico. The memory of the Pilgrims of Plymouth is ever present, as an example or as a warning, calling on the American citizen to emulate the noble self-denial of his ancestry, and to imitate their simple piety and trust in God. The narrow-minded and cold-hearted utilitarian sneers at the enthusiast who thus looks behind him for encouragement and guidance in the onward race. But he who has discerned the spirit of man aright knows how powerful are the invisible links that unite him with the past.

The names of Bruce and Tell, of Hampden, Hoffer, Kosciuszko—the names of the fathers of liberty in every land—stir the heart like the sound of a trumpet, and bid the soul of man aspire to his great birthright of freedom. Let, then, those nations bless God who have given them such an ancestry; for there are some who, looking down the far vista of the past, discern no such leaders. It was not Napoleon who taught France that glory was a better prize than liberty. He only caught up the echoes of older voices, and summoned the nation to follow in the steps of her historic leaders. Napoleon was the fit Washington of France. It is still pride enough for her to be identified with his questionable glory.

When we look upon such gauges of the great tides of history, we may well regard with interest the spirit of veneration with which the American citizen treasures the homeliest relic of his Pilgrim sires. It is a hero-worship unallied to superstition. It was when the revolutionary conflict with the mother country was at its crisis that the citizens of Plymouth recalled the worth of their old Memorial Rock, on which a few poor and despised exiles had landed wellnigh two centuries before, and rescued it from the encroaching wharfage of the busy seaport. Again, in 1834, it was inaugurated with renewed ceremonial, and dedicated once more to the memory of the founders of New England liberty.

Nor does republican enthusiasm pause even here. The grave divine who has undertaken to illustrate the history of the "Plymouth Pilgrims" suggests that other duties still remain ere the men of New England shall learn to celebrate with fitting honors the landing of these conquerors of the wilderness. America must take a leaf from the page of old Europe's most eloquent ceremonial. Like Venice, "she must espouse the everlasting sea," in memory of those who triumphed amid its dangers, and bridged the Atlantic with a highway for the exiles of the Old World.

"The people of Plymouth," says Dr. Cheever, "will not have done their duty to the original Rock, till they make a little park around it, down to the water's edge, where annually there might be a pleasant ceremony of landing from the sea, as solemn and magnificent as that of dropping a ring into the Adriatic at Venice, and much more glorious in its meaning. The Rock now in front of the hall, with the inscribed names in black around it, might be apt to suggest to the mind the idea of a coffin or monumental urn, with the pall-bearers."

It looks too hearse-like for a pleasant impression, such as one would wish to have before that relic, which is the emblem of life, not death, for New England.

Whatever be the ceremonial, it should indeed be pleasant, though grave and earnest, as the deeds that it commemorates. America will do better, however, to trust to her own nationalities than to borrow her triumphant celebrations from such symbols of mediæval fancy, rich as they are in old poetic feeling. She has her green forests, and her Beacon Hill; her broad encircled bay, with its winding shallows, and the memory of the little Mayflower still present there, with its bent yards and tattered sails. She has her old flag, which replaced the older standard of England, with its red cross of St. George, that roused the ire of the stern Endicott, as a badge and relic of Antichrist! She has her old seal too, still bearing the cross which once excited such strife and commotion in her early council, now quatering the armorial shield of Plymouth quaintly charged with four pilgrims at prayer.

America needs no Old-World fancies to prompt her celebrations, while she keeps alive for other generations the memory of these Fathers of a generation. Yet it is well that she should not, in her high republican pride, despise the pomps of old nations as antiquated and childish. Human nature is ever the same; and the noblest spirits feel the least condescension when they stoop to share in the pastimes of a nation's holy-days; for they know that beneath the rind and husk of such fantasies are hidden deeper things, kernels that germinate and produce worthy fruit in other times. The genial heart may well share in the rejoicings of such a festive commemorating the advent of liberty amid so clouded a dawn.

Scattered among the chief cities of the Northern States, there are still preserved with loving veneration a few precious relics of the Fathers of the New World. The Massachusetts Historical Society possesses the swords of Carver and Brewster. The Pilgrim Society of Plymouth preserves that of Miles Standish. At Boston, the lineal descendant of Governor Winslow retains the portrait of his ancestor, as well as that of his son Isaac, who succeeded to the like honors, and those of other members of his distinguished father's race. An engraving of the portrait of Edward Winslow forms the frontispiece to Young's Chronicles of the Pilgrims, and shows the fine, dignified, manly chief to whom Cromwell confided the superintendence of the expedition against the West Indies, in 1655, from which he did not return.

Among the same priceless family relics, is included the Bible of Governor Winslow, with the old family register, avouching the noble pedigree of its present owner. His arm-chair too, a plain but substantial old oaken seat, still remains as a coveted memento of the New England forefather. Young appropriately introduces it as a vignette to the close of Bradford and Winslow's journal. In like manner he has preserved the form of Elder Brewster's and Governor Carver's chairs; the latter a plain rush-bottomed chair, worthy in its simplicity to be the throne and judgment-seat of the first presidents of Plymouth colony.

Such are the few and simple relics which command the devout reverence of a great nation. Trifles are they, truly, when estimated by their mere intrinsic worth, but such as America might well refuse to exchange for the gold which Spanish galleons bore back to Europe as the spoils of the New World. Nor are these the sole memorials of the Pilgrim Fathers. Their monument is the nation that owns the little spot whereon they reared their wild home. Its free institutions, its generous and philanthropic deeds, its missionary labors, its ardent spirit of daring, its indomitable courage, its unquenchable love of liberty, all these are the memorials of the Pilgrims; nor are they all that shall be.

America has yet higher achievements and nobler victories before her. Other memorials shall be reared in America to the fathers of her liberty; and when freedom has had her perfect triumph, for fathers Day will be celebrated with rites worthy its old memories. But England also claims a share in these old memories; and an interest in the power with which their lessons are so pregnant. She too has triumphs to achieve ere the festival of liberty can be fitly celebrated. Slowly and with sore difficulty each step is won. But her progress, too, onward. The golden age is before her, her warring only behind. May the two nations learn to emulate each other only in such generous triumph while they cherish the feelings that ought to unite mate races in whose veins are circulating the same old Saxon blood.

THE END.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for March:

The Saints' Coronation Day—March 5, 1896.
The Wonderful Birthday of 144,000 Translated Ones—March 5, 1896. By Rev. M. Baxter.
The Coming Woe. By Rev. W. Christmas.
The Millennium. By Rev. W. Wood, A. M.
The Days of Noah and the Lord's Second Coming.
The Stone Cut Out Without Hands.
The Second Coming of Christ. By Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
The Great Pyramid and Its Symbolism.
Curious Psychical Experience of Professor Stowe.
Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

THE WAY OF PEACE.

Hast thou many burdens borne?
Griefs and pains thy heart have torn?
Dost thou roam on earth forlorn?
Tell it all to Jesus.

Hast thou told to Him thy woes?
Sought His aid 'gainst all thy foes?
Trust in Him, whate'er oppose;
Leave it all with Jesus.

Why wilt thou thy burdens bear?
Why be filled with anxious care?
Thou may'st every sorrow spare;
Rest thyself in Jesus.

"Come to Me, and thou shalt rest;
Lean thy head upon My breast;
Never be with grief oppress"—
'Tis the voice of Jesus.

All things we in Him receive;
May we fully to Him cleave;
Never waver, but believe:
Always rest in Jesus.

So His joy will fill our heart;
Perfect peace He will impart;
Ne'er from Him shall we depart:
We shall dwell in Jesus.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

In Lowell, Mass., where Hood's Sarsaparilla is made, there is more of this medicine sold than of all other blood purifiers. This is certainly a valuable home endorsement.

MARY WASHINGTON ROSE.

This beautiful Rose which was raised and named by Geo. Washington and has since been growing at Mt. Vernon, and described in Mt. Vernon Guide Book, page 54, is now first offered to the public by one of our enterprising Florists, John Louis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., whose advertisement appears in this paper. It is only one of the many charming Novelties he is introducing this year, and his Catalogue, one of the most beautiful and complete ever issued, should be in the hands of every lover of Beautiful Flowers, Choice Vegetables or Rare Fruits.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.

Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all.

We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We GUARANTEE the

CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faile Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us your name with correct post-office address on a postal card and we will forward you WITHOUT CHARGE Samples of all our Styles, Prices, etc.

WITH EVERY DRESS PATTERN (of 18 yards) we present—with 1000 YARDS Sewing Silk and Braid to hem bottom of dress—FREE

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn. Address at once, O. S. CHAFFEE & SON, MANSFIELD CENTRE, CONN.

METAL CEILINGS.

BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores, and Residences. ARTISTIC

H. S. NORTROP, 18 Rose Street, New York.

A SEEDLING ROSE raised by George Washington over a hundred years ago, and named after his mother. It can yet be seen growing at his old home, Mt. Vernon, and the Mt. Vernon Guide-book tells all about it. It is now first offered to the public, and, aside from the fact that it was raised and named by our first President, it is the most valuable rose in cultivation to-day, and the only HARDY PERPETUAL BLOOMING CLIMBER. It is a rapid grower, and commences to bloom early in Spring and continues in the greatest profusion until frost. The flowers are pure snow-white, perfectly double to the center, and of unsurpassed fragrance, being tinged with the musky fragrance so much admired in olden times. Its buds are as beautiful as the finest tea roses, long and pointed, on long stems, and often in large clusters. One plant will produce more bloom than a score of tea roses, and they can be cut in abundance every day during Summer and Fall. It is perfectly hardy, and will, in a short time, form a complete arch over a door, window, gate or arbor, and always full of bloom. It is unlike any other rose, and the greatest novelty of the age. Strong plants by mail, post-paid, guaranteed to arrive in good order, 50 cents each; 5 for $2.50. Also the beautiful Manetia Vine, 40 cents each; and the Wonderous Weather Plant, 25 cents. Both previously advertised; or for 80 cents we will send Rose, Manetia and Weather Plant.

SEEDS, BULBS, PLANTS, Extra Choice, by Mail, post-paid.

12 Extra-choice mixed Gladioli, flowering bulbs 25c
6 New Double Pearl Tuberoses, " 25c
6 Rare Chrysanthemums, 5 sorts, named, " 50c
5 Grand Lilies, 6 sorts, named, including Auratum 50c
5 " Cacti, different sorts, named, " 50c
4 Beautiful Flowering Hardy Shrubs, " 50c

Our Introduction Collection, 25 Flowering Bulbs, and 10 packets Choice Seed, all extra-fine sorts, for only 50c.

OUR CATALOGUE of Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and Rare Fruits is the most magnificent ever issued. 116 pages profusely illustrated, and four large colored plates and colored covers. We offer the finest novelties in Flowers, Vegetables and Fruits, notably: our great Japanese Wineberry, Jewel Dahlia, Fruit Tomatoes, Cycas, Hardy Orange, Tree Currant, Rosebud Peonies, etc. Also the greatest collection of flowering Shrubs and rare Cacti. This elegant Catalogue will be sent FREE to those who order any of the articles here offered, or for only 10 cents we will send Catalogue and a packet of Seed each of the MARBLE-LEAFED NIGHT-BLOOMING CACTUS, and the MAMMOTH FLOWERING CACTUS, a lovely plant which is easily grown in the garden, and each evening produces several enormous white or yellow blossoms, larger than a cup and of fascinating beauty and fragrance. Write at once, as none of these offers will appear again. Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, Queens Co., N. Y.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WANTED Agents in every town and city to sell

"The Christian's Legacy" One young man started on the 13th of December and ordered 29 copies before the 31st of December. 102 copies sold in one church. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address on a postal for free sample copy of Phenological Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "That Boy or Girl, and What to do with Him." Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 71 Broadway, N. Y.

LOVELY WOMAN!

HOW CAN YOU TOLERATE Freckles, Pimples, Yellow or Muddy Skin, Moth, Wrinkles, Red Nose, or any other form of facial disfigurements when, by using Dr. Ammett's French Arsenic Complexion Wafers, you can possess a beautiful form, brilliant eyes, and lovely complexion. Perfectly harmless, and the only positive beautifier of the skin and form. $1.00 per box by mail to any address. Fulton Mfg. Co., 18 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

25¢ PRINTING OUTFIT.

A WHOLE PRINTING OUTFIT, COMPLETE AND PRACTICAL, Just as shown in cut. 3 Alphabets of best Type, Bottle of Indelible Ink, Pad, Tissues, in neat case with catalogue and directions. "HOW TO BE A PRINTER." Set up any name, print cards, paper, envelopes, etc., marks linen. Worth 50c. The best gift for young people. Postpaid only 25c, 3 for 60c, 6 for $1. Agents wanted. Ingersoll & Bro., 66 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

HENRY L. REDFIELD,

INSURANCE,

100 Broadway, New York.

WEIGHTS AND WINGS. By CHAS. F. DEEMS.

D.D. Introduction by Bishop John F. Hurst, D.D. Elegantly illustrated. Agents wanted everywhere. Distance no hindrance. Liberal terms. Send for circulars. Full particulars on application. WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Pub., 13 Cooper Union, N. Y.

Our New Salesroom

In our basement on the Broadway side, in the store formerly occupied the Methodist Book Concern, we have fitted up a new, commodious, well-pointed salesroom. It was opened a week and has been even more successful than we had hoped, greatly increasing our facilities for accommodating customers.

We invite attention to the peculiar advantages in price and quality goods which will always be afforded this department; it may be reached from either floor of the old store directly through the upper entrance on Broadway.

We are now selling there large lots of Silks, Dress Goods, and Cloths, thoroughly reliable make, at low prices than we have ever quoted before.

We invite a visit of inspection to this new department; we are sure it will be followed by a second.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St., NEW YORK.

SPURGEON, MOODY

And others recommend CRUDEN as the best Bible help.

Cruden's Complete Concordance TO THE Old and New Testaments and the Apocrypha.

Edited by William Youngman.

* We have just issued the best and cheapest edition in the world of Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Bible, type new and readable; containing the Apocrypha, alphabetical list of the proper names in the Old and New Testaments, with their meaning or signification in their original languages, a concordance to the proper names, a summary of contents of the Holy Bible, and also a complete summary of the contents of all the chapters of the New Testament. More references and more supplementary matter of great value than any popular concordance. In royal 8vo, cloth, Price, $1.50.

Special Offer for a Short Time.

The postage alone on this book costs 25 cents, on receipt of $1.25 we will mail you a copy post free, if you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Frederick Warne & Company 3 Cooper Union, 4th Ave., New York City

A LITERARY MARVE

$2.50 PER VOLUME.

We publish a popular reprint of the ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, from latest English edition, $2.50 per volume, being one-third the price of original, and half that of the Scribner edition of same work. We have reproduced all illustrations and text, volume for volume. Complete of 24 volumes now ready for delivery on EASY PAYMENTS. The greatest work of the kind in the English language. A subscriber writes: "The best now the cheapest." All high-priced editions are in office for comparison. Circulars and sample mailed. Sold only by subscription.

THE HENRY G. ALLEN CO., 736 and 741 Broadway, New York

PIANOS UNIVERSIT

$150 to $1500 ESTAB. 1859. INCOR.

PRICE They Lead the World

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT

Sold Direct to families. No Middlemen. DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!

Cat. Free. MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO. 235 E. 21st St., N.Y. $35 to $50

ORGAN

Send 2c. stamp postage. Easter Music Free The Echo Music Co. LaFayette, Ind.

SHORTHAND Private instruction by practical batim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 13. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PICTURES OF SCENES IN INDIA ON THE RECEPTION OF PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR.
GEOLOGY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning.
CHRIST'S LAW OF LOVE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
28 from New Books: Mr. O. H. Spurgeon's Proverbs.

PROPHETIC INTERVALS. By Rev. G. A. Redles.
A Difficulty of Conscience—The Ordeal by Sas Wood—Protestant Work Among Lepers—How a Shipwrecked Crew were Saved—A Daughter's Trials in India—A Chinese Bride's Struggle, Etc.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGEL-ISTIC MEETINGS.

THE BELIEVER'S DRESS. A New Sermon by Rev.
O. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAITS OF THE LATE MR. LINCOLN, GEN.
CROOK, AND GEN. CAPRIVI.
ALICE TRAVERS' ENEMY. (With Illustration.)
WILL IT LIFT? The Story of a Fog. By Rev.
Jackson Wray.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR—SCENES AT HIS RECEPTION IN INDIA.

THE ROYAL TOUR IN INDIA.

ONE of the most significant events of this year is the extraordinarily effusive reception which has been given in India to the young man who, in the natural course of events, will one day be King of England. The fact that a people differing so radically in customs, temper, and religion from the nation which rules them should make so much rejoicing, and should give so ostentatious a demonstration of loyalty speaks volumes for the tact of the rulers and the wisdom of their policy. The past quarter of a century has witnessed a decided improvement in both qualities. There has been more moderation displayed by the English in India since the Mutiny of 1857, a greater deference to the prejudices and wishes of the native people, and a more genuine concern for their welfare. Natives have been advanced to positions of trust, and they have proved exceedingly valuable, not only in inspiring confidence in their own people, but by giving information to the British representatives in India which has saved them from ignorantly outraging cherished sensibilities. The native races have not been slow to recognize this change for the better, and a more friendly feeling has sprung up between them and their rulers, of which the demonstrations of loyalty that the Prince meets with wherever he goes is an evidence.

The spectacle of these Orientals doing honor to the representative of British royalty is worthy of consideration by every Christian, of whatever nationality, because it is a testimony not so much to the greatness of the English nation as to the power of Christian principles, and the greatness of the kingdom of Christ in this world. With all her faults and failings, England stands out pre-eminently among European nations as the one distinguished by an open Bible, and the prevalence of vital religion, and in that fact must be recognized the key to its extraordinary power. The monarch of the little islands can boast that she reigns over a territory of ten million square miles, nearly three times the size of the whole of Europe, and over 350,000,000 of people. There must be some reason for so remarkable a fact, and it is to be found not in the wealth, nor in the military strength of the nation, but in the over-ruling providence of God in giving power and rule to a nation which trusts in Him, and is most active in promulgating the principles of His Book. (Prov. 14 : 34.)

Prince Albert Victor,

whose portrait appears on the first page, was born on January 8, 1864, and is therefore now twenty-six years of age. On March 10 the infant Prince was christened in the private chapel at Buckingham Palace, and received the names of Albert Victor Christian Edward. Having received a careful elementary training under parental supervision, the navy was chosen as Prince Albert Victor's school, and that of his brother George Frederick, who is eighteen months his junior. On board ship it was thought that they would be brought under better discipline than was possible among the adulations of a court, and would run less risk of being spoiled by flatteries. They were therefore entered as naval cadets on board the Britannia training-ship for a two years' course of instruction. Here the young students devoted themselves diligently to their work, rendering to each branch of discipline prompt and cheerful obedience. Their studies embraced Algebra, Euclid, Trigonometry, Natural Philosophy, Latin, French, Drawing, Essay Writing, Navigation, Nautical Astronomy, the uses of Instruments and Charts, and Seamanship. The proficiency they evidenced upon an examination, which was in all details the same as that of other cadets, proved that they had really worked at their studies. They were then transferred to the Bacchante, on which they continued the studies of their profession.

The Bacchante was commissioned on July 15, 1879, and the Princes' names were entered on August 4, and they joined the ship on September 17, the same year. She shortly afterward calling at Palermo, Messina, Malta, Gibraltar, Madeira, and the West Indies. Upon the return home of the Princes in 1879, the Prince and Princess of Wales were so pleased with the instruction their sons had received that it was decided to continue the treatment, and as soon as the Bacchante's defects were made good she proceeded on a cruise to Australia and China with the Princes on board, and after an absence of seven months, the Bacchante again arrived in England. Prince Albert Victor was then sent to complete his studies at Trinity College, Cambridge. After his graduation he remained for some time at home, taking part in the ceremonies which form the chief function of royal personages, now that the real governing power in England has passed from the hands of the monarch to Parliament. Last year it was decided to send the young man on a more extended tour, so that if in the Providence of God he is called to reign over the vast Empire of Great Britain, he may know something by personal experience of the lands and peoples which acknowledge his government.

Set Sail for a Protracted Tour,

The Prince left London on board the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Oceana on October 19, and reached Bombay early on the morning of November 9. The Hindoos attach an almost superstitious importance to the arrival of a royal personage. An amusing instance of this occurred when the Prince landed from the steam launch Bee at the Apollo Bunder. A group of Hindoos prayed devoutly that as he landed he might first place his right foot on the step, as then peace and plenty would prevail wherever he went. Fortunately the Prince put forward the desired right foot, and was thereupon lustily cheered by the Hindoos. The young Prince was welcomed by his uncle, the Duke of Connaught, and Lord Reay, the Governor, and, after he had replied to the municipal address of welcome, which was presented to him on landing, proceeded to the Secretariat. The Prince drove in a carriage-and-four, escorted by a detachment of the Bombay Light Horse and by four of the Governor's body-guard. On the route by dense crowds of people of all colors and castes, who had assembled on the footpath, as well as by numbers of European ladies and gentlemen, who surveyed the spectacle from the windows of various establishments. He then went by special train to Poonah. There he "assisted" at a grand military parade, a State ball, and a torchlight tattoo. The military parade took place on November 12, at 8 A. M., and long before that hour the ground was densely crowded, a space being roped off for privileged spectators.

He was Enthusiastically Cheered

From Poonah the Prince went to Hyderabad, Madras, and Seringapatam. It was thought well that the Prince should not confine his travels exclusively to British India, but that he should also visit the Indian Native States, of which Hyderabad, in the Deccan, is the most important, ruled by Princes who are the allies of the British Empire.

The Visit to Hyderabad

furnishes the occasion and the material of the various pictorial items which constitute the front-page engraving. No. 1 shows the Hall of the Chow Mahal Palace; No. 2—An Arch of Triumph near St. George's Church; No. 3—Waiting the Arrival of the Prince at the Railway Station; and No. 4—An Officer of the Nizam's Guard. Hyderabad, with territories extending about 475 miles from east to west and north to south, is in the middle of Peninsular India, between the Bombay and Madras Presidencies, and is bounded to the northeast by the Godavery, to the south by the Krishna River. It has a population of ten millions, exclusive of Berar, who are ruled by the Nizam, their hereditary Mohammedan Prince, with able and enlightened Ministers. The Nizam, retaining the internal administration of government, which has during the past thirty years been effectually reformed, yields all foreign policy to the control of the British Empire, and has voluntarily made a noble contribution to its military defences.

Prince Albert Victor arrived at Hyderabad by railway from Poonah, in the Bombay Presidency, on November 16, using the Nizam's superb suite of railway carriages, sent to Poonah for his accommodation. His Royal Highness was met at the Hyderabad railway station by the Nizam, with his Ministers of State and chief officials, as seen in No. 3 frontispiece picture, and was escorted to the Bashiri-Bagh, a house belonging to Sir Asman Jah, the Nizam's Prime Minister, which had been fitted up and furnished for the Prince. The Nizam, with the highest nobles and official personages of Hyderabad, here called on his Royal Highness, who returned their visits in the afternoon. There was a ceremonial reception at the Chow Mahal Palace, also shown in No. 1 engraving on our front page, and a Durbar was held in another grand hall, which is adorned with a fine life-size portrait of Queen Victoria. At night there was a reception at the British Residency, to which all the Europeans in Hyderabad were invited. Next day Prince Albert

Victor went to see antelope-hunting with tam cheetahs; he was entertained with a grand breakfast at the Minister's city palace, and went out shooting in the forenoon. In the evening the Nizam gave in honor of the Prince to about 300 guests. The third day, being Sunday, was kept as at home; but his Royal Highness dined with the officers of the 7th Hussars in the British military cantonments at Secunderabad, which he left by train for Madras about midnight. The city of Hyderabad was splendidly illuminated at night. Prince Albert Victor, after visiting Trichinopoly, in the south, returned on December 12 to Madras. The city was brilliantly illuminated, and a native fête held at night amid much enthusiasm. He then left Madras for Rangoon, Burmah. Early in January he arrived

A Magnificent Banquet

At Calcutta.

Long before that city was reached signs of welcome began to manifest themselves, crowds of people assembling from the villages on both banks, while shipping in the port and in the river was gayly decorated. About 4 o'clock the Kristna anchored opposite Prinsep's Ghaut, and was immediately boarded by a deputation from the Viceroy. Here the scene was very striking. A dais and blocks of seats had been erected on the ghaut for the accommodation of high officials, native nobles, and other spectators. Every seat was occupied, and the applications for tickets were about twice as great as the number of seats. The chiefs, dressed in gala attire and the civil and military officers, in their various uniforms, made a brilliant show. About half-past 4 o'clock the Prince landed under a royal salute and was received at the steps by the Viceroy and the Lieutenant-Governor. Native nobles, representing the leading families of the province, were then presented in order of precedence, after which a deputation from the municipal corporation read an address.

His Royal Highness, in reply, said that ever since his arrival in India he had been immensely struck by the intense feelings of affection and devotion to the Throne and the person of the Queen-Empreress animating all classes, and by the splendid manner in which he had been received everywhere. His journey so far had been one of continual pleasure, wonder, and instruction, and nowhere was there more the case than in Upper Burmah, from which he had just returned. He was now looking forward with equal interest to his tour in North India. He would carry away a lively interest in the Queen's Indian subjects, and, as he knew the case with his father, these sentiments would ever find the foremost place in his heart. In conclusion, he thanked them for their cordial welcome, adding that since the steamer dropped anchor he had received no fewer than 116 messages of welcome from communities, municipalities, and associations of Bengal, Behar, Orissa, and Assam, the value of which he was deeply sensible.

A Characteristic Entertainment

was given to the Prince during his stay. This was the Kattaki sword-dance. A company of Sepoys belonging to the Kattaki tribe—a wild tribe on the Afghan border—arranged themselves in a circle around a blazing bonfire. They were dressed in long flowing white robes, and each man carried a naked sword. They began with a slow, stately movement around the fire, keeping accurate time to music strangely like that of the Highland pipes. Gradually the music became faster, till at last the living ring whirled around the fire apparently in a state of mad excitement, waving their swords in dangerous proximity to one another's heads.

The Prince is still continuing his travels in India, and will, it may be hoped, receive such impressions as may lead to his becoming a wise and enlightened man, fit for his exalted station.

HOW A SHIPWRECKED CREW WERE SAVED

THE following incident is related by Dr. A. Gordon in his Watchword, as an illustration of the way in which God provides for the relief of children in a time of peril:

One dark, stormy night a vessel was wrecked on a rocky island off the coast of Scotland. The crew had watched with terror the white waves as they dashed on the stately cliffs, and felt that to be dashed on these rocks was to seal their doom. The cabin was filled with water, and the captain's vessel was drowned. The sailors climbed into the rigging and prayed, as they never had before, that God would have compassion on them. That He would them from temporal death seemed almost in-ble. But the cruel waves drove the vessel on ed, till the very foot of the awful cliff was

ed. Oh! if they could only reach its top, there be safety, and, no doubt, friendly hands to them. Just as they struck the rock, they es-on the face of the cliff a ladder. Here was despair changed to joy. They sprang from ladders, and climbed the ropes as rapidly as benumbed fingers would permit; but they were scued, and in a few minutes more the vessel to pieces.

at ladder seemed to them almost a miracle, yet essence there was easily explained. It was used e quarrymen as they climbed up and down to work every day. Though usually drawn up they left, the suddenness of the storm that had caused the workmen to hurry to the sheltheir humble homes without taking time to ve the ladder. It was God who had ordered seemingly trifling matter for the preservation eir lives.

me writer has well said, However long the of second causes may be, the first link is al-in God's hand.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Dr. Spurgeon's Proverbs and Quaint Sayings.*

ver stint soap and water. The soap makers to judge by their advertisements, to be doing ving business; but we still know a few people need to patronize them. We do not admire ees, but we should like to see some persons ne Pharisees in one respect, namely in their tion to eat with unwashed hands.

ver trust a wolf with the care of lambs. And of all if he offers to do it for nothing. He ake it out in lamb.

ver shirk the hardest work. Some do so habit-
If they can live on others, they will not do a s turn. The age of chivalry is over, but the f loafers lasts for ever. Let us be of another

Two colored men were loading goods into a
One of them was disposed to shirk; the other ed, and looking sharply at the lazy one said, a, do you expect to go to heaven?" "Yes."
in take hold and lift."

ture, no pay. A fair principle, but it might ried further with advantage. King Long, ror of China, inquired of Sir G. Staunton the er in which physicians were paid in Western

When his Majesty was made to comprehend istom of paying physicians for the time the ists were sick, he exclaimed: "Is any man in nd well who can afford to be ill? Now, I will a you how I manage my physicians. I have o whom the care of my health is committed;
tain weekly salary is allowed them; but the nt I am ill the salary stops till I am well

My illnesses are always short."
ke not another's shoes by your own foot. For which suits you very well may be quite unsuit-o another person. Every foot needs a last of
n. Allow latitude of thought and manner the bounds of truth and holiness. Avoid se shoes for yourself and others.

be the best of a bad bargain. Say as little as in about it, or you will be injuring your own tion for good judgment. If you have entered marriage and find yourself mistaken, bear and ur. In all trying cases among a trying people,

"I'll not willingly offend,
Nor be easily offended;
What's amiss I'll strive to mend,
And endure what can't be mended."

ny a child is hungry because the brewer is rich.
should have been spent in bread and butter
e in malt and hops. A little fellow was asked dy, "Why do you not come for cold victuals ore?" and replied, "Because father's signed edge, and we get hot victuals at home."

riage for love is risky, but it's right. Without marriage is wicked. But love must not be or mad. True love will not drag its object opeless poverty. Where love reigns supreme, arried life will be joyful, whether in wealth or erty; yet love is apt to fly out of the window the wolf of want comes in at the door.

rry in a hurry and live in a worry. Marriage um The Salt-Cellars, a collection of proverbs with homely hereon by C. H. Spurgeon. The extracts here given, taken almost at random from its pages, show how full of wisdom and sanctified common sense this book is. Pp.

ice $1.50; published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, Broad-ew York.

is harness for a pair, and it should be adjusted with care, blinkers and kicking-straps included, wherever they are required. The harness should be put on with due deliberation. Take time to do that which time cannot undo.

Mind how you feed, especially when you feed the mind. For as the silk worm is colored by the leaf it feeds on, so do men take the hue of their reading. As we would not eat carrion, let us not read garbage. Thackeray once said to a visitor: "I read very few novels. I am a pastry cook. I bake tarts and sell them. I do not eat them myself; I eat bread and butter."

Money has no blood relations. There is no friendship in business. Sad that this should be a proverb in any land, but so it is. The Chinese say:
"Though brothers are closely akin, it is each for himself in money matters." They also say: "Top and bottom teeth sometimes come into awkward collision." So little power has relationship in the savage customs of business, that, in some instances, one hand would skin the other if it could make a profit by it.

Never comb a bald head. Don't criticise where there is nothing to work upon. Treat a poor helpless man with tenderness. If a man has no religion don't dispute with him about doctrines.
When you meet with a person who has no money,
don't ask him for a contribution.

Never hold a candle to the devil. Do not aid him in his work, nor pay deference to the powers of evil. To hold a candle to the devil is to abet an evil-doer out of fawning fear. The allusion is to the story of an old woman, who set one candle before the image of St. Michael, and another before the devil, whom he was trampling under foot. Being reproved for paying such honor to Satan, she naively replied, "Ye see, yer honor, its quite uncertain which place I shall go to at last, and, sure, you'll not blame a poor woman for securing a friend in each." This policy is the sure way to ruin.

A DIFFICULTY OF CONSCIENCE.

IN a recent sermon to young men on the question of Amaziah (II Chron. 25:9), as to what should be done about the hundred talents which he had given to the army of Israel, Dr. Thain Davidson related an incident of the same kind of difficulty which had come under his own observation. He said: "A man never suffers in the long-run from obeying conscience and listening to the call of duty. Believe me, fidelity to principle is an article of high commercial value. Let a youth be scrupulously truthful, straightforward and honorable, he will not be without his reward, even in this world. Any loss he may at present encounter will be made up to him by and by.

"I met with a striking illustration of this some time ago. A man came to see me about a difficulty of conscience. Closeted with me in my study, he made a clean breast of his trouble. He was engaged in a trade—and in a particular branch of it—which his conscience could not approve of. He said, 'I am making a capital living; but at the expense of all peace of mind. I feel I cannot ask God's blessing on my daily employ, and therefore I cannot pray at all.' With tears, he told me his soul was wretched. 'But what am I to do? If I give it up, what about my wife and children? I see only beggary staring me in the face.' His difficulty was just Amaziah's, only far more serious.

"The Lord is able, I said, 'to give you much more than this.' Oh, what a struggle there was within his breast! He left my house in deepest distress of mind; and I prayed that the Lord would open up his way. A few days after, I met him in Cheapside, his face beaming with joy. He had sacrificed the hundred talents; had thrown up his situation; and already, in a remarkable manner, God had provided for him another opening, in which, with a clear conscience, he could earn a living.

"But, even though compensation does not come in the form of worldly substance, the path of duty is no less plain; and the compensation will come in other forms."

THE ORDEAL BY SAS WOOD.

IN a letter to the African News the Rev. B. F.
Kephart, one of Bishop Taylor's missionaries in Africa, describes the efforts he and his brethren are making to abolish the barbarous customs of the people. One of these, which they cling to most tenaciously, is that of administering the poison of sas wood to any person suspected of bewitching any one. The native doctor is the authority on the subject, and whoever he indicates as the person guilty of practicing witchcraft is compelled to swallow the deadly potion. Mr. Kephart says:

"We thought the sas wood custom had passed,
but Satan was not going to yield without a struggle.
Sabbath morning last a little boy died; the family went to the devil-doctor, according to custom. The devil-doctor said the devil told him one man and two women witched the child. Devil-doctor selected them, and they were rushed through by six o'clock Monday morning. They had received the sas wood before we had time to reach town, the mission-house being one mile away. We could do nothing but look on a fearful sight. These three innocent victims, one old man and two old women, in the agonies of sas wood, driven over the town with a soldier armed with a great club, crying out: 'You bad man; 'You bad women; 'You kill everybody.' Each victim was followed by a relative disputing the soldier, saying: 'They are not bad;
they did not kill anybody.' The sas wood is professedly a test of their innocence or guilt. If they vomit up the poison, then they are innocent.

"We could do nothing but wait results, so we hastened to our chapel and called the church together around the altar and poured out our hearts to God. Let me say, to the praise of His name, our prayers were answered. By 3 P. M. all three of the victims were safe. We went to the king and requested a sas wood palaver the next day, which he granted. Tuesday we met in front of the king's house. The king sent for the chiefs, and many of the people were present. We said: 'How foolish and wicked it is for you to listen to an old lying devil, and murder each other! Death is natural, and all must die when the appointed time from God comes. Here you have nearly killed three persons who were innocent, as your test proved. Though the devil had said they were guilty, your own test proved devil-doctor and devil both liars. Now, what do you say?' They answered: 'The devil and the doctor are deceiving us; we thank you for bringing the truth. There shall be no more sas wood.
It ends here.'"

PROTESTANT WORK AMONG LEPEERS.

THE visit of "Sister" Rose Gertrude to this country on her way to labor among the lepers of Molokai, where Father Damien lived and died, has revived public interest in his work. It would, however, be a mistake to suppose that only the Roman Catholic Church interests itself in this self-denying labor and furnishes instances of self-sacrifice. The Rev. F. D. Hahn, writing in the Indian Witness, says:

"In Molokai itself there are several Protestant native pastors, who have been long doing for the people all that Father Damien did; and in other countries similar instances of self-forgetting dedication to the cause of the lepers are by no means unknown. I could give the names of Protestant missionaries here in India who have nursed the leper, dressed his sores with their own hands, and carried his remains to the grave on their own shoulders. Happily for the sufferers, Father Da-mien's example is not quite 'unique.' There are Moravian missionaries living with and nursing the lepers in their asylum at Jerusalem. And away in Robbin Island there are missionaries of the Church of England similarly engaged. Only last October there appeared in an Indian journal a letter by the Rev. A. R. M. Welshe. Writing from Robbin Island under date August 19, he says he has been twelve years working as chaplain among the lepers there. He is now sixty-eight years of age, and has been apprehensive lest on account of his advanced years he should be superseded in his work. But rather than that, 'I am in hopes,' he adds, 'of ending my days here.' This is another illustrious example, only he has not yet attained to be 'a hero-martyr of the nineteenth century,' because in blessing others he has not disdained prudent care for himself. 'Honor to whom honor is due.' We gratefully affirm that there are many who, though all unknown to fame, do not fall one whit behind Father Damien in martyr-like consecration to the cause of the loathsome dying."

A society has now been organized which supports three leper asylums with 150 inmates, besides furnishing teachers and medical aid to fifteen other leper asylums. A stipulation is made that distinct religious teaching shall be imparted. Altogether, through the efforts of this society, about one thousand lepers have been placed under Christian training, and of these not less than three hundred have accepted the gospel and are living consistent lives.

ANGELOLOGY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, March 23, 1890.

"And the angel did wondrously." Judges 13:19.

Angel Portraiture in the Bible—The Two Angelic Nations—The Capital of the Good Nation—Guesses of the Philosophers—The Only Reliable Authority—Their Birth and Life—Their Intelligence—Their Power to go Through a Five-Foot Wall—The Only Problem too Profound for Them—Their Velocity—A Quintillion of Miles a Minute—Their Number—A Hundred Million in One Place—Their Officers—Their Services—Unappreciated Fidelity Recorded—A Special Angel for the Believer's Bodyguard—The Decisive Battle Coming.

Fire built on a rock. Manoah and his wife had there kindled the flames for sacrifice in praise of God, and in honor of a guest whom they supposed to be a man. But, as the flame rose higher and higher, their stranger guest stepped into the flame and by one red leap ascended into the skies. Then they knew that he was an Angel of the Lord. "The angel did wondrously."

Two hundred and forty-eight times does the Bible refer to the angels, yet I never heard or read a sermon on Angelology. The whole subject is relegated to the realm mythical, weird, spectral, and unknown. Such adjournment is unscriptural and wicked. Of their life, their character, their habits, their actions, their velocities, the Bible gives us full-length portraits, and why this prolonged and absolute silence concerning them? Angelology is my theme.

There are two nations of angels, and they are hostile to each other; the nation of good angels and the nation of bad angels. Of the former, I chiefly speak to-day. Their capital, their headquarters, their grand rendezvous, is heaven, but their empire is the universe. They are

A Distinct Race of Creatures.

No human being can ever join their confraternity. The little child who in the Sabbath-school sings, "I want to be an angel," will never have her wish gratified. They are superhuman; but they are of different grades and ranks, not all on the same level, or the same height. They have their superiors and inferiors and equals. I propose no guessing on this subject, but take the Bible for my only authority. Plato, the philosopher, guessed, and divided angels into super-celestial, celestial, and sub-celestial. Dionysius, the Areopagite, guessed, and divided them into three classes—the supreme, the middle, and the last—and each of these into three other classes, making nine in all. Philo said that the angels were related to God, as the rays to the sun. Fulgentius said that they were composed of body and spirit. Clement said they were incorporeal. Augustine said that they had been in danger of falling, but now are beyond being tempted. But the only authority on this subject that I respect says they are divided into Cherubim, Seraphim, Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, Powers. Their commander-in-chief is Michael. Daniel called him Michael. St. John called him Michael. These supernal beings are more thoroughly organized than any army that ever marched. They are swifter than any cyclone that ever swept the sea. They are more radiant than any morning that ever came down the sky. They have more to do with your destiny and mine than any being in the universe except God. May the Angel of the New Covenant, who is the Lord Jesus, open our eyes, and touch our tongue, and rouse our soul, while we speak of their deathlessness, their intelligence, their numbers, their strength, their achievements.

Their Endless Life.

Yes, deathless. They had a cradle, but will never have a grave. The Lord remembers when they were born, but no one shall ever see their eye extinguished, or their momentum slow up, or their existence terminate. The oldest of them has not a wrinkle, or a decrepitude, or a hindrance; as young after six thousand years as at the close of their first hour. Christ said of the good in heaven, "Neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels." Yes, deathless are these wonderful creatures of whom I speak. They will see world after world go out, but there shall be no fading of their own brilliance. Yea, after the last world has taken its last flight they will be ready for the widest circuit through immensity, taking a quadrillion of miles in one sweep as easy as a pigeon circles a dovecot. They are never sick. They are never exhausted. They need no sleep, for they are never tired. At God's command they smote with death, in one night, one hundred and eighty-five thousand of Sennacherib's host, but no fatality can smite them. Awake, agile, multipotent, deathless, immortal!

A further characteristic of these radiant folk is intelligence. The woman of Tekoah was right when she spoke to King David of

The Wisdom of an Angel.

We mortals take in what little we know through eye and ear and nostril and touch; but those beings have no physical encasement and hence they are all senses. A wall five feet thick is not solid to them. Through it they go without disturbing flake of mortar or crystal of sand. Knowledge! It flashes on them. They take it in at all points. They absorb it. They gather it up without any hindrance. No need of literature for them! The letters of their books are stars. The dashes of their books are meteors. The words of their books are constellations. The paragraphs of their books are galaxies. The pictures of their books are sunrises, and sunsets, and midnight auroras, and the Conqueror on the white horse with the moon under his feet, and seas of glass mingled with fire. Their library is an open universe. No need of telescope to see something millions of miles away, for instantly they are there to inspect and explore it. All astronomies, all geologies, all botanies, all philosophies at their feet. What an opportunity for intelligence is theirs! What facilities for knowing everything and knowing it right away!

There is only one thing that puts them to their wit's end, and the Bible says they have to study that. They have been studying it all through the ages, and yet I warrant they have not fully grasped it—the wonders of Redemption. These wonders are so high, so deep, so grand, so stupendous, so magnificent that even the intelligence of angelhood is confounded before it. The apostle says, "Which things the angels desire to look into." That is a subject that excites inquisitiveness on their part. That is to the utmost. That is higher than they can climb, deeper than they can dive. They have a desire for something too big for their comprehension. "Which things the angels desire to look into." But that does not discredit their intelligence. No one but God Himself can fully understand the wonders of Redemption. If all heaven should study it for fifty eternities they would get no further than the A B C of that inexhaustible subject. But nearly all other realms of knowledge they have ransacked and explored and compassed. No one but God can tell them anything they do not know. They have read to the last word of the last line of the last page of the last volume of investigation. And what delights me most is that all their intelligence is to be at our disposal, and, coming into their presence, they will tell us in five minutes more than we can learn by one hundred years of earthly surmising.

A Theme that Strains Their Faculties

A further characteristic of these immortals is their velocity. This the Bible puts sometimes under the figure of wings, sometimes under the figure of a flowing garment, sometimes under the figure of naked feet. As these superhumans are without bodies these expressions are of course figurative, and mean swiftness. The Bible tells us that Daniel was praying, and Gabriel flew from heaven and touched him before he got up from his knees. How far, then, did the angel Gabriel have to fly in those moments of Daniel's prayer? Heaven is thought to be the centre of the universe. Our sun and its planets only the rim of the wheel of worlds. In a moment the angel

Gabriel Flew from that Centre

to this periphery. Jesus told Peter He could instantly have sixty thousand angels present if He called for them. What foot of antelope or wing of albatross could equal that velocity? Law of gravitation, which grips all things else, has no influence upon angelic momentum. Immensities before them open and shut like a fan. That they are here is no reason why they should not be a quintillion of miles hence the next minute. Our bodies hinder us, but our minds can circle the earth in a minute. Angelic beings are bodiless and have no limitation. God may with His finger point down to some world in trouble on the outmost limits of creation, and instantly an angelic cohort are there to help it. Or some celestial may be standing at the furthestmost outpost of immensity, and God may say "Come!" and instantly it is in His bosom. Abraham, Elijah, Hagar, Joshua, Gideon, Manoah, Paul, St. John, could tell of their unhindered locomotion. The red feet of summer lightning are slow compared with their hegiras. This doubles-up and compresses infinitudes into infinitesimals. This puts all astronomical heavens into a space like the ball of a child's rattle. This mingles into one the Past and the Present, the Now and the Then, the Beyond and the Yonder.

Another remark I have to make concerning the illustrious immortals is that they are multitudinous. Their census has never been taken and no one God knows how many they are, but all the Bible accounts suggest their immense numbers. Companies of them, regiments of them, mountain-tops haloed by them, skies populous with them. John speaks of angels and other beings round the throne as ten thousand times ten thousand. Now, according to my calculation, ten thousand times ten thousand are one hundred million. But these are only the angels in one place. I counted twenty thousand of them rolling down the sky in chariots. When God came away from the river rocks of Mount Sinai, the Bible says He took the companionship of ten thousand angels. I think they are in every battle, in every exigency, at every birth, at every pillow, at every hour, at every moment. The earth full of them. The heavens full of them. They outnumber the human race in the world. They outnumber ransomed spirits in glory. When Abraham had his knife uplifted to slay Isaac it was an angel who arrested the stroke, crying, "Abraham! Abraham!" It was a

Armies of Them,

A Stairway of Angels

that Jacob saw while pillowed in the wilderness. We are told an angel led the hosts of Israel out of Egyptian servitude. It was an angel who showed Hagar the fountain where she filled the pail for the lad. It was an angel that took Lot out of doomed Sodom. It was an angel that shut the mouth of the hungry monsters when Daniel was thrown into the caverns. It was an angel that brought Elijah under the juniper tree. It was an angel who announced to Mary the approaching nativity. It was angels that chanted when Christ was crucified. It was an angel that strengthened our Saviour in His agony. It was an angel that encouraged the disciples in the Mediterranean shipwreck. It was an angel that burst open the prison, gate after gate, and Peter was liberated. It was an angel that stood by the Pool of Siloam where the sick were healed. It was an angel that John saw flying through the midst of heaven, and an angel with foot planted on the sea, and an angel that opened the book, and an angel that sounded the trumpet, and an angel thrust in the sickle, and an angel that poured out the vials, and an angel standing in the sun. I believe an angel with uplifted hand, swearing that the world shall be no longer. In the great final harvest of the world, the reapers are the angels. Yea, the living shall be revealed from heaven with mighty angels. Oh, the numbers and the might and the glory of these supernals! Fleets of them! Squadrons of them! Host beyond host! Rank above rank! Millions on millions! And all on our side if we have them.

The Duties of Angels.

This leads me to speak of the offices of the supernals. To defend, to cheer, to rescue, to execute, to give victory to the right, and overthrow the wrong; that is their business. Just as alert and efficient as when in Bible times they stood with wing, or unsheathed sword, or rocked down the mountains with horses, or filled the mountains with horses, or hatched to chariots of fire and driven by reins of fire. They have turned your steps a hundred times, and you knew it not. You were on the way to some wrong thing, and they changed your course. They brought some thought of Christian parentage, or of loyalty to your own home, and that arrested you. They arranged that some one should help you at that crisis, and propose something honorable and elevating, or they took from your pocket a ticket to evil amusement, a ticket that you had not found. It was an angel of God, and perhaps the very one that guided you to this service, and now waits to report some holy impression to the morning made upon your soul, tarrying with one foot upon the door-step of your immortal life, and the other foot lifted for ascent into the next world. By some prayer detain him until he can tell of your repentant and ransomed soul! Or you were sometime borne down with trouble, bereavement, affliction, bankruptcy, sickness, and all manner of troubles beating their discords in your hearing. You gave up; you said: "I cannot stand."

onger. I believe I will take my life. Where rail-train, or the deep wave, or the precipice will end this torment of earthly existence?" suddenly your mind brightened. Courage surging into your heart like oceanic tides. said: "God is on my side, and all these ad- es He can make turn out for my good." Sud- you felt a peace, a deep peace, the peace of hat passeth all understanding. What made ange? A sweet, and mighty, and comfort- igel of the Lord met you. That was all.

at an incentive to purity and righteousness is loctrine that we are continually under angelic ation! Eyes ever on you, so that the most misdeed is committed in the midst of an ice of immortals. No door so bolted, no ess so Cimmerian, as to hinder that supernal ht. Not critical eyesight, not jealous eye- not baleful eyesight, but thetic eyesight, helpful eyesight. Confiden- ark of store, with great responsibility on your ler, and no one to applaud your work when it well, and sick with the world's ingratitude, of the angels in the counting-room rap- at your fidelity! Mother of household, stitch- ending, cooking, dusting, planning, up half ight, or all night, with the sick child, day in ay out, year in and year out, worn with the tony of a life that no one seems to care for, of the angels in the nursery, angels in all the of your toiling, angels about the sick cradle, ll in sympathy!

Friendly Eyesight,

broad engineer, with hundreds of lives hang- i your wrist, standing amid the cinders and utch, round the sharp curve, and by appall- elivity, discharged and disgraced if you make ke, but not one word of approval if you take e trains in safety for ten years, think of the i by the throttle-valve, angels by the roaring e of the engine, angels looking from the anging crag, angels bracing the racing wheels e precipice, angels when you mount the erbolt of a train, and angels when you dist- ! Can you not hear them, louder than the ing of the car-coupling, louder than the bell crossing, louder than the whistle that sounds e scream of a flying fiend,

The Angelic Voices

g, "You did it well. You did it well"? If I speak of engineers it is because I ride so much hem. I always accept their invitation to join on their locomotive, because I not only get r destination sooner, but because they are the grandest men alive.

a and women of all circumstances, only partly ciated, or not appreciated at all, never feel r again or unregarded again! Angels all d; angels to approve, angels to help, angels to nber. Yea, while all the good angels are s of the good, there is one special angel your guard. This idea, until this present study of gy, I supposed to be fanciful, but I find it y stated in the Bible. When the disciples praying for Peter's deliverance from prison, e appeared at the door of the prayer-meeting, ould not believe it was Peter. They said: "It angel." So these disciples, in special near- o Christ, evidently believed that every worthy as an angel. Jesus said of his followers: ir angels behold the face of my Father." here it is said: "He shall give his angels e over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."

Angel-protected,

Angel-Guarded,

-canopied, art thou. No wonder that Charles y hymned these words:

"Which of the petty kings of earth
Can boast a guard like ours,
Encircled from our second birth
With all the heavenly powers?"

erius and Rufinus were put to death for Christ's in the year 287, and, after the day when their s had been whipped, and pounded into a jelly, e night in prison, and before the next day they were to be executed, they both thought saw angels standing with two glittering crowns g, "Be of good cheer, valiant soldiers of Christ! a little more of battle and then these as are yours." And I am glad to know that e many of those who have passed through sufferings in this life some angel of God has a blazing coronet of eternal reward.

a; we are to have such a guardian angel to take ward when our work is done. You know we are told an angel conducted Lazarus to Abraham's bosom. That shows that none shall be so poor in dying he cannot afford angelic escort. It would be a long way to go alone, and up paths we have never trod, and amid blazing worlds swinging in unimaginable momentum, out and on through such distances and across such infinitudes of space, we should shudder at the thought of going alone. But the angelic escort will come to your languishing pillow, or the place of your fatal accident, and say: "Hail, immortal one! All is well; God hath sent me to take you home;" and without tremor or slightest sense of peril

You Will Away and Upward,

further on and further on, until after awhile heaven heaves in sight, and the rumble of chariot wheels, and the roll of mighty harmonies are heard in the distance, and nearer you come, and nearer still, until the brightness is like many mornings suffused into one, and the gates lift and you are inside the amethystine walls, and on the banks of the jasper sea, forever safe, forever free, forever well, forever rested, forever united, forever happy. Mothers, don't think your little children go alone when they quit this world. Out of your arms into angelic arms. Out of sickness into health. Out of the cradle into a Saviour's bosom. Not an instant will the darlings be alone between the two kisses, the last kiss of earth and the first kiss of heaven. "Now angels, do your work!" cried an expiring Christian.

Yes, a guardian angel for each one of you. Put yourself now in accord with him. When he suggests the right, follow it. When he warns you against the wrong, shun it. Sent forth from God to help you in this great battle against sin and death, accept his deliverance. When tempted to a feeling of loneliness and disheartenment appropriate the promise: "The angel of the Lord encampeth around about them that fear Him and delivereth them." Oh, I am so glad that the spaces between here and heaven are thronged with these super-naturals taking tidings home, here, rolling back obstacles from our path and giving us defence, for terrific are the forces who dispute our way, and if the nation of the good angels is on our side, the nation of bad angels is on the other side. Paul had it right when he said: "We wrestle not against flesh and blood but against Principalities, against Powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." In that awful fight may God send us mighty angelic reinforcement! We want all their wings on our side, all their swords on our side, all their chariots on our side.

Bringing Messages

Thank God that those who are for us are mightier than those who are against us! And that thought makes me jubilant as to the final triumph. Belgium, you know, was the battle-ground of England and France. Yea, Belgium more than once was the battle-ground of opposing nations. It so happens that this world is the Belgium or battle-ground between the angelic nations, good and bad. Michael, the commander-in-chief on one side; Lucifer, as Byron calls him, or Mephistopheles, as Goethe calls him, or Satan as the Bible calls him, the commander-in-chief on the other side. All pure angelhood under the one leadership, and all abandoned angelhood under the other leadership. Many a skirmish have the two armies had, but the great and decisive battle is yet to be fought. Either from our earthly homes or down from our supernal residences, may we come in on the right side; for on that side are God and heaven and victory. Meanwhile the battle is being set in array, and the forces celestial and demoniacal are confronting each other. Hear the boom of the great cannonade already opened! Cherubim, Seraphim, Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, and Powers are beginning to ride down their foes, and until the work is completed, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou, Moon, in the valley of Ajalon!"

THE LATE GENERAL CROOK.

(See Portrait on page 204.)

IN the death of General Crook, which occurred on Friday last in Chicago, the United States loses an officer to whom the country was under heavy obligation, and whose excellent qualities as a general in Indian warfare were fully appreciated. Nor will the Indians hear without sorrow that "the old gray fox" is dead. They knew him as their friend, and had learned to trust him, though they feared him. The blow has fallen with startling suddenness. General Crook was believed to be in excellent health, and on the day before his death he was busy, as usual, at army headquarters. His friend, the proprietor of the Grand Pacific Hotel in Chicago, who was his host at the time of his death, says that "General Crook arose just before 7 o'clock on Friday morning apparently in his usual health, and, in accordance with his custom, began exercising with the weights and pulleys connected with an apparatus for the purpose, which he kept in his room. After exercising for a few minutes, he stopped and went and lay down upon a lounge, saying that he felt a difficulty in breathing. A few moments later he called out to his wife, 'Oh! Mary, Mary, I need some help; I can't get my breath!' Assistance was at once summoned, and Dr. Hurlbut, who lives near by, was sent for. Everything that could be done was done, but he failed to rally, and died at 7:15.

General George Crook was in his sixty-second year, having been born near Dayton, O., on September 8, 1828. After his graduation at West Point in 1852 he was detailed to duty with the Fourth Infantry in California, and served in the West until 1861. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was a captain in the regular army, but returned to his native State, and was made colonel of the Thirty-sixth Ohio Infantry. He served in the West Virginia campaigns, commanding the Third Provisional Brigade, and was wounded in action at Lewisburg. When Sheridan made his way through the Shenandoah Valley, Crook was with him, and in March, 1865, he was in turn brevetted a brigadier and major general. After Lee's surrender, General Crook was stationed at Wilmington, N. C., and there remained until the following year, when he was mustered out of the volunteer service. He was shortly after commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-third Infantry, U. S. A., and stationed in Idaho Territory, where the Indians kept him busy until 1872. He was then transferred to the Arizona district, and notified the turbulent Indian chiefs to return to their reservations or take the consequences. The Indians neglected the warning, and were severely beaten, though they entrenched themselves in a supposedly impregnable stronghold in the Tonto basin.

The Sioux and Cheyenne Indians became troublesome in 1875, and General Crook was sent against them. He won three decisive battles, which so maddened the savages that they massed their forces, and succeeded in killing nearly the entire force of General Custer. General Crook followed up the victorious savages, and waged such successful warfare against them that by May, 1877, all the hostile Indians of the Northwest had been subdued. His next campaign was one of eviction against the Norman squatters on the Indian reservations, and in 1883 he gained a complete victory over the Chiricahuas, who had taken up their position in the mountains on the Mexican border. From this time on, General Crook practically had the sole supervision of the various Indian reservations, and taught the Indians to cultivate their land and become fairly peaceable citizens.

The most remarkable of General Crook's achievements was the capture of the 500 wild Indians in Mexico, the remains of a tribe who had held supreme control of the section of Mexico in which Crook captured them for two hundred years. It has been a tradition for that period in that country that the Apaches were unconquerable. The Mexican army was powerless before them. It still remains a mystery how this modest man, with only forty-three white soldiers and a hundred and ninety-three Apache allies, taken from this same band, went into the heart of Mexico without maps, without a known trail, over alkali plains, scaled mountain heights where white men had never set foot before, and brought back these 500 savages without the loss of one of his own men, and after having killed but nine of the Apaches. "The whole band," said General Crook, in telling the story in his simple way, "would have been captured without a single loss on their own side but for the accidental discharge of two guns by our Indian scouts."

No man in the country so well understood Indian nature, or could manage them so well. They knew him to be faithful to his word, and were sure that he would carry out any promise he might make at any cost. More than once he incurred animosity in his section and unpopularity with the Government by insisting that the pledges he had given to the Indians should be honorably fulfilled. It is mainly by his advice that the present system of giving the Indians land in severalty and breaking up their tribal relations has been adopted.

PROPHETIC INTERVALS.

By Rev. G. A. Redles.

"THE abomination of desolation" (Matt. 24:15) was to be a sign of our Lord's coming, and of the End of the Age. Christ said, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet." There are three references in Daniel to "the abomination." One of these is found in Daniel 11:31. Another is found in Daniel 9:27. "For the overspreading of abominations, He shall make it desolate." The marginal reading is clearer—"Upon the battlements shall be the idols of the desolator." The context and other portions of the Word show that this refers to the close of this age. The Desolator plants the idols upon the battlements in the midst of the last of the seventy prophetic weeks.

Now what happens when the seventy weeks have expired? Daniel says, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to bring in everlasting righteousness." Daniel's people are the Jews, and his city is Jerusalem. Concerning them the transgression is not yet finished, and everlasting righteousness has not yet been brought in. As a nation they are still rejecting Christ, and God's heavy hand is upon them, and their holy city which continues to be trodden down of the Gentiles.

But what are we to understand about the seventy weeks? The word translated "weeks" is indefinite. Tregelles, whose scholarship is of the highest order, says it means "a period of seven parts." The denomination here is to be taken from the subject of Daniel's prayer. He prayed about seven years, he is answered about periods of seven years.

Seventy Periods

of seven years, or four hundred and ninety years, cover the time which Gabriel announced to Daniel. The seventy years began in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes. Dr. Brooks says, "Archbishop Usher, after careful review, and without any doctrinal or prophetic object whatever to accomplish, announced, as the result of patient and particular attention to the point, that the twentieth year of Artaxerxes corresponds to the year 454 B. C., and not to the year 446.

"As all are aware, our Lord's birth occurred four years earlier than the time assigned in our common chronology, and hence, he was crucified in the Jewish month Nisan, A. D. 29, which added to the year 454 B. C., when in the same month, Nisan, the decree of Artaxerxes was issued, we have precisely four hundred and eighty-three years or sixty-nine (weeks) heptads from the command to restore and build Jerusalem to the very month when Messiah was cut off." Now if immediately followed, then according to Daniel 9:24, it was predicted that seven years after our Lord's crucifixion the sins of Daniel's people would be forgiven, and everlasting righteousness be theirs, whereas they were then rejecting the testimony of the apostles to the remission of sins through the crucified and risen Lord. About forty years later, their sins were brought into terrible remembrance when Jerusalem was destroyed. Therefore the seventieth week did not immediately follow the sixty-nine weeks, nor for the same reason has it yet been completed. Consequently there is a gap of more than eighteen centuries between the 26th and 27th verses of Dan. 9. So, there is in Isa. 61:2, between "the acceptable year" and "the day of vengeance," and for this reason our Lord omits the latter clause in Luke 4:19.

The Seventieth Heptad

But, again, the seventy heptads relate to periods in which God regards the Jews as nationally gathered in Jerusalem. Consequently the progress of at the crucifixion. Jerusalem was then virtually set aside. Our Lord said, four days before His death, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate." (Matt. 23:38.) The course of the heptads will not be resumed until the Jews, gathered to Jerusalem by the hand of God ("I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem," Ezek. 22:19), shall under a covenant formed with Antichrist again assume a national existence.

The Heptads Stopped

Ignorance of this principle of computing prophetic time has led some sceptics to charge the Scriptures with a false statement in asserting that from the Exodus to the building of Solomon's temple comprised four hundred and eighty years, whereas they tell us that the time was six hundred and one years. The explanation is that they include one hundred and twenty-one years during which time Israel groaned under the heavy hand of foreign oppressors, in the time of the Judges, which time of subjection the Lord does not count. Therefore we are now living in between the sixty-ninth and seventieth week. God is now saying of the house of Judah, "Call his name Lo-ami; for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God." But the day is coming, "that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." When God is preparing them for that day, the seventieth week will be ushered in. That week, the last seven years of this age will find a portion of the Jews (not of the lost ten tribes) dwelling in their own land, with the temple rebuilt and its worship restored. At the close of that week Daniel 9:24 will be fulfilled. Notice that the seventy weeks are determined upon thy people (Daniel's people, the Jews), and upon thy holy city (Jerusalem).

A Parenthesis

Do any ask how the transgressions shall be finished, etc. Turn for an answer to Zech. 14:3, 4, 20, 21:12; 10-14; 13:1.

In Dan. 9:27 we read, "He shall confirm the covenant," etc. Who? The antecedent is found in the previous verse—that shall come." But it is there stated that "The people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." This refers to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman people. The question arises, How can their prince confirm the covenant at the close of this age? The answer is that "The people (of the prince that shall come) shall destroy the city." That prince is yet to arise out of the Roman world, the fourth kingdom in Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. This kingdom, represented by the two legs of iron, the feet and toes, has never yet been fully developed according to the prophecy.

"The Prince

The Ten Toes,

five on each foot, represent the ten kingdoms of the Roman world, five in the eastern branch and five in the western.

These kingdoms with their kings must be in existence when "the stone cut out without hands shall smite the image upon his feet and break them in pieces." Smiting and breaking in pieces describe not the peaceful conquests of the Gospel in this age, but destroying judgments when "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Thess. 2:1, 7, 8), and when "He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked." (Isa. 11:4.) These same kingdoms are predicted in Daniel 7. The fourth beast represents the fourth kingdom. The ten horns upon its head are ten kings that shall arise. "Another king shall arise after them. And he shall speak great words against the Most High."

This last king (Antichrist) is "the prince that shall come, who shall confirm the covenant with many for one week."

A DAUGHTER'S DIFFICULTIES IN INDIA.

THE obstacles the missionaries in India have to encounter, especially those who are laboring among the women, may be realized from an incident related by Miss M. C. Lathrop in a letter to The Missionary Link. She says that among the pupils in the Allahabad mission was a girl named Lachmin, the only daughter of a widow. The mother was anxious to get the child married in accordance with the customs of India, but postponed it at the urgent desire of the ladies of the mission.

"At last the day came when she felt Hindu custom could not be farther defied, and she, leaving Lachmin in the care of friends, set out on foot for her native village, to search a fitting man for her son-in-law, all the men in the town being, as she said, very wicked and disagreeable. She returned, weary and footsore, her task well done, according to her mind, and the marriage soon took place. It was not long before we began to hear complaints. The man was entirely ignorant of books, and knew of no work he could do in the city; and, in fact, the scholarly ways of his young wife pleased him as little as his manners did her. They went on for a while, he spending a part of his time in the city, the remainder in his village, where Lachmin never accompanied him. She had now reached the age of fifteen or sixteen, and on his return from a long sojourn she proposed a separation, drawn up in a way which among the lower castes of Hindus esteemed legal. This pleased him, and being accomplished, he returned to his home and took wife of his own kind. Lachmin rejoiced that she did so, feeling that her freedom was complete. She gave her work as a teacher, her mother gathered the girls to be taught into her own little house. She often told us she was a Christian at heart, and wished she could get her mother's consent, would be baptized.

"The old woman proved to be most bigoted, and in various ways tried to get this 'foolish notion' as she thought it, out of her daughter's head. One way was to get her consent to a kind of second marriage. This she utterly refused. When at a time Lachmin declared her intention of going to church, her mother's wrath knew no bounds, and she not only abused her daughter, but tried to make her an object of contempt to others by her slanders. All her efforts to move her daughter proved futile, she ceased to eat, saying she would not taste food until Lachmin promised never again to go to church, and that she would go to the Ganges to bathe, in token that she had given up all idea of becoming a Christian. To the Ganges she refused to go, but did promise that, without consent, she would not be baptized, and the mother had been satisfied and take her food.

"It has been a hard struggle for years between the two, and many a time, through the wretched intrigues of her mother and her friends, we have feared she would lose her good name. She continues teaching, and supports her mother out of her pay. No less than twelve girls taught by her are now helping in mission work. The mission decided some time ago to pay any one teacher no more than thirty pupils. Lachmin had more, but she continued to teach them, and we warned that she would get pay for only thirty. She said, 'I will teach the thirty for the mission and the others for the Lord.'"

A CHINESE BRIDE'S TROUBLES.

AMONG the recent additions to the Congregational church for Chinamen in Sacramento, Cal., is a Chinese lady who has had a singular experience which has tried herself and her husband severely. Mr. William C. Pond tells the story in the American Missionary. He says:

Several years ago, one of our steadfast Christian brethren in Sacramento requested me to conduct his marriage service. He had procured the bride in Marysville, purchasing her (I suppose) for her parents after the Chinese custom. I obeyed the summons; obtained for him the necessary license, and then at the Mission House awaited the coming of the bride. That which at length arrived resembled more a moving package of rich brilliant dry-goods of Chinese manufacture than a bright and blushing bride. Something could be seen of the shoes she wore, and when at length the course of the service, I somewhat firmly insisted on a joining of hands, a hand was made to appear but there was no bridal kiss, nor any sight or semblance of a face beneath the quadrupled or quintupled veils. However, the marriage was effected in a Christian way, and the next morning I came to me an invitation to call upon the bride. I found her to be the most beautiful Chinese girl I had ever seen, with manners all the more pleasing because so very shy. Her husband had prepared quarters for her which, as compared with the average Chinese home, were almost palatial, and everything seemed to promise a future peaceful and happy life.

After a few months the mother-in-law made a visit as she passed through Sacramento on her way back to her native land. What passed between mother and daughter we do not know. A few days after her departure, Fong Bow returned to his home was shocked to find his little wife hanged by the neck in an attempt at suicide. He rescued her, and when she was restored asked for the reason. She acknowledged that she had a good home and a kind and generous husband, but there was no shrine in the house, no ancestral tablet, no Joss, and she was convinced that some great evil must be impending from spirits thus neglected and provoked. She preferred to sacrifice her present comfort rather than incur the woes approaching—all the more dreadful in her apprehension—cause utterly unknown. Whereupon Fong Bow told her that while he himself could not work things, and knew that an idol was "nothing but the world," he did not and would not forbid her to do what she thought right, and thus she proved herself with a shrine and gods and was content.

Meanwhile, the husband lived a Christian life before her, and she herself was willing to receive instruction from Mrs. Carrington and others. It is improbable that she saw the difference between some even half Christian, like her own, and those who are heathen customs made of a husband less a tector than a lord. Doubtless she thought much in silence before coming to the decision which changed the current of her life. This brought her to decision. With her own hands she removed the shrine she had erected, and then declared her purpose to worship her husband's God. Those who saw her—both Chinese and Americans—saw in the tokens of a real and radical change; and it was with great joy that I heard, some weeks ago, that she had been baptized and welcomed to the congregational church in Sacramento, to which her husband had belonged these many years.

CHRIST'S LAW OF LOVE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lesson for April 6, Luke 6: 27-38; Golden Text Luke 6: 31.

Purpose of the Incarnation—An Exhibition of God's Love—Christ's Teaching in Contrast with Worldly Maxims—The Dangers of Wealth and Popularity—How Enemies Must be Treated—Christ's Own Example—Non-Resistance Enjoined—Stephen's Powerful Sermon—The Safest Investment—The Christian as the Exhibition of God to the World—Men to see God in Him.

God is love." Fallen man—man without God—incarnate selfishness. When Jesus came in our world, "God . . . manifest in the flesh" (1 Tim. 3: 16). He came to exhibit a life and nature which was the exact contrary to that of man, in whose image and whose likeness He came. His teaching was His life were alike to this end. Having, in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5, 6, 7), taught His disciples, in the presence of the multitude, the laws and principles which should govern His kingdom, now, after choosing His twelve apostles, "He came down with them, and stood in the plain," and there repeated much of His teaching in the mountain. Usually, the people came "to hear and to be healed," and, as usual, "there went virtue out of Him, and He healed them all." The teaching of Jesus was always very personal. "He lifted up His eyes and said, Blessed be ye poor; for yours is the kingdom of God." It was the exact

Contrary to the Teaching of the World.

"As long as thou doest well unto thyself"—when thou dost get on in the world, and live in style; when thou dost keep a staff of servants and two or three carriages; when thou dost heap around thee things which gratify the eye and the ear and the senses, "men will speak good of thee." (Ps. 49: 2-B. V.) The shopmen will run to wait on thee, the railway porters will be most obliging and kind to thee, thou wilt be looked upon as a person of importance. But what about the kingdom of heaven? If all thine importance runs out here, there is one left for the next world. But ye poor, who take a back seat, who look on yourselves as nobody, whom everyone passes by, "blessed be ye; ye are room in your life for Jesus—He is everything to you, because ye are nobody; ye are the kingdom of heaven." "Blessed are ye that hunger," that find nothing in earth to satisfy you, "ye shall be filled," yea, "with all the fullness of God." (Eph. 3: 19.) "Blessed are ye that weep now," ye do not try to forestall eternal blessedness by bringing earth into heaven, and finding a satisfying solution here. "Blessed are ye that weep" where ye wept, and, like Paul, seek for "fellowship in His sufferings," "for ye shall laugh." "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall revile you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake." One who is full of self cannot do anything rather than to be misunderstood and misrepresented; he cannot accept that he shall suffer injustice, and he has forgotten that it is his calling, as the follower of Him who was "despised and rejected of men," to "Do Well, and Suffer for It."

(Matt. 2: 20, 21.) It is asking no impossible thing when Jesus exhorts His own disciples to rejoice in suffering of this kind, for it is fellowship with Jesus. "Woe unto you that are rich"! Who takes warning? How many are there who fear to add house to house and field to field, lest God's woe should come upon them? Who is there that dreads accumulating the things of this world, lest the sentence should go forth from God, "They have received their consolation." "Woe unto you that are full"! you who are filled up by something short of God Himself. Oh how many of God's children are filled with their own holiness, or their own usefulness, or their own knowledge, or their own success. "Woe unto you that are full." Now is the time for hunger, not for satiety. When the great testing time comes, and the wood, hay, and stubble is burnt up, then "ye shall hunger."

"Woe unto you that laugh now," that do not sigh and cry "for all the abominations" (Ezek. 9: 4) that are done in the city or in the country—you that do not lay these things to heart. (Mal. 2: 2.) "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you." It is a dangerous thing for a Christian worker to become popular; he is on treacherous ground; the world loves its own and admires its own, and unless it finds something akin to itself in a Christian worker it will not speak well of him; the world treats the true disciple as his Master; "the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not." (1 John 3: 1.) Men love to be appreciated, but the true child of God, who is living the Christ-life, shrinks intuitively from the world's adulation; the sting of the serpent is in it. Earthly riches, the fullness of self, the laughing now of the world's amusement, and the miserable flattery of the world, what is it all? Just self-pleasing, just the "all seek their own," which is the exact contrary of love.

"God is love;" where love is not, there God is not. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is Love." (1 John 4: 8.) The Master in His teaching says, "I say unto you which hear," you hungry, listening, yearning ones, "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." "No," says human nature, "I cannot do that; it is not just. A man who has wronged me ought to suffer for it, it is only right he should." But who is it that "commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us"—"died for the ungodly"? (Rom. 5: 6-8.) Christ only teaches us to do for others what He has done for us. He who "loved" Hezekiah's soul from the pit of corruption (Isa. 38: 17, margin) and has done as much for us, gives us the privilege of loving our enemies back from their enmity. "But I cannot; all my sense of justice rebels against such a course of action," you may say. Did not mercy rejoice against judgment when God saved you? He wants you to let Christ in, that you may manifest that same spirit to those who injure you. It is not in you to do it, but let Christ come into your heart, and He whose dying breath was a prayer for His enemies will love your enemies through your heart as you yield it up to him. "Christ suffered for us, that ye should follow His steps." (1 Pet. 2: 21.) "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." A simple and most effectual rule. Before speaking a hard word, don't think whether your enemy deserves it, but just how you would feel if it were spoken to you. Consider him, and put yourself out of the question. This is the way in which the love of God was manifested. "Herein is love, not that we loved God but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." (1 John 4: 10.)

Leaving us an Example,

Love includes non-resistance. "Unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek," do not turn round and do the same to him, but "offer also the other;" it is the quickest way to cool his anger and bring him to a sense of shame. Resisting evil adds fuel to the flame, and brings you onto the same ground as your adversary. But non-resistance of evil leaves him with the humbling consciousness that the man who could not be moved to enmity against him is superior to him. "Him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat also." A Christian-man can better afford the loss of cloak and coat than the chance of loving an enemy, which is the distinguishing mark of a true follower of Jesus.

"For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them." Shall men in whom Christ dwells do no more than sinners in whom Satan dwells? A man who loves only those who love him retaliates the injury of those who hate him. But when the martyr Stephen knelt down amidst a shower of stones from the howling, angry multitude, and, with his body bruised and bleeding, cried aloud to God, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," he preached

A More Powerful Sermon

of the transforming power of the Christ-life within than any amount of word preaching could have effected. Stephen had nothing in his heart but love to his most bitter enemies. "And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? For sinners also love those that love them." In the world all is exchange; everyone expects fair compensation for whatever of time, money, love, or attention he gives another. Not so the true Christian. Look at Paul in the Philippian prison, smarting under the blows of the jailer. He neither groans nor pities himself, and when God works a miracle on his behalf, his first thought is not for his own safety, but for his enemy's, and he cries to the jailer, who was on the point of committing suicide, "Do thyself no harm"! (Acts 16: 28.) Surely this manifestation of God in him brought the sinner to his knees, and transformed the prison house that night into an assembly of the faithful. "And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again." The truest investments are those made on the security of God, and of His promises. As long as our expectation is from man, we shall be always disappointed. It is beneath the dignity of a child of God to expect recompense from man. Christ warns His disciples never to look for a recompense again from man. (Luke 14: 12-14.)

"But love ye your enemies, do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again (R. V., despairing of no man); and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest; for He is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil." If God satisfies us, if He undertakes to be our Shepherd, and "supply all our need," so that we "shall not want" (Psa. 23: 1; Phil. 4: 19), we can afford to give without expecting a recompense from man. With the unchanging love of God warming us in its rich sunlight, we can afford to love those who return our love only with misunderstandings, with hard words, and uncalled-for deeds of enmity, for God loved us when we dealt so with Him. If we have the praise of God, and have the testimony that we please Him, we can afford to live on with those who refuse to be pleased with us, who set themselves to find fault, as the Pharisees did with Jesus, and we can praise God for the opportunity of shewing His Spirit to them. With God on our side, as the Lord who provides, and whose goodness and mercy follow us all the days of our life, we can afford to lose a cloak, or go a mile out of our way (Matt. 5: 41), or suffer the loss of our property, if by such little sacrifices we may maintain the spirit of our Master, who was as

A Lamb Led to the Slaughter;

and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth. (Isa. 53: 7.) Dumb about His own cause, but ever living to plead our cause. Oh how He has taught us to "resist not evil," and to love our enemies. Yet, is this the kind of Christianity which most Christians are living? Are they for the most part defenceless, non-resisting lambs, or sly, grasping, foxes, keen for their own interests, fighting dogs, unwilling to give in to one another? In God's law of love, He is made our example, "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful," "perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." God likeness, Christ likeness, is our vocation on earth. (Rom. 8: 28, 29.) We were saved for this.

"Judge not, and ye shall not be judged;" even Christ "came not to judge the world, but to save the world." "Condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned; forgive, and ye shall be forgiven. Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again." Thus God's righteous hand makes us the final judges of our own cause; in judging others, we choose the measure of His judgment of us; in condemning others, we indicate the measure of our condemnation. In the measure of our giving we are making a rule for God's gifts to us, and for His influence upon the hearts of others toward us. Our privilege is to be as God to others, to look down on them from above, from His point of view, for Jesus says to us, "as my Father hath sent me into the world, even so have I sent you into the world." It is our vocation to be His express image, as He was His Father's, (Heb. 1: 3.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Firemen of Indianapolis Have Again given illustration of vicarious sacrifice. Sometimes in one way and sometimes in another is demonstrated the willingness of men and women to die for others. We need not go back to history to find illustration for our pulpits, and our prayer-meetings, and our Sabbath classes. Why should it be so difficult for the world to understand the doctrine of Christ's dying for others when firemen and shipmasters and fathers and mothers are every day giving up their lives to save others? It would be well for all theological students, and all Christian workers to cut out from their newspapers and magazines such instances of self-sacrifice, and put them in scrap-books, for use when they come to explain vicarious sacrifice, the central thought of the New Testament. We have never done this, but we can think of what a rich storehouse of illustration we might have had to draw upon if we had saved for reference a fourth of the heroic deeds we have read about during the last ten years. Events recent and near by make more impression than events unrolled from Josephus, or Gibbon's Rise and Fall. We need in all our work more freshness and less humdrum.

Christian Science and Faith-Cure Have Recently been roughly handled, and threatened with law-suits, because patients have died under the process. Now the courts had better keep their hands off, for if all the doctors, allopathic, homeopathic, hydropathic, and eclectic, were prosecuted whenever they lost patients, the whole medical profession would be in jail, or struck for damages. Beside that every family has the right of choosing their own physician, and if some one wants a doctor who does his work by prayer instead of pills and bitter solution he certainly ought to be allowed to use his own preferences. "There! I told you so," is apt to be the utterance after any failure at physical cure, and the world is full of wisacres who know how everything ought to be done in treatment of disease. It will be well, however, to note the fact that the whole human race must die, and there comes a time in the history of man, woman, and child when the strongest effort, whether by faith or the use of means for the recovery of the patient, will be discomfited.

Good-Humor is a Science. These People Who go around with their nose stuck up at the world are depending on their circumstances for happiness. Their circumstances changing from favorable to adverse, they drop into cynicism. Only by understanding that good-humor is a science, and that no one but God can implant it in the soul, can we be kept in proper equipoise. We will all live longer and better if we do not fret. Do not let us waste any of our time in trying to excoriate others. If any one deserves to be chastised and exposed, and made to travel a hard road, Satan will attend to that, and do it thoroughly. Let us have division of labor on this subject. Let the Father of all evil attend to the work of fault-finding and punishment of offenders, while we give our time to helpfulness and rescue and blessing. We cannot do both. Do not let us use the ammunition given us to war for the world's liberation in useless combat. Do not let our dispositions become ruffled by unfair treatment from the world. Good-humor declares large dividends, both for this world and the next.

The Age of Pictures is Here. Periodicals that decline them seem dull in the comparison with those adorned with wood-cuts and engravings. A picture will give in flash a lesson that two columns of close print could not impart. We are apt to think that pictures are for children, but old people like them just as well. It is not so much the execution of a picture as the idea it conveys. The artistic work on newspapers, secular and religious, must necessarily be swift and rough, but the revelation they make in one glance may last for all time and all eternity. The work of a bad picture may go on in the devastation of many families. The work of a good picture may take hold of the everlasting happiness of all who see it. Not only in newspapers but on our walls, if we have pictures, let them teach kindness and purity and righteousness long after those who fashioned them and framed them and hung them have quit earthly residence. Meanwhile, let men and women whose faces in the public print are just the opposite of complimentary, in consequence of the haste of execution, cheerfully submit, for when the reader has an opportunity of seeing you face to face he will be the more delighted to find that you look more like the human race in general than he had been led to suppose.

The Rejection of the Blair Education Bill by the Senate was a surprise to the country. It reached a final vote on March 20, on the question of ordering it to a third reading. It was lost by a vote of 31 to 37. Eight Democrats and twenty-three Republicans voted for the bill, and twenty Democrats and seventeen Republicans against it. Two years ago the Senate passed the bill by a vote of 39 to 29. The different issue appears to have resulted chiefly from a change of views in regard to the measure by Republican Senators. Several who voted for the bill in 1888 voted against it last week. One of them frankly said that he had been opposed to it all along, but had voted for it because he had promised to do so to the Legislature which elected him. The aspect of the bill which appears to have secured its defeat was that of principle. There is no question as to the desirability of increased educational facilities in the South, but it was regarded as a bad precedent to appropriate Federal money to State purposes. The bill would have involved the expenditure of seventy-seven million dollars.

The Deliberations on the Tariff by the House Committee on Ways and Means have resulted in a compromise measure, which was published last week. Like all compromises, it has evoked protests on all hands, and its authors do not cordially endorse it in all its features. Senator Allison himself, on whose bill it is based, says it ought to be "amended to death." It is estimated that the bill in its present shape would reduce the revenue by sixty millions. The most prominent feature is the reduction in the sugar duty, which will cost over twenty-six millions. Reductions in the internal revenue taxes will cost about eighteen millions. This is a smaller reduction than was contemplated by the Randall and Mills bills. The duties on wool and agricultural products are largely increased. There can be no question that the proposals are substantially in accord with Republican promises at the last Presidential election; and with all three branches of the Government in Republican hands there seems no reason why they should not be passed. The rearrangement of burdens, however, must inevitably have a serious effect on some business interests, and there is evidence already that business interests are more potent than party affiliation. Beside this, there is not now the urgent necessity for reducing the revenue which was presented by the surplus. Congress has found in liberal appropriations a more effectual way of getting rid of the surplus.

The Resignation by Prince Bismarck of all His offices was the news that astonished the whole world last week. Still greater astonishment was caused by the announcement that his resignation had been accepted by the Emperor. The statesman in his letter of resignation assigns old age and failing health as his reasons for desiring retirement, but no one gives credit to that plea. The fact that his son, Prince Herbert Bismarck, also resigned, though the Kaiser declined to accept his resignation, implies that the reasons assigned by the Chancellor were not the real reasons for the step. Popular rumor has it there was a radical difference between Bismarck and the Emperor on the labor question, which it was found impossible to arrange. After the resignation was tendered, the Emperor sent to the Chancellor to try to effect a compromise, but as the latter would make no concession, the Emperor accepted his resignation. Another difference is reported to have arisen between the two men on the clerical question, the Emperor being inclined to yield to the appeal of the Roman Catholics for the interference of the German Government in the dispute between the Pope and the King of Italy. Such interference would inevitably be resented by Italy, and would imperil the stability of the triple alliance, which is the foundation of Bismarck's foreign policy. Whatever the cause of the rupture may have been, the fact remains that the man who has ruled in Berlin for twenty-eight years, and has guided the bark of Germany through the troubled waters of European diplomacy to unity and strength, has fallen. It is evident that the Emperor means to govern, as well as to reign; but it was not expected that the youth whom Bismarck had trained, and who was supposed to depend upon him for guidance, would so soon shake off his control. The Emperor has appointed General Caprivi chancellor in Bismarck's place. His portrait and a sketch of his life appear on page 204 of this number.

A Fierce Attack on the Parnellites was made in the House of Lords on March 21 by Lord Salisbury. In a motion for the adoption of the report of the Commission he asked: How could the country assent to committing the government of Ireland to men linked with criminality and immorality? The commission had laid bare and indicated the spirit of these aspiring would-be governors of Ireland. It would be a pitiful prospect if an industrious community, especially that of the prosperous Protestant section, which through good and evil report had clung to England, were handed over to such men. When the American Revolution was proceeding it might have been prophesied from the previous record of Washington what the future government would be, and that he would carry into the council-chamber the same high spirit of integrity that had distinguished him in the field. The same rule applied to the Parnellites, whose conduct ought to frighten the country from admitting the possibility of confiding to them the rule of Ireland. Baron Herschell, Earl Spencer, and Lord Rosebery vigorously defended the Parnellites, and warned the Lords that Ireland would never be content until she was governed by her chosen leaders.

The Cabinet Crisis in France has Ended as was expected, in M. de Freycinet's advent to power. The new cabinet outlined its policy in a statement read in the Senate and Chamber of Deputies on March 18. In it the new ministers say that the government will defend republican institutions and the entire democratic work of its predecessors. It appeals cordially to all sections of the republican party. Its object will be to effect a union of all the republican forces, and to exclude none. It will welcome to the republican fold all well-disposed men who will work with it for economic and social reforms. It will thus found a broad, open, tolerant and peaceable republic. Continuing, the statement says: "We live in a time of social transformation, when the condition of workingmen is the just object of special consideration. Our first duty is to turn to the toiling people and assist in improving their positions. No government, especially that of a republic, can escape this duty. We shall shortly propose laws the purpose of which will be to secure progressive improvement of the condition of the laboring classes, especially with a view to their making suitable provision for old age. The Chamber of Deputies expressed its confidence in the new ministry by an overwhelming majority."

An Appeal for Aid for Starving Farmers in South Dakota has been issued. It is stated that in five counties the harvest was practically a failure through protracted drought, and that in eleven other counties the land yielded barely sufficient to supply the farmers with bread for their own families. The appeal to public and private charity is made because the State constitution does not permit the Legislature to make a grant for the relief of the distress. It was at first suggested that the counties might give bonds, and thus raise the necessary funds, but the Supreme Court has ruled that the counties had no power to issue bonds for such a purpose. The same court has also vetoed a proposal for the farmers to borrow individually, giving a tax lien guaranteed by the counties as security. Governor Mellette now declares that prompt outside aid is necessary to prevent untold suffering. The farmers are provided with clothing for themselves and their families, but urgently need provisions and seed-corn. Mr. S. C. Leavell, of Ipswich, Edmunds County, S. D., is chairman of the Relief Committee, and will see that any contributions to the fund are properly expended.

The Return of the Jews to Palestine has been progressing more rapidly than has been generally known. A writer in a European journal states that in 1841 the number of Jews in Palestine was 8,000, in 1883 they had increased to 20,000, and in 1888 they had in five years increased by an addition of 5,000, numbering then no fewer than 70,000, about the number that came up from Babylon. Further, it is noted that the "latter rains" had been restored to the land, after a withdrawal for centuries; the withholding of these refreshing and fertilizing showers being, as stated in prophecy, an evidence of God's displeasure, and their bestowal a mark of His favor. These are very remarkable and important statements, and would seem to indicate that we are on the eve of great events.

The Recovery of Sight by a Blind Lady Occurred at the Christian Convention in Rev. A. B. Simpson's church in New York on March 14. Among the delegates to the Convention was Mrs. Sarah E. Ston, of Lansingburg, N. Y. She brought with her Miss Ida Benedict, who for the last five months has been totally blind, and has been partially blind twenty years. When she was thirteen years of age cataracts formed on both eyes and she was placed under the care of Dr. Robinson, of Albany. After performing an operation on her eyes, he advised that she should not undergo further surgical treatment, as the optic nerve was paralyzed. She returned home, and since that time her sight has gradually decreased, until in October of last year she could not distinguish night from day. Mrs. Ston, who conducts a faith home at Lansingburg, frequently spoken to her on the subject of faith healing, and when she was coming to the Convention brought her with her. They stayed at the Behn Home, where prayer was made for the afflicted lady. On March 14, as she sat in the meeting, the light gradually broke on her dark eyes. She rose testily, and being invited to the platform, she defied her way there unassisted. She told what had occurred, and said she could distinctly see the faces of the congregation. Since then her sight has continued to improve. Last week she walked for over a mile in New York streets without any guidance.

An Invitation to Become a Marriage Broker has been made to a New York lawyer. A few days ago a well-known lawyer received a letter from Vienna proposing an unusual matter of business. It stated that a prince connected with the Austrian imperial family needed a wife, and would like to marry an American heiress. The prince had heard of a friend who travelled in America two years ago, and that there were many marriageable girls here worth fortunes of millions of dollars, and that he had met one, a certain Miss —, who was beautiful as well as rich. The prince thought she would do him, but if she were engaged, any young lady of good family and with a fortune of not less than a million would do. The writer of the letter had been commissioned to undertake the business, and some well-known American, in reply to an inquiry for a reputable lawyer in this country, had given the name of New York man. The lawyer declined to act in such a prosaic matrimonial scheme, saying that the prince had better come and do his wooing himself. He takes the advice it may be hoped that American girls will perceive his mercenary motives and reject him. How infinite is the contrast of such an offer with that which the Prince of Peace commissions His servants to make! They are to seek the poor, and to tell them that He who seeks their souls, Himself loves them so well that He died for them. (Eph. 5:25.)

A Fireman's Conflict with a Dog in a Burning Building in New York on March 19 caused a delay in getting control of the fire, which increased the loss of the proprietor. About ten o'clock at night a policeman on Sixth Avenue sent out an alarm that a large dry-goods store was on fire. This was followed by a second alarm, as the contents of the store were highly inflammable and the neighborhood densely populated. No one slept in the building, and it was, therefore, necessary to break in the doors. This was done by one of the firemen who arrived first on the scene. He was confronted by a huge mastiff, who was acting as guardian of the premises. The dog growled and showed his teeth. The fireman tried coaxing, but the dog was unmanageable. As the fireman advanced he sprang at him viciously. The man grappled with the dog, narrowly escaped being severely bitten. The struggle was a severe one, but it was ended by a blow which another fireman administered with the head of his axe. The dog crawled away howling with pain, and the firemen were able to get to work on the fire. Much valuable time had, however, been lost, and some $15,000 worth of property was sacrificed. The dog could not be expected to understand that the firemen were come to effect the object for which he was himself concerned—the protection of his master's property. A similar lack of intelligence in sinners sometimes thwarts the efforts of Christian workers. They, like those who would bring them to Christ, are concerned for their happiness, but they resist because they do not realize that religion would give it them. (Matt. 23:37.)

A Snake Charmer was Caught in the Jaws of an alligator in a New York museum on March 17. She has been employed in the museum in giving exhibitions of snake charming for some time past. Recently two full-grown alligators arrived at the place, and she undertook to give an exhibition with them instead of with the snakes. She had some experience with small alligators, but had never before handled any so large as the new-comers. She handled them fearlessly, and for a time without injury. With the help of a man attendant she raised the bigger alligator, which was nearly six feet long, above her head and held him on the palms of her hands amid loud applause. Then she carefully lowered him to the floor. His head was turned from the spectators, and to enable them to get a better view of him she began to turn him about. The alligator opened his huge jaws, seized her hand, and, by rolling over, threw her down. The spectators screamed, and the attendants ran to her assistance. One of them pried the monster's jaws open with an iron bar and released the performer. A surgeon who was summoned dressed the crushed hand. One of the finger-joints was found to be broken and the flesh of the hand was badly bruised and lacerated. The performer, however, was in her usual place in the museum the next day, but though the alligators were securely muzzled with wire cages, she did not tamper with them. She showed more wisdom in that than is sometimes shown by men who have been caught in the jaws of vice. Even after they have had experience of its deadly power, they too often return to it, and again become its victims. (Prov. 23:35.)

A Remarkable Solar Phenomenon was Witnessed in Arkansas on March 2. In a letter to a contemporary, Mr. R. B. Crisp, of Garland City, Ark., says that early in the day a circle appeared in the heavens, the centre of which was the sun. The circle appeared to be formed of different colors, red, blue, and yellow being the principal ones. Within this circle the sky appeared dark as a storm cloud, but without it was the bluest of blue skies. Soon a much larger circle was seen to the northward of the first, formed of purest white, the periphery of which seemed to pass directly over the face of the sun and cut through the smaller circle below its centre on either side. And now appeared another wonder. On the large circle, and just outside the smaller, two mock suns, brilliant in light and beauty, were seen equi-distant from the first circle. Again, below the sun, and to the east and west of it, appeared two fiery swords, having somewhat the appearance of rainbows, one pointing to the northwest the other to the northeast, and crossing each other on the northern limit of the great circle described above, making a complete cross. Altogether it was a wonderful sight. In bygone times such a sight would have been regarded as a portent and would have caused general terror, but now familiarity with science enables men to explain it by natural causes. The time is coming, however, when celestial phenomena, whether so explicable or not, will have a message for watchful believers, who will recognize them as "the sign of the Son of man in the heavens." (Matt. 24:29, 30.)

Two Explorers Entombed in a Crater in New Mexico narrowly escaped death recently. A dispatch from Albuquerque, N. M., to the San Francisco Chronicle states that two travellers have arrived in that city who have had an extraordinary experience. Their story, which is corroborated by a reliable witness, is, that they had hired a Mexican to take them to the famous crater of the Malpais. He led them into a cave on the highest point, the floor of which was of lava. There were cracks in its hard, rocky surface, and they noticed that at intervals puffs of warm vapor rose from the cracks. As they were looking at the strangely-shaped formations above and around them, they were startled by a low, rumbling sound, like distant thunder. The Mexican clambered out of the cave, and ran for his life. The visitors tried to follow him, but had not his agility. Before they could escape, a portion of the lava floor trembled for a moment beneath their feet, and then fell in. There was a sensation of rapid descent, and a splash. The men lay prostrate for a short space of time on the fragment of lava. Intense darkness prevailed, and there was a swaying motion beneath them that filled them with alarm. One of the men struck a match, and lighted his torch. The glare showed them that the lava block on which they lay was floating on a subterranean lake, the waters of which were black as ink. They gave themselves up for lost, but just then a cry was heard above their heads. The Mexican guide had returned, and was lowering ladders to them. They secured them around their bodies, and the Mexican attached the other end to his horse, and drew them once more to the surface of the cave, which now had but a slight rim of flooring. They got out of the cave with all speed, profoundly thankful for their escape. It was a marvellous, and probably unprecedented, experience, but every Christian knows that his spiritual experience furnishes a parallel to it. The darkness, the danger, and the utter powerlessness of self-deliverance, which made their position so desperate, he has felt, and he thanks God that in his extremity help came from above, and he was "brought up out of a horrible pit, and his feet set upon a rock." (Psa. 40:2.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost has arranged to proceed to India in the autumn, to conduct an evangelistic mission there.

Mr. Spurgeon's church received 310 new members on their baptism last year. The total membership is now set down as 5,354.

Professor Drummond, in response to a numerous signed requisition from students at the University of Melbourne, is to leave for Australia in March.

Mr. D. L. Moody has consented to spend another week in New York. He will hold meetings through this week in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, Madison Avenue and Fifty-third Street, at 8 o'clock P. M. each day, Saturday excepted.

Evangelist H. W. Brown, of Chicago has been holding very successful meetings at Clay Centre, Kans. Besides the evening meetings, which have been densely crowded, he has had Bible-readings every afternoon; large numbers of converts are reported.

The American Institute of Christian Philosophy will hold its next meeting on April 7, in the Lecture Room of the Y. M. C. A., Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York, when the Rev. John Y. Dobbins will read a paper on "Social Life in the Church."

The Hon. Thomas Beaver, of Danville, Pa., a Presbyterian, is erecting at Lewisburg, Pa., in memory of his father, an itinerant Methodist minister, ordained by Bishop Asbury, a new church, costing $125,000, which he presents to the Methodist Church of Lewisburg without incumbrance.

The Rev. C. Stauder, founder of the Italian mission in this country, and for many years its active, successful head, has been invited by the "Italian Church Reform Association" of England to work in the Reform movement in Italy, and to preside over the new seminary now nearly completed at Arrone in Umbria.

Evangelists Cannon and Leader have been conducting services during the past two weeks at South Third Street M. E. Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., with such success that they have been urged by the pastor and people to continue their labors another week. Meetings are being held every night, and many souls are being won for the Saviour.

At the March meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society grants of books were made to the value of $3,472. Funds were also granted to the amount of $69,408.21, including appropriations to various mission boards. The issues from the Bible House during the month of February were 109,179 volumes; issues since April 1, 1889, 922,493 volumes.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services in East New York have produced a deep impression all through the district. The buildings in which they are held are crowded to suffocation, and even the afternoon Bible-readings are thronged. Last week the evening meetings were held in the Williams Avenue Methodist Church; afternoon Bible-readings in the First Baptist Church. Dr. Munhall is laboring under the auspices of seven churches, representing four denominations: Reformed, Baptist, Congregational, and Methodist.

Mr. E. P. Telford, the English Methodist Evangelist commenced a series of meetings last Sunday in the Broome Street Tabernacle, New York. At the conclusion of those meetings he will go to the De Witt Memorial Church on Rivington Street. The services he has been conducting in the Olivet Church on Second Street during the past two weeks have been wonderfully blessed. Over one hundred persons made confession of faith in Christ and declared their intention, in His strength, to live Christian lives henceforth.

THE BELIEVER'S DRESS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof." Rom. 13:14.

The Light in the Lantern—A Precept for Daily Life—
I. Where to Go for Daily Dress—To Christ for an Example—For a Stimulus—For Power—A Matchless Garment—Fit for Every Station—II. What the Dress Is—Put on Christ as Lord—As Saviour—As Prophet—The Wardrobe—A Missionary's Moose-skin Robe—III. How to Act in the Dress—No Tolerance to the Flesh—No Time for it—No Food—A Bridal Dress.

CHRIST must be in us before He can be on us. Grace puts Christ within, and enables us to put on Christ without. Christ must be in the heart by faith before He can be in the life by holiness. If you want light from a lantern, the first business is to light the candle inside of it; and then, as a consequence, the light shines through, to be seen of men. When Christ is formed in you, the hope of glory, do not conceal your love to Him, but put Him on in your conduct as the glory of your hope. As you have Christ within as your Saviour, the secret of your inner life, so put on Christ to be the beauty of your daily life. Let the external be brightened by the internal; and this shall be to you that "armor of light" which all the soldiers of the Lord Jesus are privileged to wear. As Christ is your food, nourishing the inner man, so put Him on as your dress, covering the outer man.

"Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." This we do when we believe in Him: then we put on the Lord Jesus Christ as our robe of righteousness. It is a very beautiful picture of What Faith Does.

Faith finds our manhood naked, to its shame; faith sees that Christ Jesus is the robe of righteousness provided for our need; and faith, at the command of the gospel, appropriates Him, and gets the benefit of Him for it. By faith the soul covers her weakness with His strength, her sin with His atonement, her folly with His wisdom, her failure with His triumphs, her death with His life, her wanderings with His constancy. By faith, I say, the soul hides itself within Jesus, till Jesus only is seen, and the man is seen in Him.

But, you see, the text does not distinctly refer to this great matter; for the apostle is not referring to the imputed righteousness of Christ. The text stands in connection with precepts concerning matters of every-day practical life, and to these it must refer. It is not justification, but sanctification, that we have here. Moreover, we cannot be said to put on the imputed righteousness of Christ after we have believed, for that is upon us as soon as we believe, and needs no more putting on. The command before us is given to those who have the imputed righteousness of Christ, who are justified, who are accepted in Christ Jesus. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ" is a word to you that are saved by Christ, and justified by His righteousness. You are to put on Christ, and keep on putting Him on, in the sanctifying of your lives unto your God. You are every day continually more and more to wear as the dress of your lives the character of your Lord.

Where to Go for Daily Dress.

I. May the Holy Spirit help us while we in the first place answer the inquiry, Where are we to go for daily dress? Beloved, there is but one answer to all questions as to our necessities. We go to the Lord Jesus Christ for everything. To us "Christ is all." "He is made of God unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." When you have come to Christ for pardon and justification, you are not to go elsewhere for the next thing. Having begun with Jesus, you are to go with Him, even to the end; "for ye are complete in Him," perfectly stored in Christ, fully equipped in Him. So, dear friends, I gather from this that if we seek an example we may not look elsewhere than to our Lord Jesus Christ. Of Him you may inquire as of an unfailing oracle. You need never inquire what is the general custom of those about you: the broad road of the many is no way for you. You may not ask, "What are the rulers of the people doing?" You follow not the fashion of the great, but the example of the greatest of all. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ" will apply to each one of us. If I am a tradesman, I am not to ask myself, On what principles do other traders conduct their business? Not so. What the world may do is no rule for me. If I am a student I should not inquire, How do others feel towards religion? Let others do as they will, it is for us to serve the Lord. In every relationship, in the domestic circle, in the literary world, in the sphere of friendship, or in business connections, I am to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ." If I am perplexed, I am bound to ask, What would Jesus do? and His example is to guide me. If I cannot conceive of His acting in a certain way, neither must I allow myself to do so; but if I perceive from His precept, His spirit, or His action that He would follow such and such a course, to that line I must keep.

From our text I should also gather that we are to go to the Lord Jesus Christ for stimulus. We want not only an example, but a motive, an impulse and constraining power, to keep us

True to That Example.

We need to put on zeal as a cloak, and to be covered with a holy influence which will urge us onward. Let us go to the Lord Jesus for motives. Some fly to Moses, and would drive themselves to duty by the thunders of Sinai. Their design in service is to earn eternal life, or prevent the loss of the favor of God. Thus they come under law, and forsake the true way of the believer, which is faith. Not from dread of punishment or hope of hire do believers serve the living God; but we put on Christ, and the love of Christ constraineth us. Here is the spring of true holiness.

Beloved, the text means more than this. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ;" that is, find in Jesus your strength. Although you are saved, and are quickened by the Holy Spirit, so as to be a living child of the living God, yet you have no strength for heavenly duty except as you receive it from above. Go to Jesus for power. I charge you, never say, "I shall do the right because I have resolved to do it. I am a man of strong mind; I am determined to resist this evil, and I know I shall not yield. I have made up my mind, and there is no fear of my turning aside." Brother, if you rely upon yourself in that way, you will soon prove to be a broken reed. Failure follows at the heel of self-confidence. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ."

Once more, observe the speciality which is seen in this dress. It is specially adapted to each individual believer. Paul does not say merely to one person, "Put thou on the Lord Jesus Christ," but to all of us, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." Can all the saints put on Christ, whether babes, young men, or fathers? You could not all of you wear my coat, I am quite certain; and I am equally certain that I could not wear the garments of many of the young people now present; but here is a matchless garment, which will be found without expansion or contraction. Whoever puts on the Lord Jesus Christ has put on a robe which will be his glory and beauty. In every case the example of Jesus is admirably suited for copying. Suppose a child of God should be a king; what better advice could I give to him, when about to rule a nation, than this, "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ?" Be such a king as Jesus would have been. Nay, copy His royal character. Suppose, on the other hand, that the person before us is a poor woman from the workhouse; shall I say the same to her? Yes, and with equal propriety; for Jesus was very poor, and is a most suitable example for those who have no home of their own. O worker, put on Christ, and be full of zeal! O sufferer, put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and abound in patience!

Suitable for Every Believer,

II. Secondly, let us inquire

What is This Daily Dress?

The Lord Jesus Christ is to be put on. We see how the sacred dress is here described in three words. The sacred titles of the Son of God are spread out at length: "Put ye on the Lord—Jesus—Christ." Put Him on as Lord. Call Him your Master and Lord, and you will do well. Be you His servant in everything. Submit every faculty, every capacity, every talent, every possession, to His government. Submit all that you have and are to Him, and delight to own His superior right, and His royal claim to you. Be Christ's man; His servant, under bonds to his service for ever, finding therein life and liberty. Let the dominion of your Lord cover the kingdom of your nature.

Then put on Jesus. Jesus means a Saviour: in every part be covered by Him in that blessed capacity. You, a sinner, hide yourself in Jesus, your Saviour, who shall save you from your sins. He is your sanctifier driving out sin, and your preserver keeping sin from returning. Jesus is your armor against sin. You overcome through His blood. In Him you are defended against every weapon of the enemy: He is your shield, keeping you from all evil. He covers you all over like a complete suit of armor, so that when arrows of temptation fly like a fiery shower, they may be quenched upon heavenly mail, and you may stand unharmed amid a shower of deaths.

Put on Jesus, and then put on Christ. You know that Christ signifies "anointed." Now, our Lord is anointed as Prophet, Priest, and King, and as such we put Him on. What a splendid thing it is to put on Christ as the anointed Prophet, and to accept His teaching as our creed! I believe it. Why? Because He said it. This is argument enough for me. Mine not to argue, or doubt, or criticize; the Christ has said it, and I, putting Him on, find in His authority the end of all strife. What Christ declares, I believe; discussion ends where Christ begins. Put Him on also as your Priest. Notwithstanding your sins, your unworthiness, your defilement, go to the altar of the Lord by Him who, as Priest, has taken away your sin, clothed you with His merit, and made you acceptable to God. In our great High Priest we enter within the veil. We are in Him; by faith we realize this, and so put Him on as our Priest, and lose ourselves in His accepted sacrifice. Our Lord Jesus is also anointed to be King. Oh, put Him on in His imperial majesty, by yielding your every wish and thought to His sway!

The Wardrobe.

I now wish to take you to the wardrobe for a minute, and ask you to look over the articles of our outfit. See here (Col. 3:12), "Put on therefore;" you see everything is to be put on; nothing is to be left on the pegs for the moth to eat, nor is the window to be idly stared at: you put on the whole armor of God. In true religion everything is designed for practical use. See what follows—these choice things come in pairs—"humbleness of mind, meekness." These choice garments are no so much esteemed as they should be. The clot of one called "Proud-of-heart" is very fashionable and the trimmings of Mr. Masterful are much in request. It is a melancholy thing to see what great men some Christians are. Permit me to say to an dear brother who has not a very tender nature who is naturally hard and rasping, "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ," my brother, and make not provision for that unfeeling nature of yours. Endeavor to be lowly in mind, that you may be gentle in spirit.

See, next, we are to put on long-suffering and forbearance. Some men have no patience with others: how can they expect God to have patience with them? Our Lord was full of forbearance. "Consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied, and faint in your minds." Put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and bear and forbear. Put up with a great deal that really ought not to be inflicted upon you, and be ready to bear still more rather than give or take offence. "Forgiving one another, against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." Is not this heavenly teaching? Put it in practice. Put ye on your Lord! Have you fallen to loggerheads with one another, and did I hear one of you growling, "I'll, I'll, I'll—" Stop, brother! What will you do? If you are true to the Lord Jesus Christ you will not avenge yourself, but give place unto wrath. Put the Lord Jesus on your tongue, and you will not talk so bitterly; put Him on your heart, and you will not feel so fiercely; put Him on your whole character, and you will readily forgive, not only this once, but unto seven times seven.

If Any Man Have a Quarrel

"And above all these things put on charity which is the bond of perfectness." Love is the girdle which binds up the other garments, and keeps all the other graces well braced, and in their right places. Put on love—what a golden girdle! Are we all putting on love? We have been baptized into Christ, and we profess to have put on Christ; but do we daily try to put on love? Our baptism was not true if we are not buried to all old enmities. We may have a great many faults, but God grants that we may be full of love to Jesus, to His people and to all mankind!

Put on the Lord Jesus Christ

For Daily Wear.

Not for high days and holy days only, but for all time, and every time. Put on the Lord Jesus Christ on the Lord's-day, but do not lay Him aside during the week. Ladies have ornaments which they put on occasionally for display on grand occasions: a rule, these jewels are hidden away in a jewel-case Christians, you must wear your jewels always. Put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and have no casket in which to conceal any part of Him. Put on Christ to keep Him on. I saw a missionary from the cold north the other day, and he was wearing a coat of moose-skin, which he had worn among the Red Indians. "It is a capital coat," he said, "there's nothing like leather. I have Worn It for Eleven Years.

In the arctic region through which he had travelled he had worn this garment both by night and by day; for the climate was much too cold to allow the taking off of anything. Brethren, the world is far too cold to allow of our taking off Christ even for an hour. So many arrows are flying about that we dare not remove a single piece of our armor even for an instant. Thank God, we have in our Lord a dress which we may always wear. We can live in it, and die in it; we can work in it, and rest in it, and, like the raiment of Israel in the wilderness, it will never wax old. Put it on more.

Put on the Lord in every time of trial. Do not take Him off when it comes to the test. Quaint Henry Smith says that some people wear the Lord Jesus as a man wears his hat, which he takes off to everybody he meets. I am afraid I know persons of that kind, who wear Christ in private, but they off with Him in company, especially in the company of the worldly, the sarcastic, and the unbelieving. Put on Christ, intending never to put Him off again. When tempted, tried, ridiculed, hear in your ear this voice, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." Put Him on the more as others tempt you to put Him off.

III. My time fails me, and I must hurriedly notice, in the third place,

How We Are to Act in This Dress

ward evil. The text says, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." By the flesh is here meant the evil part of us, which is so greatly aided by the appetites and desires of the body. When a man puts on Christ, has he still the flesh about him? Alas! it is even so. I hear some brethren say that they have no remaining corruptions. I claim liberty to believe as much as I like of a man's statements as to his own personal character. When he bears witness concerning himself, his witness may or may not be true. When a man tells me that he is perfect, I hear what he has to say, but I quietly think within myself that if he had been so, he would not have felt the necessity of spreading his information. "Good wine needs no bush; and when our town once holds a perfect man within its bounds there will be no need to advertise him." Foods that are puffed probably need puffery. Brethren, I fear we have all very much of the flesh about us, and therefore we need be on our guard against it. What does the apostle say? "Make no provision for the flesh." By this he means several things.

First, give no tolerance to it. Do not say, "Christ has sanctified me so far; but you see I have a bad temper naturally, and you cannot expect it to be removed." Dear brother, do not make provision or thus sheltering and sparing one of Your Soul's Enemies.

Another person cries, "You know I always was a good deal desponding; and therefore I can never have much joy in the Lord." Don't make room for your unbelief. If you find a kennel for this dog, it will always lie in it. "But," says another, "I was always rather fond of gaiety, and so I must mix up with the world." Well, if you cook a dinner for the devil, he will take a seat at your table. This is to make provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts of it.

Moreover, give sin no time. Allow no furlough to your obedience. Do not say to yourself, "At all other times I am exact, but once in a year, at a family meeting, I take a little liberty." Is it liberty to you to sin? I am afraid there is something rotten in your heart. "Ah!" cries one, "I only allow myself an hour or two occasionally with questionable company. I know it does me harm; but we must all have a little relaxation, and the talk is very amusing, though rather loose." Is evil a relaxation to you? It ought to be worse than slavery. What a trial is foolish talking to a child of God! How can you find pleasure in it? Give no license to the flesh; you cannot tell how far it will go. Keep it always under subjection, and make no pace for its indulgence.

Provide no food for it. Carve it no rations. Starve it out; at any rate, if it wants fodder, let it look elsewhere. When you are allotting your provision to the body, the soul, the spirit, allot nothing to the depraved passions. If the flesh says, "What is for me?" say, "Nothing." Some people like a little bit of reading for the flesh. As some people like a little bit of what they call "rather high" meat, so do these folk enjoy a portion of tainted doctrine, or questionable morality. Thus they make provision for the flesh, and the flesh takes care to feed thereon, and to give its lusts a meal. I have known professors, whom I would not dare to judge, dabble just a little in matters which they would forbid to others, but they think them allowable to themselves, if done in secret. "You must not be too exact," they say. But the apostle says, "Make not provision for the flesh." Do not give it a morsel; do not even allow it the crumbs that fall from your table. The flesh is greedy, and never hath enough; and if you give it some provision, it will steal much more.

"Put on the Lord Jesus Christ," for

He is Coming.

the beloved of our souls! Over the hills we hear the trumpet sounding; the heralds are crying aloud, "The Bridegroom cometh! The Bridegroom cometh!" Though He has seemed to tarry, He has been always coming post haste. To-day we hear His chariot-wheels in the distance. Nearer and nearer is His advent. Let us not sleep, as do others. Blessed are they who will be ready for the wedding when the Bridegroom cometh. What is that wedding dress that shall make us ready? Nothing can make us more fit to meet Christ, and to be with Him in his glory, than for us to put on Christ to-day. If I take pleasure in Jesus here, Jesus will take pleasure in me when He shall meet me in the air, and take me up to dwell with Himself for ever. Put on the wedding dress, ye beloved of the Lord! Put on the wedding dress, ye brides of the Lamb, and put it on at once, for behold, He cometh! Haste, haste, ye slumbering virgins! Arise and trim your lamps! Put on your robes, and be ready to behold His glory, and to take part in it. Oh ye virgin souls, go forth to meet Him; with joy and gladness go forth, wearing Himself as your gorgeous apparel, fit for the daughters of a King. The Lord bless you, for Christ's sake! Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

At a Christian's Funeral.—Mr. J. Thomson said: "When I was preaching in Dundee at a certain mission, one of the best Christian workers there was laid aside by illness. One morning while at breakfast she became unwell, and was taken up to bed. For a long time she lingered, then passed away. As she lay dying she said to me with great earnestness, 'Mr Thomson, stand out for God, for I am going to be with Him soon.' Her father and family of seven, with their friends, sung around her grave that hymn, 'A few more years shall roll.' Then, as each holding a cord, gently lowered the coffin, the mourners sang, what they felt to be true,

'Safe in the arms of Jesus.'

They knew that she was then safe with Him whom in this life she had served so faithfully. Yes, we can rejoice with the dead in Christ. We know that the change for them means increase of joy and glory, but those who die in their sins perish everlastingly."

Liquor Casks Thrown Overboard.—Mr. Thomson said: "I have seen the whole of a ship's crew, consisting of fifty men, in jeopardy of their lives for seven days through strong drink; the crew all drunk and in a semi-mutinous state, the captain confined below, and the ship with no one at the helm, careering over the broad Pacific before the wind. I remember saying to the captain, 'This will never do; the vessel is foundering, and soon, if nothing be done, we shall all be lost.' The crew were somewhat sobered by the imminence of their danger. The captain was brought on deck, and gathering the crew around him, he said, 'We are in the middle of the Pacific, and unless something is done, and that quickly, we shall be lost.' Then turning to me, he said, 'Sir, will you take the helm?' 'I will,' I replied, 'and if you will do what I ask you there will soon not be a drunken man on board.' 'What is that?' he inquired. 'I fear you will not do it; yet it is our only chance. Throw all the liquor barrels overboard!' To my surprise the captain consented; and, sending the men below, the liquor casks were one by one thrown over the side, and in three or four hours there was not a drop of liquor on board. Drink almost wrecked that vessel. How many noble vessels have been wrecked through drink, and how many human beings with precious souls on board have been wrecked on their voyage heavenward by that accursed thing! Is it not time that once and for all a stop should be put to traffic in the use of that which bestializes the body and sinks the soul into eternal woe?"

A Converted Sailor's Testimony.—"One Night some years ago I went into an evangelistic meeting, and there heard the 'blessed gospel.' After the address there were testimonies, and one man rose and said, 'When I left my house in West Beach I had sadly abused my poor wife. I was a perfect demon, and had kicked and bruised her until I thought she was dead. Then I left her lying on the floor. I was a sailor. Half-way across the North Sea our vessel was overtaken by a terrible storm. All thought we must perish. God seemed to speak to my heart, and in the midst of the gale, with almost as great a tempest in my heart, I cried for mercy, and there and then I found a friend in Jesus.' I remember thinking, as I sat and looked up into the face of the sailor who thus testified, 'Can I not get a friend like that?' I was then only a cabin boy, and it was seven or eight years before I came to a saving knowledge of Christ, and learned there was no joy like the joy which Christ gives the poor sinner who comes to Him."

"Dr. Thomas Chalmers was Preaching in His church, and he told the people to live morally, to strive to do good, to do the best they could, and keep the character of Christ before them as their pattern. He expected the people to get better and better, but there did not seem to be much difference; and, after eight years of ministry, when he looked back he saw his flock had been retrograding instead of advancing. He was greatly troubled, and spent three sleepless nights trying to discover the cause of this backward movement. Then the Holy Spirit showed him that there was no blood, no atonement, in his preaching. Then the blood of Christ was applied to his own soul, and on the next Sunday he entered the pulpit, a new man, to preach a new gospel, the old good news of salvation, remission of sins through the blood of Christ. At once a great revival sprang up in his church, which spread over Edinburgh and Glasgow, and gave a great impetus to the cause of Christ. We cannot be saved by good works, but by believing that Jesus Christ died for us."

A Change of Fortune and Friends.—"I Knew a gentleman who, when I first became acquainted with him, was very rich, and making money fast. He belonged to a certain Christian denomination, and subscribed very largely toward it. There was not a church built in Glasgow belonging to that denomination in which he did not own a good few stones. Of course he had friends by the dozen, who only regretted they had no opportunity to testify their friendship. Through no fault of his own this gentleman unexpectedly lost all his money. Then what became of his friends? One by one they fell away, and not one proved himself a friend indeed. About a year ago he died, after only an hour's illness, leaving behind him a wife and six children. Did his friends come forward then? No, but God did. He who is the Husband to the widow, and Father to the fatherless, took the family of His faithful servant under His protecting care; and now He has amply provided for them on the other side of the globe. 'He is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble.'"

The Rainbow Above the Martyr's Head.—"During the persecutions in Madagascar, a great many of the common people were tossed over a cliff or precipice, but the nobles could not be thus disposed of. It was against the law of the land to shed noble blood, so they were burned. Many, very many of them, thus suffered martyrdom, at a spot upon which now stands a church, called the 'Children's Church' because it was built by the contributions of the boys and girls of England and Scotland. On that spot perished the last noble who was burned. His execution took place immediately before the death of the wicked queen who persecuted the Christians. It was raining as he was led out to execution, and just as the pile was lighted, and the flames began to mount, a beautiful rainbow appeared in the sky, seemingly arched over the martyr's head. The Christians in the crowd, who had braved all danger of arrest in order to see the last of their companion, saw with joy this sign in the heavens, and said as they gazed upon it, 'It is a sign that

The Late Mr. A. Lincoln, Died March 5.

The Late General Crook, Died March 21. (See page 197.)

General Caprivi, Bismarck's Successor.

God has not forgotten us. Noah had his bow, and it was the beginning of a new era for him. It may be that it foretells the same for us.' And it did so. Very soon the queen died, and the Christians breathed freely, and were able once more publicly to worship their God. The Church seems to thrive best in persecution. The leaders may be removed, but others step into their places, and how futile are the efforts of the world's great ones to overthrow the kingdom of our Lord!"

THE LATE ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

(See Portrait.)

THE young man whose early death has already been mentioned in our news columns, and whose portrait is here given, was the only surviving grandson of the "martyr President." He was the son of Mr. Robert T. Lincoln, our Minister to England. He died on March 5 from the effects of an operation performed upon him for carbuncle under the arm seventeen weeks before his death. He was at Versailles, France, when the operation was performed, having been sent there to study French preparatory to a course at Harvard. After the operation he was taken to London in the hope that the skill of the English physicians might save him, but all their efforts proved unavailing.

Young Abraham Lincoln was born in Chicago in 1871, and was therefore in his nineteenth year when he died. He attended school in Washington while his father was Secretary of War, and afterward in Chicago. It was his father's intention to have him go to Phillips Academy, at Exeter, N. H., and then to Harvard. He was so far along in his studies that he could have entered Harvard next year. His Latin, Greek, and mathematics, were up to a college examination when he left Chicago. Professor C. N. Fessenden, who was his teacher here for more than two years, said he was the best scholar in the school, being well grounded in English literature.

GENERAL CAPRIVI,

Prince Bismarck's Successor.

(See Portrait.)

It is a singularly significant fact that the German Emperor has selected a soldier to succeed Bismarck as the Chancellor of the German Empire. In European courts, the choice is felt to be ominous. It is thought to be an intimation that the Emperor expects that the duties of the highest official in his realm will be more of a military than a civil character.

The new Chancellor's full name is George Leo von Caprivi de Caprara de Montecuccoli. He is fifty-nine years of age, having been born in Berlin on February 24, 1831. In 1849, at the age of eighteen, he volunteered as a private in the Kaiserfranz Grenadiers. He served in the ranks and as a petty officer until 1861, when he was put on the general staff, with the rank of captain. In 1866, for good service in Bohemia, he was made a major. He rose steadily after this until the Franco-German War, in which he rendered distinguished services at the battles about Metz and Orleans, and afterward in the campaign of the Loire. In 1872 he was taken into the Ministry of War, with the rank of colonel, and in 1873 became a major-general.

In 1882 he was appointed to command the Thirtieth Division at Metz, and in 1883, when General Stosch retired from the Imperial Ministry of the Marine, General Caprivi was appointed vice-admiral and his successor. He remained at the head of the navy until about a year ago, when he resigned.

The Emperor conferred upon him the Grand Cross of the Red Eagle, and placed him in command of the Tenth Army Corps in Hanover. He has remained there until the present time.

ALICE TRAVERS' ENEMY.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text of April 6.

(See illustration on page 205.)

"HAVE you heard any news of young Gifford?" asked Mrs. Merton of her husband, as they sat at breakfast in the comfortable village parsonage one winter morning.

"I believe he has left the neighborhood permanently," said Dr. Merton. "It must have been some sudden call, for he did not take his baggage with him. Widow Cowley says he spent all night packing up, and asked her to keep his trunks till he sent for them. Then, in the morning, about the time he usually went to his business in the city, he paid the rent of his rooms, wished her and her daughter good-bye, and went away, saying he should not come back. It is very mysterious, and I suspect the widow knows more than she is willing to tell."

"Some trouble with Alice Travers, I should say," said Mrs. Merton. "He was such a very devoted lover that if anything went awry there he would take it very much to heart."

"Possibly; though Alice is so good and true I think the fault could not have been on her side."

"Oh, you don't know," said Mrs. Merton, who, with all her good qualities, was not free from the disposition not to think very charitably of her own sex. "Those very quiet, gentle girls are sad flirts sometimes. The Travers family have had a good deal of company at the farm lately, and if Alice has been flirting with one of her cousins, Mr. Gifford would soon hear of it, for Ann Cowley goes there to help with the work when there is company. Ann would tell her mother; and Edward Gifford living in their house, the old woman would be sure to tell him."

"Oh, don't be so suspicious, my dear. It is too bad to impute such a scheme to the widow."

"Of course, I have no proof," said Mrs. Merton; "but if the truth ever comes out, I am pretty sure you will find I am right."

"Poor Alice!" said the clergyman, meditatively, "I am sorry for her, anyhow; she will feel it sadly, I fear."

Dr. Merton's fear was confirmed when, an hour later, while on his way to visit a sick member of his flock, he met Mr. Travers. "Could you spare time to come up to the farm, Doctor?" he asked. "Alice is very low; I think a talk with you would do her good. You know the trouble, I presume?"

"Yes, I know something of it. I will call presently, and see what I can do."

It was not difficult for Dr. Merton to win Alice's confidence. All his people, and even strangers, were drawn to him as if instinctively assured that in him they would find sympathy. She showed him a brief note that her lover had sent her on the day he left the village. It was evidently written under strong feeling rigorously suppressed. It told her that the writer had reason to believe that she was deceiving him, and that as he was convinced he did not hold exclusive possession of her heart, he had decided to break their engagement and go away.

"Oh if he had only told me himself," Alice said, tearfully, "I am sure I could have explained. I don't know what he can have heard. I have been quite true to him in heart and in conduct. I have never had an unfaithful thought. O Doctor, I do love him so much I think this will break my heart." The poor girl covered her face and wept bitterly. "Some one must have slandered me," she said, through her sobs. "I will find out who it is, and I will punish them for it, whoever it is."

"Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord," quoted Dr. Merton. "Believe me, my poor child, if any one has done you wrong, you may safely leave it to God. Don't cherish vindictive thoughts. You are a follower of Jesus, and He told us to love, even our enemies. It was a hard commandment, but it is the higher law that we are all striving to fulfil. Let this pass, my child; nothing happens to us contrary to the will of our loving Father. Let that cheer you. He knows your suffering. Bear it patiently as a discipline, and do not trouble yourself about the instruments. Leave it in His hands who careth for you. We will commit it to Him."

Alice knelt with her adviser, and the whole matter was presented at the throne of grace. The girl rose with a calmer feeling in her heart than she had had since the blow fell. Anger was giving place to faith, and natural resentment to the supernatural law of love. The sweet spirit of trust grew as it was nourished, and as the days and weeks passed Dr. Merton rejoiced to see that the wound, if not healed, was giving her less pain. He encouraged her to visit the poor and sick among his people, to win their confidence, and to listen to their troubles. It diverted her mind from her own sorrow, and she applied to herself the consolations she gave to other tried ones. Alice was surely nearer heaven than if this trial had never come upon her. She had more of the spirit of her Master.

There was one house, however, that Alice did not visit. More than once that spring Widow Cowley had been sick; but Alice, who was usually quick to hear of sickness, and to carry relief, did not go there. Dr. Merton had suggested her going, but Alice had excused herself. The clergyman was not sure as to her motive. It might be that her lover having lived there, the house would be a painful reminder of her sorrow; or it might be that Alice shared the suspicions which his wife still cherished against the widow. If the latter was the difficulty, the clergyman was anxious that Alice should achieve this final victory over herself. The widow was seriously ill now, and was in need of help. She had secured another boarder in young Gifford's place, and popular rumor was busy with an engagement between him and Ann, the widow's daughter, which was said to have been made. Dr. Merton found the old lady in much pain, and her nursing sadly neglected by her daughter; so he urged Alice to go to her.

"Do not ask me, that, Doctor," she said, with tears in her eyes; "I cannot do it. It is too much. I am convinced that they were the cause of my trouble. I have thought it all out long ago, and I am sure of it. I would not injure them if I could—"

"I am glad of that," the clergyman put in, remembering Alice's threats when her trouble was fresh, "You have gained one step. It is a passive one; and now I want you to gain another—the active one. 'Do good to them that hate you, and pray for them who despitefully use you.'"

Alice shook her head. "It is too hard for me," she said; "you do not know how I suffered, and still suffer."

"You know where to gain the strength to conquer yourself, Alice. He who has helped you thus far will help you to the end."

The next day Alice was at the Widow Cowley's bedside, and under her hands the room became scarcely recognizable. Neatness and order took the place of the muss, which, as the widow said, had fairly made her hands itch to clear up. She could rest now, and Alice read to her and sang to her, and when she went away, left on her table, within reach of her hand, the jellies and delicacies that the old woman relished. Widow Cowley watched her as she went around the room with strange, wistful eyes, and after she was gone the old woman shed tears. Alice's heart was lighter as she went homeward. "If I were as sick and miserable as that woman," she said to herself, "I should be thankful for help, even if I had done as wickedly as she has. It was worth the effort for His sake. He wished it. 'As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.'"

The next visit was less difficult, for Alice pitied the poor woman, who must be suffering not only physical pain, but a reproaching conscience. The widow was really grateful, and rejoiced to see her. "I thought about you all last night," she said. "You are real good. I don't deserve your kindness. You don't know how bad I am. I must tell you, though you'll never come again when you know." Then the widow made her confession, and Alice forgave her from her heart. "I'll put it right yet, if I can," said the widow.

The widow grew worse as the days passed and clung to Alice as to a daughter. She was evidently slowly dying, and Alice was there every day. One morning, near the last, as the ministering girl was going to the cottage laden, as usual, with a basket containing such things as might tempt the patient's failing appetite, she met the old letter-carrier with his mail-bag. "I was just going to the farm, Miss," he said, "but, as the only letter is for you, I'll give it you here and save a journey." Alice took it and recognized the well-remembered hand. She opened it there where she stood, and read with tear-dimmed eyes her lover's plea for forgiveness. So circumstantial, he said, had been the reports which had prejudiced him, that nothing could have convinced him of their falsity but the widow's confession, which he had just received. What could have prompted her to humiliate herself by making such a confession, he could not understand. He had suffered bitterly, and humbly begged pardon for the suffering he had caused her. Alice felt that she had received a double blessing; but the greater was that in her own heart, which God alone can give and none can take away.

Alice Travers' Letter.

WILL IT LIFT?

THE STORY OF A FOG.

By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,

Author of "Simon Holmes," "Nestleton Magna,"

"Matthew Mellowdew," etc.

It was a dull, damp, dismal evening in late November. The all-pervading fog peculiar to that month of gloom in the big, bustling, almost boundless London town had settled thick and dark and heavy upon street and square, wrapping things in its chill moist garments, hiding all things beneath its dense gray pall.

Nowhere did the smoke counterpane lie more thick, heavy, and oppressive than in those narrow streets which lie behind the broad thoroughfare of Tottenham Court Road, and which seem to converge, as if with some design to link themselves to a region of gentility, on the once aristocratic Fitzroy Square. Very slowly, and also very cautiously, did the few solitary wayfarers who were of necessity abroad make progress toward the goal of their endeavor. They were eager enough to get out of the murky atmosphere, which made their eyes to smart, and their lungs to ache, and yet were wisely bent on walking warily, lest they should stumble into ills they knew not of. The light of the street-lamps was all but swallowed up in the almost Egyptian gloom. It was only by keeping careful and unbroken touch with walls and railings that pedestrians could make anything like safe and certain progress, and even then neither the certainty nor the safety could be at all assured.

Moving forward in this slow and all but helpless fashion, a young woman was painfully striving to win the shelter of her humble home, if her dingy quarters, in a dingier street, could be called by that expressive and endearing name. On arriving at the corner of Goodge Street, she stood for several moments in dire uncertainty as to her whereabouts. To reach home she must lose touch of both wall and railing, for she needed to cross the road. By and by she made an adventurous plunge into the deep fog-ocean, and had but barely left the curbstone when a four-wheeled cab came upon her at unawares, and in an instant she was thrown upon the ground.

The horse, which was moving but slowly, considerably stopped, and the young woman's cry of alarm soon brought both the cabman and his "fare" to her relief. The fog-confused driver, however, still further confused by certain inward applications which he had swallowed to "keep the fog out," could see no source from whence the startling cry had come; so he prepared to remount his box.

"Hold on, Jarvie!" said a broad-shouldered, burly man of middle age, with a bluff, cheery voice. He had gone down on his hands and knees, and was groping among the horse's feet. "Hold on, Jarvie; keep the horse quiet—I've found something here. Looks like a woman." So saying, he proceeded to remove the unknown something from her perilous position.

Jarvie did not seem to realize the seriousness of the situation, for he responded in a maundering fashion, "Ha! ha! that's a good 'un, that is; keep the horse still, eh? He can manage that himself. He'll stand as still as a statumenfrom now till the day o' judgment, he will. He's a 'oss as has a peculiar gift that way."

The young woman had fallen into a dead faint, and her rescuer had a good deal of difficulty in his kindly purpose. At length he succeeded in seating her on the edge of the pavement, kneeling by her the while she leaned lifelessly upon his arm. "There, ma'am," said he heartily, unaware that she had lapsed into unconsciousness, "you're all right. Tell me where you live, and if that half-screwed Jarvie can find the way, we'll put you down at your own doorstep." The appeal was made to deaf ears, however, and there was no reply.

"Hallo!" said the burly stranger, surveying his charge more closely, "here's a go! The woman's gone and fainted right off the reel. No, she reeled before she fainted. Heigho! big parcel, perishable goods, marked 'Immediate,' and no address! Gilbert Craske, you've got your hands full. Jarvie, do you carry a smelling-bottle?"

"A smelling-bottle? no!" said the cabby, with the ready wit peculiar to his tribe. "Left it in the drorin'-room, on the piano." At the same time he drew near to make his own inspection of the case.

Tenderly and patiently Gilbert Craske tried to bring her back to consciousness, but in vain; and, to tell the truth, he began to feel not a little dismayed. All the shops were closed; the density of the fog had effectively cleared the streets of all humankind, and the probability of his having the unknown "something" thrown on his hands made him feel uncommonly uncomfortable. "Of course," said he to himself, "that's always the way with women. Off they go into Noncompas land with neither a 'with your leave' nor a 'by your leave!'

If her fainting would have done anybody the least good in all the world—would she ha' fainted then? Not she! She'd ha' been as lively as a mouse in a corn-bin. Queer folks, women!"

Again he turned his attention to his charge, venturing to shake her gently, in the vain hope that that might bring her to. Then he shouted aloud, "Missis!" with the hope that that might rouse her. "I say, Jarvie," said he to the cabman, "is there any sort of a hospi—"

"Here y' are!" said the cabman, diving his hand into the capacious pocket of his threadbare overcoat. "Put a drop or two o' this here owdykolonn atween her lips. That'll fetch her to, if she ain't gone to kingdom come." So saying, he handed his fare a small flask of brandy, an article with which he himself, like many more, was evidently sadly too familiar.

Gilbert Craske made a wry face as he became acquainted with the contents of the flask. "Well," said he, "everything has a use, I suppose, even hornets, whipsnakes, an' dingoes. I'd very much sooner set my heel on it; but it may—"

While he was speaking he had forced a few drops of the spirit between the young woman's lips, and a spasmodic cough had cut his sentence short. It was rough treatment, certainly, but what could he do? It had the desired effect. She opened her eyes, half-dazed as yet, and whispered, "Where am I?"

"Where are you, my dear?" said Gilbert, pitifully; "why, here, snugly blanketed in a reg'lar three-pile, double-milled, thick-wove, superfine London fog. And as safe as if you were with your mother, Miss. That you may take your vow on." She felt the truth of that last remark intuitively, and said, with a faint smile, "Thank you, I know it. I can go home now."

"Know it, do you, Miss? Well, that's a good 'un! No, I must be a good 'un, or you wouldn't know it so slick. Thank you, Miss. Now we're quits. But as to going home by yourself—no, thank you. What! and crawl under another 'crawler' before you get there! Tell me where it is, and Jarvie shall drive you round."

"Oh, it's only in the next street, thank you," she answered, "the next turning to the right—No. 59; but I can find it myself. Thank you very much, and good night." She was willing and even anxious to carry out her purpose, but though the spirit was willing, the flesh was weak—weak through more serious causes, than her swoon—and had she not been steadied by the arm of Gilbert Craske, she must have again fallen to the ground.

"Well, here's a go!" said Gilbert, taking no notice of her request to be left to herself. "And so you are close at home, and so far as getting there was concerned, you might as well have been at Adelaide, Melbourne, or Brisbane! Hey, but that's the country, Miss, I can tell you. You never have to swim there in greasy pea-soup, or live in a smoky kitchen with an eternal washin' goin' on. Drive gently, Jarvie. The next street to the right, No. 59."

"Shan't do no such thing," mumbled Jarvie, tip-sily mounting the box. "Gently, indeed, with such a Flying Dutchman as this 'ere! Now, then, Rosy Nanty, show 'em your heels!" But for all that, they crawled gently enough, and after much pains and many mistakes, Gilbert Craske and his feeble companion stood on the doorstep of No. 59.

The door was opened by a strikingly comely lady, whose silver hair was bordered by a widow's cap. She held aloft a lighted lamp, so that its rays might the better pierce the gloom, and Gilbert Craske had a full, clear view of a well-remembered face. His gray eyes fixed themselves upon her—his mouth was open in silent astonishment. His hand meanwhile was rapidly stroking his long brown beard.

"Thank you with all my heart, dear sir," said the young woman, offering her hand. "Good-night."

He took the proffered hand, shook it mechanically, keeping his eyes fixed upon the face beyond. The young woman's hand was somewhat suddenly withdrawn, and the door was closed.

"Well, well, this is a go!" said Gilbert Craske, bringing his broad hand with a vigorous slap upon his thigh; and turning abruptly from the door, he was immediately swallowed up, absorbed by the dense November fog.

"Who is that, Mercy? and what has brought him here?" inquired the silver-haired lady in the widow's cap, as soon as the door was shut.

"Who or what he is, I don't know, mamma," Mercy answered; "but he has been a friend in need to me, although I don't suppose I should have needed one if it had not been for him. It sounds like a contradiction; but I'll tell you how it was."

Straightway the young lady gave her mother a full account, so far as she understood it, of the event that had brought the middle-aged stranger to their door that night. They were still standing in the passage, for the widow seemed very anxious for an explanation. Then, when it was given, Mrs. Graythorpe heaved a sigh of relief, kissed her daughter fondly, and led the way through the foggy atmosphere to a higher floor of the house.

"It was very kind of him," said she, as they ascended the stairs, "but he must be a great oddity to stand and stare like that, and make off with never a parting word. I wonder who he can be!" They entered a small ill-furnished room on the first floor of the humble domicile in which they resided. It was dimly lighted by two candles placed on the mantelpiece, for these, even with the help of the lamp carried by Mrs. Graythorpe, and the low fire which burned in the grate, could not dissipate—could not so very greatly diminish the all-pervading, almost impervious fog.

On a small couch, drawn near to the fire, was reclining a girl of nineteen or twenty years of age. One glance at her thin and pallid features told in language all too plain that she was an invalid, and accounted for the whispered explanation having to take place in the lower passage.

"Well, Millie dear, how do you feel to-night?" said the elder sister, bending down to kiss the fair white brow. To which she answered: "Better, I think. Just a little. But never mind me, Mercy. Have some tea—you do look so tired; and tell us what success you have had in town."

"Oh, well," said Mercy, in a hopeful tone, well simulated, but lacking the genuine ring, "as I said yesterday, we can hardly expect to succeed all at once, you know. Plums don't drop into folks' mouths, Millie. We must be patient."

Poor Mercy! It was really a very little plum that she had been looking for. Only a little money to buy bread for herself and her mother, and a little of something daintier for the patient and feeble invalid, and to make sure that they could keep a roof over their heads, however humble it might be. But so far from having dropped within her sweet lips, Mercy had not even seen the plum hanging amid all the dry and leafless branches on the grim forbidding tree of mighty London town.

"I have seen a good many dealers to-day," she continued, still keeping up her hopeful tone. "All of them declare that the drawings are good. 'Real art,' some of them say; but the one weary, weary, monotonous answer of the whole of them, day in and day out, is, 'Times are bad—very bad; and the market is overstocked'—and Mercy sought to stifle a sigh by swallowing it in company with a sip from the teacup which she held in her hand.

Millie turned on her couch, heaved an involuntary sigh, and said: "Dear Mercy, how tired you must be! and all to so little purpose. But what have you done with the pictures? I watched to see whether you had brought them back, and when you entered the room without them I began to hope, poor little simpleton as I am, that somebody had taken them after all."

Millie covered her pale face with a pair of thin hands, in a vain effort to dismiss the tears that would start in spite of her.

"Why, there, Millie, that is just where I really have a tiny bit of hope. The last place I called at was a little print-shop at the corner of Dorset Street, Strand. It didn't look to have much in it, or to offer me much encouragement. I could but ask, I thought; and, at any rate, they would let me sit down a little bit and rest my tired feet. There was such a funny little man in the shop—a German or a Dutchman, I should fancy, his English was so odd. 'Vell, young Mees,' said he, almost before I got within the door, 'vat you wants to puy?'

"I felt that if I was to say at once that I had come to try to sell and not to buy, I should certainly secure for myself an abrupt dismissal. I was so thoroughly tired and weary that my limbs trembled, and I could scarcely stagger to a chair. To gain the luxury of a few minutes' rest, I asked the price of some crayons I had seen in the window, which would, I felt certain, serve you as hints for sketches of our own. I had a sort of inspiration given me that, as I had failed to sell, I might perhaps obtain a little money by negotiating an exchange. 'There are three little sketches in your window,' said I, 'drawn in crayon; would you mind allowing me to examine them?'

"'Ha!' said the little man, nodding a compliment. 'De young Mees can judge goot. Dem little trawings are vat you call de gems. De people vat comes and goes are plind—plind as te little bat. Dey puy te rubbish and pays te big moneys, ha! ha! But de young Mees haf a peautiful eye—nein, an eye for de peautiful. Dere!' said he, placing the sketches in my hands with a smiling countenance, 'dem is goot, an' v-e-r-y sheap.'

"'Yes,' said I, 'I saw at once they were the work of a true artist, but they must be very cheap if they are to be mine, for I have little money to spare.'

"'Dey are goot, and dey are sheap,' said the little shopman. 'You can haf 'em for tree and six-pence.'

"They were well worth the money, and if my purse had been but moderately supplied I should have bought them at once. While I was looking at them, my portfolio, with your drawings in it, fell to the ground, and displayed the picture of dear old Hilldrop farm."

"Allow me," said the little man, stooping to pick them up. Then, looking at the picture in unaffected surprise, he said, 'Mees, dat is vare peautiful. It is vat you call excellent. You puy dat some-ve-res?' 'No,' said I, 'those belong to a young artist friend of mine. She is an invalid, and I am going to dispose of them for her.'

"I was dreadfully afraid that he would ask me where I was going to take them, for what could I have said, you know? Much to my relief, he said, 'Vell, vell. You leave them here one little time. I can safe you much trouble, I think.' This was frankly and even eagerly said, and there seemed such honesty about him, that I paused a moment only to make my will consent to be a little less apparent. 'Yes, yes,' he said, 'and you sall take dem little crayons to de artist. She look at dem. I look at dese. You sall call again to-morrow, and we sall make de pargains, eh?' And so I left them, dear Millie, and shall call to-morrow, and until then we will live in hope, and on it. It will be nothing new, that, at any rate. It is not very nourishing, I know," continued Mercy, with a light laugh, "but I do think something will come of it after all."

Mrs. Graythorpe and Millie were amused by Mercy's mimicry of the little picture-dealer, and Millie permitted the sweet influence of hope to bring a little color to her pale cheek and to place a smile upon her lips—a guest that had been anything but familiar there for many a weary day. Thankful to God for even so slight a break in the heavy cloud that had long overshadowed and oppressed them, Mrs. Graythorpe also took a hopeful view of the little incident. Then reaching from the small sideboard an old and well-worn family Bible, she read a portion of the forty-second Psalm: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him for the help of His countenance. O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember Thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites; from the hill Mizar."

There was a tremor in her usually clear and pleasant voice, which showed how appropriate was the passage to their own peculiar circumstances, and which showed, too, her own trust and confidence in that true and ever-faithful Friend who had put the words on record for all who are forlorn and weary, for all whose pathway lies through the darker shadows and the denser mists of life. "Our 'hill Mizar' was Hilldrop Farm," she said, "with all its darkness and mornings of deliverance. Our God is where He was, and on the strength of that memory of our Heavenly Father's faithfulness we will pray; and wait, and work, and trust."

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for March:

The Saints' Coronation Day—March 5, 1896.
The Wonderful Birthday of 144,000 Translated Ones on March 5, 1896. By Rev. M. Baxter.
The Coming Woe. By Rev. W. Chrismas.
The Millennium. By Rev. W. Wood, A. M.
The Days of Noah and the Lord's Second Coming.
The Stone Cut Out Without Hands.
The Second Coming of Christ. By Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
The Great Pyramid and Its Symbolism.
Curious Psychological Experience of Professor Stowe.
Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

Dyspepsia

akes many lives miserable, and often leads to destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and creeping disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy action, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food was digested and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, gone feeling. I have felt so much better since took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to commend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Solely by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. L. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar

WILD MARCH MUSIC,

de and sweet melodies, sacred and secular songs, and all other kinds of music are in our thousands of books and millions of sheet music copies!

YOUNG PLAYERS' (Pap. $1, Bds. $2.50) MUSICAL COLLECTION $1.25 New, bound and easy. 143 Piano Pieces.
HITNEY'S (Bds. $2, Cloth $2.50.) By CANALBUM S. B. Whitney. 33 fine pieces for Manual and Pedal, by 20 distinguished composers.

A helpful, useful friend to pupil and teacher is ASON'S PIANO-TECHNICS ($2.50) by Wm. Mason and W. S. B. Mat. This admirable system of scales, arpeggios, all other needed technical exercises, with good explanations, holds a high place in the esteem of our teachers, and should be everywhere used.

A thoroughly good, genial and practical School Music Books are widely known and used. Do you use them?

ONG Book 1, Primary, (30 cts., $3 doz.); ANUAL Book 2, Medium, (40 cts., $4.20 doz.); K 3, Higher Classes, (50 cts., $4.80 doz.) by L. O. Brown, is his last and best book, and a rare good for schools.

OTION (25 cts., $2.25 doz.) by Mrs. Boardman, INGS is a delight to teachers and children. Every book mailed promptly for retail price.

IVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

200,000

Key Organs have been sold in the last few years.

An enormous number! No other organ has been so popular. No other organ has had such a sale.

We want to secure the best conception of 200,000 Organs. We ask some reader of this paper to give us an illustration of the number 200,000 which will show how great it is.

Here is one specimen illustration.

If the Estey Organ Company had commenced to build organs when Noah began to build the ark, and had finished one organ every week since that time, they would have sold just about 200,000 organs today.

This is a good illustration. Perhaps you can do better. Will you not try?

STEY ORGAN CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

Branch Offices: 159 Tremont Street, Boston. 831 Broadway, New York. 18 North 7th Street, Philadelphia. State and Jackson Streets, Chicago. 916 Olive Street, St. Louis. Marietta and Broad Sts., Atlanta, Ga.

An interesting Book of Facts (containing 24 pages with 46 illustrations) entitled, How Large is 200,000, will be mailed free; one copy to one address.

EDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.

Washing Clothes

or cleaning house with ordinary soap is like rolling a heavy stone up hill; it takes main strength and a good deal of it. The same work done with Pearline is like rolling the stone down hill—it's easy; quick; true; goes right to the mark; and with very little labor.

All dirt must go before PEARLINE. It robs woman's hardest work of its drudgery—a praiseworthy theft, by the way. The question is—does it or does it not hurt the hands, clothes or paint? We tell you it don't—but we are interested (as well as you)—so ask your friends who use it; you'll find most of them do; the annual consumption is equal to about three packages a year for every family in the land. But better yet—get a package (it costs but a few pennies, and every grocer keeps it) and try it for yourself—your gain will be larger than ours.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous.

158

JAMES PYLE, New York

A NOTED CANADIAN PHYSICIAN, DR. E. T. ADAMS OF TORONTO, recently said in conversation: "As a food for invalids or those debilitated from BOVININE the very best I have ever used, and not any cause I regard BOVININE only for those sick or convalescing, but for exhausted professional or business men, BOVININE will, better than any nutrient I know of, build up and restore the overtaxed mind and body." It Makes Blood Fast and Supplies the Vitalized Fluids so Essential in Expelling Deleterious BOVININE is the only raw meat food condensed by a cold process, by which ALL the nutritive elements of selected beef are preserved in a palatable form, ready for immediate use.

The Dingee & Conard Co's ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS.

Largest Rose Growers in America.

65 Large Rose Houses.

OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., elegantly illustrated, is sent FREE to ALL who write for it. It describes and tells HOW TO GROW over TWO THOUSAND FINEST varieties of ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS. NEW ROSES, NEW SHRUBBERY, NEW CLEMATIS and Climbing Vines, NEW SUMMER FLOWERING BULBS, JAPAN LILIES, GLADIOLUS, TUBEROSES, CARNATIONS, New JAPAN CHRYSANTHEMUMS, New MOON FLOWERS, and the choicest

New and RARE FLOWER AND VEGETABLE SEEDS

Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. Safe arrival guaranteed. If you wish Roses, Plants, or Seeds of any kind, it will pay you to see our New Guide before buying. Send for it—free. Address

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., ROSE GROWERS and SEEDSMEN, West Grove, Pa.

SCOTT'S FLOWERS

41 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable ROSES and FLOWER SEEDS of extra choice quality. Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1890, with a lovely Colored Plate of Beautiful New Roses sent FREE to any address. Send for it now. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Great Church LIGHT.

FRINK'S Patent Reflectors give the Most Powerful, the Softest, Cheapest and the Best Light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Parlors, Banks, Offices, Picture Galleries, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches and the trade. L. P. FRINK, 651 Pearl Street, N. Y.

PEWS, SEATINGS and FURNISHINGS for Churches, Halls, Sunday Schools, &c. Send for Catalogues, mentioning this paper. FORSYTHE & CO., 135 Degraw St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Com-

VICTORY AT LAST! Self-threading Sewing Needles. The blind can use them. Invaluable for failing sight. Finest needle made. Millward's Gold Eyes; do not cut the thread. Sample paper 10c; 3 for 25c; 12 for 75c.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites Of Lime and Soda.

There are emulsions and emulsions, and there is still much skimmed milk which masquerades as cream. Try as they will many manufacturers cannot so disguise their cod liver oil as to make it palatable to sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion of PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL, combined with Hypophosphites is almost as palatable as milk. For this reason as well as for the fact of the stimulating qualities of the Hypophosphites, Physicians frequently prescribe it in cases of CONSUMPTION, SCROFULA, BRONCHITIS and CHRONIC COUGH or SEVERE COLD. All Druggists sell it, but be sure you get the genuine, as there are poor imitations.

A VEGETABLE WONDER!

HENDERSON'S NEW BUSH LIMA BEAN.

Just fancy a Lima Bean growing only 18 inches high! Yet this is exactly what we offer in HENDERSON'S NEW BUSH LIMA. Every one knows that the old Lima can only be grown on poles, so that those who plant the BUSH LIMA will not only enjoy the same delicious flavored beans, but by dispensing with poles save an unsightly expense. Our NEW BUSH LIMA is not only as productive (single plants have borne as high as 294 pods) but it is also TWO WEEKS EARLIER than any of the Pole Lima Beans. Planted at corn-planting time, it is ready for the table (around New York) in July, and bears in the greatest abundance until frost.

Price (by mail) 25 cents per packet, 5 packets for $1.00, 12 packets for $2.00 (12 packets sufficient for an ordinary sized family for the season). Directions for growing on each packet.

With every order for a single packet or more, will be sent, gratis, our superb catalogue of "Everything for the Garden" (the price of which is 25 cents), on condition that you will say in what paper you saw this advertisement. Club orders for FIVE or TWELVE packets can have the Catalogue sent, when desired, to the separate address of each member comprising the club, provided always that the paper is named.

PETER HENDERSON & Co.
35 & 37 Cortlandt St., New York.

BAILEY'S REFLECTORS

For Gas and For Oil. A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 112 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

ELASTIC TRUSS This new Elastic Truss has a pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely in place, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

What shall I do, my Lord, my God,
To make my life worth more to Thee?
Within my heart, though earth abroad,
Deep voices stir and summon me.

Through strange confusion of the time,
I hear Thy beckoning call resound;
There is a pathway more sublime
Than yet my laggard feet have found.

My coward heart, my laggard feet,
They hold me in bewildering gloom,
Come Thou my stumbling steps to meet,
And lift me into larger room!

The dearest voice may lead astray;
Speak Thou: Thy word my guide shall be—
Oh, not from life and man away,
But through them, with them, up to Thee.

It is not much these hands can do;
Keep Thou my spirit close to Thine,
Till every thought Thy love throbs through,
And all my words breathe truth divine!

With souls that seek Thy pure abode,
Let my unflinching soul aspire!
Make me a radiance on the road—
A bearer of Thy sacred fire!

—Lucy Larcom.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Salt rheum, with its intense itching and burning, is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many who were formerly severe sufferers have reason to thank "the peculiar medicine" for cures effected.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Gettysburg, Pa.,
January 8th, 1890

Wishing to engage for a few weeks in a work which would afford plenty of exercise, I concluded to try canvassing for the "Christian's Legacy." Was inexperienced in this line of business. Beginning work Dec. 11th, 1889, and working part of the time each day except two at Christmas, until Jan. 3d, 1890, I sold and delivered fifty-five copies.

It is a noble book, and should be in every household. Too much cannot be said of it. Everybody likes the book; to see it, to admire it. I know of no book that I can present to the public with as much faith, believing that wherever it is placed, untold riches may abound. W. E. BREHM.

Henry M. Stanley,

perhaps the foremost living American in pluck, endurance and achievement, has just completed successfully his last and greatest undertaking, the rescue of Emin. The story of his adventures and discoveries, "In Darkest Africa," will be published shortly by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons. It will be a thrilling and instructive narrative. Stanley is entitled to the fruit of his labors, and this the American sense of justice will secure to him by purchasing

"In Darkest Africa"

the only book in which he will have a personal interest. Intelligent and well-meaning people will not buy the bogus "Stanley books" offered under false and misleading representations, to no one of which has Stanley contributed a line. They will wait for the only authentic book on this subject, written by Stanley himself, and in buying it they will put into his pocket a share of the proceeds of its sale. "In Darkest Africa" will be in two octavo volumes, replete with maps and amply illustrated from Mr. Stanley's own photographs and sketches. Price $3.75 per volume in cloth. Sold only by subscription. Look on the title page for the imprint of

Charles Scribner's Sons

STANLEY.—Any person who will send the addresses of three Book Agents will receive free a copy of "Rescue of Emin By Stanley." This book contains in a condensed form as much of Mr. Stanley's latest trip as any $3.00 edition. Its illustrations are by Herbert Ward, a member of the expedition. B. G. STAUFFER, Quakertown, Pa.

THE HOUSEWIFE

4 MONTHS FOR ONLY ONE DIME

If you mention CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE MARCH HOUSEWIFE

is a handsomely illustrated number, devoted to Fiction, Fashion, Flowers, Fancy Work, Home Decoration, Art Needlework, Stamping, Painting, Designing, Cooking, House-keeping.

In short, everything pertaining to

WOMAN'S WORK AND WOMAN'S PLEASURE.

Mrs. JOHN SHERWOOD, MARY LOWE DICKINSON, MARY KYLE DALLAS, JENNY JUNE, MARIA PARLOA, "Dr. FRANK," GEORGE R. KNAPP, and JULIET CORSON are among MARCH contributors.

Every department in charge of a special editor.

Every article contributed expressly for THE HOUSEWIFE by the best talent obtainable.

50 Cents a Year. 5 Cents a Copy.

Special Offer:—To introduce it into thousands of new homes, we offer it 4 months for only 10 cents, if you mention CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE MARCH HOUSEWIFE

on all news-stands, 5 Cents a Copy.

THE HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK.

If you are thinking of building a house you ought to buy the new book, Palliser's American Architecture, or every man a complete builder, prepared by Palliser, Palliser & Co., the well known architects.

There is not a Builder or any one intending to Build or otherwise interested that can afford to be without it. It is a practical work and everybody buys it. The best, cheapest and most popular work ever issued on Building. Nearly four hundred drawings. A $5 book in use and style, but we have determined to make it meet the popular demand, to suit the times, so that it can be easily reached by all.

This book contains 104 pages 11 x 14 inches in size, and consists of large 9 x 12 plate pages giving plans, elevations, perspective views, descriptions, owners' names, actual cost of construction, no guess work, and instructions How to Build 30 Cottages, Villas, Double Houses, Brick Block Houses, suitable for city suburbs, towns and country, houses for the farm and workmen's homes for all sections of the country, and costing from $300 to $6,500; also Barns, Stables, School House, Town Hall, Churches, and other public buildings, together with specifications, form of contract, and a large amount of information on the erection of buildings, selection of site, employment of Architects. It is worth $5.00 to any one, but I will send it in paper cover by mail postpaid on receipt of $1.00; bound in cloth, $2.00. Address all orders to J. B. CHAFFIN, Publisher, P. O. Box 5767, 67 Bond St., New York.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—Wilbor's Cod-liver Oil and Phosphates has now been before the public twenty years, and has steadily grown in favor and appreciation. This could not be the case unless the preparation was of high intrinsic value. The combination of the Phosphates with pure Cod-liver Oil, as prepared by Dr. Wilbor, has produced a new phase in the treatment of Consumption and all diseases of the Lungs. It can be taken by the most delicate invalid without creating the nausea which is such an objection to the Cod-liver Oil when taken without Phosphates. It is prescribed by the regular faculty. Sold by the proprietor, A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, and by all Druggists.

Easter Music Free The Echo Music Co., LaFayette, Indiana.

SILKS AND DRESS GOODS.

Visitors to our new Salesrooms, in the basement, will find this week great additions in important lines of reliable Silks and Dress Goods.

The same range of low prices will be maintained as have prevailed since the inauguration of the sale.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St., NEW YORK.

PIANOS $150 to $1500

UNIVERSITY ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 1877

They Lead the World!

PRICE $180

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT

Guaranteed Six Years.

DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!

Cut. Free.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO 235 E. 21st St., N.Y. $35 to $500

ORGANS $35 to $500

Parturition Without Pain.

A Code of Directions for avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Childbearing. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. Price by mail, $1.00.

A work whose excellence surpasses our power to commend.—New York Evening Mail, 1000 Lady agents wanted. M. L. HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address on a postal for free sample copy of Prenatal Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "That Boy of Mine" and What to do with Him." Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 771 Broadway, N. Y.

DR. JAEGER'S Sanitary Woolen System Company

827 & 829 Broadway, New York.

HERMANN SCHAEFFER, President; ERNEST RENGER, Vice-President

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT THIS TRADE MARK

Note our Trade Mark closely!

BEWARE OF IMITATION!

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment of

SPRING AND SUMMER

UNDERWEAR

The genuine sanitary goods are manufactured under the supervision of Dr. Jaeger, and sold by above-named Company and their authorized agents only.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Specialty.

Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company

827 and 829 Broadway, New York

FAMOUS WOMEN OF SACRED STORY

A Series of Lectures Comprising Faithful Pen Portraits of the most noted Characters of all History.

By Rev. M. B. WHARTON, D. Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Montgomery, Alabama, Late United Consul to Germany.

THE CONTENTS, IN TWO VOLS., INCLUDE

OLD TESTAMENT. (Characters.) NEW TESTAMENT. EVE, The Mother of the Human Family. MIRIAMNE, The Princess, Wife of Herod. SARAH, The Mother of the Faithful in every age. ELIZABETH, The Mother of John the Baptist. REBEKAH, The Beautiful but Deceptive Wife. MARY, The Virgin of Jesus Christ. RACHEL, The Lovely Wife of Jacob. MARY, The Mother of God-Man. MIRIAM, The Grand, Patriotic Old Maid. ANNA, The Prophetess of the Temple. RUTH, The Lovely Young and Honored Widow. HERODIAS, The Instigator of Her Daughter's Death. DEBORAH, The Strong-Minded Woman. JOANNA, The Woman of Faith. JEPHTHA'S Daughter, Consecrated Maiden. WOMAN OF UNDAUNTED FAITH. DELILAH, The Fair but Treacherous. WILSON OF SAMARIA, The Saved Adultress. SWITCH OF ENDOR, Enchantress of Samuel's Ghost. JAIKUS, Daughter of a Priest, but Raised to Life. HANNAH, The Praying and Devoted Mother. MARY of Bethany, Anointer of Jesus' Feet. ABIGAIL, The Wife of the Shepherd King. MARY MAGDALEN, The Disciple (Seven Devils). QUEEN OF SHEBA, Solomon's Royal Guest. DORCAS, The Disciple Raised to Life by Peter. JEZEBEL, The Bloody Mary of Scripture. SAPPHIRA, The Partner of Her Husband's Crime. WOMAN OF SHUNEM, Elisha's Friend. LYDIA, Paul's First European Christian Convert. ESTHER, The Deliverer of Her People. ELEANOR LADY, Model Matron of Her People.

In Two Vols., 318 pages each. Illustrated. Sold separately. Post-paid. Price each, $1.50.

E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 5 Cooper Union,

Ideal Felt Tooth Polish

ENDORSED BY LEADING DENTISTS.

NON-IRRITATING TO GUMS OR ENAMEL FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS

"Wheat is cleaned with wind and the teeth with chastenings," but a house should be cleaned with

SAPOLIO

to bring it to perfection. Try a cake.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, New York.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be earned who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 14. Office, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

1. PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. S. H. HADLEY, Jerry McAuley's Successor, and Pictures of the Water Street Mission.
 2. DEAD LION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
 3. THE WIDOW OF NAIN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
 4. READINESS FOR RAPTURE. By Rev. F. L. Chapell.
 5. The Genesis of La Grippe—A Convict's Complaint—The Panorama of a Life—The Treasured Pearl, Etc.
 6. THE PREDICTED WAY OF THE KINGS OF THE EAST.

7. LAMA SABACHTHANI? A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 8. PORTRAIT OF MR. G. M. SCOTT, the New Gentile Mayor of Salt Lake City.
 9. ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
 10. PICTURE OF AN EXILE'S HUT IN SIBERIA.
 11. Gems from New Books: A Child Rescued from Indians.
 12. PICTURE OF A BRAZILIAN CARRACO.
 13. THE RECOGNITION OF A LEADER. A Story of the Golden Text.
 14. WILL IT LIFT? A Story by Rev. J. Jackson Wray.

The Old Jerry McAuley Mission on Water Street, New York—Mr. S. H. Hadley, Superintendent.

MR. S. H. HADLEY.

Jerry McAuley's Successor in Water Street.

What Water Street, New York, is Like—The Mission Building—An Interview with Mr. Hadley—His Birth and Pious Home—His First Drink—Death of His Mother—A Rapid Downward Journey—Delirium Tremens—A Resolution in a Harlem Saloon—His Himself Locked Up—In Jerry McAuley's Hands—Converted, and at Work—What the Mission is Doing.

DOWN in Water Street, New York, there is not much to attract the visitor, or to impress him with the wealth and culture of the metropolis: a narrow, dirty street, where the pedestrian often finds his way blocked by a heavy dray, or by a heap of filthy boxes and barrels, and must turn into the middle of the road, among the dirt and garbage and mud. Here and there the sidewalk disappears altogether, and two vehicles meeting almost occupy the whole space between the houses. There is plenty of moral dirt, as the ear detects by the profanity and drunken merriment that it catches from an open door or a group of corner-loafers, and the eye perceives, as some female figure in cheap, gaudy attire shows itself at door or window. Dirt, squalor, vice, foul smells, disgusting sights—that is

What the Visitor Sees in Water Street

and its neighborhood, wherever the old houses have been successful in maintaining their existence against the encroachment of stove factories and wholesale establishments. One building stands out in contrast to the others. It is clean, bright, cheerful, inviting, so far as a building can be made to express those qualities. The door is open, and the visitor enters. He is in a long room with rows of comfortable seats. A raised platform at the farther end has on it a chair or two, a reading-desk, and a harmonium. On the walls are the Bible texts most precious to despairing, weary, sin-polluted souls; the texts that invite the outcast, that promise pardon, rest, and salvation to the vilest and most debased. On the south wall a plain marble tablet tells in few words who was the founder of the place, what he had been, what he became, and what he spent his life in doing. The room is not very imposing from an architectural standpoint, but it has a home-like look, as if a man might rest there and forget for a time the uproar and squalor outside.

"Want to see the Superintendent?" asks an elderly man, whose appearance suggests a chequered life, as if he had one time been prosperous, at another clad in rags, and had been given to the habit commonly suggested by the phrase "bending the elbow too often," and now decently dressed, and respectful in speech. The visitor admits that he would like to see and the man goes away to fetch him. It is midday, or it would not be necessary to do that, for at night, when Water Street is all alive with loafers in various stages of inebriation, the superintendent is in the room to welcome visitors. In a minute he comes limping into the room. Some accident in early life has made him halt in his walk. A strong, healthy man, with a bright, eager face and soft, beaming eyes. "What can I do for you, my brother?" he asks. The visitor is happily not in need of the kind of rescue-work Mr. Hadley is most frequently called to engage in. When that fact is known, the Superintendent does not seem elated. The visitor is conscious that he would have been more welcome had he been a dirty tramp, half drunk, and needing all kinds of help, spiritual and material. He feels as much at a disadvantage as a tramp would feel in calling at a Fifth Avenue mansion.

The Superintendent,

However, Mr. Hadley is made to understand that the visitor may have opportunities of making his place known to the people he wants to meet, and so indirectly bringing him the patients who do need his services, and then he professes himself ready to talk. But not much about himself. He has a great deal to say about the work, the need there is for it, the kind of welcome "a low-down man will have in this place," and the efficacy of the sovereign remedy he has for human misery. "No matter how dirty, how vicious, how depraved a man is," Mr. Hadley explains, "let him come here. We will take him down-stairs and wash him; and if he is sick we will have a doctor for him; or, if it is better, we will get him into a hospital, and we won't lose sight of him, and we bury him if he dies. We tell him about Christ, about God's love, we pray for him, and get him to pray for himself, and I tell you, sir, when a man begins to pray, there's hope for him. Yes, sir; I have seen men as low down as a man can get; thieves and crooks and drunkards and gamblers come here, and it works with all of them. Jesus Christ is a mighty Saviour!" He speaks in the tone of a man who knows it in his own experience, which cold type cannot express.

What Mr. Hadley Was

he is at no pains to conceal. If he was speaking of some one else his words would be very uncharitable. A very strong case of libel might be fixed on him for his first few sentences. The Hadley he describes, according to his own testimony, must have been a very hard case. A despicable, unprincipled, vicious fellow, altogether gone to the bad. Yet he had a good home. He was born in 1843, in Perry County, Ohio—the county that boasts of being the birthplace of Phil Sheridan. It was only a log cabin in which he first saw the light, but a godly man owned it, and a pious, saintly woman made it a godly home. No oath, no beer, no tobacco, in that place. Such as it was, it was elevated, purified, sanctified, by the peace and joy of Christian lives. Here he was nurtured in the fear and love of God. He was eighteen years old when he took his first drink. "I had promised my dear mother," Hadley says, "I would never drink; but a friend, who was the miller of our county, told me that he would never speak to me again if I did not drink, and that he would think I had some grudge against him, or felt myself above him socially. I took the bottle after he had coaxed me a full half-hour, and put it to my lips and drank. Will I ever forget that moment? The vow I had made to my dear mother was broken, and the devil came in and took full possession. My mother died a short time after this, happily in ignorance of my sin. I was away from home that day, but her last words were, 'Tell Hopkins to meet me in heaven.' When I reached home in the evening, before I could dismount from my horse my sisters came out and told me mother was dead. I could not believe it, so they took my hands and led me into the 'spare room,' and there, cold in death, was my darling, precious mother! I could not believe that the silent form wrapped in white was she, so pale, so still. From my earliest recollection, she had been the last one I ever saw at night and the first one in the morning. I begged her, with a breaking heart, to speak to me. How my broken vow came back to me, as I stood by that dear lifeless form, so peaceful, so sweet! I promised God, and her, that I would never break it again. Three days after mother was buried I was more drunk than I had ever been.

"Our home was broken up, for father soon died. I went to live with a prominent physician in the village and began the study of medicine. My preceptor, though one of the most brilliant men in his profession, was a heavy drinker, and in one year I was a confirmed drunkard.

"I gave up my studies, took a travelling position, became

A Professional Gambler,

and for fifteen years rarely went to bed sober. For many years I did not see my danger, or was too much under the influence of rum to think seriously on the subject. Occasionally, however, ominous forebodings would arise in my heart, and I would wonder what the end would be.

"In 1870 I came to New York City, and secured a position with a salary of $300 per month, with a liberal allowance for expenses. The failure of the establishment I was working for threw me out of a position, and I never was able to command a good salary afterward. I cannot describe here the remorse and heart-aches of the confirmed drunkard, who feels himself slowly though surely slipping down to that awful abyss, the drunkard's hell—a foretaste of which he already feels in his soul! I passed through it all—more than human pen could write. Many times, while my faithful, loving wife would be holding me in her arms, would I see fiends in the most hellish forms walk round behind me, and, holding their mouths so close I could feel their scorching breath, tell me what to do. This advice, whether true or imaginary, always tended toward my self-destruction. Then they would go into the next room, and talk so loud about my case I was sure my wife would hear their evil plottings and be frightened out of her senses. This was delirium tremens.

"One Tuesday evening, on the 18th of April, 1882, I sat in a saloon in Harlem, a homeless, friendless, dying drunkard. I had pawned or sold everything that would bring a drink. I could not sleep unless I was drunk. I had not eaten for days, and for four nights preceding I had suffered with delirium tremens, or the horrors, from midnight till morning. I had often said, I will never be a tramp; I will never be cornered; for when that time comes, if it ever does, I will find a home in the bottom of the river! But the Lord so ordered it that when that time did come I was not able to walk one-quarter of the way to the river. As I sat there thinking, I seemed to feel some great and mighty presence. I did not know then what it was. I did learn afterward that it was Jesus, the sinner's friend. I walked up to the bar, and pounded it with my fist till I made the glasses rattle. Those who stood by drinking looked on with scornful curiosity. I said I would never take another drink if I died in the street; and I felt as though that would happen before morning. Something said, 'If you want to keep this promise, go and have yourself locked up.' I went to the nearest station-house, a short distance away, and

Had Myself Locked Up.

"I was placed in a narrow cell, and it seemed as though all the demons that could find room came in that place with me. This was not all the company I had either. No, praise the Lord! that dear Spirit that came to me in the saloon was present, and said, 'Pray!' I did pray; and though I did not feel any great help, I kept on praying. As soon as I was able to leave my cell I was taken to the police court, and remanded back to the cell. I was finally released, and found my way to my brother's house, where every care was given me. While lying in bed the admonishing spirit never left me, and when I arose the following Sabbath morning I felt that day would decide my fate. Many plans were turned over in my mind, but all were rejected and toward evening it came into my head to go to Jerry McAuley's Mission. I went. The house was packed, and with great difficulty I made my way to the space near the platform. There I saw the apostle to the drunkard and the outcast—that man of God, Jerry McAuley. He rose, and amid deep silence told his experience, that simple story that heard so many times afterward, but which was ever new; how he had been a 'tief,' an outcast, a drunkard—yes, a regular old bum! but I gave my heart to God, and He saved me from everything that wicked and bad.' There was a sincerity about this man and his testimony that carried conviction with it, and I found myself saying, 'I wonder if God can save me?'

"I listened to the testimony of 25 or 30 persons every one of whom had been saved from rum, and I made up my mind that I would be saved or die right there. When the invitation was given, I knelt down with quite a crowd of drunkards. Never will I forget that scene! How I Wondered if I Could be Saved!

if God would help me! I was a total stranger; but I felt I had sympathy, and it helped me. Jerry made the first prayer. I shall never forget it. He said: 'Dear Saviour, won't you look down in pity on these poor souls? They need your help, Lord, they can't get along without it. Blessed Jesus, these poor sinners have got themselves into a bad hole. Won't you help them out? Speak to their Lord! Do, for Jesus' sake—amen!'

"Then Jerry said: 'Now all keep on your knees and keep praying, while I ask these dear souls pray for themselves.' He spoke to one after another as he placed his hand on their heads, saying, 'Brother, you pray. Now tell the Lord just what you want Him to do for you.' How I trembled as I approached me! Though I had knelt down with the determination to give my heart to God, when it came to the very moment of grand decision I felt like backing out. The devil knelt by my side and whispered in my ear crimes I had forgotten 12 months: 'What are you going to do about such a such matters if you start to be a Christian to-night? Now you can't afford to make a mistake; had you better think this matter over awhile, and try to fix up some of the troubles you are in, and then start?' Oh, what a conflict was going on for that poor soul! A blessed whisper said, 'Come!' The devil said, 'Be careful!' Jerry's hand was on my head. He said, 'Brother, pray.' I said, 'Can you pray for me?' Jerry said, 'All the prayers the world won't save you unless you pray for yourself.' I halted but a moment, and then, with breaking heart, I said: 'Dear

Jesus, Can You Help Me?'

"Never can I describe that moment. Although up to that moment my soul had been filled with describable gloom, I felt the glorious brightness of the noonday sun shine into my heart; I felt I was free man. Oh, the precious feeling of safety, of freedom, of resting on Jesus! I felt that Christ, with all His brightness and power, had come into my life; that, indeed, old things had passed away and all things had become new.

"From that moment till now I have never wanted a drink of whiskey. I promised God that night that if He would take away the appetite for strong drink, I would work for Him all my life. He has done His part, and I have been trying to do mine. Nor did I ever swear an oath, though before I could not speak ten consecutive words without an oath. I began the next day to work for Christ, by inviting a tramp to come to the meetings. He came, and went up for prayers. A few weeks afterward the Lord showed me I was leaning on tobacco, and I had better lean entirely on Him. I threw my plug of tobacco away one night down the aisle in the mission, and the desire was removed. In fact, my tobacco was the only sacrifice I ever made for Jesus, as I would gladly have paid money to be rid of rum if I could have been relieved that way.

"Four years afterward I was called by the trustees of the old McAuley Water Street Mission to take charge of the work where Jerry first began fifteen years ago. Almost every night God is displaying His wondrous power here in saving the drunkard, the thief, and the outcast. Pray for us." It costs about four thousand dollars a year to run the Water Street Mission, and if the managers had they could profitably spend ten thousand; but the profit would not be in money, but in souls saved. Mr. Hadley and two devoted missionaries are constantly at work in the Fourth Ward, visiting in the homes of the poor and sick, in the saloons and dens of infamy, which are "the highways and hedges" of a great city, to bring in wanderers to the Master's house according to His command. Help is needed for almost all of them when they are brought in, for when a man is starting on a better life the odds are against him, and he must have such advantages in clothes and food as can be given him. The Mission is carried on in faith, and often the needs are very low. Gifts in money and clothing are therefore always welcome, and will be gratefully received by Mr. S. H. Hadley, 316 Water Street, New York.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Daughter Rescued from Indians.*

"God save the children! In the early settlement of Kentucky, when it was 'the dark and bloody ground,' there lived on the Kentucky River a man, whose name was Rufus Branson, with his wife and daughter eight years old. One day, when he was sitting in his doorway, a drunken Indian came staggering up, asking for fire-water. He was refused, whereupon he insulted the family, and Branson fired his rifle to the earth. He tied him with some clothes till he was sobered, when he was permitted to retire, which he did, uttering as he went fearful curses. Some time after that, when Branson was away from home, the Indian returned, and, finding his little girl, carried her off. Her mother saw him and set up a piercing scream. Branson was at that moment nearing his home and heard his wife's cry. He rushed to the house, and was told what had happened. His wife pointed to the Indian, who could still be seen climbing the cliff with the child in his arms. Branson seized his rifle and fired, but missed his aim. A stranger who had come up unperceived said, 'Shall I save your child?' The father said, 'Save her! I am powerless.' The other said, 'Save her! Oh save her!' The stranger raised his rifle, held it firmly in his grasp and fired. The Indian threw up his arms, releasing the child, and fell dead upon the ground. The girl ran back to her parents, and the mother, turning to her benefactor, said, 'Who are you, sir; tell me, at I may know henceforth what name to mingle in my every prayer?' The stranger simply replied, 'My name is Daniel Boone,' and vanished into the darkness of the forest. O mothers! the painted devils of hell are bearing your daughters to destruction; the eternal Saviour, who alone can triumph over your adversary, stands at your side, saying, 'Shall I save your child?'

Salome and the Dance.

"Now let me ask you, if you had a family of children, how long would you tolerate in your house a man who, immediately on his introduction to your daughter, should lay hands upon her person with the familiarity and freedom of the modern waltz? I am simply astonished that there can be any doubt upon this point with sound-minded, sensible, reflecting persons. The modern dance simply licenses or makes lawful what, outside the customs of the dance, is regarded as improper, immoral, and insulting. Society wisely regulates the ordinary social gatherings of men and women in the parlor, even when they are well acquainted, by certain wholesome barriers of restraint. A man who, especially at first acquaintance, should violate these restrictions, as he may do in the waltz with impunity, would be kicked out of the house as a scoundrel! But the devil has invented in the round dances a polite and popular method of making such gross familiarities allowable, under the sanction of fashionable custom. Hence their attraction to the people of the world; hence their ensnaring influence on the disciple; and the better the class of men and women that countenance the devil's device, the more conspicuous his triumph."

A Great Man's Boyhood.

In the winter of 1824 a boy was playing in the garden of an old country house in northeastern Germany. On the pedestal of a statue broken by the French soldiers when they swept over Prussia and Poland eighteen years before, he had piled snow into the rude likeness of an enormous man, which he was pelting lustily with stones and snowballs. Though not ten years old, he was unusually tall for his age, and very strong and active. His features were plain and heavy, but there was a nameless something in the expression of his firmly set lips and large, bright eyes, in which a close observer would have seen the promise of great things to come. Shot after shot hit the great white figure, but, though the giant tottered, he did not fall. Then a sudden change came over the boy's face; his teeth clinched, his eyes flashed fire, and his whole face seemed to harden, as his unconquerable spirit, that was one day to shake all Europe, boiled up within him. Seizing a heavy stone, he hurled it with all his might at the monster, which trembled a moment and then lurched forward and fell in pieces. "Halloo, Otto! what are you doing now?" cried an old servant of the household, coming round the corner at that instant, with a broad grin on his weather-beaten visage, which was scarred by the French sabres which he had faced by Blucher's side at Ligny and Waterloo. "I am Germany overthrowing France," replied the lad. "Good," cried the veteran; "mayhap I shall live to see thee do it in earnest some day." And so he did, for the little Otto grew up to become Prince Bismarck.

THE PANORAMA OF A LIFE.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL fact which throws light on the description of the last judgment given in the Bible, when sinners will see as in a flash the events of their life, and stand silent and self-condemned, is stated with several instances in the current number of a popular magazine. It is the fact that the events of a whole lifetime will sometimes pass in a moment through the mind of a person who is on the point of death by drowning or suffocation. Speaking of the case of Lord Ponsonby, who was hanged by the mob in Paris in 1791, and cut down before life was extinct, the author says: He (Lord Ponsonby) gave an account of his sensations on returning to consciousness. He could not have been actually suspended in mid-air more than a few seconds, and yet in that brief space of time all the events of his life passed through his mind. It is true that his life to that date had not been a very eventful one, he being only nineteen years of age; but every past sensation was renewed in all its freshness. This remarkable mental power of calling up the past in moments of suspended animation occurred in the case of Count Zichy, in the Revolution of 1848, in Vienna. He was caught by the savage mob, hung like Lord Ponsonby in the middle of the street, when his own regiment of dragoons charged down, and cut the cords as he was swinging in the air. He fell to the ground, and was supposed to be dead; but his recovery was a different matter from Lord Ponsonby's, for he suffered agonies, and for ten days had four men constantly with him. He described exactly the same sensations as Lord Ponsonby; the scroll of what was a much longer life was unrolled, even the smallest detail rushed back on his memory; he had the same fearlessness at the moment, but he felt all the horror of the agony when the danger was past. A most interesting little book, called Admiral Beaufort's Experiences of Drowning, bears testimony to this seemingly universal experience in sudden danger. "Thought succeeded thought," says the Admiral, "with a rapidity that is not only indescribable, but probably inconceivable by any one who has not himself been in a similar situation—the event that had just taken place, the effect it would have on my family, and a thousand circumstances associated with home, travelling backward in time in retrograde succession."

ANTIDOTE TO A SCORPION'S STING.

ONE of the China Inland missionaries, Miss Mary C. Scott, of Ta-Ning, writes: "Last week, at one of the villages to which Yang went, an extremely interesting incident occurred. I think you know already how very hospitable these dear village people are. Well, one very nice woman, who is interested in the gospel, and a warm friend of ours, determined that Yang must have a meal at her house. Accordingly, she was up betimes, and in the course of her preparations was badly stung on the finger by a scorpion. The poison must have circulated very quickly, for soon not only was she in pain all over, but seemed to lose consciousness. In alarm Yang was called for, who laid hands on her and prayed, and she very soon recovered. There was still some pain, however, in the arm and hand. So he prayed again; and when he left, soon afterwards, there was only slight pain in the wounded finger; and, in telling us about this the same evening, Yang brightly remarked that he expected that by this time all pain had gone. We did praise God for this, connecting it with the promise in Mark 16 to those who believe that 'they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.' On again questioning Yang, to verify the accuracy of this statement, I find that after prayer the woman immediately recovered, and was able to go on with her preparations for the meal."

THE TREASURED PEARL.

AN illustration of our Lord's parable of the pearl of great price which the merchant sold all he had to buy (Matt. 13:45) is found in an incident related by Mr. J. H. Kohl, the Russian traveller. He says: "Some time before I went to Moscow there died in a convent, whither he had retreated, after the manner of the wealthy pious ones of his nation, a rich merchant, whose house had large establishments in Moscow, Constantinople, and Alexandria, and extensive connections throughout the East. Feeling the approach of age, he had by degrees given up the toils of business to his sons. His wife was dead, and the only treasure which, in the cloister, was not divided from him was one large, beautiful Oriental pearl. This precious object had been purchased for him by some Persian or Arabian friend at a high price, and enchanted by its water, magnificent size and color, its perfect shape and lustre, he would never part with it, though enormous sums were offered for it. He almost worshipped the costly globule. It was shown to few; powerful recommendations were necessary to obtain such a favor. One of my Moscow friends, who had succeeded in introducing himself, and had received a promise that he should behold the Pearl of Pearls, informed me of the style and manner of the ceremony. On the appointed day he went with his friends to the convent, and found the old man awaiting his guests in his holiday clothes. Their reception had something of solemnity about it. The old man went into his cell and brought out the casket in its rich covering. He first spread a piece of white satin on the table, and then, unlocking the casket, let the precious pearl roll out before the enchanted eyes of the spectators. No one dared to touch it, but all burst into acclamations, and the old man's eyes gleamed like his pearl. It was, after a short time, carried back to its hiding-place. During his last illness, the old enthusiast never let his pearl out of his hand, and after his death it was with difficulty taken from his stiffened fingers." Like him, the Christian who has found the pearl of great price in Christ counts the world well lost for his possession, and he clings to that in life and death.

"The Christian Herald" Binder.—Numerous applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely. A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

*From Famous Women of the New Testament. By Rev. Morley Bryan Wharton, D. D., late United States Consul to Germany. Pp. 340; with illustrations. Price $1.50. Published by B. Treat, 5 Cooper Union, New York.

A DEAD LION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning,
March 30, 1890.

"A living dog is better than a dead lion." Eccles.
9:4.

The Variety of the Bible—The Wonderful Apothegms—The Dog Mentioned in the Text—A Degraded Breed—The Palestinian Lion—A Noble Animal—Activity more Beneficent than Genius—The Inconspicuous Worker—Precedence in Heaven—Dead Lions in Plutocratic Society—Lions Alive—Quickened by Possible Litigation—Instances of Munificence—Dead Lions Unmourned—Opportunities Passing Away—Disheartening Regret—Charlemagne's Corpse Enthroned—The Mummy of Pharaoh—An Encouragement for Workers—Three Young Men at a Service.

THE Bible is the strangest, the loveliest, the mightiest, the weirdest, the best of books. Written by Moses the lawyer, Joshua the soldier, Samuel the judge, Ezra the builder, Job the poet, David the shepherd, Daniel the prime-minister, Amos the herdsman, Matthew the custom-house officer, Luke the doctor, Paul the scholar, John the exile; and yet a complete harmony from the middle verse of the Bible, which is the eighth verse of the one hundred and seventeenth Psalm, both ways to the upper and lower lids, and from the shortest passage, which is the thirty-fifth verse of the eleventh chapter of John, to the longest verse, which is the ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Esther, and yet not an imperfection in all the 773,693 words which it is composed of. It not only reaches over the past, but over the future; has in it a ferry-boat, as in second Samuel; and a telegraphic wire, as in Job; and a railroad train, as in Nahum; and introduces us to a foundryman by the name of Tubal Cain, and a ship-builder by the name of Noah, and an architect by the name of Aholiab, and tells us how many stables Solomon had to take care of his horses, and how much he paid for those horses. But few things in this versatile and comprehensive book interest me so much as its apothegms, those short, terse, sententious, epigrammatic sayings, of which my text is one—"A living dog is better than a dead lion."

Here the lion stands for nobility, and the dog for meanness. You must know that in the text is not one of our American or English or Scottish dogs that, in our mind, is a synonym for the beautiful, the graceful, the affectionate, the sagacious, and the true. The St. Bernard dog is a hero, and if you doubt it, ask the snows of the Alps, out of which he picked the exhausted traveler. The shepherd-dog is a poem, and if you doubt it, ask the Highlands of Scotland. The Arctic dog is the rescue of explorers, and if you doubt it, ask Dr. Kane's expedition. The watch-dog is a loving protection, and if you doubt it, ask ten thousand homesteads over whose safety he watched last night. But Solomon, the author of my text, lived in Jerusalem, and the dog he speaks of in the text was a dog in Jerusalem. Last December I passed days and nights within a stone's-throw of where Solomon wrote this text, and from what I saw of the canines of Jerusalem by day, and heard of them by night, I can understand the slight appreciation my text puts upon the dog of Palestine. It is lean and snarly and disgusting, and afflicted with parasites, and takes revenge on the human race by filling the nights with clamor. All up and down the Bible, the most of which was written in Palestine or Syria, or contiguous lands, the dog is used in contemptuous comparison. Hazeel said, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" In self-abnegation the Syro-Phœnician woman said, "Even the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from the Master's table." Paul says, in Philippians, "Beware of dogs;" and St. John, speaking of heaven, says, "Without are dogs."

The Dog Mentioned

The Lion of Palestine.

On the other hand the lion is healthy, strong, and loud-voiced, and at its roar the forests echo and the mountains tremble. It is marvellous for strength, and when its hide is removed the muscular compactness is something wonderful, and the knife of the dissector bounds back from the tendons. By the clearing off of the forests of Palestine and the use of fire-arms, of which the lion is particularly afraid, they have disappeared from places where once they ranged, but they were very bold in olden times. They attacked an army of Xerxes while marching through Macedonia. They were so numerous that one thousand lions were slain in forty years in the amphitheatre of Rome. The Barbary lion, the Cape lion, the Senegal lion, the Assyrian lion, make up a most absorbing and exciting chapter in natural history. As most of the Bible was written in regions lion-haunted, this creature appears in almost all parts of the Bible as a simile. David understood its habits of night-prowling and day-slumbering, as is seen from his description: "The young lions roar after their prey and seek their meat from God. The sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens." And again he cries out, "My soul is among lions." Moses knew them and said, "Judah is couched like a lion." Samson knew them, for he took honey from the carcass of a slain lion. Solomon knew them and says, "The king's wrath is as the roar of a lion," and again, "The slothful man says, There is a lion in the way." Isaiah knew them, and says, in the millennium, "The lion shall eat straw like an ox." Ezekiel knew them, and says, "The third was as the face of a lion." Paul knew them, and says: "I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion." Peter knew them and says, "The devil as a roaring lion walketh about." St. John knew them, and says of Christ, "Behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah!"

Activity Above Genius.

Now, what does my text mean when it puts a living dog and a dead lion side by side, and says the former is better than the latter? It means that small faculties actively used are of more value than great faculties unemployed. How often you see it! Some man with limited capacity vastly useful. He takes that which God has given him and says: "My mental endowment is not large and the world would not rate me high for my intelligence, and my vocabulary is limited, and my education was defective, but here goes what I have for God and salvation, and the making of the world good and happy." He puts in a word here and a word there, encourages a faint-hearted man, gives a Scripture passage in consolation to some bereft woman, picks up a child fallen in the street and helps him brush off the dust and puts a five-cent piece in his hand, telling him not to cry, so that the boy is singing before he gets round the corner; waiting on everybody that has a letter to carry or a message to deliver; comes into a rail-train, or stage-coach, or depot, or shop, with a smiling face that sets everybody to thinking, "If that man can, with what appears small equipment in life, be happy, why cannot I, possessing far more than he has, be equally happy?" One day of that kind of doing things may not amount to much, but forty years of that—no one but God Himself can appreciate its immensity.

The Humble Worker.

There are tens of thousands of such people. Their circle of acquaintance is small. The man is known over at the store. He is clerk or weigher or drayman, and he is known among those who sit near him clear back in the church under the galleries, and at the ferry gates where he comes in knocking the snow from his shoes, and threshing his arms around his body to revive circulation, on some January morning. But if he should die tomorrow there would not be a hundred people who would know about it. He will never have his name in the newspapers but once, and that will be the announcement of his death, if some one will pay for the insertion, so much a line for the two lines. But he will come up gloriously on the other side, and the God who has watched him all through will give him a higher seat and a better mansion and a grander eternity than many a man who had on earth, before his name, the word Honorable, and after his name LL. D. and F. R. S. Christ said in Luke, the sixth chapter, that in heaven some who had it hard here would laugh there. And I think a laugh of delight and congratulation will run around the heavenly circles when this humble one of whom I spoke shall go up and of many Christians, who in this world felt themselves to be of ninety-nine per cent. more importance. The whisper will go round the galleries of the upper temple: "Can it be possible that that was the weigher in our store?" "Can it be possible that that was the car-driver on our street?" "Can it be possible that was the sexton of our church?" "Can it be possible that is the man that heaved coal into our cellar?" "I never could have thought it. What a reversal of things! We were clear ahead of him on earth, but he is clear ahead of us in heaven. Why, we had ten times more brains than he had, we had a thousand times more money than he had, we had social position a mile higher than he had, we had innumerable opportunities more than he had, but it seems now that he accomplished more with his one talent than we did with our ten;" while Solomon, standing among the thrones, overhears the whisper, and sees the wonderment, and will, with benignant and all-suggestive smile, say, "Yes, it is as I told the world many centuries ago—better is small faculty actively used than great talent unemployed, 'better is a living dog than a dead lion.'"

Take the Precedence

Financial Lions.

The simple fact is that the world has been, and the world is now, full of dead lions. They are people of great capacity and large opportunity, doing nothing for the improvement of society, nothing for the overthrow of evil, nothing for the salvation of souls. Some of them are monetary lions. They have accumulated so many hundreds of thousands of dollars that you can feel their tread when they walk through any street or come into any circle. They can by one financial move upset the money market. Instead of the ten per cent. of their income which the Bible lays down as the proper proportion of their contribution to the cause of God, they do not give five per cent., or three per cent., or two per cent., or one per cent., or a half per cent., or a quarter per cent. That they are lions, no one doubts. When they roar, Wall Street, State Street, Lombard Street, and the Bourse tremble. In a few years they will lie down and die. They will have a great funeral, and a long row of fine carriages, and mightiest requiems will roll from the organ, and polished shaft of Aberdeen granite will indicate where their dust lies, but for all use to the world that man might as well have never lived. As an experiment as to how much he can carry with him, put a ten-cent piece in the palm of his dead hand, and five years after open the tomb, and you will find that he has dropped even the ten-cent piece. A lion Yes, but a dead lion! He left all his treasures on earth, and has no treasures in heaven. What shall the stone-cutter put upon the obelisk over him? suggest, let it be the man's name, then the date of his birth, then the date of his death, then the appropriate Scripture passage, "Better is a living dog than a dead lion."

Living Lions.

But I thank God that we are having just now an outburst of splendid beneficence that is to increase until the earth is girdled with it. It is spreading with the speed of an epidemic, but with just the opposite effect of an epidemic. Do you not notice how wealthy men are opening free libraries, and building churches in their native village? Have you not seen how men of large means, instead of leaving great philanthropies in their wills for disappointed heirs to quarrel about, and the orphan courts to swamp, are becoming their own executors and administrators? After putting aside enough for their families (for "he that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household is worse than an infidel"), they are saying: "What can I do, not after I am dead, but while living, in full possession of my faculties, to properly direct the building of the churches, of the hospitals, of the colleges, or the libraries that I design for the public welfare, and while yet I have full capacity to enjoy the satisfaction of seeing the good accomplished?" There are bad fashions and good fashion, and, whether good or bad, fashions are mighty. One of the good fashions now starting will sweep the earth—the fashion for wealthy men to distribute, while yet alive, their surplus accumulation. It is being helped by the fact that so many large estates have, immediately

After the Testator's Death, gone into litigation. Attorneys with large fees employed on both sides, and the case goes on month after month, and year after year, and after one court decides, it ascends to another court and is decided in the opposite direction, and then new evidence is found, and the trials are all repeated. The children, who at the father's funeral seemed to have an uncontrollable grief, after the will is read go into elaborate process to prove that the father was crazy, and therefore incompetent to make a will; and there are men on the jury who think that the fact that the testator gave so much of his money to the Bible Society, and the missionary society, or the opening of a free library is proof positive that he was insane, and that he knew not what he was signing when he subscribed to the word "In the name of God, amen. I, being of sound mind, do make this my last will and testament."

The torn wills, the fraudulent wills, the broken ills have recently been made such a spectacle to angels and to men that all over the land successful men are calling in architects and saying to them: "How much would it cost for me to build a picture-gallery for our town?" or, "What plans can you draw me out for a concert hall?" or, "I am specially interested in 'the incurables,' and how large a building would accommodate three hundred of such patients?" or, "The Church of God has been a great help to me all my life, and I want you to draw me a plan for a church, commodious, beautiful, well ventilated, and with plenty of windows to let in the light; I want you to get right at work in making out plans of such a building, for, though I am well now, life is uncertain, and before I leave the world I want to see something done that will be an appropriate acknowledgment of the goodness of God to me and mine; now when can I hear from you?"

Ante-Mortem Munificence.

In our own city we have many examples of this. What a grandeur of beneficence has our fellow-citizen, Mr. Pratt, demonstrated, building educational institutions which will put their hands on the nineteenth century, and the twentieth century, and all the centuries! All honor to such a man! Do not say so when he is dead, say it now. It would be a good thing if some of the eulogies we chisel on tombstones were written on paper in time for the philanthropists to read them while yet they are alive. Less post-mortem praise, and more ante-mortem!

A poor Scotch lad came to America at twelve years of age, and went to Pittsburgh. He looked round for work, and became an engineer in a cellar, then rose to become a telegraph messenger boy, then rose to a position in a railroad office, then rose to a place in a telegraph office, then rose to be superintendent of a railroad, then rose till he became an iron and steel manufacturer, then rose till he opened free libraries in his native land, and last month a free library in Allegheny City, and now offers two million dollars for a free library in Pittsburgh. This example will be catching until the earth is revolutionized. How majestic such men in comparison with some I wot of, who amass wealth and clutch it with both hands until death begins to feel for their heart-strings, and then they dictate an attorney a last will and testament, in which they spite some daughter because she married against her father's wish, and fling a few crumbs of suffering humanity, as much as to say: "I have kept this surplus property, through all these long winters, and through all these long years, for a needy and suffering world, and would keep longer if I could, but as I must give it up, take and much good may it do you!" Now we begin to understand the text, "Better is a living dog than a dead lion."

Dead Lions Unmourned.

Who would attempt to write the obituary of the dead lions of commerce, the dead lions of law, the dead lions of medicine, the dead lions of social influence? Vast capacity had they, and mighty range, and other men in their presence were as powerless as the antelope or heifer or giraffe when from the angle a Numidian lion springs upon its prey. But they get through with life. They lay down in their magnificent lair. They have made their last sharp bargain. They have spoken their last hard word. They have committed their last mean act. When a solitary inhabitant of the desert rolls over helpless, the lioness and whelps fill the air with shrieks and wails, and lash themselves into lamentation, and is a genuine grief for the poor things. But when a dead lion of monstrous uselessness expires, there is nothing but dramatized woe, for "Better is a living dog than a dead lion."

My text also means that an opportunity of the living present is better than a great opportunity missed. We spend much of our time in saying: "If only had." We can all look back and see some occasion where we might have done a great deed, might have effected an important rescue, or we might have dealt a stroke that would have accomplished a vast result. Through stupidity or lack of appreciation of the crisis, or through procrastination, we let the chance go by. How much time we have wasted in thinking of what we might have done or might have done! We spend hours and days and years in walking around that dead lion. We cannot resuscitate it. It will never open its eyes again. There will never be another spring in its paw. Dead as any feline terror of South Africa, through whose heart thirty years ago Gordon Cumming sent the slug. Don't let us give any more time to the deploring of the dead past. There are other opportunities remaining. They may not be as great, but they are worth our attention. Small opportunities all around, opportunities for the saying of kind words and doing of kind deeds. Helplessness to be helped. Disheartened ones to be encouraged. Lost ones to be found. Though the present may be insignificant as compared with the past, "Better is a living dog than a dead lion."

Disheartening Regret.

The most useless and painful feeling is the one of regret. Repent of lost opportunities we must, and get pardon we may, but regrets weaken, dishearten, and cripple for future work. If a sea-captain who once had charge of a White Star steamer across the Atlantic ocean, one foggy night runs on a rock off Newfoundland, and passengers and ship perish, shall he refuse to take command of a small boat up the North River and say, "I never will go on the water again unless I can run one of the White Star line?" Shall the engineer of a lighting express, who at a station mis-read the telegram of a train-dispatcher and went into collision, and for that has been put down to the work of engineering a freight train, say, "I never will again mount an engine unless I can run a vestibule express?" Take what you have of opportunity left. Do your best with what remains. Your shortest winter day is worth more to you than can be the longest day of a previous summer. Your opportunity now, as compared with previous opportunities, may be small as a rat-terrier compared with the lion which at Matabosa, fatally wounded by the gun of David Livingstone, in its death agony leaped upon the missionary explorer, and with its jaws crushed the bone of his arm to splinters, and then rolled over and expired, but, "Better is a living dog than a dead lion."

Mighty Monarchs in Death.

My text also means that the condition of the most wretched man alive is better than that of the most favored sinners departed. The chance of these last is gone. Where they are they cannot make any earthly assets available. After Charlemagne was dead he was set in an ornamented sepulchre on a golden throne, and a crown was put on his cold brow, and a sceptre in his stiff hand, but that gave him no dominion in the next world. One of the most intensely interesting things I saw last winter in Egypt was Pharaoh of olden times, the very Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites. The inscriptions on his sarcophagus, and the writing on his mummy bandages, prove beyond controversy that he was the Pharaoh of Bible times. All the Egyptologists and the explorations agree that it is the old scoundrel himself. Visible are the very teeth with which he gnashed against the Israelitish brick-makers. There are the sockets of the merciless eyes with which he looked upon the overburdened people of God. There is the hair that floated in the breeze off the Red Sea. There are the very lips with which he commanded them to make bricks without straw. Thousands of years afterward, when the wrappings of the mummy were unrolled, old Pharaoh lifted up his arm as if in imploration, but his skinny bones cannot again clutch his shattered sceptre. He is a dead lion. And is not any man now living, in the fact that he has opportunity of repentance and salvation, better off than any of those departed ones who, by authority or possessions or influence, were positively Leonine, and Yet Wicked?

What a thing to congratulate you on is your life! Why, it is worth more than all the gems of the universe kindled into one precious stone. I am alive! What does that mean? Why, it means that I still have all opportunity of being saved myself, and helping others to be saved. To be alive! Why, it means that I have yet another chance to correct my past mistakes, and make sure work for heaven. Alive, are we? Come, let us celebrate it by new resolutions, new self-examination, new consecration, and a new career. The smallest and most insignificant to-day is worth to us more than five hundred yesterdays. Taking advantage of the present, let us get pardon for all the past, and security for all the future. Where are our forgiven sins? I don't know. God don't know, either. He says, "Your sins and iniquities will I remember no more."

What encouragement in the text for all Christian workers! Despair of no one's salvation. While there is life there is hope. When in England a young lady asked for a class in a Sunday-school, the superintendent said, "Better go out on the street and get your own class." She brought in a ragged and filthy boy. The superintendent gave him good apparel. In a few Sundays he absented himself. Inquiry discovered that in a street fight he had his decent apparel torn off. He was brought in and a second time respectably clad. After a few Sundays he again disappeared, and it was found that he was again ragged and wretched. "Then," said the teacher, "we can do nothing with him." But the superintendent fitted him up again and started him again. After a while and his heart changed. He started for the ministry and became a foreign missionary and on heathen grounds lived, and translated the Scriptures, and preached, until among the most illustrious names of the Church on earth and in heaven is the name of glorious Robert Morrison. Go forth and save the lost, and remember however depraved, however ragged, and however filthy and undone a child is, or a man is, or a woman is, they are worth an effort. I would rather have their opportunity than any that will ever be given to those who lived in magnificent sin and splendid unrighteousness and then wrapped their gorgeous tapestry around them and without a prayer expired. "Better is a living dog than a dead lion."

The Gospel Took Hold of Him

In the great day it will be found that the last shall be first. There are in the grog-shops and in the haunts of iniquity to-day those who will yet be models of holiness and preach Christ to the people. In yonder group of young men who came here with no useful purpose, there is one who will yet live for Christ and perhaps die for Him. In a pulpit stood a stranger preaching, and he said: "The last time I was in this church was fifteen years ago, and the circumstances were peculiar."

Three Young Men

had come, expecting to disturb the service, and they had stones in their pockets which they expected to hurl at the preacher. One of the young men referred to refused to take part in the assault, and the others, in disgust at his cowardice, left the building. One of the three was hanged for forgery. Another is in prison, condemned to death for murder. I was the third, but the grace of God saved me." My hearer, give no one up. The case may seem desperate, but the grace of God likes to undertake a dead lift. I proclaim it this day to all the people—Free Grace! Living and dying, be that my theme—Free Grace! Sound it across the continent, sound it across the seas—Free Grace! Spell out those words in flowers, lift them in arches, build them in thrones, roll them in oratorios—Free Grace! That will yet Edenize the earth and people heaven with nations redeemed. Free Grace!

Salvation! Oh, the joyful sound,
'Tis pleasure to our ears,
A sovereign balm for every wound,
A cordial for our fears.
Buried in sorrow and in sin
At death's dark door we lay,
But we arise by grace divine,
To see a heavenly day.

MR. GEORGE M. SCOTT,

First Gentile Mayor of Salt Lake City.

(See page 220.)

THE recent election to the mayoralty of Salt Lake City, has been a genuine surprise to the whole country. That the Mormons should have a non-Mormon mayor of their own capital implies a marvellous change in public spirit. Doubtless the result is in part due to the Federal enactments, which took the control of the municipal election out of the hands of the Mormon Church, and gave it to men who did their duty impartially. Nevertheless the fact that Mr. Scott received a majority of votes in Salt Lake City indicates a remarkable movement among the citizens.

Mr. George M. Scott, whose portrait we now publish, received a majority of 808 votes in a total of 6,354. He is a native of Clinton County, New York, fifty-four years old, who went to California in 1852, and thence to Utah in 1871. He established himself in business in Salt Lake City, and by industry, ability, probity, and broad human sympathies gained both fortune and a reputation for high character. It is believed that Mr. Scott's personal character won for him the votes of many Mormons, who are dissatisfied with the government of their own leaders, and believe that their city would enjoy greater prosperity under the rule of an honest man. The city of Provo has also elected a Gentile ticket.

READINESS FOR RAPTURE.

By Rev. F. L. Chapell.*

It needs no argument with any evangelical believer to show that faith is a prime requisite for the reception of the benefits of the gospel. The briefest evangel is "Believe and Receive." And this is true, not only of the gospel as a whole, but also of every phase or dispensation of it. Readiness for rapture must therefore begin with faith in rapture. "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; for before his translation he had this testimony that he pleased God. But without faith it is impossible to please him." It was, then, Enoch's faith that pleased God; and it was his that secured his translation. For it is according to faith that blessings are secured. What was it, then, that caused the rapture of this marked man of antediluvian times? It was his faith that he should be thus caught away. Had he not believed it, he would not have received it.

Faith in Translation

Let us beware, then, of proclaiming, as some seem unthinkingly to do, that at any time the power of the Lord may descend and take away all Christians now living; since by far the larger majority of those Christians have not the Scriptural faith that they shall be so taken. On the contrary, they are constantly saying, "Death is certain," and are frequently singing in their devotional moments:

"When death's cold sullen stream Shall o'er me roll."

Let us not indulge in any delusive dreams. The Scriptures do not give us warrant, either by example or precept, to believe that any will be translated who are not expecting it. See II King 2:9-11; Luke 24:50, 51; II Thess. 5:4. The frequent that are given because the coming of the Lord will be unexpected, are for the express purpose of differentiating the believing from the unbelieving; as we read in I Thess. 4:3, 4: "When they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." Here is a truth that needs to be carefully noted. "According to your faith be it unto you." If you do not believe that you will be translated, where is there any evidence that you will be?

Exhortations to Watchfulness

The Scriptures present to us a realm of truth and fact widely different from that which meets us in ordinary observation and experience. If our minds are mainly occupied with the events of our ordinary, natural, fallen condition, in which death reigns, and the grave covers the body from sight, we shall not believe in translation. But, on the other hand, if the Scriptures are chiefly occupying our thoughts, and the Saviour's career is apprehended in its true relation to humanity, we shall readily enough believe in translation, since both the general scope of the Scriptures and the personal career of Jesus lead us directly to it. For, as regards the Saviour, although He died, the grave did not keep Him. His body saw no corruption. He was bodily translated as really as was Elijah. His

Death was not a Necessity

to his personal translation. Had He not taken on Him the cause of dying as well as living humanity (Rom. 14:9), he might logically have been translated from the mount of transfiguration. At all events, he was taken up bodily, and as a living man, into heaven, showing thus to be the proper exit of humanity from the earthly state. And, if the thought is fixed as it should be, on Him, faith in translation will readily enough follow.

And the same result will be secured if we consider the general scope of the Scriptures: If we will resolutely turn our minds from the present fallen condition of man and nature to the comprehensive and consistent picture which the Scripture puts before us, we shall find these prominent facts: First, death is the penalty for sin; Second, eminently holy men in each dispensation have been translated without death; Third, the intelligent desire of the most godly has been, not that they shall be unclothed, but that mortality might be swallowed up of life; Fourth, that there is

A Promised Time Coming

when there shall be no more death; and generally, that the plan of redemption is a comprehensive, well-laid scheme purposed by the Almighty God, absolutely sure of accomplishment, the preparatory stages of which have already been executed; and that everything is preparing for a grand, sudden, final stroke of executive power, of which, as regards believers, the resurrection of the dead and the changing of the living, and their rapture into heaven is a prominent feature.

Now, whoever clearly sees this comprehensive and certain plan, and also learns from watchfulness that the final dénouement is near, can readily enough believe the rapture, and can certainly find it a much more cheering prospect than is the walk through the valley of the shadow of death. Toward this blessed hope the thought, and consequently the faith, of God's dear children is already turning in some degree. The past half-century has witnessed a great change in this regard. And the future will witness yet more and more, so that, in God's own good time, by faith the waiting ones will be taken.

THE GENESIS OF LA GRIPPE.

THE strange epidemic which has passed around the world, sowing the seeds of disease and death in all lands, has been traced to its original source. The German periodical, Unsere Zeit, publishes an article by a writer who saw the malady first break out in the Central Asian Khanate of Bokhara. He traces the primary cause so far back as the summer of 1888, which was exceptionally hot and dry, and was followed by a most bitter winter and rainy spring. The dried-up earth was full of cracks and holes from drought and subsequent frost, so that the spring rains of 1889 formed ponds and lakes in these holes throughout the Khanate, inundated the new railway-cuttings, and turned the country into a perfect marsh. When the hot weather set in, the water gave off poisonous exhalations, rendering malaria general. As the winter had been so severe, the Bokhariots were obliged to spend money on firing instead of food, so that they were weak from want of nourishment, while the severe fast of Ramadan further reduced their power to resist disease. Then the malarial epidemic appeared suddenly, and the enfeebled inhabitants died off in large numbers, while the Europeans suffered so severely that at one time all the household of the Russian Legation in the city of Bokhara were in bed, and there was no one left to nurse the invalids. The Russian railway officials and soldiers were equally affected, and as soon as the sufferers became convalescent they hurried home to Russia for change of air and good nursing. Evidently they took the infection with them, for the epidemic travelled westward along the Central Asian Railway, to break out at St. Petersburg in October, and thence spread over Europe and to America.

It is a pathetic admonition that this fact gives. The Czar of Russia, who rules over those Bokhara peasants, and the kings and nobles of Europe who would despise them if they ever thought of them, and our own citizens, many of whom never heard of them, have had to suffer through their misery. The cry of the Bokhara peasant was unheard, but he dies, and a giant arm stretches from his corpse and seizes the Czar in his palace, the nobles in their castles, the rich in their mansions, and reaches across the ocean and grips men and women in our American cities. It appears that the poor peasant in Bokhara, more than seven thousand miles away, is our brother, and we have to acknowledge our relationship by sharing with him his heritage of disease. God does not allow the lessons of His Word to be ignored forever. When men will not learn them there, He makes them learn them by painful experience. We have been taught now by a line of dead, thousands of miles in length, that "No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14:7.)

A CONVICT'S COMPLAINT.

THE chaplain of a prison on his ordinary visitation came upon a convict who had just been sentenced. He was a well-known character, and the crime for which he was then suffering was not by any means the worst which he had committed. The clergyman had been warned to be careful how he spoke to the man, as he was extremely violent, and was told that he might as well not visit him, as he would make no impression upon him. But strong in his Master's strength, God's servant resolved to visit this lost one, and in God's name offer him salvation. The man for a time listened in dogged silence, then looking up, he said, "I knows ye mean well, gov'nor, but it ain't no use; I am bad from the heart!" "I know that," was the quick reply, "and God has provided against that state of things, and He says if you come to Him He will take away your evil heart and give you a clean heart." The man had never heard that before. Instinctively he apprehended what it meant. He had always thought if he came to Christ he would have to stand to his colors in his own strength, but here God said He would take away his evil heart, with all its wicked propensities, and give him a clean heart, which would incline to things good and holy. There and then he accepted Christ, and resolved to live for Him. By-and-by the time of his liberation came. His old companions had counted the days until he should rejoin the outer world, and they were at the prison gate to welcome him to liberty again. Of course they thought he would resume his old course of life, and be once more the moving spirit in all their plots, but he undeceived them, and told them he had given himself to Christ, and entreated them to do the same. At first they could scarcely credit it, but soon by his altered behavior they saw that a great change for the better had come over him, and some were led to inquire how it had happened, and to follow in his footsteps. The arm of the Lord is not shortened, nor His power diminished. He is still able to save all who will come to Him.

THE PREDICTED WAY FOR THE KINGS OF THE EAST.

THE prophecy that in the last days, when the appointed time for the restoration of the Jews to their own land approached, "the way of the Kings of the East" should be prepared (Rev. 16:12), is now in process of fulfilment. As God promised them (Isa. 43:19), a way is being made in the wilderness. This is another sign that we are rapidly nearing the final convulsion in the midst of which the eyes of the Jews will once more turn with longing to their ancient inheritance, and find their city, and the way to it, in readiness for them.

A writer in the Jewish Herald thus records the events now taking place: "On approaching the city from the west, in former years, there were scarcely any buildings except the Russian Convent and the Montefiore Almshouses to intercept the view of the city walls; now the whole plain is covered with private residences and colonies of Jews, whilst near to the Jaffa Gate are large numbers of shops already tenanted, and numerous others in course of construction. The extension beyond the walls has become necessary, on account of the rapid increase of the population. I am informed by Mr. Moore British Consul here, that within the last three or four years about 20,000 Jews have come to Jerusalem for permanent residences in and around the city, and that of the entire population of about 70,000, it is estimated that nearly 40,000 are Jews. He also stated that into Palestine during recent years has been entirely without precedent. The principal streets which, but a few years since, were almost impassable in rainy weather, have been paved with stone; a new wide street has been opened through a densely populated quarter, and five hotels are now open for the reception of the annually increasing number of visitors from all lands. Public works are in progress. The road from Jaffa to Jerusalem at one time all but impracticable, has been reconstructed by an eminent engineer; a good road has been formed from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, and another from Jerusalem to Hebron; several others are rapidly approaching completion—from Jaffa to Nablous (Shechem), forty miles; Jerusalem to Jericho, twenty miles; Caipha to Nazareth, twenty miles; and Nazareth to Tiberias, eighteen miles. Jerusalem has hitherto been almost wholly dependent for its water supply upon its large underground cisterns for the reception of rain-water, which, after a summer's drought, often prove insufficient in quantity, and almost unfit for use. The Government is now about to bring an unfailing supply from a spring of pure water beyond Solomon's Pools—about nine miles distant. A large flour-mill, having proved both a great benefit and a financial success, others, with large steam-power, are in process of erection; soap factories have commenced operations, and at Jaffa steam saw-mills have been established. Colonies of Jews following agricultural pursuits, stated to be successful, are located, one about five miles from Jaffa, and a larger one at Limerin near Cæsarea, originated and assisted by the Rothschild family. The increased amount of rain which has fallen the last few years in Palestine has had most marked effect in larger and more abundant harvests than hitherto known. Important results may be expected from the railway between Jaffa and Jerusalem.

The Influx of Jews

* From his article in Dr. A. J. Gordon's Watchman.

As rumors in former years have prevailed which have never been realized, I called upon Mr. Frutiger, the banker, to whom the concession has been granted by the Turkish Government, and was assured by him that the necessary capital had been subscribed, and that the works would commence immediately upon the close of the rainy season in the spring of 1890, and pushed on urgently to completion. As a natural sequence the harbor of Jaffa, which is now inaccessible to Mediterranean steamers, must be deepened and enlarged, and the rocky barrier that prevents ingress removed. It is contemplated to subsequently extend this line via Gaza and El-Arish over the Short desert to Port Said and Ismailia on the Maritime Canal, thus connecting with the railway system of Lower Egypt for Cairo, Alexandria, and Suez, and to the Fayoum and Upper Egypt. Such important action for the improvement of the Holy City and development of the resources of Palestine, and opening up the country to commerce are without precedent hitherto. Viewed in connection with the numerous and active efforts being made by various religious agencies throughout the country for the evangelization of the people and the conversion of the Jews, these acts must encourage every lover of God's Ancient People to hope that His 'set time' to favor Zion is fast approaching."

THE WIDOW OF NAIN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for April 13, Luke 7: 11-18; Golden Text, Luke 7: 16.

Christ's Varied Ministry—The Centurion's Affection for his Slave—A Plea Based on Misconception—The Centurion's Disclaimer—His Ideas of Sickness—Subject to Christ's Orders—God's Measure of Blessing—According to Your Faith—The Mourning Widow—A Swiss Widow's Story—The Word of Power.

THERE was nothing of routine about the life of Jesus during the days of His ministry. Sometimes He would be occupied with large multitudes of people, sometimes with the little company of His disciples, and then, again, he would give all His attention to a single individual. He never had anything of hurry or pressure in His life, because he simply took from His Father's hand whatever His Father brought before Him to do.

Having ended His second preaching of the sermon on the mount, "in the plain," He "entered into Capernaum. And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear unto him, was sick, and ready to die." The servants of those days were slaves, and it was rare indeed for a master to be really attached to a slave, whom he regarded as he did a horse or cow, as a part of his estate, and according to his monetary value. But this centurion must have known something of the fear of God, and probably he was acquainted with some part of the Jewish Scriptures, and his conduct was affected by them. Among the heathen the treatment of a slave was subject simply to the will of his owner; among the Jews, God provided for the defence of the slave. (Ex. 21: 1-11, 20, 21, 26, 27.) The God of love became a real, living person to the centurion, and his heart was touched with love to his slave. "When he heard of Jesus, he sent unto Him the elders of the Jews, beseeching Him that He would come and heal his servant." In his humility, he imagined that some of His own people would be more likely to prevail with Him than he. Yet why should he, or any other, question the willingness of Jesus to heal?

When these elders came to Jesus they "besought Him instantly (or earnestly),

Saying That He Was Worthy

for whom he should do this; for he loveth our nation, he hath built us a synagogue." Oh how mistaken are men's ideas of God! Again and again the request comes into a prayer-meeting, "Pray for the healing of so and so; he is an earnest, consistent Christian, and he has great faith"—as though to imply that some goodness of his would go far to influence God to undertake his case. Or, again, "Pray for the conversion of such a family; the parents are true Christians, and most earnest workers, and they give a great deal to the Lord's work"—just as though, by their service and gifts, they had put the Lord under a special obligation to them, and He was more sure to convert their children for this reason. When will men learn that God blesses us and hears our prayers, not because of what we are, but because of what Jesus is? "I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for Mine holy name's sake." (Ezek. 36: 22.) It is always of grace, not of merit, that we receive answers to our prayers.

But Jesus saw through all this flattery of the Jewish elders into the heart of the centurion as he sat in his house, and He knew the heart which trusted Him, so He "went with them." "When He was now not far from the house, the centurion," having probably heard of the way in which his request had been urged upon Jesus, "sent friends to Him," disclaiming their adulations, "Trouble not thyself, for that thou shouldest enter under my roof; wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee; but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed." Others said of him, "He is worthy;" he said of himself, "I am not worthy," but at the same time showed his complete trust that a word from Jesus was enough; he had no such idea as that any goodness of his was to add to the power or merit of the work of Jesus. "For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers; and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it;" implying that if he, in his little sphere, could command obedience, how surely could Jesus who had power over all sickness!

I Am Not Worthy

It was a deep joy to the heart of Jesus when He found this firm, simple faith in the Gentile centurion. He marvelled at him, and said to the flattering elders, and the people that followed Him, "I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." And to the centurion, who had himself followed after his friends, He said, "Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the self-same hour." (Matt. 8: 13.) This is always God's measure. "As thou hast believed," as thou hast learned to appreciate and to count upon thy God, so shall it be done unto thee. God deals with us, not according to what He finds in us, but according to what we find in Him. His dealings with us are by no means so much favor for so much service; God loves the unlovely, He is kind to the unthankful, and the unworthy; Christ died for us when we were yet sinners; the thought of merit cannot come in where God deals with us in His wondrous grace.

The day after, "He went into a city called Nain."

It was not by accident; Jesus never did anything by accident. His visit was timely. The name Nain implies pleasantness; but where sin has come in with its fearful consequences, there pleasantness becomes overshadowed, for sorrow, suffering, death, are the consequences of sin since it first entered into the world. The first object which He saw was a funeral procession. The corpse was that of a man, "the only son of his mother, and she was a widow." A funeral procession is no uncommon thing; in large cities it is a rare thing when it is not seen every day. Perhaps Jesus had met many such before. But He was on earth as the express Image of His Father (Heb. 1: 3), and it was just now His part to shew

God's Heart to the Widow.

When He saw her, "He had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not." The words would have been heartless mockery, or, to say the least, mawkish sentimentality, from any other lips than His. But in His word there is power and authority. When He speaks, He creates what He says; one of His offices is to wipe away all tears from the eyes of His own. (Rev. 7: 17; 21: 4.) God has constituted Himself the Defender of the widow; He executes their judgment (Deut. 10: 16); He ordains that they shall "eat and be satisfied," etc. (Deut. 14: 29.) According to His law, no raiment of a widow might be pledged (Deut. 24: 17); the very last sheaves of the harvest were to be left for her benefit. (Ver. 19.) God takes upon Himself to relieve her (Ps. 146: 9), and will establish her border. (Prov. 15: 25.) Oh why do widows place all their dependence on unkind and unwilling relatives, when God is ready to undertake their cause, and incline either these same relatives, or others, to esteem it a privilege to help them! "Let thy widows trust in me," He says to His ancient people. (Jer. 49: 11.) As His Father's Representative, embodying all His Father's love and care for the widow, Jesus might well say to this bereaved widow, "Weep not." There is real, solid power in every word of God. When Jesus was reading in the synagogue at Nazareth, from Isa. 61: 1-3, part of the passage from which He read was, "The Lord hath anointed me to . . .

Comfort All That Mourn."

As that widow of Nain stood before Him with all the hope and joy of her life extinguished in that corpse which lay upon the bier, there was vested in Jesus the power to comfort her. He was anointed for this ministry. There is no broken heart which He cannot bind, no sorrow beyond the healing of His touch. Some years ago, a child of God was holding services at Neuchâtel, in Switzerland. Among others who remained as inquirers was one dressed in widow's garments, whose look of stony despair went home to the heart of the speaker. She addressed her, but for some time obtained no answer. At last the pent-up grief of her broken heart found utterance, and she told her story. She said: "I never knew my father nor my mother. I never knew brother or sister, uncle, aunt, or cousin; I was brought up on the parish, and when old enough, was put out to service. Ever since I can remember, I longed for some one to love me. When in service I made the acquaintance of a young man; he was respectable and in good work, and he loved me. We were married. All the pent-up love of my heart was lavished upon him; words could not tell how I loved him. We had one little boy, and he was our idol too. No one seemed so happy as we were. Then the fever came, my husband fell ill and died; in a week after, my little boy sickened and died too." Then, with a face like a tigress, she turned around and said: "God is hard! God is cruel! Why did He give me the desire of my heart to tear it away like this? What have I done that He should be angry with me like this?" The evangelist who had been speaking was dumb before such sorrow; but, throwing herself on the Lord, He taught her, and she said: "I would not mock you, my poor child, by offering you human sympathy, but I want to tell you Jesus was anointed 'to comfort all that mourn,' and I am sure He knows how to comfort you. I will kneel down and ask Him to do so." The young widow did not kneel, and seemed no way helped; but the evangelist reckoned on her Lord. Some weeks later, she saw the poor widow again, but the light of God had come into her life. The anointed One had done His work, had taken possession of her heart and given His own explanations, and she had found in Him a better portion than in those she mourned.

The "Weep Not" of Jesus

is a power. The funeral procession halted, and Jesus touched the bier. The bearers came under the power of that wondrous presence, and then He who spake as never man spake, said in a tone of authority, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." Surely an electric thrill would run through the multitude at these apparently daring words, but there was a power about Jesus which commanded respect. The multitude were not left long to wonder. The corpse which had been lying stiff and cold upon the bier began suddenly to move, color and animation returned, the eyes opened, and "he began to speak." He who had said "weep not" was the very same whose name is "the Resurrection and the Life." Why should the widow weep when the son whose loss she mourned was now alive again, and she heard his very words in the well-known voice which she had thought was hushed forever? Her sorrow was turned into joy, and Jesus had done it all.

There was no more need for the bier or the bearers; the resurrected man could walk home. Jesus "delivered him" to his astounded mother. Life had conquered death! "And there came a fear on all; and they glorified God, saying, That a great Prophet is risen up among us, and That God had visited His people." How strange that they did not at once recognize Him as the coming Messiah! How blind must their eyes have been! It seems so strange that this wondrous work of raising the dead, which had been heard of only three times before since the world was, should not have led them to inquire, "Is not this the Christ?" They knew Him as a great Prophet, but not as the great Prophet. Human nature loves that which exalts itself, that which brings it into prominence, but in Jesus there was nothing in which human nature could glory. He never asserted Himself, He received no honor from men, He sought not His own rights, He shrank from all which the world gloried in; the great ones of this world could find nothing in Jesus with which they could fraternize; He was ever amongst the poor and the lowliest among them. When others talked of Him as a great prophet, He was still among His disciples as "He that serveth." O how truly was His kingdom "not of this world"! Shall we be astonished, if we see men callous even when great works of God are done before their eyes? They acknowledge the facts, and then live on as though they had not happened, and so it is only the few who truly follow Jesus.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

TORNADO-SWEPT.

SYMPATHY is an insufficient word when we try to express our feelings toward Louisville and other neighborhoods struck by the wing of an archangel of tempest. Both a Northern and Southern city, and having in the roll of her citizenship many of the best people of both sections, Louisville's disaster is the disaster of America; yea, of the whole civilized world. Lovelier city stands not under the sun. Her hospitalities are without limit. Her quick responses when other cities are in trouble, and her queenly behavior toward Memphis and New Orleans and Jacksonville when the yellow-fever was let loose upon them will win for her anything she may need, if disposed to call for it. Whole villages prostrated in the same companionship of woe, and large districts afflicted with lighter or heavier stroke, the question arises in all hearts, What can we do? At this writing, and before all the terrible facts are known, plans of relief have not yet been projected, but Louisville shall not sit solitary, and the villagers of Kentucky and Illinois and Tennessee will not be left homeless.

What does it all mean? Some think these cyclones are a result of the cutting down of the forests. Perhaps so, and perhaps not. Cyclones do not roll on the ground, where the trunks and branches of trees could arrest them. They fly so high that we are doubtful whether the ruthless American axe is responsible for their devastation. We have this theory: Satan is "the prince of the power of the air," and perhaps the mighty progress of truth and righteousness and liberty in our time may have especially angered him, and if he cannot stop the chariot of the gospel, perhaps he is trying to stop the prosperity of the cities. The better a city, and the better a village, and the better a neighborhood, the greater his spite against it. Meanwhile we snatch up morning and evening paper at the first moment of their arrival, hoping to read that some of the accounts have been exaggerated. But no. This tragedy of America deepens in blackness and horror as the hours go by, and nothing but the revelations of the last day can tell the extent of this atmospheric mischief, or explain the height and depth of this national calamity. Let all who have a roof over their heads and an unbroken family circle appreciate their mercies, and do everything possible to help lift the scourged districts out of the want and wretchedness into which they have fallen. May God help the helpless and comfort the comfortless, and give us to learn the uncertainty of all earthly calculations, and the wisdom of securing treasures in a place where hurricanes cannot uproot, nor fires consume, nor floods drown!

OUR exchanges, greeting! They are as different as the men who edit them. Most of the editors are genial, and write like successful men. Unsuccessful men are cynical, and acerb, and depreciative. They have had a hard time, and are not in sympathy with those who seem to have an easy time. On the other hand, those who have got on tolerably well in the world are disposed to be helpful to those who are still in the struggle, and would rather say a pleasant thing of a man than something denunciatory. So newspapers, religious and secular, take type from the people who preside over them. If the editor is a disappointed man, and the publisher is a disappointed man, there is no end to the jeremiads, and the fault-findings, and the lachrymosities. But if the editor have had a reasonable breakfast, and capacity to digest it, and has had many years of such happinesses, he is more apt to dwell in Mount Gerizim, which is the mount of blessing, than in Mount Ebal, which is the mount of cursing. What a refreshment it is for us to take up those exchanges which are good-natured and sympathetic, and who like sweet oil, better than vinegar and red pepper! What a depressing thing to take up those exchanges whose editors think everything is going to smash because their own liver has gone to smash. The world has enough ailments and troubles without our making them worse. If we are not right ourselves, we cannot make others right. Oh for more healthy doctors, whether their appendage be M. D. or D. D.! An editorial or a sermon that begins with groan and growl will afford neither physical nor mental nor spiritual recuperation. The best and greatest sermon that was ever preached began with nine "Blesseds." We will all do better to be more economical of our anathemas and sarcasms and sharp retorts.

FEMALE Inspectors are needed in all our prisons and police stations. We are in full sympathy with the recent move made for such appointment. The unfortunate women who are arrested for crime, or taken in their intoxication, ought to be handed over to the care of women. The present way of doing things is most indelicate and disgraceful. What chance can there be for the reformation of these poor creatures if their humiliation is further increased by the presence of men at times when they require the presence and service of good and honorable women? Our prison reform, so far advanced beyond the times when John Howard and Elizabeth Fry put their hand to the work, has yet many long strides to take before we shall get the blessing of Him who said, "I was in prison, and ye visited Me." There is in most of the places of incarceration an awful need of more sunshine, more fresh air, more opportunity for cleanliness, and more kindly and considerate treatment of shipwrecked womanhood.

SCANDALS in newspapers give the idea that the marriage relation is not considered as sacred as once. Divorces, elopements, domestic infelicities, are every day reported. Ah, my reader, you forget that the cases of domestic happiness are never reported. One row between husband and wife in a boarding-house makes more noise than all the cheerful songs, and glad nurseries, and Edenic joys of five hundred domestic circles. The most of the people are married to the persons best suited to them. The marriage relation never wrought so much happiness for the world as now. There may be unfortunate occurrences in the conjugal state. Even Adam and Eve got into some trouble through too great fondness for fruit; but the vast majority of married people are doing well. It is not good for man to be alone, and the world is so full of good women that it is an astonishment that any man should make an unwise selection.

DENOMINATIONAL changes are becoming more frequent. But when a minister leaves one denomination for another he is apt to become the object of attack from the church he quits. This ought not so to be. The first honest thing for a man to do after changing his mind, is to change his denomination. Nearly all the great ecclesiastical wrangles of the last twenty-five years come from the fact that ministers have stayed in denominations after their theories of religion have become discordant. When a minister enters a denomination he takes oath that he will advance the doctrines and government of that church. If he stays there breeding unwholesome discussions, and assailing that which he has sworn to protect and forward, it is most unfair and unwise. When an Episcopal minister ceases to like the liturgy, he had better resign episcopacy. When a Methodist minister gets out with revivals, and anxious seats, and the itinerancy, and the bishopric, he had better change his denominational relations. When a Presbyterian minister gets so liberal that he is ready to give away the essential truths of the Bible, he had better bid farewell to Presbyterianism. So when I read, as I did yesterday, of a minister of one denomination passing to another, I only ask myself the question, "Is he honest?" If I conclude that he is, and I so conclude unless I have some proof to the contrary, I say, "That is right. God speed him! May he find his new surroundings happier than those from which he has departed!" Do not pelt a man because he has changed his mind. Every one, excepting a fool, sometimes changes his mind. When we enter heaven we will find so many things different from that which we supposed, we will all change our minds.

THE true remedy for our troubles with the Indians was forcibly described in an address delivered recently before the Presbyterian Union in New York by Mr. Herbert Welsh, the Corresponding Secretary of the Indian Rights Association. He said: "We do not desire that members of our National Legislature, nor of our Executive branch of the Government, should represent a particular Christian creed in their dealings with the Indian; but we do desire, and we have a right to demand, that they should at all times represent in their action toward these people those principles of justice and righteousness from which that religion can never be divorced, and of which it is the fullest exponent. The failures and the crimes which have frequently disgraced our Indian management in the past are due to a violation of these principles, to ignorance, to greed, to injustice. The successes which we hope for in the future must depend wholly upon their observance—to knowledge, to generosity, to fair dealing." Gen. O. O. Howard, who spoke from experience in his relations with the Indians in his army life, strongly urged the duty of giving the gospel to the Indians. "Everything is done better," he said, "when the heart is right."

An Instructive Report for our Statesmen and commercial houses was published last week by the Tribune. It came from a correspondent whom Journal has sent to Buenos Ayres. It appears through mismanagement and negligence, the effect of that thriving port, though so near to us, fallen entirely into European hands. The latest statistics available are those of 1888, but those of 1889 do not differ from them to any material extent. In these it appears that although foreign goods received in Buenos Ayres during 1888 to the amount of $128,412,110, less than ten millions came to the United States. England supplied forty millions, and France nearly twenty-three millions. A similar disparity exists in the record of exports. Goods left Buenos Ayres for foreign countries, during the year, of the value of $100,111,700. Of these less than seven millions came to the United States, while nearly twenty-eight millions to France and seventeen millions to England. A more remarkable exhibit is made in the number of the vessels calling at the port. Of the 5,935 ships which entered the port during the year, one bore the flag of the United States, and of the sailing ships only eighty-five were American. The facts are not creditable to a nation boasting of business enterprise. To what extent the negligence, which has produced the result may be decided by the Pan-American Conference remains to be seen, but it is evident that there is an opportunity here for Congress to do something of real benefit for our commercial interests.

Another Star for the Flag is Promised in the of the House on Thursday last for the admission of Wyoming Territory to statehood. A strong effort was made by the proposal of amendments, in various forms, to eliminate from the constitution which has been adopted by the Territory the clause admitting women to the suffrage. The effort, however, defeated, and the admission was carried by a majority of twelve. The minority consisted of all the Democrats present in the House, one Republican. The bill has now to pass the Senate, but there seems little doubt of safety there. The figures presented by the advocates of admission during the debate made a strong claim for statehood. They show that the amount expended by Wyoming in territorial, judicial, and educational affairs, not more than one per cent. comes from the national treasury. For this, fifteen million dollars have been spent in reclamation of waste lands. The Territory is rich in iron, coal, and petroleum, and her agricultural resources are enormous. It was a curious thing which occasioned some comment, that though the Democrats in Congress were unanimous in opposing admission, the Democrats in the Territory and the Republicans in applying for it.

Postponement of the World's Fair for a months has been deemed essential to its success. Mr. Candler on March 25 introduced a resolution in the House, which was accepted, providing for the dedication of the buildings with appropriate ceremonies, October 12, 1892; and further providing that the Exposition shall be opened to the public not later than May 1, 1893, and close not later than October 30, 1893. He said that this postponement was not asked by Chicago, but he thought that it would inure to the benefit of the exhibitors who were to take part in the Exposition. The President is not to issue any invitation to foreign nations until he is satisfied that a bona fide appropriation of ten million dollars has been raised.

Harve Worked by Western Floods is De-scribed by visitors to the submerged districts as appalling. Breaks in the Mississippi levees were reported from many places last week, and in every one the inhabitants of the districts had to flee for their lives, leaving their property to be the prey of the rising waters. The break at Skipwith Landing on March 26, is a specimen of what has occurred in many other places. So suddenly did the sea widen from a hole the size of a man's arm to a gap three hundred feet wide, that the first sight of the people of the little town had of it was a rushing of the waters through the streets. The ladies with their children had such short notice of the danger that they barely saved their jumping out of their beds into the water over their heads deep to reach skiffs, which took them to safety. The Government steamer Meteor took the women and children on board and provided for the multitude which congregated on the levee. At least twenty thousand acres of tilled land were submerged by this break alone. There was no preparation for it, as the levee at this point was considered unusually strong. Large numbers of persons who fled to the higher ground are completely hemmed in by the waters, and will need food and clothing, and means of getting away to places of shelter. The cotton plantations have suffered severely. In many cases the planters have lost what had cost them years of thrift and industry to accumulate, and yet out of what they have left they are feeding the families whose homes were on their plantations.

Senator Blair is Exhibiting a Remarkable De-gree of perseverance. No sooner had his Education bill been defeated by an unexpected but decisive vote, than he came promptly to the front again with a new bill on the same model. Mr. Blair, like some noted historical characters, has the characteristic of an indomitable fighter, of not knowing when he is beaten. He is consistent, too, in maintaining the principle of his bill, and makes no change, except in the details. The new bill calls for an expenditure of fifty-eight millions in eight years, instead of seventy-seven millions. The basis of apportionment has also been changed. When the former bill was under debate most of the assaults upon it were directed to that point, Mr. Blair having taken the figures of illiteracy in the Southern States from the 1888 returns, which were said to be unreliable. Now he proposes to base the estimate of the amount to be advanced to each State on the official census returns of 1890. He is sanguine of passing his bill with these two changes, which he believes will remove the objections of several Senators who voted against his former measure.

The Long-Promised Measure for the Relief of Irish tenant farmers was introduced in the British House of Commons by the Government on March 24. Its provisions are so complicated that Mr. Gladstone declined to express any opinion upon the scheme until he could study it closely. It is a system of elaborate checks and counter-checks to protect the interests of both landlord and tenant. Its main features are the appropriation of a fund of $165,000,000, from which advances may be made to tenants desirous of purchasing the farms they occupy. The advance is not to be more than twenty times the annual rent, and the tenant will have to pay four per cent. interest upon it. If he can bargain with his landlord to sell at a lower price, the Government will require him still to pay a sum equal to four-fifths of his rent, and will retain the difference between that amount and the four per cent. interest as a guarantee fund to protect them in case the borrower falls into arrears. It is proposed to appoint a Land Court to arbitrate between the landowner and the tenant desiring to purchase, which shall have power to fix the price of the farm. As the bill does not provide for compulsory sale, it will still be optional with the owner to decline to accept the price which the court fixes as the proper value. The Irish members of Parliament regard the bill with little favor, and some of them have expressed their belief that it is worthless as a measure for the relief of the tenants.

The Acceptance by the Emperor of Germany of Count Herbert Bismarck's resignation of the office of Secretary of Foreign Affairs was formally announced last week. Baron Bieberstein, a statesman of Baden, has been invited to succeed him. The new Foreign Minister, whoever he may be, like Caprivi, the new Chancellor, will be regarded as merely a clerk of the Emperor, who intends to keep the control of the offices in his own hands. That the retirement of Bismarck, much as he was dreaded, has increased the apprehensions of Europe, is evident. The Emperor is known to be impulsive and imprudent in his utterances, and both qualities are dangerous in the present inflammable state of European affairs. The prevailing uneasiness found expression in the remarks of a prominent statesman, which an American newspaper correspondent in Europe has cabled. The statesman said: "The substitution of personal rule for the government of the Chancellor may have unexpected consequences at a date which it is impossible to specify. For some time past Austria has had no reason to be satisfied with the internal working of the Triple Alliance. She cannot feel any gratification at the military development of Italy, while Germany assumes over the military status of her allies a right of control which weighs heavily upon their finances and does not always spare their dignity. The wisdom of the Chancellor was able, when occasion required, to smooth over such difficulties, which a more hasty temper and less measured language would have been but ill calculated to remove." Russia is still less satisfied, and her uneasiness is increased by the effusive welcome given by Emperor William, in Berlin, to the Prince of Wales, and his reference in his speeches to what might be accomplished by the united operation of the German army and the English navy.

The Death of Professor Delitzsch is Reported. Students of the Old Testament in all lands will mourn his loss. He died at Leipzig at the advanced age of seventy-seven. His attention was drawn to Hebrew literature by two missionaries of the London Jewish Missionary Society, and he became so imbued with some of the finest old Jewish characteristics that he was supposed by many persons to be a Jew, though there was no Israelitish blood in his veins. Professor Delitzsch belonged to the orthodox school. In 1850 he received a call to the University of Erlangen, where he lectured with much success for sixteen years. His greatest work is his commentary on the Psalms. He also wrote valuable commentaries on Genesis, Job, Proverbs, the Song of Songs, and Isaiah. He was deeply interested in the Jewish people, and in his later years directed a modest seminary for the preparation of missionaries to the Jews. One of his sons was a victim to the Franco-German War, the other, Professor Friedrich Delitzsch, is a distinguished professor of Assyriology.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Presbyterian Church at Pensacola, Fla., has undertaken the support of Rev. W. B. McIlwain as a missionary to Japan.

The labors of the Rev. Robert Graham at Hebron Church, Philadelphia, have been much blessed. The building is crowded to excess, and many souls are being added to the church.

A lady and gentleman of Hartford, Conn., a few weeks since presented the National W. C. T. U. with the handsome sum of $5,000, in valuable bonds, to be used for the cause as Miss Willard and Miss Pugh may direct.

The Methodist Episcopal Church Home and St. Christopher Home receive $25,000 each under the will of the late Hector C. Havemeyer, of New York. The testator's mother is authorized to distribute $200,000 also among certain charitable institutions.

The Central Council of King's Daughters held sessions in New York on March 25. Arrangements were made for establishing a depository for flowers, which volunteers will distribute in the hospitals and the homes of the poor. Plans were discussed for organizing free kindergartens.

Mrs. Anna C. Cook has been holding services in the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Lancaster, O. A correspondent in that city writes us that a very remarkable movement has started from her labors. The church is crowded nightly, and at every service souls are being saved.

The New York Auxiliary to the McAll Mission in France held its seventh annual meeting in the Broadway Tabernacle on March 25. Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, graphically described the work Mr. McAll and his corps of helpers are doing, and made an earnest appeal for increased subscriptions to its support.

Ten dollars have been received from S. E. A., of Troy, N. Y., who asks us to acknowledge the receipt of them here, and says it is to be used for furthering the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and assisting the fund for the erection of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. We cordially thank S. E. A. both for the money, and the kindly expressions of appreciation of this journal by which it was accompanied.

Mr. Moody has been induced to continue his services another week in New York. The morning meetings at 10:30 are held in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, at Madison Avenue and Fifty-third Street. The evening meetings at the Reformed Church, Madison Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street. On Friday, at 3 o'clock, he will hold a meeting in Holy Trinity Church, Madison Avenue and Forty-second Street.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services in East New York were continued last week with increasing tokens of God's blessing. The whole neighborhood has been moved, and no building has been found large enough to hold the crowds anxious to hear the famous evangelist. Some very remarkable cases of conversion are among the large numbers that have taken place at these meetings. The visit of Dr. Munhall will never be forgotten in East New York.

Rev. E. W. Oakes, late of Manchester, N. H., has been holding meetings at Brighton, England, with remarkable success. A notorious gambler was among the converts. On March 23, Mr. Oakes went to Rotherham, Yorkshire, to take part in a convention for deepening spiritual life, which Mrs. Baxter was holding there. During the visit of Mr. Oakes to England his meetings have been wonderfully blessed, and wherever he has gone many souls have been saved through the blessing of God on his preaching.

LAMA SABACHTHANI?

A new Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Matt. 27:46.

A Cry out of Darkness—I. What Our Lord Suffered—The Lowest Depth—The Desertion was Real—A Very Remarkable Desertion—Had Never Deserted Him Before—Especially Painful to Such a Nature as Christ's—II. Why He Suffered—An Appeal to God—A Cry of Submission and Resolve—He Knew There was a Reason for the Desertion—III. The Outcome of this Suffering—He Stood in Our Stead—Must Feel the Separation from God that Sin Produces—Made Perfect Through Suffering—Three Lessons.

"THERE was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour:" this cry came out of that darkness. Expect not to see through its every word, as though it came from on high as a beam from the unclouded Sun of Righteousness. There is light in it, bright, flashing light; but there is a centre of impenetrable gloom, where the soul is ready to faint because of the terrible darkness.

Our Lord was then in the darkest part of His way. He had trodden the winepress now for hours, and the work was almost finished. He had reached the culminating point of His anguish. This is His dolorous lament from the lowest pit of misery—"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" I do not think that the records of time, or even of eternity, contain a sentence more full of anguish. Here the wormwood and the gall, and all the other bitternesses, are outdone. Here you look as into and though you strain your eyes, and gaze till sight fails you, yet you perceive no bottom; it is measureless, unfathomable, inconceivable. This anguish of the Saviour on your behalf and mine is no more to be measured and weighed than the sin which needed it, or the love which endured it. We will adore where we cannot comprehend.

A Vast Abyss;

I have chosen this subject that it may help the children of God to understand a little of their infinite obligations to their redeeming Lord. You shall measure the height of His love, if it be ever measured, by the depth of His grief, if that can ever be known. See with what a price He hath redeemed us from the curse of the law! As you see this, say to yourselves: What manner of people ought we to be! What measure of love ought we to return to one who bore the utmost penalty, that we might be delivered from the wrath to come? I do not profess that I can dive into this deep: I will only venture to the edge of the precipice, and bid you look down, and pray the Spirit of God to concentrate your mind upon this lamentation of our dying Lord, as it rises up through the darkness—"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

I. Let us first dwell upon the fact; or

What Our Lord Suffered.

God had forsaken Him. Grief of mind is harder to bear than pain of body. You can pluck up courage, and endure the pang of sickness and pain, so long as the spirit is hale and brave; but if the soul itself be touched, and the mind becomes diseased with anguish, then every pain is increased in severity, and there is nothing with which to sustain it. Spiritual sorrows are the worst of mental miseries. A man may bear great depression of spirit about worldly matters, if he feels that he has his God to go to. He is cast down, but not in despair. But if the Lord be once withdrawn, if the comfortable light of His presence be shadowed even for an hour, there is a torment within the breast, which I can only liken to the prelude of hell.

The desertion was real. Though under some aspects our Lord could say, "The Father is with me," yet was it solemnly true that God did forsake Him. It was not a failure of faith on His part which led Him to imagine what was not actual fact. Our faith fails us, and then we think that God has forsaken us; but our Lord's faith did not for a moment falter, for He says twice, "My God, my God." Oh, the mighty double grip of His unhesitating faith! He seems to say, "Even if thou hast forsaken Me, I have not forsaken thee." All the tortures of His body He endured in silence; but when it came to being forsaken of God, then His great heart burst out into its "Lama sabachthani?" His one moan is concerning His God. This stroke has cut Him to the quick: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken Me?" It was no phantom of the gloom; it was a real absence which He mourned.

This was a very remarkable desertion. It is not the way of God to leave either His sons or His servants. His saints, when they come to die, in their great weakness and pain find Him near. They are made to sing because of the presence of God, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me." Dying saints have clear visions of the living God. Our observation has taught us that if the Lord be away at other times, from His people in the article of death or in the furnace of affliction. Did the Lord ever fail to support a martyr at the stake? Did He ever forsake one of His testifiers upon the scaffold? The testimony of the Church has always been, that while the Lord has permitted His saints to suffer in body He has so divinely sustained their spirits that they have been more than conquerors, and have treated their sufferings as light afflictions. No, it is not God's way to forsake His champions, nor to leave even the least of His children in the trial-hour.

He is Never Absent

As to our Lord, this forsaking was singular. Did His Father ever leave Him before? Will you read the four Evangelists through, and find any previous instance in which He complains of His Father for having forsaken Him? No. He said, "I know that thou hearest Me always." He lived in constant touch with God. His fellowship with the Father was always near and dear and clear; but now, for the first time, He cries, "Why hast thou forsaken Me?" It was very remarkable.

This forsaking was very terrible. Who can fully tell what it is to be forsaken of God? We can only form a guess by what we have ourselves felt under temporary and partial desertion. God has never left us altogether; for He has expressly said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee;" yet we have sometimes felt as if He had cast us off. We have cried, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him!" The clear shininings of His love have been withdrawn. Thus we are able to form some little idea of how the Saviour felt when His

God Had Forsaken Him.

His Father at that time of horror gave Him no open acknowledgment. On certain other occasions a voice had been heard, saying, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;" but now, when such a testimony seemed most of all required, the oracle was dumb.

But this was not all. His Father now dried up that sacred stream of peaceful communion and loving fellowship which had flowed hitherto throughout His whole earthly life. He said Himself, as you remember, "Ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave me alone; and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me." Here was His constant comfort; but all comfort from this source was to be withdrawn. The Divine Spirit did not minister to His human spirit. No communications with His Father's love poured into His heart.

Our Lord's heart, and all His nature were, morally and spiritually, so delicately formed, so sensitive, so tender, that to be without God was to Him a grief which could not be weighed. I see Him in the text bearing desertion, and yet I perceive that He cannot bear it. I know not how to express my meaning except by such a paradox. He cannot endure to be without God. He had surrendered Himself to be left of God, as the representative of sinners must be, but His pure and holy nature, after three hours of silence, finds the position unendurable to love and purity; and breaking forth from it, now that the hour was over, He exclaims, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" He quarrels not with the suffering, but He cannot abide in the position which caused it. He seems as if He must end the ordeal, not because of the pain, but because of the moral shock. We have here the repetition after His passion of that loathing which He felt before it, when He cried, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" is the holiness of Christ amazed at the position of substitute for guilty men.

II. This brings us to consider the inquiry, or,

Why He Suffered.

Note carefully this cry—"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" It is pure anguish, undiluted agony, which crieth like this; but it is the agony of a godly soul; for only a man of that order would have used such an expression. Let us learn from it useful lessons. Note that our Lord's lament is an address to God. The godly, in their anguish, turn to the hand that smites them. The Saviour's outcry is not against God, but to God. "My God, my God;" He makes a double effort to draw near. True Sonship is here. The child the dark is crying after His Father—"My God, my God." Both the Bible and prayer were dear Jesus in His agony.

Let us come close to the inquiry. It looked to me at first sight, like a question as of one distraught driven from the balance of his mind—not unreasonable, but too much reasoning, and therefore tossed about. "Why hast Thou forsaken me? Did not Jesus know? Did He not know why I was forsaken? He knew it most distinctly, a yet His manhood, while it was being crushed, pounded, dissolved, seemed as though it could not understand the reason for so great a grief. He must be forsaken; but could there be a sufficient cause for so sickening a sorrow? The cup must be bitter; but why this most nauseous of ingredients?

I think I see, in the expression,

Submission and Resolve.

Our Lord does not draw back. There is clear a forward movement in the question: they who quit a business ask no more questions about it. He does not ask that the forsaking may end prematurely. He would only understand anew its meaning. He does not shrink, but the rather dedicates Himself anew to God by the words, "My God, my God," and by seeking to review the ground and reason of that anguish which He is resolute to endure even to the bitter end. He would fain feel all the motive which has sustained Him, and to sustain him to the end. The cry sounds to me deep submission and strong resolve, pleading for God.

Do you not see there was here a glance at eternal purpose, and at His secret source of strength? That "why" is the silver lining of the dark cloud, and our Lord looked wishfully at it. He knew the desertion was needful in order that He might save the guilty, and He had an eye to that salvation as His comfort. He is not forsaken needlessly, nor without a worthy design. The design is itself so dear to His heart that He yields to the evil, even though that evil be like death to Him. He looks at that "why," and through that narrow window the light of heaven comes streaming.

His Darkened Life.

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Surely our Lord dwelt on that "why," that might also turn our eyes that way. He would us see the why and the wherefore of His grief. He would have us mark the gracious motive for its endurance. Think much of all your Lord suffers but do not overlook the reason of it. If you can always understand how this or that grief we toward the great end of the whole passion, you will believe that it has its share in the grand "why." Make a life-study of that bitter but blessed question, "Why hast thou forsaken me?"

Bethink you, for a moment, that the Lord in the broadest and most unreserved sense, never, in very deed, have forsaken His most obedient Son. But we must look upon God here as Judge of all the earth, and we must look upon Lord Jesus also in His official capacity, as the Son of the covenant, and the Sacrifice for sin. The great Judge of all cannot smile upon Him who become the substitute for the guilty. Sin is loathsome to God; and if, in order to its removal, his own Son is made to bear it, yet, as sin, it is still loathsome to Him who bears it cannot be in happy communion with God. This was the dread necessity of atonement; but in the essence of things the love of the great Father to His Son never ceased, nor knew a diminution. Restrained in its flow it was, but lessened at its fountain-head it could not be. Therefore, wonder not at the question, "Why hast thou forsaken me?"

III. I am coming to the answer, concerning which I can only use the few minutes which remain. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" What is

The Outcome of This Suffering?

What was the reason for it? Our Saviour answers His own question. If for a moment His manhood was perplexed, yet His mind soon came to clear apprehension; for He said, "It is finished." and, as I have already said, He then referred to the work which in His lonely agony He had been performing. Why, then, did God forsake His Son? He cannot conceive any other answer than that which He has given—"It is finished." There was no reason in the Father's should forsake Him: He was perfect, and His life was without spot. God never hout reason; and since there were no reasons in character and person of the Lord Jesus why His her should forsake Him, we must look elsewhere. In this case we now see that His obedience was perfect. He came into the world to obey the Father, and He rendered that obedience to the very uttermost. The spirit of obedience could go no farther than for one who feels forsaken of God still to cling to Him in solemn, avowed allegiance, still declaring before a mocking multitude His confidence in the acting God. It is noble to cry, "My God, my Lord," when one is asking, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" How much farther can obedience go? Is there anything beyond it. The soldier at the gate of a city remaining at his post as sentry when the tower of burning ashes is falling, was not more true to his trust than he who adheres to a forsaking Lord with loyalty of hope.

The Suffering Necessary.—Our Lord's suffering in this particular form was appropriate and necessary. It would not have sufficed for our Lord merely to have been pained in body, nor even to have been grieved in mind in other respects. He must suffer in this particular way. He must feel forsaken of God, because this is the necessary consequence of sin. The separation of the soul from God is spiritual death; just as the separation of the soul from the body is natural death. The penalty for sin must be put in the place of separation, and must bow to the penalty of death. By placing of the Great Sacrifice under forsaking death, it would be seen by all creatures throughout the universe that God could not have fellowship with sin. If even the Holy One, who stood the surety for the unjust, found God forsaking Him, what is the doom of the actual sinner be! Sin is evil, always, in every case, a dividing influence, separating even the Christ Himself, as a sin-bearer, in the place of distance.

Beloved, see how marvellously in the person of Jesus, the Lord our God has vindicated His law! In His own Son is brought before Him, bearing the penalty of others upon Him, He will hide His face from the actually guilty. In God's love shines over all, but it does not eclipse His absolute justice any more than His justice is diminished to destroy His love. God hath all persons in perfection, and in Christ Jesus we see the reflection of them. Beloved, this is a wonderment! Oh that I had a tongue worthy of this subject! but who could ever reach the height of such great argument?

Perfected in Trial.—Once more, when inquiring, Why did Jesus suffer to be forsaken of the Father? we see the fact that the Captain of our salvation was thus made perfect through suffering. Every part of the road of our Lord's life has been traversed by our Lord's own feet. Suppose, then, that the Lord Jesus had never been thus forsaken, then one of His disciples might have been called to that sharp endurance, and the Lord Jesus would not have sympathized with him in it. He would turn to his Leader and Captain, and say to him, "Didst thou, my Lord, ever feel this darkness?" Then the Lord Jesus would answer, "No, it is a descent such as I never made." What a dreadful lack would the tried one have felt! For the Lord Jesus to bear a grief his Master had never known would be sad indeed. There would have been a pain for which there was no ointment, a pain for which there was no balm. But it is not so now. All their affliction He was afflicted.

What have done when I have said three things. The Father, You and I, that are believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, and are resting in Him alone for salvation, let us lean hard, let us bear with all our heart on our Lord. He Will Bear the Full Weight—of our sin and care. As to my sin, I hear its full accusations no more when I hear Jesus cry, "Why hast thou forsaken Me?" I know that I deserve the deepest hell at the hand of God's vengeance; but I am not afraid. He will never forsake me for He forsook His Son on my behalf. Next, if ever in our lives henceforth we should know that God hath deserted us, let us learn from the Lord's example how to behave ourselves. If God hath left thee, do not shut up thy Bible; nay, open it, as thy Lord did, and find a text that will comfort thee. If God hath left thee, or thou thinkest He hath, do not give up prayer; nay, pray as thy Lord did, be more earnest than ever. If thou thinkest God has forsaken thee, do not give up thy faith in Him; but, like thy Lord, cry thou, "My God, my Father," again and again.

The last of the three points is this: Let us abhor the sin which brought such agony upon our beloved Lord. What an accursed thing is sin, which crucified the Lord Jesus! Do you laugh at it? Will you go and spend an evening to see a mimic performance of it? Do you roll sin under your tongue as a sweet morsel, and then come to God's house, on the Lord's-day morning, and think to worship Him? Worship Him! Worship Him, with sin indulged in your breast! Worship Him, with sin loved and pampered in your life! O sirs, if I had a dear brother who had been murdered, what would you think of me if I valued the knife which had been crimsoned with his blood?—if I made

A Friend of the Murderer, and daily consorted with the assassin, who drove the dagger into my brother's heart? Surely I, too, must be an accomplice in the crime! Sin murdered Christ; will you be a friend to it? Sin pierced the heart of the Incarnate God; can you love it? Oh that there was an abyss as deep as Christ's misery, that I might at once hurl the dagger of sin into its depths, whence it might never be brought to light again!

Begone, O sin! Thou art banished from the heart where Jesus reigns! Begone, for thou hast crucified my Lord, and made Him cry, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" O my hearers, if you did but know yourselves, and know the love of Christ, you would each one vow that you would harbor sin no longer. You would be indignant at sin, and cry,

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Lord, I will tear it from its throne,
And worship only Thee."

May that be the issue of my morning's discourse, and then I shall be well content. The Lord bless you! May the Christ who suffered for you, bless you, and out of His darkness may your light arise!

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Church Officers' Anxiety.—Mr. McLaughlan said: "Some time ago, when I was laboring in a large congregation, a number of the elders and deacons came to me and said that it gave them individually great cause of anxiety that so many of their sons and daughters were unconverted. One night, when speaking on that subject to the Christians of the congregation, I advised that, from that time forward, when at family worship, they should pray for each of their unconverted children severally, by name, and continue doing so until God's answer came. They had not long to wait. Almost immediately the young people began to get anxious about their souls, and came to Christ, and soon many, very many of them, had joined their parents in the march heavenwards. When we go to God in prayer we need not be afraid to prefer distinctly definite requests."

A Demonstrative Gospel Service.—Mr. Thomson said: "Twenty years ago I was preaching in a Methodist chapel in an English town. There was an old man in the front bench who followed the address earnestly. I was preaching from my favorite text, 'What think ye of Christ?' As I went on speaking he gave vent to an appreciative 'Oh!' Then, as I went on further he cried out, 'Glory!' After another interval, he shouted, 'It is coming!' Then as I told of Christ's greatness, and goodness, and of His sacrifice of Himself to save us rebellious sinners, he jumped from his seat, and turning to the people, shouted, 'Say Hallelujah!' The people, with joy and thankfulness beaming from their faces, caught the spirit of the old man, and shouted 'Hallelujah!' and their joy in God was so demonstrative that I thought the roof would surely come off the place, and I was almost driven away from my quiet Presbyterian style of doing things. So God gives us joy—joy unspeakable and full of glory which the world knows not, and can neither give nor take away."

The Cheese Inside the Trap.—"My First charge was among workmen; a hard-headed, hard-working set they are. I chose to work among them, and can honestly say I tried to do all I could for their good; but I failed—because they would not and could not be moderate drinkers. I talked to them straight. I said: 'Why do you go and make beasts of yourselves? I am not one of your long-faced, melancholy teetotalers. I am a moderate drinker, and I want you fellows to have a glass of beer; but when you have had your glass, stop! It is a noble and manly thing to know when to stop.' I talked to them conscientiously enough, but it was cruel of me to ask them to follow my example, when our circumstances were so different. If these men wanted drink they could not get it at home. They must go to the saloon, and there the company was very different from home company. Why, even if the beer had been as innocent as the cheese, they were paying a dear price for it when, like the poor mouse, they had to go into the trap to obtain it. Drink is bad of itself, and it is doubly bad because of the circumstances under which it is procured. All sin, shame, and misery seem to gravitate toward the saloon, and there unhappily find a congenial sphere."

The Captain's Russian Brother.—Mr. Thomson said: "When I was in the north of Russia, I remember walking along the road one day with the captain of my ship. He met a friend, and as was the custom there, they kissed each other, spoke together a few minutes, and then parted. As we walked on, I said to my captain: 'Is that man any friend of yours?' I was only a little boy at the time, and the captain, looking down at me, said, 'Johnny, that man is my brother.' And I in my boyish way replied, 'I did not know, sir, that you had a brother out here.' 'Ah, Johnny,' he said, 'you don't quite understand. That man is a brother in Christ. He has given himself to Christ, and been taken into His family, where I also am, and so, you see, he is my brother.' I did not understand him then, but, thank God! I do now; so I just looked up into his face, and said, 'Oh, aye.' How prone Christians are to forget that when born into Christ's family they become not only sons of God, but brothers to all God's other sons, and that it is their duty, and should be their pleasure, to reflect the spirit of their heavenly Father, and love one another as God has loved them."

A Mother's Happy Farewell.—Mr. Thomson said: "I was coming one day from noon prayer-meeting, and as I passed a bank, a young man came running after me, and said, 'Mr. Thomson, would you please step into the bank for a moment?' I went in, and there saw the manager, whom I knew well, standing sorrowfully in his room. 'Ah! Mr. Thomson,' he said, 'my mother died yesterday.' 'Is she really dead?' I asked in, astonishment. 'Well, you can be comforted. She has left a glorious testimony behind; and after serving her Master faithfully here she has gone from joy on earth to greater joy and glory in heaven, to be there forever with Him whom she loves.' He told me that as his mother lay dying, on the Sunday morning, she gathered all her family round her, and said to each of us, 'Live for God! Live for heaven!' They could look back on that last scene in their night of darkness and death, and, rising above their deep grief, sing songs to God, who does all things for the good of His saints. Ah, what a difference there is between the death-bed of the unbeliever, before whom there is nothing but darkness, and the death of the trusting believer, who, even ere he leaves this earthly tabernacle sees the golden gates of heaven open before him!"

Bill the Stableman's Story.—"In my Second charge I worked very hard, speaking sometimes five times a day. One Sunday I was preaching the Gospel in the open air, in one of the poorer districts. The people to whom the message of salvation was addressed were mostly out of sight, but here and there a window would open, and a bloated face be thrust forward, and I knew that behind the window there was some poor lost sinner whom Christ had died to save. The small crowd surrounding me consisted of about thirty children, a few of my people to help in the singing, and one man, who, from his tight trousers and general appearance, was unmistakably horsey. He stood regarding me intently, with one eye shut, and the other eye half open, chewing a straw the while, and seemingly calculating how many hands high I was, and whether I was sound in wind or not. I finished the sermon and went home. About six months afterward I heard a ring at the door-bell, and as I had seen a man whom I thought I had seen before pass the window, I opened the door myself. The man jerked his hand somewhere in the direction of his head, and said, 'Sir, I thought I must come to tell you.' I could not remember him, and he continued, 'You are the man who spoke the Word at Gala land last June.' Hope sprang up in my heart. 'This was some result.' 'Well, sir, I went home from that meeting and said to my wife, "I am all wrong." "No," she said, "there is not a better man in all the world than you." I signed the pledge, and kept it; but instead of being better my burden seemed heavier, and yesterday when I was cleaning my master's gig at the gate, I just looked up and said, "Lord, save me!" And there seemed to come a voice that said, "Bill, Bill, the Lord hath died for you." Then I saw it all, and I was so glad; and, sir, you should have seen how master's gig wheel went round. Sixteen miles an hour at least. I grasped him cordially by the hand and took him into the house, where we had prayer together, thanking God for our salvation."

Mr. George M. Scott, Mayor of Salt Lake City. (See page 213.)

A Russian Exile's Hut in Siberia.

A Mother's Regret For Her Son.—Miss Macintosh, writing from Yuh-shan, China, says: I cannot forget what one dear woman said to me when I was at Kwang-feng. She came in every day, and always listened so attentively. She had such a sad face. Poor woman! She told me how her son, a young man of twenty-five, had died a few months ago. He was a very dutiful son, and they were rebuilding their house so that he might open a carpenter's shop, when he was taken ill and died in a few days. After she had told me with tears in her eyes, she held my hand and said, "Oh, if you had only come sooner you could have prayed for him, and he might have recovered; at least he would have heard of Jesus, and I am sure he would have believed; he was such a good son." Is not this the unuttered cry of many?

AN EXILE'S HUT IN SIBERIA.

(See illustration.)

THE announcement cabled to this country last week that an eminent and refined Russian lady named Tsebrikova, who is the editor of a magazine, and a well-known writer in Russia, has been condemned to exile in Siberia, has increased the feeling of indignation existing here against the Russian Government. Madam Tsebrikova's crime was that of writing a letter to the Czar describing the grievances of his people, and humbly pleading with him for some measure of reform. Her punishment for this offence is to labor in the mines under the charge of brutal jailers, and to live in such a hovel as that depicted in the illustration.

The horrors of an exile's life in Siberia, especially those of the women, are now common talk throughout the world. A long and fearful experience has convinced the exiles that the Government pays no attention to their grievances unless some scandal is produced by the cruel death of one or more of the victims. A brutal outrage, on a refined Russian lady in exile in Siberia, having recently been committed by the orders of a governor named Masukoff, the other lady exiles considered how they could cause such a scandal as would force the Government to investigate his conduct. It was then that Madam Sihida resolved to sacrifice herself. She determined to insult the Director in such a manner as would bring down upon herself a sentence of death, followed by execution by hanging. But, at the same time, the sensation this must cause would, she imagined, render it impossible for Masukoff to remain at his post. She sent a request to see the Director. Admitted to Masukoff's presence, she at once called him a villain, and smartly boxed his ears. She was instantly seized, and locked up in the common convicts' prison. Flogging was the punishment reserved for Madam Sihida; but the prisoners warned the officials that if they executed this they would all take poison. However, Madam Sihida, in spite of her deplorable physical condition, was beaten without mercy. One hundred blows were deliberately administered. Madam Sihida died in two days from the effects of the blows. In the same gaol there were three other female political prisoners. They had obtained permission to join Madam Sihida, probably for the purpose of nursing and consoling her after so terrible an ordeal. As soon, however, as Madam Sihida died and their services were of no further avail, they determined to sacrifice their lives. Madam Sihida's three companions took poison and are dead.

THE BRAZILIAN CARRACO.

(See illustration on page 221.)

THE backward condition of Brazil, though now yielding to the spirit of progress which usually accompanies republican institutions, may be inferred from the illustration. It represents a mode of locomotion which is common in the interior of the country. As recently as 1885 so much of the country remained undeveloped that travellers there ran at great risks as in the interior of Africa. Mr. W. J. Steains, who was engaged at that time on the engineering staff of the Alagoas Railway, says that "as the fortunate possessors of one of the largest and richest countries on earth, the Brazilian people are fully alive to the fact that their land has not made the progress it ought; but they do not appear to be aware that, as a nation and as individuals, they sadly lack energy. But the enormous size of Brazil, and the thin, unevenly distributed population, have, perhaps, in a great measure discouraged effort. The vast interior of the country still remains for the most part unknown, or, at all events, undeveloped, and until some great wave of commercial enterprise, backed by a flood of emigration, shall wash over this mighty land, Brazil will ever remain what it is—a country of the future."

Soon after leaving the seacoast Mr. Steains, with his six followers, had to carry their own food, dried fish and meat and meal, which soon gave out, so that they were half-starved. Much of the country is covered with forests of valuable trees; and the savage tribes of Indians, called "Botacudos," from their hideous wooden ornaments stuck through a huge gash in the lower lip, rove about freely, a terror to the scattered Brazilian "matutos," or peasantry. They shoot with bows and arrows, and live by hunting and fishing, and on the nuts of two or three kinds of palm-trees. Mr. Steains explored the Sussuhy Grande and the Tambaquary, the principal northern tributaries of the Rio Dóce, near Figueira, which had never been described before.

Amidst the dense mass of ignorance and irreligion which prevails, a few stalwart soldiers of the Cross of Christ are doing excellent service. For instance, the South American Missionary Society has devoted agents at five places; the American Baptist Union is disseminating the glad tidings of salvation; and the United States Presbyterian Board is making some missionary exertions in Brazil on behalf of Christ.

A LEADER RECOGNIZED.

"A Great Prophet Has Risen Up Among Us." Lu 7:16. Golden Text for April 13.

Two men pushed away their chairs from Deacon Luker's supper-table, and turned to the open fire which threw a ruddy light over the room. One of them was the Deacon himself, and the other was Mr. Henry Keith, a business acquaintance, with whom that morning had been selling the Deacon a parcel of dry-goods, and had accepted the Deacon's invitation to come in and sup with him in the evening. The Deacon knew Keith to be a man of sterling piety, and he invited him to come in for the purpose of talking about religious matters—for with the Deacon religion was religion, and business was business. He kept the two distinct, and the morning having been devoted to making some good gains at the store, where Keith was received in full capacity as the representative of a New York wholesale house, the evening was given to receiving Keith socially, as a friend whose conversation on church affairs was worth listening to.

"How do you like your new minister?" was Keith's question, as the two men settled themselves.

"Well, sir," said the Deacon, impressively, "consider Brother Baird the grandest preacher in the State, if not in the whole denomination. It is a privilege to sit under such preaching as he gives. He has been with us only two months, but a first series of sermons I never heard; and I am considered a pretty fair judge. The discourse he gave last Sunday morning was the best of all. His text was, 'There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.' It was a beautiful portrayal of the privileges of the saints. I doubt if any of your New York preachers could have done it so well. Yes, sir, Baird is a great man; we are proud of him."

"I am glad to hear it. I hope the church will be able to bear his preaching. It is a pretty high standard Mr. Baird sets up."

"If it is between the ledgers of the Bible I presume our church can stand it, Mr. Keith," said the Deacon, jealous for the standing of his church.

"Oh yes, you'll find it there," said Mr. Keith. "Mr. Baird will never go outside of the book, but he astonishes me by the way he reads it. It made me feel mean when I used to hear him."

"A man in your way of business, Mr. Keith, presume, has many temptations, and perhaps a very high type of Christian character is beyond you," said the Deacon, with some show of patronizing compassion for his weaker brother. "Even you do well, sir; I have always believed in you, having the root of the matter in you. Allowance must always be made for a man's circumstances."

Mr. Keith knew that the Deacon held that saving clause, and was aware that he derived more comfort from it than, perhaps, was good for him. The Deacon was a hard man in business, and was apt to take advantage of the necessities of the

...orance of those he dealt with, which, in Keith's opinion, was inconsistent with his profession as a Christian, if not with the principles of worldly integrity. "Well, well," he said, "I hope allowance will be made for mine. I know I shall have need of mercy. There would any of us be able to say without that, eh, wouldn't you?"

"Ah! that is so. The doctrine of imputed righteousness is the most precious of all. Have you known Mr. Baird long, Mr. Keith?"

"Why, yes; we were school-fellows. I remember his coming among us. He was a big boy then, his parents moved into town when he was almost ready to leave school, and he went right into the best class but one, at that time, and was only a year in school before he went to college. He began his oral work with us, I remember."

"Ah!" said the Deacon. "A pious boy, then, was I am not surprised. A young Timothy; know the Scriptures from a child." "Yes, he was a fine fellow, and he came at the right time for some of us. Our head-boy just then was the kind of boy who always impresses a school. He was handsome, dashing, bold, first in the playground as in the school. We all admired him, and he liked them. But he was a bad fellow. He used to wear a horrible, and was precocious in vice. His presence was dreadful. There was not a boy who did not learn to swear like him, and to do other bad things. He was our leader, and we were proud of him. What he did we thought was manly, and we followed him like sheep. When Baird came along he had the same raw-boned, awkward look he has now, and we were disposed to look down on him. But after a few weeks he began to exert influence. He treated our profanity and our vicious vice with contempt. It was not manly, and it was vile, despicable. We grew to be ashamed of it, and then he showed us what true manliness was. Boys are easily led, and more easily what is good than is generally supposed. Our idol was displaced. He tried to quarrel with Baird, but it was no use; Baird was as big as a giant, and as strong, and the other was a coward at heart. We grew to love the reformer, and more of us owed his start in religious life to him. We were some whose change, so far as religious was concerned, was as great as under Baird's influence as from death to life. Like Christ by the side of the widow's son, he said to us, 'Young man, unto thee, Arise,' and we rose out of moral and eternal death. Yes, sir, I am one, and I thank him this day for what Baird did for me at that school time."

"I am glad to hear it," said the Deacon. "It raises my respect for my pastor."

"Well, stick to him; he will do you good, if, as I believe, you can stand it."

"We can stand it," said the Deacon, confidently. "The change in Mr. Keith's business relations precluded any renewal of these confidences with the Deacon for some two years, but at the end of that time he was once more in the same town, and, as on his former visit, enjoyed the Deacon's hospitality."

"Well, Deacon," he said, "how are you getting on at the church?"

"Badly, sir, badly. I am sorry to say we are disappointed in Mr. Baird. Disappointed! In fact, to-morrow night we are to have a meeting of the church, when I expect his resignation will be asked."

"Indeed! what is the matter?"

"Well, sir, we do not like his preaching, nor his life. He neglects his pastoral duties, for one thing. He has not been in my house for months, and there are others who are the best contributors to the cause that he does not visit. I hear of him going often at the houses of men who give next to nothing—poor men who could not hire a pew, or give five dollars a quarter to support the church, but he neglects our best people, unless there's sickness or trouble. I'm bound to say he comes then. But socially, I mean, he is negligent, and the cause suffers; for some of the best men are offended and have left us."

The Brazilian Carraco.

"What is wrong with his preaching? Isn't it Scriptural?" asked Mr. Keith.

"Well, it is not to say unscriptural; but it's one-sided. He does not give proper prominence to the doctrines of substitution, imputed righteousness, the efficacy of the atonement, and election. He dwells too much on duty and mere conduct. Why, he seems to think it wicked to be rich. He says a man who is given to hoarding his money does not deserve to be called a follower of Christ. I believe he is almost a socialist."

"Christ was very firmly against hoarding, you know, Deacon."

"Yes, but Christ lived in a very different time from this, and besides, some of His teaching was figurative. Now, Mr. Baird takes it literally, and he acts upon it too. Why, he is scarcely respectable. We give him a good salary, but he lives in one of the poorest houses in town, and his coat is brown and threadbare, not fit for a minister to wear. I am ashamed to see him in it."

"Why not give him a new one, Deacon?"

"No, sir; I pay my share toward his salary and he ought to save enough to dress properly. He gives too much away. He is not prudent. No, sir! he is not the man for our times. We mean him to go. If he gets the vote at the church meeting, and he may, for all the poor members will vote for him, the substantial men will withdraw, and then how can the church be supported? We can starve him out."

"Ah!" said Mr. Keith, as he walked back to his hotel that night, "it is the old story. The men who thought that a great prophet had risen up among them are offended at his hard sayings, and 'walk no more with Him.'"

WILL IT LIFT?

THE STORY OF A FOG.

By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,

Author of "Simon Holmes," "Nestleton Magna,"

"Matthew Mellowdew," etc.

(Continued from page 206.)

MERCY, always quick to know what was wisest and best to do, silently sat down to the piano, almost the last relic of happier and more prosperous times, and sang, in a voice and with an expression that were well calculated to make the consoling lesson easier to learn, the following lines:

"God was better than our fearing,
Evermore our passage clearing,
His sure love and truth were boundless.
Go, ye dark forebodings groundless,
Will He His compassions rue?
'He hath helped us hitherto.'"

Mrs. Graythorpe and her two daughters, of whom my readers have had a first glimpse through the November fog, had suffered that which is so sadly common in this changeable life of inequalities, a serious reverse of fortune, and this through no sins of omission or commission of their own. On the contrary, if it could have been averted by woman's wit, diligence, and fidelity, it may be safely said that the grievous fall from competence and comfort to poverty and privation would never have taken place.

While yet the husband and father was alive they had dwelt at Hildrop Grange, a large, old-fashioned homestead, which had formerly been the residence of the lord of the manor; and though the ancient edifice had fallen from its pride of place, so far as that honor and title were concerned, it was still a spacious and somewhat imposing old pile, whose numerous odd gables and many quaint corners gave it a place in the shape both of woodcut and letter-press in the local history of the county in which it was situated.

In the days of which I write, "The Grange," as it was called, had a farm of some five or six hundred acres of excellent land, both pasture land and arable. The Grange itself, with its extensive farmstead, was built on the slope of a hill, and was fronted by a wide stretch of landscape, eminently striking in beauty. The range of buildings was bounded on one side by a broad highway, which just at that point showed a deep descent toward the level, and this was constantly traversed by the coaches that kept up communication between the metropolis and the far-distant north.

Local wisdom declared that in the olden time the old mansion was called Hildred Manor, and that it was the property of the nuns who used to reside at the abbey near by, whose ruins still survived to link the old times with the new. It was further declared that Hildred had gradually been turned into Hildrop—that the steep drop of the highway at that point was erroneously supposed by the ignorant to have originated its modern name. At the foot of the hill was a quaint old-fashioned hostel, which used to be completely thronged on certain saint days by gentle and simple, who were making holy pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Hildred, where many miracles of healing were wrought, or said to be, and which was at one time exceedingly wealthy by reason of the numerous offerings of the worshippers, who believed that they should obtain in return what would be good for their body and soul. This ancient house of call was now known as "The Hildrop Inn." Here the coach-horses were changed, and the passengers were wont to break their fast with breakfast, dinner, or tea, as the time-table might determine. "Mine host," Jared Higginbotham by name, was held in well-deserved repute, both by the numerous travellers who steadily passed that way, and also, which was undoubtedly the better certificate, by the good folks of Faringham, the parish and township in which both Grange and inn were situated.

Leonard Graythorpe, whose death his widow still mourned deeply and sincerely, was not a capable and competent farmer. He was neither thrifty in his habits nor diligent in business; neither, according to the testimony of Jimmie Sladd, who had shepherded his flocks, was he at all "judgmatical" in the management of his land. The consequence was that Farmer Graythorpe was always struggling with what he called "an adverse fate," but what his unheeded advisers called, with far more exactness, a "perverse mind." There is no doubt, I think, that among the too numerous tribe of ne'er-do-weels, "fate" is very greatly libeled, and fortune gets a very bad name, when the faults, foibles, and folly of the libellers are the real causes of failure. There may be an excess of f's in that sentence, but there is, at any rate, a sad deficiency of effort and efficiency on the part of those whose weakness makes them "go to the wall," and whose bad luck is simply the result of bad management and lack of "grit."

At length a succession of bad seasons completed the financial ruin of Leonard Graythorpe. He became low in purse, low in spirits, low in credit, and low in health—so low that his purse was empty, his spirits subsided into confirmed melancholia; his credit became as thin as his purse, and at length his health sank so low that he had to give up the struggle for life, and was laid to rest beneath the elm-trees that bordered Faringham churchyard. The general verdict of the neighborhood was, "Poor Graythorpe!"—for he was held in a sort of kindly esteem—"he made a poor fight of it: let us hope he will do better where he's gone!"

When Leonard Graythorpe's affairs came to be finally arranged, Widow Graythorpe found that she was without resources, and, alas! almost without friends, for adversity's keen winds are apt to blow away such as are called by that name, like falling autumn leaves. The widow and her daughters repaired to London with the double purpose of hiding their poverty in its vast unfathomable depths, and of obtaining amongst them some kind of employment that would provide them at least with bread and clothes and shelter, and, as far as possible, keep "the wolf," if not "from the door," at least from crossing the threshold. "Poverty," says Richter, "is the only load which is heavier the more loved ones there are to assist in supporting it;" and Mrs. Graythorpe soon discovered that whatever of heart and hope and energy she could bring to bear on her own personal privations, the cup was more than bitter as she thought of her daughter Mercy's sweet lips at the repulsive brim, and especially of her frail and fragile darling Millicent, who was ill able to endure the painful draught.

"Proverty is a great evil in any state of life," says a well-known and sympathetic writer, "but poverty is never felt so severely as by those who have, to use a common phrase, 'seen better days.' The poverty of the poor is often sad, but it is endurable; it can be borne in the sight of men. But the poverty of those who have lived in affluence is all but unendurable. It avoids the light of day, and shuns the sympathy even of those who would relieve it. It preys upon the heart and corrodes the mind. It screws up every nerve to such an extremity of tension, that one cool look, the averted eye even of a casual acquaintance known in prosperity, snaps the cord at once, and leaves the sufferers to sigh and sorrow beneath a double cloud." So it was that Widow Graythorpe and her daughters sought to lose themselves amid the mighty millions of London.

It was well for Widow Graythorpe, and especially for poor delicate Millicent, that they had the strong, brave arm of Mercy to lean upon. Well was it for them all, as it is well for all who try it, that they knew how to lean implicitly on the almighty arm of Him who hath declared Himself to be the "Father of the fatherless, and the Husband of the widow in His glorious habitation." No sooner were they settled in their humble lodgings—the lodgings in which we have been able to descry them through the fog—than they set to work to seek employment, husbanding the while, with the utmost economy, the scanty remnants of money and materials which they had been able to bring away with them from the desolate and forsaken hearth at Hill-drop Grange.

But the cup of the Graythorpes was not yet full. Almost as soon as they were located in the dingy chambers in Gooedge Street in which we find them, Millicent, or "Millie," as she was fondly called, was stricken with some mysterious ailment that seemed to defy treatment, and brought her very low. It was "on the nerves," the doctor said, probably because he did not know, and could recommend nothing but patience, for "it would require time," and strengthening diet of a generous kind. It was well for them that, of the former, thanks to their enlightened religious faith, they had a large supply in store, for of the latter they had none, and little, very little, hope of obtaining it by-and-by.

Millie was a graceful, clever girl, nearly twenty years of age, and, as we have seen, was possessed of artistic powers of no mean order—powers which had been much cultivated, thanks to her doting father, in the happier by-gone days. Mercy, the elder daughter, was now in the full bloom of womanhood, gifted with that all too rare attribute, strong common sense, and, what is almost equally rare, the will and the power to maintain and to impart a hopeful and cheery spirit in the cloudy and dark day. Such was the state and condition of the Graythorpes on the foggy evening in which they were introduced to my readers; and after Mercy's Ebenezer song was finished, they knelt and devoutly offered their nightly prayer to the Divine Friend "who careth for the poor," and retired to rest peacefully, conscious that they were under the shadow of His wing.

Whatever may be said concerning the estimate which the good folks at Faringham had formed of Leonard Graythorpe, and whatever the character of their remarks concerning him after he was gone, there is no doubt as to the esteem and respect which they cherished in the main for Mrs. Graythorpe and her daughters. On this point we do not need to quote a better or more substantial authority than Jimmie Sladd, the shepherd. One evening, soon after their departure from The Grange, Jimmie sat in the kitchen of Hilldrop Inn, quaffing a mug of beer, which host Higginbotham had given him for some little favor shown, and smoking his pipe in the chimney corner. "What are you going to do now, Jimmie," said the landlord, "seeing that you've lost your place at The Grange?"

"Why, as to that," said Jimmie, "I reckon I shall pull on somehow. I've gettin' a bit owd, an' my 'ead's gettin' a bit witiish; but I shall manage, by God's help, to pick up a livin'. Lawz-a-me!" he continued, stroking his gray and scanty locks, "it seems only t'other day since they were as black as a crow's feathers. From black to white, eh, landlord? That's the way natur' does wi' one's hair, an' that's the way the grace o' God does for the heart if one's only willing; and thank God, I is that, an' I think He'll tak' care o' me. He gave me a good friend in Missis Graythorpe and the young ladies. Bless 'em! they were 'o the right build, them three. I've feared we sha'n't see the like o' them for awhile." "Right you are, Jimmie," replied the landlord, earnestly; both Mrs. Graythorpe and the young ladies were about the best among us, and we shall all miss them, but especially the poor."

This was true testimony, and may be accepted as expressing the opinion of all and sundry who dwelt within earshot and eye-reach of the doings at The Grange. But we must now turn our attention to the eccentric stranger who had loomed out on the Graythorpes so strangely and so suddenly in the thick November fog enveloping the metropolis.

"Well, this is a go!" That is what Gilbert Craske said—it was a favorite expression of his—as he turned from Mrs. Graythorpe's door, and disappeared in the dense amalgam of carbon, dust, and vapor which the Londoners prefer to breathe and to be half-choked with rather than to be compelled to consume their own smoke. Groping his way, as he vainly thought, toward the spot where he had left the cab, he repeated the odd sentence which seemed always near his lips. More than once or twice he stopped, slapping his thigh with much vigor, and repeating the familiar formula with a slow emphasis, "Well, well; this is a go!" He was much surprised that it took him so long a time to find the cab.

At length he thought it time to call aloud to the lost Jehu. "Cabbie!" he cried, again and again, but no "cabbie" responded. All was silent. He set himself to return and try the opposite direction, then he resolved to pick his way across the road, and along with his movements, which grew more rapid and vigorous, he kept calling aloud, "Cabbie, cabbie!" and all the while the dark Egyptian pall was as black as Erebus, and his nose and throat became increasingly irritated by the acrid influence that was present everywhere. "It's little use calling 'Cabbie!'" said an unknown voice, so thickly that the speaker, like the missing Jarvie, had evidently been "taking something to keep the fog out," and to some purpose too. "You might just as well call for the Lord Mayor's coach or a gowndoly. All gone to bed."

Gilbert Craske, who had an inquiring mind, was casting about to find the meaning of the unfamiliar word. He was puzzled to know what a gowndoly was; and when it struck him that a gondola was the article in question, it so tickled his fancy that he laughed loud and long, much as he would have laughed in the Australian bush, which he had only lately left, with nothing but a kangaroo or a parrot to startle out of its propriety. The unknown jumped to the conclusion that anybody who could laugh like that in the thick of a London fog must have been patronizing some liquid anti-fog protector to a large extent, and so silently went his way. "It's very strange," said Gilbert to himself. "He mu have gone away. All right! saved my fare at ar rate. Nay it's all wrong, for I've lost my portman teau!"

Again he called out "Cabbie!" He could n have called out to less purpose if he had been cr ing among the ruins of Tadmor in the wilderness. There was nothing left for him but to make th best of matters out of his own resources. He kne that the "Bedford Arms" was somewhere near b so he determined to make that his haven of re and to see about the recovery of his portmantr in the morning. Suddenly he recalled the count nance of the silver-haired widow who opened t door for the young lady he had escorted home.

"Just think of the thing!" quoth he, standi stock still. "I forgot to note the address. I m secure that," he continued, emphatically. "Ne mind, I know exactly where it is;" and straightw he began to retrace his steps to the house in or to make sure. Poor Gilbert Craske! His t sophisticated soul did not understand the baffli cunning of a London fog. He was quite sure should know the door at any rate. His search v vain. He was discovered at last, by a policeman in the act of reading the number on a door by aid of a lighted match. The guardian of the pea after the manner of too many of his kind, jum to the conclusion that the prowler was up to so thing not too honest in its nature. He turned bull's-eye full on the face of Gilbert Craske so s denly and so closely that that honest Briton star back half-blinded, and in dismay. That, in policeman's judgment, was another evidence of ill design. So policeman K 44 laid his hand u his shoulder and asked him what he was up to.

"I'd give half an ounce of gold-dust to any liv man that would give me the information," s Gilbert, in the unmistakable tones of a man in a which he decidedly was in more senses than one.

"What number do you want?" said K 44, v was beginning to have a glimmer of the true st of the case. "Number 69," said Gilbert, wh memory, even as to the figures, had played false. "Then you'll have to build it, and num it yourself," said the topographical expert, "there are only three and forty houses in the str Are you sure it's the right 'un? What street you want?" he asked. "I would give a nuggie big as a button on a pilot's jacket to know," Gilbert, ruefully.

"Phew!" whistled the policeman, knowi "I'll tell you what, you are slewed consider more than I thought for. I say, old man, hav you been taking a drop o' something to keep fog out, eh?" "Whether or no," said Gilt with a loud laugh, that had honesty in the rim it, "the fog has got into me, and I've got into and altogether it's a foggy business all round. L here, policeman, you just guide me round to Bedford Arms, there's a good fellow!"

"Bedford Arms!" said K 44, quite sure now his companion was not a total abstainer. "The no Bedford Arms around here. I guess you w find a hinn o' that sort higher than Totten Court Road." "That's it," said Gilbert Cra "It's round the corner somewhere." "Ph-e-e-h whistled the watchman of the night; "why, r you are half-way to the Marble Arch!" "W Gilbert drawled out in a tone of blank astor ment; "well, this is a go!"

There was nothing for it but to take the poe man into his confidence; and that worthy me of "The Force," having still a little faith in believed his story. He offered to conduct him some neighboring hotel of real respectab "where he would be as well done to as if he by the hearthstone of his mother." This l stood in a short street leading into Oxford St and was a welcome refuge to our tired wayfarer.

The landlord it was evident looked at him th some suspicion in his eye. To be brought the by a policeman was rather strange; but the absen of all luggage was a still less satisfactory sign, ar was not till our honest blunderer had entered full details as to the episode of the evening, at the landlord agreed to give him shelter for th night. When Gilbert displayed a well-lined p the last faint shade of unwillingness left the t tenance of the proprietor; and after a suppe which the hungry Gilbert did ample justic spite of his vexation, he was soon snugly beved and asleep, dreaming about the lost number, of the face of the widow with the silver hair.

(To be Continued.)

COITRE, or THICK NECK.
 I have a Positive, Cleanly & Harmless Cure. Come or write to me at 28 Arlington Court, Cleveland, O.
 It is no Iodine smear. Testimonials furnished. Cure made permanent.
DR. J. CASKEY.

ONE MORE.

Glance only at this Picture.

One more precious link is broken
In affection's earthly chain,
One more tender farewell spoken
Never to be breathed again;
One more cause for bitter grieving
To the stricken heart has come,
One more hour of deep bereaving
Within the shadowed home.

One more friend beloved is banished
Far beyond our mortal sight,
One more cherished hope has vanished
In the darkness of the night;
One more heavy blow is crushing
With its stern relentless weight,
One more fount of grief is gushing
From the hearts made desolate.

But Dwell on This.

One more golden link is woven
In love's still enduring chain,
One more tie is formed in heaven
There forever to remain;
One more life has passed from sorrow
And the sin of earth's alloy,
One more soul has found the light
Of eternal peace and joy.

One more life has closed its mission
Down in this terrestrial vale,
One more hope has gained fruition,
Where our hopes may never fail;
One more footprint marks the portal
That o'erspans the heavenly road,
One more friend becomes immortal
In the mansions of our God.

L'envoi.

What though days seem dark and dreary,
What though mirth and joy are o'er,
And our hearts grow sad and weary,
And our spirits faint and sore:
Shadows round our pathway falling,
Twilight gathering on the plain:
List! We hear the Master calling,
"Come and meet thy loved again."

Mrs. C. A. K. Poor.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

"I am one of the happiest mothers in Lowell ever what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for my child, as I really believe it saved her eyesight," says Mrs. R. E. Williams, Lowell, Mass.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, Gettysburg, Pa.,
January 8th, 1890.

Wishing to engage for a few weeks in a work which would afford plenty of exercise, I concluded to try canvassing for the "Christian's Legacy." Was inexperienced in this line of business. Beginning work Dec. 14th, 1889, and working part of the time each day except two at Christmas, until Jan. 3d, 1890, I sold and delivered fifty-five copies.

It is a noble book, and should be in every household.
Too much cannot be said of it. Everybody likes the book; to see it, is to admire it. I know of no book that I can present to the public with as much faith, believing that wherever it is placed, untold riches may abound.

W. E. BREHM.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
WASHINGTON, D. C., February 21, 1890

DEAR SIR: I have used the bottle of medicine which you sent me and have received great relief from it. It is the best thing of the kind that I have ever tried. I wish you would send me another bottle upon receipt of this note.

Yours truly, AMOS J. CUMMINGS.
WILLIAM S. WYSE, San Carlo, New York City.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Ex-Senator ALBERT DAGGETT, Ex-Police Commissioner DE WITT C.
WHEELER, WILLIAM MULDOON, the Champion Wrestler of the World, JAMES
S. BARRON and others. Sent free by mail.

WYSE'S

NEW REMEDY

FOR DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS.

WYSE'S NEW REMEDY

Has become celebrated for the successful treatment and cure of the following diseases:
Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brickdust Deposits, Mucous Inflammation of the Kidneys and Bladder, Pain in the Back, Weak Kidneys, Retention of Urine, Gleet, Gravel and all diseases affecting the Urinary Organs.

WYSE NEW REMEDY COMPANY,

PROPRIETORS,

157 W. 23d St., New York.

For sale by all druggists. Sent by express on receipt of One Dollar. Mention this paper.

Ready May 1st, 1890.

WINNOWN SONGS
FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS,

By IRA D. SANKEY.

One of the largest and most useful collections of NEW and SELECTED songs for SUNDAY SCHOOLS ever published in a single volume.

224 pages. 35 cents per copy in any quantity; single copies for examination, by mail, on receipt of price.

BIGLOW & MAIN,

76 East Ninth Street, New York.

81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,

74 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati.

19 East 16th Street, New York.

BOVININE By its powerful and Concentrated food properties alone will permanently relieve or mitigate the worst features of Nervous Prostration, Consumption, Wasting of old age, Weakness from any cause, Brain Fatigue, Dyspepsia, and all Intestinal troubles. Its wonderful blood-making qualities will insure perfect nutrition, increased appetite and better digestion. Use BOVININE in all conditions of acute or chronic illness.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, ES-SILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Labors about the house done by

SAPOLIO

are like good sermons, short and sweet. Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes except the laundry.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea, A TRIAL ORDER of 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Tea, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

DR. JAEGER'S
Sanitary Woolen System Company,
827 & 829 Broadway, New York.

HERMANN SCHARFFER,

President;

ERNEST BENOKE,

Vice-President.

NONE
GENUINE WITHOUT

THIS TRADE MARK.

Note our Trade Mark closely!

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment of

SPRING AND SUMMER

UNDERWEAR.

The genuine sanitary goods are manufactured under the supervision of Dr. Jaeger, and sold by the above-named Company and their authorized agents only.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated
Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Specialty.

Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,
827 and 829 Broadway, New York.

MUSIC SALE

To reduce our stock of music we will send by mail post-paid 70
pieces full sheet music also, including songs, marches, waltzes, quadrilles (with calls), &c., by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, &c., for 20c. DOWN WENT MCGINTY and 100 songs, words and music, 10c.
SATISFACTION GIVEN or money refunded. C. H.
Bathway, 339 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable
firm; large profits,
quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, New York.

OUR NEW SALESROOMS

Last week we invited attention
the new Salesroom in the basement and to the sale there of Silks &
Dress Goods, at very moderate prices.

This week we mention the extensive alterations and additions to the Second floor of our store, which give great increased facilities in our Dress-making Department for Ladies, Misses, & Children.

The space occupied by the stocks Black Goods and Cloths has been noticeably enlarged; and the room
Ladies' Underwear and for Infants Goods nearly doubled.

Visitors will find a new elevator near the Broadway door.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

CARPETS

We invite inspection to our

NEW SPRING STYLE

Many exclusive patterns in novel effects in ROYAL WILTONS, WILTON VELVET
MOQUETTES BODY AND TAPESTRIES
BRUSSELS, 3-PLYS, AND EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.

At Positive Bargains
UPHOLSTERY GOODS

Our assortment of fine Satin Damasks, Spun Raw Silk Tapestries, Silk and Mohair Plushes never so complete.

MATTINGS

Japanese and China Straw Matting
OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION

White and Red Check Mattings

FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS

Also fine seamless Japanese Mattings (Nim-Warps) for decorative purposes. A complete line of

FURNITURE

Our own upholstering, at moderate prices. Also for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.

We make a specialty of furnishing complete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK

PIANOS
$150 to $1500

UNIVERSITY
ESTAB. 1850. INCOR.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

ORGAN
$35 to $50

UNION INVESTMENT COMPANY

Capital, - - $1,000,000.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

7 per cent. investment interest semi-annual
The direct obligation of the Company secured by business property and recommended by independent business men and bankers of Kansas City.
Send for circulars with full particulars.

W. P. RICE, Pres. } Union Investment Co.
O. F. PAGE, Treas. }

AGENTS for E. B. TREAT'S Catalog of
Send for new books. Shot at Sun-
Targets, by 15, 20,
$250. Quick sales.
Also, Home & Hea-
400 best authors and
by T. L. Cuyler, 15,
192,000 sold, 1890.

AGENTS for E. B. TREAT'S Catalog of
Send for new books. Shot at Sun-
Targets, by 15, 20,
$250. Quick sales.
Also, Home & Hea-
400 best authors and
by T. L. Cuyler, 15,
192,000 sold, 1890.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 15. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE RUINS OF THE RUINS AT LOUISVILLE, KY., AFTER THE TORNADO ON MARCH 27, AND POR-TRAIT OF THE SLAIN CLERGYMAN.
 HOPELAH: OR, EASTER THOUGHTS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
 FORGIVENESS AND LOVE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
 WILL IT LIFT? By Rev. J. Jackson Wray.
 THE WATERS OF FIRE. A Story of the S. S. Golden Text.
 THE DISASTER TO THE "CITY OF PARIS." (Illus.)

THE ROUGH-HEWER. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H.
 Spurgeon.
 A Decisive Moment—A Vow at a Grave—A Minister's Example—Protection for a Missionary—A Pugilist's Promise—A Lawyer Converted—A Street Preacher Interrupted—Malagasy Chiefs Reconciled.
 PICTURE OF AN INDIAN HUT ON THE PRAIRIE.
 THE COMING OF THE LORD. By Rev. Newman
 Hall, LL. B.
 PORTRAIT OF COUNT HERBERT BISMARCK.

The Tornado at Louisville, Ky., on March 27—The Rev. S. E. Barnwell, who Perished in the Disaster.

THE FATAL TORNADO AT LOUISVILLE, KY.

The City as it Was—The Outbreak of the Storm—A Car-Driver's Experience—The Nature of a Tornado—The Course of the Destroyer—The Fatality at Falls City Hall—Taking Out the Dead—The Distressing Death of the Rector of St. John's Church.

THE city of Louisville, Ky., which suffered so terribly by the tornado on March 27, is one of the most beautiful in our land. Situated on the banks of the Ohio River, with an extensive level plain at their disposal, its builders were not compelled, as were the builders of some other cities, to economize space. They made the streets wide, and planted avenues of shade trees in them. They set their dwelling-houses back from the sidewalks, and thus gave the street a wide border of lawn and flower-garden on each side. And a still greater merit, which no one can appreciate so well as a New Yorker, the citizens keep their city clean. The population is about 200,000. Altogether a city to be proud of, beautiful, healthy, and prosperous, abounding in social life and hospitality.

The Outbreak of the Storm

which has desolated so large a portion of it was almost entirely unforeseen. The signal office had predicted high winds for that section of the country, but such predictions are by no means uncommon. Very few people noticed its approach. It was a few minutes after eight o'clock when it struck the city, and the majority of the inhabitants were within doors. This is a matter for thankfulness, for the tornado's chief fury was vented on the business section, and, had it come earlier in the day, when business was at its height, many more lives must have been lost. W. H. Hart, a street-car driver, was one of the few who saw the beginning of the devastation. In describing it he says: "The wind was blowing hard, and I could scarcely turn my car around. Every minute the wind blew stronger. I glanced in the direction of Parkland, and though I had never seen a tornado, I immediately recognized that great black cloud, with its stem trailing near the ground, as one. The vivid flashes of lightning made its outlines clear. To me it had the appearance of a great balloon, only the stem was longer. My wife and children lived at Eighteenth and Market streets. I felt that they were in the track of the monster. I left my car and ran to my home as I never went before. When I saw my home it was a wreck. Imagine my feelings between the moment of first seeing my home and arriving there. My limbs seemed paralyzed; I could scarcely move. Finally, however, I reached the front yard. There I found my family seated on the wreck of the house, and none were hurt."

The Nature of a Tornado

was explained by Sergeant Dunn, of the Signal Service, to the reporter of a daily journal. He likened the atmosphere resting upon our continent to a tub of water, and the cyclone formed in the far West to a board. Draw the board through the water from one side to the other, steadily but not swiftly, said he, and you will not create a strong current in the water, but you will find that the water will rush around the ends of the board as it progresses, and come together in its wake, forming no end of tiny whirlpools, very insignificant in themselves, but which have, when closely examined, a strong and swift rotary motion. The tornadoes were formed in precisely the same way, by the air escaping around the sides of the moving cyclone and coming together forcibly behind it. There is a greater tendency to rotation in the case of the atmosphere than in the water in the tub, however, because the air that gets around one side of the cyclone is of a different temperature from that which gets around the other side. The tornado passes over the country at from fifty to seventy miles an hour, while the air which composes it is whirling around at a velocity of from five hundred to one thousand miles an hour. It is this rotary motion that does the damage. It is caused by the meeting of a very warm with a very cold current of air, but just why that always produces the rotary motion the scientists fail to explain.

The Course of the Destroyer

was northeasterly. It struck the city at Eighteenth and Maple streets and went straight across to the Union Depot, at the foot of Seventh Street. One eye-witness says: "The heavens were black as ink. There was a deep, thrilling roar, and then the buildings crumbled like egg-shells, and a broad swath of ruin lay across the city. The whole thing was over in a minute. People living outside the track of the storm were unaware that anything unusual had happened. But where the tornado had swept, there was utter destruction, ruins, and death. Churches, factories, and warehouses went down like cardboard. People fled in terror from death in their ruined homes. Half a dozen fires broke out in as many different parts of the city.

"The storm soon ceased. The moon came out, and people thronged into the streets to learn the extent of the disaster. The most terrible rumors spread apace, and, unfortunately, many of them were true, and the gray daylight revealed a scene of desolation that was sickening. Main Street, from Seventh to Twelfth Street, was one long ruin. So was Market Street for the corresponding distance; Jefferson Street, from Tenth to Thirteenth; Walnut Street, from Thirteenth to Fifteenth; and Chestnut Street, from Thirteenth to Seventeenth. Broadway, in the neighborhood of Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, was filled with debris." With this destruction the tornado seems to have spent its force, though other towns in its way were roughly shaken. Grand River, Eminence, London, Hopkinsville, Dixon, and Jeffersonville all suffered, and in Tennessee, Nashville, Memphis, and Fayette were badly damaged. But it was in Louisville that the storm did its most fatal work.

Falls City Hall

was the scene of the worst fatality. A dancing-class is held there in the evening, and the little ones were watched in their steps by parents and friends. A Lodge of the Knights and Ladies of Honor also was in session there. When the cyclone came the building shook and began to fall. As soon as the crash was heard a mad rush was made for the doors, and some leaped from the windows. A few escaped, but those that did not remained packed together, and many probably died from suffocation. The second and third floors gave way as if there was nothing to hold them up, and the entire building became a heap of ruins (see illustration on first page). Those who had escaped were quickly at work, in spite of the danger from trembling walls around them, trying to rescue their friends whose groans and cries showed that they were still alive. The news spread rapidly through the city, and in a short time from every side came rushing those whose loved ones were buried, all striving to unearth their dead. Men and women, mad with grief, viewed the mass from the street, begging every one they saw to aid in the excavation. A posse of police arrived on the spot and began to systematize the work. The walls of the adjoining houses were first propped, and then began the work of cutting through the heavy slate roof that covered all.

After one hour of ceaseless labor the first victim, Mrs. Sarah Kelley, was unearthed. Her body was found sitting in an upright position, her head bruised and one arm broken. The first account was gotten from her of the ruin and horror within. At the first quake of the hall, she said, a wild rush was made for the entrance, and women were knocked down and trampled upon in the mad haste to escape. Seeing the overwhelming jam at the door, Mrs. Kelley and several others remained behind, reckless of their fate. The last she saw of her friends was just before the floor gave way and the ceiling fell.

The work of excavating was continued, and as the roofing was removed and the mass of brick beneath, the first sight that met the eye was heart-rending. Ten women, locked in each other's arms, were drawn out of the debris, all dead but one. Mr. James Hassen, whose wife had been at the lodge meeting, was foremost in the work, and the first person he drew out of the ruined building was his wife, who died in his arms. He laid her by the side of the others who were dead, and continued to work for the living.

Inside of the next hour thirty men and women were drawn out dead, but with no wounds on their bodies, and it is thought all met their death from suffocation. The gas-pipes had broken, which caused the lights to go out, and saved the ruins from fire for the time, but flooded the debris with a vapor almost as deadly as the fire might have proven. Among the saddest scenes was a young couple, man and wife, taken from the ruins, her arms clasped about his neck, while he held her about the waist. Their heads were mangled and their limbs crushed into a shapeless mass.

At 12 o'clock the opening up of a portion of the debris of the hall caused quite a draught to penetrate the ruins, whereupon the smoldering fire broke out with tremendous fierceness. It spread rapidly, and forced the workers to desert the pile. As soon as the fire gained headway the groans and shriels of the imprisoned people became horrible, and a great was the horror of the moment that the watchers grew frantic and screamed and ran about like wild, the terrible sufferings which they were unable to alleviate driving them to despair. Several lines of hose were soon throwing water on the flames, but it was more than an hour before work could be proceeded with, and then it was carried on with much more difficulty than before, on account of the heat. All night long the searches continued their work in the ruins of the hall by the aid of light from locomotive headlights. Their efforts were closely watched by crowds who were with difficulty kept back by the police and militia. While the men were working in the centre of the debris a voice was heard calling for help. The efforts of the workmen were redoubled, but they vainly endeavored to locate the voice. The cry grew fainter and fainter, until finally they ceased altogether. Seventy bodies had by this time been taken out and identified, and it is believed that the whole number of deaths in the city was fully 150.

The Death of a Clergyman was one of the most pathetic incidents of the disaster. He was the Rev. Stephen E. Barnwell, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church. The church which adjoins the rectory, occupied by Dr. Barnwell's family, was entirely demolished. In falling it struck the rectory and crushed the front part of it to the ground. The Barnwell family, composed of the minister, his son Dudley, Eva, the youngest and his wife, were sitting chatting in the front parlor. The crash came without a moment's warning, and all the family were enveloped in the falling house. Soon after the fall of the house fire started from the burning mass. Fanned by the strong wind it spread rapidly, and it looked at one time as every member of the family would perish in the flames. An engine company was promptly on hand, and by indefatigable work the firemen succeeded in rescuing Mrs. Barnwell and her daughter Eva from the burning wreck. Both were injured, but not seriously. Mrs. Barnwell suffered a scalp wound which rendered her unconscious when taken out, but stimulants were administered and she afterwards regained consciousness. Eva, the daughter, was but little hurt.

As the fire approached nearer and nearer the spot where the bodies of Dr. Barnwell and his son were bound by the wreck, terrible and heartrending cries for aid were heard. Men worked like heroes to get to the father and son, but their labor was in vain. The flames came too quickly, and in a short time the pitiful cries were hushed, and the rescuers knew that all was over. The fire was afterward extinguished, and the bodies of the minister and his son were taken out of the fallen building.

The Rev. S. E. Barnwell was a native of South Carolina and was about fifty years of age. He was an eloquent preacher, a man of conspicuous literary ability, and a faithful Christian. He was greatly loved by the members of his church, and liked by all with whom he was associated. He had charged the St. John's Church for many years. His funeral and that of his little son Dudley took place on March 31 from St. Paul's Church. The Bishop of Kentucky and all the twelve Episcopal clergymen in the city officiated. Three clergymen from abroad attended. These were Rev. Robert Barnwell, of Henderson; Rev. Robert Barnwell, of Selma, Ala.; and Rev. William Barnwell, of Columbia, Miss. The first was the brother of the deceased, the others were his cousins. He has still another brother in the ministry. Mrs. Barnwell was so badly hurt she could not be told at first of her husband's fate, but now she knows the truth. She is on the verge of distraction. Great sympathy is manifested for her, and the Episcopal Church of the diocese will do what she wants nothing. Her husband left $5,000 insurance on his life.

So appalling a visitation as this, which has turned the beautiful city and its neighboring towns into a scene of desolation, suffering, and death, has awa-

The Sympathy of the Whole Country.

No one can read of those swift, terrible deaths, families suddenly bereft, and of households stripped in a moment of shelter and all their earthly possessions, without heartfelt sorrow. We can mourn with them; such poor alleviation as money can give, we can render; and we can pray that the God of all comfort will comfort the mourners and succor the destitute; but we are sadly conscious that their griefs must be beyond our power to

ve. It is all inexpressibly sad, and the more so because we cannot perceive the motive or the reason for the affliction. Faith alone must speak, for reason has no word to say.

One lesson, however, the catastrophe does suggest, and it is one that this age, more than any that have preceded it, needs to learn. Man has of years been disposed to exclude God from His creation. Theories of evolution, and still more, the triumphs won over the forces of nature, have tended to exalt man's estimate of himself and led him to forget that God rules the world. He looks to his subjection of the elements to his purposes, to fire and water working for him like beasts of burden, to the sun limning his pictures, and to lightnings carrying his messages, and boasts of his lordship over the material world. But when dread invisible forces of nature rise in their fury, with irresistible might ruthlessly ravage and destroy the worker and his works, he realizes how weak and impotent he is, and stands aghast before power infinitely greater than himself. He must realize his own littleness as he buries his dead and builds his shattered structures, not knowing how in his work may be again undone. Well may we say, as he contemplates the ruin which no power his command could have averted, and thinks of the voice which, on that Oriental lake, said, "Peace, be still," and there was a great calm. What manner of man was this, that even the winds and the seas obeyed Him?

FORGIVENESS AND LOVE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

3. Lesson for April 20, Luke 7: 36-50; Golden Text, 1 John 4: 19.

The Place of the Redeemer—Between Fallen Man and Perdition—The Lost Neglected by Spiritual and Temporal Rulers—Creation Needs No Material—Christ Reproached—The Sinner at the Feast—How Christ may be Brought to Sinners—The Saviour and the Sinner in Accord—The Pharisee's Mistake—Cheer for the Broken-Hearted—Reformation Assured.

THIS was Christ's vocation upon earth. "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." It is just in proportion as we recognize ourselves to be "that which was lost" that we understand the greatness and the sureness of Christ's redemption. All which sin has touched becomes lost; the eyes, the ears, tongue, hands, feet, which were served under sin are lost members, diverted from their true purpose. The Son of man is come to seek them again, and save them for His use. He stands between fallen man and perdition, fallen man in despair. Wherever we are conscious that anything or any person is lost, there is the place, the long-chosen place, of the great Redeemer. In our ignorant, sinful pride, men have trodden on those whom they have thought to be lost, those who are morally lost to society, the drunkards, the criminals, and the fallen, and common opinion leaves them no hope of rising again, but treats them utterly hopeless. And it is these whom Jesus came to seek and to save.

Appealing to the shepherds of Israel, God speaks to us. He will might speak to spiritual and temporal rulers in our own days, and says, "The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them. And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd, . . . and none did search or seek after them." (Ezek. 34: 4-6.) But in the same chapter He says, "For thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I, even I, will both search the sheep, and seek them out. . . . I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick." (Ezek. 34: 11, 16.)

Blessed be God, He made the world out of nothing, and when a poor lost soul is willing to be nothing, God is at no loss to create that soul anew. His workmanship in terrestrial or in spiritual things is ever perfect. "And God saw everything that He had made, and behold, it was very good." (Gen. 1: 31.) Thus we need never look upon the lowly creature, however degraded, as being beyond all hope. "With men this is impossible," but not with God, for "with God all things are possible." (Matt. 19: 26.) Let a few Christians, led with the Holy Ghost go out in God's name among the lost ones, and bring them in contact with Him who is come to seek and to save them, and the most hopeless cases are conquered by the mighty power of an Almighty God. The result of many revival and evangelistic efforts in the present day is proof solid of this.

Jesus had just repeated the reproach made to Him, that He was

A Friend of Publicans and Sinners.

The imputation was that their sin was an attraction to Him, that His tastes accorded with theirs; for they who accused Him had no conception of doing anything, or of seeking the society of anybody, except for self-interest. Knowing their thoughts of Him, the Lord Jesus entered into the house of a Pharisee who had desired Him to eat with him. Scarcely was He entered, when a well-known sinner of the city, knowing that He was there, came and sought Him out. "A man who lived for himself might have thought, 'How unfortunate that this poor woman should come just now! it will justify the untrue remarks that are made about me,' and he might have avoided her. But it was Christ's vocation to seek and to save the lost. Jesus never avoids those who make a claim on Him; He says, 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in nowise cast out.'"

The poor woman sought only Jesus; was occupied with none other. Neither the Pharisees nor the other guests were anything to her. Remarks were going round, but she heard them not; glances were cast, but she saw them not.

She Was Lost,

this she knew; and in Him there was salvation for such as she. What was all the world to her by the side of the Saviour? "Oh," you say, "if we saw other sinners as far advanced as that, we could believe they would be saved." Brethren in Christ, are we bringing Jesus near to them by the Christ-like position which we take in respect to them? Do they see in us nothing but love, and a heart yearning to shelter them from their sin, or do they find us full of suspicion and of condemnation? It is too true that often these degraded ones are so untruthful that we know not what to believe of what they say; but it is a fact that the more we approach them in the spirit of the Lord Jesus, the more God gives us discernment, that we may discover when they are untrue, and more power of His presence to awe them into reality. Were not the degraded ones with whom Jesus had to do at least as degraded as those whom we meet with? But in His presence all must be real. Let us then, by our habitual standing before Him, make them conscious that He is present, and it will become impossible for them to deceive us. The less of self there is in us, so much the more power have we by faith in Christ over the lost ones, and every movement of self in our hearts is so much loss of power over them.

The poor sinner stood at Jesus' feet behind Him, weeping, and she perceived a service which she might render Him. She "began to wash His feet with her tears, and to wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed His feet, and anointed them with the ointment." He did not draw His feet away. Others might have thought that the tears of such an one tainted them; they might have considered about what would be thought and said of their proximity to such an one; but the Master put Himself and His own reputation out of the question. He saw and rejoiced over the broken heart, and maybe there was more of oneness between her who wept for her own sin and Him who wept for the world's sin than between any other members of the company.

The Pharisee's only treatment of a sinner

Was to Condemn Him.

Tenderness or pity toward those who had erred would never occur to him; he would think it an encouragement to sin. Forgiveness was far from his thoughts. His religion consisted in just retribution. The woman was a sinner, an outcast, let her be treated as one; and he judged that Jesus was no prophet because He tolerated her presence. But He, to whom the hearts of all men are open, answered the thoughts of Simon by the parable of the two debtors, as though to say, "Simon, thou thinkest that thy debt to God is tenfold less than this woman's, that she owes five hundred pence and thou but fifty; yet if thy debt and hers are both forgiven, which will most love Him who extends you pardon?" In this woman there is proof of love. "I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for My feet; but she hath washed My feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head. My head with oil thou didst not anoint; but this woman hath anointed My feet with ointment. Wherefore, I say unto thee, her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much, but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little."

What words for the broken-hearted sinner! "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven." The lost one was found and saved. The coming fact of Jesus' death for her sin was already accomplished in the eyes of a God who sees the end from the beginning. Her sin met with its retribution when the Son of God cried, in the anguish of His soul, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" The lost one, because she was nothing, came nearer to God than the man who never sinned so deeply, because her cause was undertaken by the great Redeemer. He said unto her, "Thy sins are forgiven." She had the word of the Son of God for it. Against all condemnation of her own heart, against all the horrors of her past experience, against all doubts which the wicked one might inject, she could say, "Jesus said to me, Thy sins are forgiven." She believed in His authority over sin, and He added, "Thy faith hath saved thee;

Go in Peace."

Oh how slow man is to believe that he is saved by grace through faith, and that not of himself! (Eph. 2: 3.) "Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt," i. e., so much wages for so much work; "but to him that worketh not, but believeth on Him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." (Rom. 4: 4, 5.) How could this poor lost woman by any human means restore the evil she had done? How undo it, how make satisfaction for it? Impossibility meets us at every step. But when He, whose law she had broken, undertook to make the satisfaction demanded by the law which He had made, what appeal could be made from His decision? They that sat at meat with Him could not understand the grace of the Lord Jesus. Tens of thousands among nominal Christians do not understand it now; but the poor sinner understood it, and she left the Pharisee's house whiter than snow, for the blood of Jesus Christ had cleansed her from all sin. Can we believe that she went forth to sin again? or can we believe that henceforth she would be in a position to boast? The link of necessity which existed between her hopeless helplessness and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ was her security. Had she been left to her own resolutions or her own efforts, there would have been little hope of her reformation, but another power had entered into her life, a power which had grappled with sin and conquered it. Christ lived in her, and He was her guarantee against sin, and

The World, and the Flesh.

When Jesus said to her, "Go in peace," He never could have contemplated her return to the slavery of sin; and therefore, dear reader, if you think that some power of sin which binds you is too strong to be broken, if you think that because of some extenuating circumstance you are not very culpable, or if you try to persuade yourself that sin is not sin, you are alienating yourself from the world's Redeemer, and ensuring your own failure, because you withhold your case from Him who "came to seek and to save that which was lost." There is no reason why any foreign power should retain dominion over us, since Jesus is mightier than all the power of the enemy; but oh, how many there are who idly pray about their sins without fairly having the matter out with Him. They never come to a point in which they let Him show them where the hindrance lies; they fight shy of coming to close quarters. It is more to their interest to avoid coming to a point, because they are not quite decided to abandon all sin; they dread letting the reins of their life out of their own hands, and thus they never fairly put their case into the hands of Jesus. It answers their purpose better to pray, and then say that the Lord does not answer them because they have no real intention to break definitely with their sin. Should such be among my readers, let me say that although Christ is the Friend of sinners, He is not the Friend of sin, and as long as you take the part of your sin against the Saviour, you hinder Him from being your Friend.

"The Christian Herald" Binder.—Numerous applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely. A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

MACHPELAH: OR, EASTER THOUGHTS.
Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, April 6, 1890.

"And the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was before Mamre, the field and the cave which was therein, and all the trees that were in the field, that were in all the borders round about, were made sure unto Abraham." Gen. 23: 17, 18.

The First Real Estate Transaction on Record—The Mother of the Modern Necropolis—Our American Westminster Abbey—Famous Sleepers in the City of the Dead—What Resurrection Day will Do for the Cemeteries—Their Beautification—Palestine's Royal Family of Flowers—The Living Flowers Irradiated—The Phonograph a Resurrected Voice—Identity Never Lost—Resurrection Algebra—A Fatigued World—Rest for the Heart—The Replenishment from the Dust—A Resurrection-Body Manufactory—Bodies More Lustrous than Snow—The Door Knob on the Sepulchre—What Christ Will Say to the Sleeper—The Voyage from Earth to Heaven.

Here is the first cemetery ever laid out. Machpelah was its name. It was an arborescent beauty, where the wound of death was bandaged with foliage. Abraham, a rich man, not being able to bribe the King of Terrors, proposes here, as far as possible, to cover up his ravages. He had no doubt previously noticed this region, and now that Sarah his wife had died—that remarkable person who at ninety years of age had born to her the son Isaac, and who now, after she had reached one hundred and twenty-seven years, had expired—Abraham is negotiating for a family plot for her last slumber. Ephron owned this real estate, and after, in mock sympathy for Abraham, refusing to take anything for it, now sticks on a big price—four hundred shekels of silver. This cemetery lot is paid for, and the transfer made, in the presence of witnesses in a public place, for there were no deeds and no halls of record in those early times. Then in a cavern of limestone rock Abraham put Sarah, and, a few years after, himself followed, and then Isaac and Rebekah, and then Jacob and Leah. Embowered, picturesque, and memorable Machpelah! That "God's-acre" dedicated by Abraham has been the mother of innumerable mortuary observances. The necropolis of every civilized land has vied with its metropolis. The most beautiful hills of Europe outside the great cities are covered with obelisk and funeral vase and arched gateways and columns and parterres.

In Honor of the Inhumated.

The Appian Way of Rome was bordered by sepulchral commemorations. For this purpose Pisa has its arcades of marble sculptured into exquisite bas-reliefs and the features of dear faces that have vanished. Genoa has its terraces cut into tombs; and Constantinople covers with cypress the silent habitations; and Paris has its Père-la-Chaise, on whose heights rest Balzac and David and Marshal Ney and Cuvier and La Place and Molière, and a mighty group of warriors and poets and painters and musicians. In all foreign nations utmost genius on all sides is expended in the work of interment, mummification and incineration.

Our own country consents to be second to none in respect to the lifeless body. Every city and town and neighborhood of any intelligence or virtue has, not many miles away, its sacred enclosure, where affection has engaged sculptor's chisel and florist's spade and artificer in metals. Our own city has shown its religion as well as its art, in the manner in which it holds the memory of those who have passed forever away, by its Cypress Hills and its Evergreens and its Calvary and Holy Cross and Friends' cemeteries. All the world knows of our Greenwood, with now about two hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants sleeping among hills that overlook the sea, and by lakes embosomed in an Eden of flowers.

Our American Westminster Abbey,

an Acropolis of mortuary architecture, a Pantheon of mighty ones ascended, elegies in stone, Iliads in marble, whole generations in peace waiting for other generations to join them. No dormitory of breathless sleepers in all the world has so many mighty dead. Among preachers of the gospel, Bethune and Thomas DeWitt, and Bishop James and Tyng, and Abeel the missionary, and Beecher and Buddington and McClintock and Inskip and Bangs and Chapin and Noah Schenck and Samuel Hanson Cox. Among musicians, the renowned Gottschalk and the holy Thomas Hastings. Among philanthropists, Peter Cooper and Isaac T. Hopper and Lucretia Mott and Isabella Graham, and Henry Bergh, the apostle of mercy to the brute creation. Among the literati, the Careys, Alice and Phoebe, James K. Paulding, and John G. Saxe. Among journalists, Bennett and Raymond and Greeley. Among scientists, Ormsby Mitchell, warrior as well as astronomer, and lovingly called by his soldiers "Old Stars;" the Drapers, splendid men, as I well know, one of them my teacher, the other my classmate. Among inventors, Elias Howe, who, through the sewing machine, did more to alleviate the toils of womanhood than any man that ever lived, and Professor Morse, who gave us magnetic telegraphy; the former doing his work with the needle, the latter with the thunderbolt. Among physicians and surgeons, Joseph C. Hutchinson, and Marion Sims, and Dr. Valentine Mott, with the following epitaph which he ordered cut in honor of the Christian religion: "My implicit faith and hope is in a merciful Redeemer, who is the resurrection and the life. Amen and Amen." This is our American Machpelah, as sacred to us as the Machpelah in Canaan, of which Jacob uttered that pastoral poem in one verse: "There they buried Abraham, and Sarah his wife; there they buried Isaac, and Rebekah his wife; and there I buried Leah."

Resurrection in the Cemeteries.

At this Easter service I ask and answer what may seem a novel question, but it will be found, before I get through, a practical and useful and tremendous question: What will Resurrection Day do for the cemeteries? First, I remark, it will be their supernal beautification. At certain seasons it is customary in all lands to strew flowers over the mounds of the departed. It may have been suggested by the fact that Christ's tomb was in a garden. And when I say garden, I do not mean a garden of these latitudes. The late frosts of spring, and the early frosts of autumn are so near to each other that there are only a few months of flowers in the field. All the flowers we see to-day had to be petted and coaxed, and put under shelter or they would not have bloomed at all. They are the children of the conservatories. But at this season, and through the most of the year, the Holy Land is all ablaze with floral opulence. You find all the royal family of flowers there, some that you supposed indigenous to the far North, and others indigenous to the far South—the daisy and hyacinth, crocus and anemone, tulip and water-lily, geranium and ranunculus, mignonette and sweet marjoram. In the college at Beyrout you may see Dr. Post's collection of about eighteen hundred kinds of Holy Land flowers; while among trees are the oak of frozen climes, and the tamarisk of the tropics, walnut and willow, ivy and hawthorn, ash and elder, pine and sycamore. If such floral and botanical beauties are the wild growths of the fields, think of what a garden must be in Palestine! And in such a garden Jesus Christ slept after, on the soldier's spear, His last drop of blood had coagulated. And then see how appropriate that all our cemeteries should be floralized and tree-shaded. In June, Greenwood is Brooklyn's garden.

The Flowers of the Family.

"Well, then," you say, "how can you make out that the Resurrection Day will beautify the cemeteries? Will it not leave them a ploughed-up ground? On that day there will be an earthquake, and will not this split the polished Aberdeen granite, as well as the plain slab that can afford but the two words, 'Our Mary,' or 'Our Charley'?" Well, I will tell you how Resurrection Day will beautify all the cemeteries. It will be by bringing up the faces that were to us once, and in our memories are to us now, more beautiful than any calla lily, and the forms that are to us more graceful than any willow by the waters. Can you think of anything more beautiful than the reappearance of those from whom we have been parted? I do not care which way the tree falls in the blast of the Judgment hurricane, or if the ploughshare that day shall turn under the last rose-leaf and the last china-aster, if out of the broken sod shall come the bodies of our loved ones not damaged, but irradiated. The idea of the resurrection gets easier to understand as I hear the phonograph unroll some voice that talked into it or sung into it a year ago, just before our friend's decease. You turn the wire, and then come forth the very tones, the very accentuation, the very cough, the very song, of the person that breathed into it once, but is now departed. If a man can do that, cannot Almighty God, without half trying, return

The Voice of Your Departed?

And if He can return to us the voice, why not the lips and the tongue and the throat that fashioned the voice? And if the lips and the tongue and the throat, why not then the brain that suggested the words? And if the brain, why not the nerves, of which the brain is the headquarters? And if He can return the nerves, why not the muscles, which are less ingenious? And if the muscles, why not the bones, that are less wonderful? And if the voice and the brain and the muscles and the bones, why not the entire body? I mean can do the phonograph, God can do the resurrection. Will it be the same body that in the last day shall be reanimated? Yes, but infinitely improved. Our bodies change every seven years, and yet, in one sense, it is the same body. On my wrist and the second finger of my right hand there is a scar. I made that at twelve years of age, when disgusted at the presence of two warts, I took red-hot iron and burned them off, and burned them out. Since then my body has changed at least a half-dozen times, but those scars prove it the same body. And

We Never Lose Our Identity.

If God can and does sometimes rebuild a man five, six, ten times, in this world, is it mysterious that He can rebuild him once more, and that in the resurrection? If He can do it ten times, I think He can do it eleven times. Then look at the seventeen-year locusts. For seventeen years gone at the end of seventeen years they appear, and rubbing the hind leg against the wing make the rattle at which all the husbandmen and vine-dressers tremble as the insectile host takes up the march of devastation. Resurrection every seventeen years!

Another consideration makes the idea of resurrection easier. God made Adam. He was not fashioned after any model. There had never been human organism, and so there was nothing copy. At the first attempt God made a perfect man. He made him out of the dust of the earth. If out of ordinary dust of the earth, and without a model, God could make a perfect man, surely out of the extraordinary dust of the mortal body, and with millions of models, God can make each one of a perfect being in the Resurrection. Surely the least undertaking would not be greater than the first.

Gospel Algebra.

See the gospel algebra: ordinary dust minus model equals a perfect man; extraordinary dust plus a model equals a resurrection body. Mysteries about it? Oh yes; that is one reason why believe it. It would not be much of a God who could do things only as far as I can understand. Mysteries? Oh yes; but no more about the resurrection of your body than about its present existence. I will explain to you the last mystery of the Resurrection, and make it as plain to you as that one and two make four, if you will tell me how your mind, which is entirely independent of your body, can act upon your body so that at your will your eyes open, or your foot walks, or your hand is extended. So I find nothing in the Bible statement concerning the Resurrection that staggers me for a moment. All doubts clear from my mind, I say the cemeteries, however beautiful now, will be more beautiful when the bodies of our loved ones come.

They will come in improved condition. They will come up rested. The most of them lay down at the last very tired. How often you have heard them say, "I am so tired!" The fact is, it is a tired world. If I should go through this audience, all go round the world, I could not find a person in any style of life ignorant of the sensation of fatigue. I do not believe there are fifty persons in this audience who are not tired. Your head is tired, or your back is tired, or your foot is tired, or your brain is tired, or your nerves are tired. Long journeying, business application, or bereavement, or sickness have put on you heavy weights. So the vast majority of those who went out of this world

Went Out Fatigued.

About the poorest place to rest in is this world. Its atmosphere, its surroundings, and even its hilarities are exhausting. So God stops our earthly life, and mercifully closes the eyes, and quiesces the feet, and folds the hands, and more especially gives quiescence to the lung and heart, that he not had ten minutes' rest from the first respiration and the first beat. If a drummer-boy were compelled in the army to beat his drum for twenty-four hours without stopping, his officer would be commended for cruelty. If the drummer-boy should be commanded to beat his drum for a week without ceasing, day and night, he would die in attempt-

it. But under your vestment is a poor heart that began its drum-beat for the march of life thirty forty or sixty or eighty years ago, and it has no furlough by day or night; and, whether in torrid or comatose state, it went right on, for it had stopped seven seconds your life would have ended. And your heart will keep going until some day after your spirit has flown, for the auscultator says that after the last expiration of lung and the throbbing of pulse, and after the spirit is released, the heart keeps on beating for a time. What a pity, then, it is that the grave is the place where that wondrous machinery of ventricle and artery halts! Under the healthful chemistry of the soil the wear and tear of nerve and muscle and bone will be subtracted and that bath of good, fresh, an soil will wash off the last ache, and then the life of the same style of dust out of which the body of Adam was constructed may be infused into a resurrection body. How can the bodies of the human race, which have had no

Replenishment from the Dust

at the time of Adam in paradise, get any operation from the storehouse from which was constructed without our going back into the past? That original, life-giving material having been added to the body as it once was, and all the defects left behind, what a body will be the resurrection body! And will not hundreds of thousands such appearing above the Gowanus Heights like Greenwood more beautiful than any June morning after a shower? The dust of the earth and the original material for the fashioning of the first human being, we have to go back to the same place to get a perfect body. Factories are apt to be rough places, and those who toil in them have their garments grimy and their hands smudged. But who cares for that, when they turn out for us beautiful musical instruments or exquisite upholstery! What though the grave is a rough place, it is a resurrection-body manufactory, and from it shall come the radiant and resplendent forms of our new world on the brightest morning the world saw ever. You put into a factory cotton, and it comes out apparel. You put into a factory lumber and lead, and comes out pianos and organs. And so into the story of the grave you put in pneumonias and consumptions, and they come out health. You put in groans, and they come out hallelujahs. For on the final day, the most attractive places will not be the parks or the gardens or the palaces, but the cemeteries.

We are not told in what season that day will come. If it should be winter, those who come will be that covered them. If in the autumn, those who come up will be more gorgeous than the woods after the frosts have pencilled them. If in the spring, the bloom on which they tread will be dull compared with the rubicund of their cheeks. Oh the perfect resurrection body! Almost every one has some defective spot in his physical constitution: a dull ear, a dim eye, or a rheumatic foot, or a neuralgic arm, or a twisted muscle, or a weak side, or an inflamed tonsil, or some point at which the east wind of a season of overwork assaults him. But the resurrection body shall be without one weak spot, and all that the doctors and nurses and apothecaries of earth will thereafter have to do will be to stop without interruption after the broken nights of their earthly existence. Not only will that day be a beautification of well-kept cemeteries, but some of the graveyards that have been neglected, and even the pasture-ground for cattle and rooting-places for swine, will for the first time have attractiveness given them. It was a shame that in that age ungrateful generations planted no trees and listed no garlands, and sculptured no marble for their Christian ancestry; but on the day of which I speak the resurrected shall make the place of their rest glorious. From under the shadow of the arch, where id mullein stalks and thistles, and slabs aslant, they shall rise with a glory that shall flash the windows of the village church, and by the bell-tower that used to call them to worship, and above the old fire beside which their prayers formerly ascended. What triumphal procession never did for a street, what an oratorio never did for an academy, what an auditor never did for a brilliant auditory, what a obsequy never did for a king, Resurrection morn will do for all the cemeteries.

More Lustrous than the Snow

They Slumbered Among Nettles

This Easter tells us that in Christ's resurrection our resurrection, if we are His, and the resurrection of all the pious dead, is assured, for He was "the first fruits of them that slept." Renan says He did not rise, but five hundred and eighty witnesses, sixty of them Christ's enemies, say He did rise, for they saw Him after He had risen. If He did not rise, how did sixty armed soldiers let Him get away? Surely sixty living soldiers ought to be able to keep one dead man! Blessed be God! He did get away. After His resurrection Mary Magdalene saw Him. Cleopas saw Him. Ten disciples in an upper room at Jerusalem saw Him. On a mountain the eleven saw Him. Five hundred at once saw Him. Professor Ernest Renan, who did not see Him, will excuse us for taking the testimony of the five hundred and eighty who did see Him. Yes, yes; He got away. And that makes me sure that our departed loved ones and we ourselves shall get away. Freed Himself from the shackles of clod, He is not going to leave us and ours in the lurch. There will be no door-knob on the inside of

Our Family Sepulchre,

for we cannot come out, of ourselves; but there is a door-knob on the outside, and that Jesus shall lay hold of, and opening, will say: "Good morning! You have slept long enough! Arise! Arise!" And then what flutter of wings, and what flashing of re-kindled eyes, and what gladness rushing across the family lot, with cries of "Father, is that you?" "Mother, is that you?" "My darling, is that you?" "How you all have changed! The cough gone, the croup gone, the consumption gone, the paralysis gone, the weariness gone. Come, let us ascend together! The older ones first, the younger ones next! Quick now, get into line! The skyward procession has already started! Steer now by that embankment of cloud for the nearest gate!" And as we ascend, on one side the earth gets smaller until it is no larger than a mountain, and smaller until it is no larger than a palace, and smaller until it is no larger than a ship, and smaller until it is no larger than a wheel, and smaller until it is no larger than a speck. Farewell, dissolving earth! But on the other side, as we rise, heaven at first appears no larger than your hand. And nearer it looks like a chariot, and nearer it looks like a throne, and nearer it looks like a star, and nearer it looks like a sun, and nearer

It Looks Like a Universe.

Hail, sceptres that shall always wave! Hail, anthems that shall always roll! Hail, companionships never again to be broken, and friendships never again to part! That is what Resurrection Day will do for all the cemeteries and graveyards from the Machpelah that was opened by Father Abraham in Hebron to the Machpelah yesterday consecrated. And that makes Lady Huntington's immortal rhythm most apposite:

When Thou, my righteous Judge, shalt come
To take Thy ransomed people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at Thy right hand?

Among Thy saints let me be found,
Whene'er th' archangel's trump shall sound,
To see Thy smiling face;
Then loudest of the throng I'll sing,
While heaven's resounding arches ring
With shouts of sovereign grace.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Jefferson's Retirement.*

IN his style of life as President, Jefferson had indulged in such easy and liberal expenses as suited the place he held. Far from showing extravagance, the White House and its surroundings had in his time the outward look of a Virginia plantation. The President was required to pay the expenses of the house and grounds. In consequence, the grounds were uncared for, the palings broken or wanting, the paths undefined, and the place a waste, running imperceptibly into the barren fields about it. Within the house was as simple as without, after the usual style of Virginia houses, where the scale was often extravagant, but the details plain. Only on his table did Jefferson spend an unusual amount of money, with excellent results for his political influence, for no President understood better than Jefferson the art of entertaining; yet his table cost him no excessive sums. His French cook and cook's assistant were paid about four hundred dollars a year. On such a scale his salary of twenty-five thousand dollars was equivalent to fully sixty thousand dollars of modern money; and his accounts showed that for the first, and probably the most expensive, year of his Presidency, he spent only $16,800, which could properly be charged to his public and official character.

* From The History of the United States During the Second Administration of Thomas Jefferson. By Henry Adams. Vol. II. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

A mode of life so simple and so easily controlled should, in a village like Washington, have left no opening for arrears of debt; but when Jefferson, about to quit the White House forever, attempted to settle his accounts, he discovered that he had exceeded his income. Not his expenses as President, but his expenses as planter, dragged him down. At first he thought that his debts would reach seven or eight thousand dollars, which must be discharged from a private estate hardly exceeding two hundred thousand dollars in value at the best of times, and rendered almost worthless by neglect and by the embargo. The sudden demand for this sum of money coming at the moment of his political mortifications, wrung from him cries of genuine distress, such as no public disaster had called out.

He wrote to his commission merchant entreating him to borrow the money. He said, "Since I have become sensible of this deficit I have been under an agony of mortification, and, therefore, must solicit as much urgency in the negotiation as the case will admit. My intervening nights will be almost sleepless, as nothing could be more distressing to me than to leave debts here unpaid, if, indeed, I should be permitted to depart with them unpaid, of which I am by no means certain." Large as it was, this estimate of the debt fell far short of the reality. The arrears amounted in fact to twenty thousand dollars. Nothing but immediate and rigid economy could restore the loss, and, even with every advantage, Jefferson could never hope to live again upon his old scale without incurring bankruptcy; he must cease to be a grand seigneur, or drag his family into the ruin which seemed to be the fate of every Virginian.

On March 4, 1809, he rode once more on horseback to the Capitol, and stood by the side of Madison, while John Marshall administered the oath of office. The weight of administration was at last removed, but the longing for home became only the greater. March 5, he wrote to Armstrong, "Within two or three days I retire from scenes of difficulty, anxiety, and of contending passions; to the elysium of domestic affection and the irresponsible direction of my own affairs." A week afterward Jefferson quitted Washington forever. On horseback, over roads impassable to wheels, through snow and storm, he hurried back to Monticello to recover in the quiet of home the peace of mind he had lost in the disappointments of his statesmanship. He arrived at Monticello March 15, and never again passed beyond the bounds of a few adjacent counties.

With a sigh of relief, which seemed as sincere and deep as his own, the Northern people saw him turn his back on the White House, and disappear from the arena in which he had for sixteen years challenged every comer. In the Northern States few regrets were wasted upon his departure, for every mind was intent on profiting by the overthrow of his system; but Virginia was still loyal to him, and the citizens of his own county of Albemarle welcomed his final return with an affectionate address.

A CHILD VICTIM.

At a meeting of the non-partisan temperance organization of Washington, held lately, Congressman Stewart, of Georgia, related the touching story which caused him to become a temperance man. He related that when a lad, living among the Georgia hills, he had a friend, bright and promising, who married a beautiful and wealthy girl. He fell a victim to drink, and coming home once in a debauch seized the little child who ran forward to meet him, and dashed it against the wall. Not knowing what he had done, he threw himself upon the bed and was soon in a drunken sleep. When told a few hours later by the crazed wife and mother that the child was dead, he dashed out of the house, and no one ever saw him again. "That day," the speaker said, "I looked up to God and swore that I would always fight the curse."

Holy Ghost Days. By Mrs. M. Baxter.—A volume containing 144 pages. Price, neatly bound in cloth, 35 cents, including postage. Address Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

By the Rev. Newman Hall, LL. B.

Expected by the Apostles—And by the Early Church—Mistakes About It—He Will Come to Reign—What the Gospel Will not Accomplish—Unfounded Expectation that the Millennium Will Precede the Advent.

MANY Christians who rejoice in the First Advent are little influenced by the Second, which is often the creed of the intellect rather than of the heart. They look backward rather than forward. But the apostles and early believers, accepting the First Advent as an accomplished fact, looked forward, longing for what was yet future—the return of their Lord in glory.

The Second Advent of Christ to us is sometimes confounded with our going to Him at death. His promise to the disciples, "I will come again and receive you unto myself," has hitherto been fulfilled only at their decease. All believers may rejoice that it is not the last enemy, but their divine Friend, who bids them leave this life, and that "to depart" is to "be with Christ," which is "far better" than remaining in a world of sin. But this is not identical with the other truth that the Lord will come again to dwell with His people on the earth.

The Second Advent of Christ is also confounded with the general Resurrection and the final Judgment, which are supposed to occupy a very short space of time. In this case the Advent would not be a coming of Christ to a kingdom on earth, but a brief visit for the purpose of removing His saints to the kingdom in heaven.

The entrance of the soul at death to the presence of Jesus is one article of faith; the general Judgment is another; but these should not absorb and take the place of another revealed fact, that

Christ Will Come to Reign

with His saints, to perfect His Church, to cause His kingdom to come and His will to be done on earth even as in heaven; and thus to accomplish all the predictions with which the Bible teems respecting the universal triumph of truth and righteousness in this long distracted and sin-polluted world.

The early Church did eagerly and lovingly anticipate such an Advent. They were "looking for that blessed hope;" not the hope of going to heaven, but of Christ coming to earth. They were patient in tribulation, believing that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." They were "looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God." They were characterized as those who "love His appearing." In this confident expectation they were encouraged by apostles filled with the Spirit.

The lack of practical belief in the Second Advent as an event to be in our day hoped and prepared for, has arisen from the opinion that the Millennium is to precede the Advent, and be preparatory to it. If by present instrumentalities the gospel is to triumph over all error and wickedness, seems so small that our hope of the Advent must be indefinitely postponed beyond our term of life.

The Rate of Progress

The gospel has been preached during more than eighteen centuries; yet the great majority of mankind are still ignorant of it. Hundreds of millions are still sunk in heathenism; hundreds of millions more are devotees of the False Prophet. In regions professedly Christian tens of millions divide their homage of Christ with that of the Virgin and saints; while the human priest is to them practically more than the one Mediator, the one High Priest of the Church. Among Protestants there are multitudes who ignore the supernatural element in Christianity; and others who, if they are right in worshipping Christ as God, are wrong in fundamental doctrine. Among nominal Christians many are so little under the influence of the truth that they habitually neglect public worship; while, of those who are found regularly at church, many, it is to be feared, have not yielded their hearts in loving obedience to the Saviour.

If we glance at the conduct of professedly Christian nations, we see little difference between them and others. Ambition, tyranny, selfishness, anger, revenge, seem too frequently to be considered necessary, and, therefore, right in politics. Millions of men are always being trained in the arts of wholesale slaughter, preparing for war while professing peace; and many a battle-field has been reddened in our own day by the blood of thousands who have invoked the Prince of Peace to aid them in mutual destruction.

If the millennial reign is simply spiritual, and to be brought about by present agencies, its very commencement seems to be hidden in the haze of the dim distance; and if it is to last during any period long enough to justify the figure of a thousand years, and if it is only at the completion of such period that Christ will personally come, it is not surprising that an event so distant should, as a motive, be practically powerless.

It is important to inquire whether Scripture warrants us in placing

The Millennial Age

prior to the Advent. Does it represent our earth as becoming the abode of righteousness in order to be prepared to welcome its King? Or does it represent its King as coming to establish the reign of righteousness by His personal influence?

Can Bible-students find any passage describing the millennial age as preceding judgments on the wicked? On the contrary, are not such descriptions constantly connected with those judgments as precedent, and executed by the Lord at His coming?

We often quote, in relation to the millennium, the promise in Ps. 2:8, "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." But the very next verse declares, "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." From this it seems plain that to take possession of the uttermost parts of the earth, there will be daring rebels whose overthrow must clear the way for the kingdom. If so, we are not to postpone our hopes for the coming of the kingdom until such rebellion is subdued by the preaching of the gospel.

When Christ Comes

In another millennial Psalm, the seventy-second, we have a lovely picture of the time when "the mountains will bring peace to the people," under the sway of Him who will "come down like rain on the mown grass; in whose days the righteous will flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth;" when "all kings shall fall down before Him, and all nations shall serve Him." But this will not be without judgment on the wicked, for in this sweet idyll of peace we are told that "He shall break in pieces the oppressor" (verse 4). We are not, therefore, to postpone our hope of His coming till all oppression is first put down. He will come to "vindicate the poor of the people, and to save the children of the needy," because He will come to "break in pieces" their enemies.

The New Testament confirms the earlier revelation. St. Jude gives apostolic authority for the fact that Enoch linked the Advent with judgments on the wicked then living. Thus we are to expect that there will be outrageously compared to "raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame," the silencing of whose blasphemies will not precede but follow, the coming of the Lord with "ten thousands of His saints."

Wicked People on the Earth,

St. Paul warns the Thessalonians that "a falling away," and a revelation of the Man of Sin will precede the day of Christ; who, when He comes, will be "revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ;" when "He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." (1 Thess. 1:6-9; 2:1-3.) Here again we are led to expect, not that all disobedience is first to be overcome by the preaching of the Gospel, but that He will find many still living, guilty of such hardened rebellion as to deserve fiery vengeance.

We read in the book of Revelation: "Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." (Rev. 1:7.) There will be many living on the earth to whom His Advent will be a terror.

Nothing can be clearer than the command to preach the Gospel to all mankind throughout the world, indiscriminately; to every creature, to all ranks and all conditions; but it is nowhere said that every individual will embrace it prior to the Advent. Our Lord said, "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come;" not when all nations have obeyed the summons, but when in every region the trumpet has been blown.

If this is the testimony of Scripture, we are not to regard the great hope of the Church as so distant that it cannot possibly take place in our own day, and therefore cannot exercise any motive power on heart and life. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh! In all regions of the earth the Gospel has been proclaimed.

WILL IT LIFT?

THE STORY OF A FOG.

By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,

(Continued from page 222.)

THE policeman had well earned the money which rewarded him for his exertions, for Gilbert Craske arose in the morning refreshed and comforted. He indicated to the landlord his high satisfaction with his billet, and declared his intention of making his future location while in town. After breakfast he sallied forth in quest of his missing portmanteau, intending also to resume his search after No. 6. The day was fine—there was even an occasional glimpse of sunshine—and our hero, whose spirit were never very low, under any circumstances, made his way to the lost-luggage office at police headquarters with a light heart, and, considering his years and somewhat burly figure, with an even lighter step. He succeeded in coming to his own again, so far as the portmanteau was concerned, and obtained a clue also to the cabman who had left him in the lurch, and on whom he was now dependent for guidance to the mysterious street which he might find the true and only No. 6, which had given him such trouble on the preceding night. His payment of the missing fare, and son overplus for the cabman's honesty, made the latter communicative and willing to oblige.

"You see, sir," said he, "it were a caution, th there fog was, a reg'lar down-in-a-cellar, up-in-tree, and there-you-are sort of business; an' wher picked you up I warn't altogether as clear-headed as a lawyer; 'cos why—what with the fog, an' a gla or two o' hot with, things got sort o' mixed a bit. But, 'cordin' to the best o' my belief, when th young 'ooman put herself among my owd 'oss's leg an' we was browt up standin', we were somewher in Gooch Street, or Store Street, or Russel Street."

It was evident from this that "cabbie" could n throw more than the faintest ray of light upon t matter, and Gilbert's heart failed him as he liste ed. The probabilities of his finding what he dea wanted were growing very small indeed. He neith knew the name of the street nor the name of t people that dwelt in the house, and when he sai "The number was 69, wasn't it, cabbie?" th worthy plucked up heart of grace. He was sorry see his liberal patron so disheartened because of l own uncertainty, so he determined to make up i t by a "declaration on oath."

"No, sir. That I can take my solumdavy or There is no doubt the cabman thought it was a tremendous word. "It was 96. You've just p the cart before the 'oss, don't you see? Turn t figures round, and there you are."

Gilbert Craske wished in his heart he was the or saw any way of getting there. All he did kn was a face; and to find a face, one face among the teeming thousands of that populous distri was indeed, or seemed to be, a vain thing. I sides, time pressed, for he had business, serie business, in the midland counties. So he turn away and went back to his hotel, and as he w he talked sadly to himself.

"Well, this is a go! I knew her in a mome A widow's cap on, too! And looking as bonny ever, for all her silver hair. And not too well c if I may judge by appearances." Here his ha jingled the money in his pocket with a sort of neous excitement, as he continued, "I must fi her, heaven help me, and I will."

Meanwhile, however, he must prosecute his jo ney to the Midlands; and on the next day, as t evening shadows gathered round the hoary gat of The Grange, Gilbert Craske took up his quart at the Hildrop Inn, and introduced himself to t worthy host, Jared Higginbotham, as "Rich Allanson, Esq., hailing from New South Wales."

Now that our odd friend, Gilbert Craske, is co fortably located in Jared Higginbotham's priv parlor at the Hildrop Inn, we may explain a lit as to who he was, from whence he came, and wh he wanted there. Some five-and-thirty years fore, Gilbert Craske had been a Faringham b and used to play with the rest of Faringham b dom on the village green. His parents were po Those were hard times, too, and it was even m than they could do to make out-goings and in-co ings meet. They continued to "rub on," as e say, by the aid of a few acres of very indiffer land and a cow or two, but the rubbing was v dreary and painful process, and the winnings be no proportion to the work. When Gilbert was enough to earn a few shillings in the fields of Faringham farmers; he had to toil harder than y in his earliest teens ought to toil, in order to be the wolf—whose threatening bark was often heard, and whose spectral jaws were often snarling loudly near—from their humble door.

Jonah Craske, as the lad's father was called, was intelligent and fairly educated man, and was capable of making his way, had he been at liberty to choose a line of life more in keeping with his tastes and talents, which were considerable; but as that he had inherited, and that he would and pay, in order to preserve the credit of his father, and his name unstained, kept him "grinding at the wheel," sorely against his will. On one day he was fully resolved, and that was that his sons should be so equipped with knowledge and experience as would enable them to fight the battle of life at a good deal more advantage than he baffled and discouraged sire.

During the long winter evenings he himself became their schoolmaster, and did his best to make his sons possessors of that kind of practical and useful knowledge which the old proverb declares to be better than houses or land; and during the summer evenings, though often tired with his day's toil, he led with them along the lanes and through the fields of Faringham, giving them lessons on crops, sheep, or cattle, or meadows, and their management, illustrating his teachings by what they met in their evening walks. It was a labor of love, was destined, as all such wise labors are, to its full reward.

When he arrived at manhood, or close upon it, he emigrated to Australia with the consent of his parents, though not without much sorrow at leaving. Australia was just then coming rapidly to the front as an inviting and promising field for pioneer pioneers, who were capable of "roughing it" while, and for whom there seemed to be little or no small opportunity in their native land. His arrangements in those early days there were little or none, and so for a long time Gilbert Craske sailed out of view, out of ken, and, so far as Faringham was concerned, seemingly out of life. Actually, however, long-looked-for letters came, reporting his welfare and prosperity, and containing practical proof thereof, and of his filial love and loyalty as well, in the shape of welcome remittances to line his father's scantily filled purse. After thirty years' absence, he had returned to the old home in the hands of strangers, the folks laid under the shadows of the ivy-colored roof of Faringham Church, and to find that his brother had himself found a home and a fair share of fortune on a Canadian farm.

There was no small joy to Gilbert Craske when standing by the grave of his honored parents to know that their latter days had been cheered and comforted, and their way to their quiet graves brightened, by his own filial care and bountiful supplies. Jonah Craske, proud of his son, and truly grateful for his aid, had not been slow to tell the good folks of Faringham what their boy Gil had done for them; and the commendation thereupon was well shaped by Jimmie Sladd, who thus delivered his opinion:

"Allus said 'at there was the makin' of a man in young Gil, an' he's made hisself a man o' first-class quality; leastwise, that's what his God, an' his folks, an' hisself ha' turned out among 'em. The Lord's allus on the side o' them as means well, does well; an' when folks hev Him on their side, it ain't no great matter how monny an' how mitch sides again 'em. Him an' them are more than match for all 'at's contrary."

The morning of Gilbert Craske's arrival at Hildrop Inn, having chosen to make his first pilgrimage among the familiar scenes of his childhood home, he was sauntering around the old farmhouse in which he was born, when he met an old man, clad according to bucolic fashion, in a long grey-brown smock, more white than brown in color, in stance, for Jimmie Sladd had retired from business, and lived on the liberal annuity of three guineas a week which the parochial system had allotted upon him. This large sum was increased several kindly doles from neighboring friends, and Jimmie was greatly respected in his old age.

He recognized the old man instantly, and stood just then under the influence of very tender feelings, he had much ado to keep himself from saying the little secret which he desired for a while to keep. "Well, here's a go!" said he to himself, with a pleasant gleam on his honest face, "thank God for the sight of an old friend at last."

"Good morning, my friend," said he, in cheery tones, quite in keeping with all the rest of his inward heartiness and his outward seeming; "here's a fine, bright morning for November, isn't it?"

"Yis," said Jimmie, looking at the unknown with some surprise, "it's fine for the time o' year; but it's a bit raw an' coddish for owd bones like mine."

"Why, yes; I expect you don't feel quite so independent of fine weather and a good coal fire as you used to do, say five and twenty years back. Why, judging by your white head, my friend, you're fast creeping on to David's limit of three-score years and ten. Still, you seem tolerably hale for your years."

"Why, yes, I's middlingish for an owd 'un, but I isn't quite so far on the road as you think—I shall be sixty-five come next January; an' shepherding i' all weathers is apt to tak' the bloom off. I used to hev as much o' that as most i' my younger days. Noo the bloom's gone from my cheek, and the blossom's come on my head by way of a change; but that doesn't fidget me, I shall bloom again by and by," and as he spoke the bloom came to his whole face, the bloom of a sure and certain hope, as he looked upward with a smile that meant "all's well."

Happy they, happy always, to be happier in the fullness of time, who, whether they are clad in coarse-spun flaxen smock or fine-spun silken garments, have that "good hope through grace." Gilbert Craske felt strangely drawn to the old shepherd, whom as a lad he used to welcome when he came to his father's house, sat in the well-remembered ingle-nook, and conversed concerning that highest and best of all philosophy—the Christ-wisdom with which his tongue and heart were happily familiar then as now. "I suppose you've lived a goodish while in Faringham?" said Gilbert, bent on drawing the old man out on subjects especially interesting to him just then.

"I've been here an' whereabouts just all my life," said Jimmie, "an' I think I's about the last o' the owd 'uns like 'at can say as much. Leavin' oot two or three or mayhap half a dozen, them 'at played hockey an' rounders wi' me on Faringham Green, are laid i' Faringham churchyard, leastwise all 'cept them 'at's gone oot o' sight an' kennin.' Hey dear, but things is all altered since then!" and, as his voice fell, the old man's dimming gray eyes had a far-away look in them, as though they were steadily gazing into the long and distant past.

"Do you remember a small farmer that used to live in this neighborhood?" inquired Gilbert, with well-assumed indifference; "let me see, whatever was his name?—that's it, Jonah Craske?"

"Oh, aye, I 'member 'im hard enough. He was a good sort, he was. Dead and gone, poor fellow, some years back, an' his wife an' all. Dinah Craske was a good 'un, an' a kind 'un. When my dower Jennie died, Dinah Craske had nursed her night an' day, just like a kind mother, she had, well-nigh a month. God bless her!" Here poor old Jimmie Sladd, tender-hearted and grateful, shed tears.

"Well, here's a go!" said Gilbert, melted by such warm words and feelings concerning his dead mother. He could not keep back the tears from coursing down his own cheeks, and seizing Jimmie Sladd's crooked and horny fingers, shook him heartily by the hand, "They were a good sort—at least I've heard so," quoth Gilbert, coming perilously near discovery, and restraining himself at the last moment. "Look here, old friend, I'm stopping at Hildrop Inn. You come along this evening and ask for Mr. Allanson; then ye shall tell me all about them." Then he turned away, leaving some money in wondering Jimmie's palm.

At the appointed time Jimmie Sladd made inquiries of Jared Higginbotham, mine host of Hildrop Inn, for Mr. Allanson. "Why, do you know Mr. Allanson?" said the landlord, who was not only not destitute of the curiosity which is said to be peculiar to his tribe, but who had that propensity to an even remarkable degree. "I say, Jimmie, who is he? He seems to have spent a good deal of time in Tom Tiddler's ground, picking up gold and silver—at least that is the impression I've got," continued Boniface, not caring to tell how the impression had been produced.

The fact was, that the landlord had come into Gilbert's private room on the evening of his arrival with heedless suddenness, tapping at the door and opening it at the same moment, anxious to know whether his guest would require any more attention for the night. He was surprised to find Mr. Allanson engaged, like the king in the nursery story, "counting all his money," or at least some considerable portion of it, for there upon the table were several piles of golden coin, and in Gilbert's hand was a large bundle of bank-notes, the sight of which made Master Higginbotham's eyes water, and led him to break the tenth commandment then and there.

Gilbert looked and was a good deal annoyed, and actually blushed as he saw the eyes of the landlord steadily fixed upon the shining heaps in a sort of hungry wonder; blushed as though he asked himself the question whether he had any right to be so uncommonly well-to-do. Honest Gilbert, however, was a most unsuspecting individual; transparent as crystal himself, he had a tendency to confide in others with unquestioning faith in "honest human nature." He simply said, "No, thank you, I am all right. Oh, by-the-way, I might as well tell you that my meal for the day is breakfast; let me have that at 8, and let it be substantial—the best you can do."

"Very good, sir," said Jared Higginbotham, and backed out of the room, saying to himself, as he sought his proper quarters, "The best I can do—eh? I should think so. He's an Indian nabob, that's what he is. My word, what a lot o' shiners!" and mine host could not help discoursing to his wife in the bar concerning that which his eyes had seen, and which his hands would have gladly handled, if fortune had only put it in his way instead of the lucky proprietor's in the private room.

Of course Jared Higginbotham said nothing of all this to Jimmie Sladd. In answer to the landlord's inquiry, that honest shepherd on the retired list simply replied, "Hoo he is, I don't know; and what he is, I can't tell; nor what he's worth, nor where he got it; nor nowt about him; only this, that I met him up yonder by Sanfield Farm; an' he was main chatty an' pleasant; an' when he knew that I'd been a Faringham bairn an' a Faringham lad, an' a Faringham man all my life up to noo, he asked me to come and talk to him about it."

The landlord went to inquire if it was Mr. Allanson's will to see Jimmie, and finally showed him into Gilbert's presence. A cup of warm coffee and a pipe were ordered for Jimmie's special behoof, and finally the landlord was dismissed with this special order, given with such significant emphasis that Master Jared felt condemned on the spot, for last night's breach, "Jimmie and I have business, landlord; see that we are not interfered with."

"What's the business, I wonder?" quoth Jared, as he left the room; "has Jimmie come in for a fortune, too?"

"Now, Jimmie," said Gilbert, "that's the name, I think, the landlord mentioned—"

"Yis, sir; Jimmie Sladd; that's what they've called me ever since I had any name at all."

"And so you knew Jonah Craske, eh? and of course you would know his family; I knew something about them in years gone by. What has become of them?" Gilbert inquired.

"Why, sir, the owd folks, that's Jonah and Dinah Craske—leastwise they would ha' been owd if they had lived till now—"

"I wish they had!" said Gilbert, bringing down his hand upon his knee to emphasize the wish; then seeing that he had rather astonished his aged companion, he continued, in self-reproach, "Here's a go!" Then a bright thought struck him. "For your sake, you know, Jimmie; there's so few of the old ones left—you said so yourself, you know."

"True," said the old shepherd, with a sigh. "I wish they had. Well, Jonah and Dinah are both dead, an' their memories are honored an' respected to this day i' Faringham. They had a son called Jotham—they had a great likin' for Bible names. He went off only a few years back to Canada, an' they say he's doin' well there. I shouldn't wonder. His parents did well by him, an' he did well by them, poor fellow, till he lost 'em, and I think the good Lord 'll do well by him i' consequence. That's allus His way."

"But they had another son, hadn't they?" said Gilbert. "What became of him, I wonder? He wasn't much of a youth, was he?"

"Weren't he?" replied Jimmie; "I knows better than that. His name was Gilbert. He was my godson. I've nussed him an' bussed him many a time when he was i' short frocks. He was a nice lad, good-tempered, an' main kind to his mother. Them's the sort," continued the old man, with true philosophy—"them's the sort as does well to themselves—they as does well by their mothers."

(To be Continued.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

WHEN the City of Paris, after all our apprehensions, was seen being towed into Queenstown, and her one thousand passengers and crew were reported safe, all sorts of lessons were learned, but no one seems to have learned the most important lesson. Captain and crew all acted nobly. The mariners were not to blame. The sea was not to blame. The winds were not to blame. Those men were to blame who made insufficient machinery, which, without provocation, exploded and knocked right and left, and up and down, threatening the demolition of everything. Let us learn the vast responsibility resting on workmen who are never heard of. Without their fidelity, in vain have ship-captains and self-sacrificing crew. All honor to those who make boilers that will not burst, and machinery that will not break loose, and do work which, though clear out of sight, decides the safety of human life and property. When the City of Paris took us across the Atlantic last November in five days and twenty-three hours, we congratulated the officers and we congratulated the passengers, but the foundrymen and the machinists, and the carpenters and the rope-makers, and the mechanics of all sorts, without whom our voyage would have been a disaster instead of a joy, went uncongratulated. We are all so stupid that the only way we seem to learn the value of good work is by the accidents which come from bad work. Meanwhile, what a mercy that the Atlantic did not get its long and cruel fingers around that palace of the deep! How the mother of shipwrecks would like to have rocked that great steamer into a sleep that knows no waking. Let our daily prayer be for those who voyage the sea and do business on the mighty waters.

STAGNATION AND SENSATIONALISM

are two very offensive words. We do not know which is the worse. It is the national habit in literature and religion to call that sensationalism which we ourselves cannot do. If an author writes a book that will not sell, he is apt to charge the books of the day which do succeed as being sensational. There are a great many men who, in the world and the Church, are dead failures, who spend their time in letting the public know that they are not sensationalists. We hate sensationalism in the pulpit, so far as the word means the preaching of everything but the Gospel; but the simple fact is, that whenever and wherever faith and repentance and heaven and hell are proclaimed with emphasis, there will be a sensation. The people in our great cities are hungry for the old Gospel of Christ. If our young men in the ministry want large audiences, let them quit philosophizing and hair-splitting and botanizing, and without gloves take hold of men's sins and troubles, and there will be no lack of hearers. Stagnation is worse than sensationalism. We have always noticed that just in proportion as a man cannot get along himself, he is fearful of some one else making an excitement. Last week, a mud-turtle down by the brook opened its shell, and discoursed to a horse that was coming down to drink. The mud-turtle said to the horse: "Just as I get sound asleep, you are sure to come past and wake me up. We always used to have a good quiet time down here in the swamp till you got in the habit of thumping along this way. I am conservative, and like to keep in my shell. I have been pastor of thirteen other mud-turtles, and we always had peace till you came, and next week, at our semi-annual meeting of mud-turtles, we shall either have you voted a nuisance, or will talk it over in private, eight or ten of us, which will probably be the more prudent way." Then the mud-turtle's shell went shut with a snap, at which the horse kicked up his heels as he turned to go up to the barn to be harnessed to a load of corn that was ready for the market. Let us all wake up and go to work. There are in the private membership of our churches, and in the ministry, a great many men who are dead, but have never had the common decency to get buried. With the harvest white and "lodging" for lack of a sickle, instead of lying under the trees criticising the sweating reapers who are at work, let us throw off our own coats and go out to see how good a swath we can cut.

CONCERNING BOYS.

THERE are people disposed to be hard on masculine juvenescence. Now, we think there is nothing in all the world so admirable as a rubicund boy, unless, perhaps, it be a girl. We suspect that those who say such rough things about the former have none of this lively adornment in their household. They have probably been praying for one a good while, and are exercising a grudge because their prayer has not been answered. Boys are, in our estimation, at a premium. The world would be a dull place without them. They make a good deal of racket, and occasionally break things, and crumple up valuable letters for kite-tails, and send us in hot haste for the doctor in the month of green apples; but all that is cheap, considering their worth. Instead of inveighing against them, let us culture the boy in our own nature by taking an occasional game at leap-frog, blind-man's-buff, and base-ball. When the boy entirely gets out of a man's heart his usefulness is gone. If, through the wear and tear of life, the boy is escaping from your nature, better catch him now, and make him fast forever.

We feel sorry for boys. They have their real troubles, and one of the worst is suppressed hilarity. To want to laugh, and still maintain gravity; to see the minister's wig getting twisted, and yet look devotional; to discover a mouse in prayer-time, and yet not titter; to see the young bride and groom in church try to look like old married people; to have the deacon drop the contribution-plate and spill the pennies, and yet look sorry for the misfortune; in a word, to be a boy with fun from the top hair on the crown of the head to the tip-end of the great toe, and yet make no demonstration, is a trial with which we are deeply sympathetic. To sit on a long bench at the school with eight or ten other boys, all ab to keep quiet only by utmost force of resolution, and something happens that makes all the re snicker, while you abstain, requires an amount of heroic endurance we never reached. We remember well how the rattan feels when it arrives in the open palm at the rate of sixty miles an hour. In our first ten years we suppressed enough giggles, snicker chuckles, and yells to have ruined us for all time.

We so often retired from the sitting-room, where we had company, to the wood-shed, where our mirth would be no disturbance to anything but the ash-barrels, that we have all allowance to make for that age of life which is apt to be struck through with titter. We still feel the boy in our nature when ludicrous things happen, as when a city equisite came into our prayer-meeting, whisked in hand and fanciful eye-glass on, and looked sublimely around on the audience as much as say, "I suppose you all see that I am here," and then sat down where a chair had just before stood but from which place the usher had inadvertently removed it. Had it not been for an extemporized cough and sneeze, and active use of pocket-handkerchief, on our part, we should have been hopelessly ruined.

But let nothing that has been said by us in extenuation of our young folks be taken by the public as a license for unreasonable sportfulness. Boys, behave yourselves, or we will be after you in our very next editorial!

POST-MORTEM REPUTATION.

RECENTLY we have had, by autobiographies and papers published after decease, the attempt made to decide what shall be said after one's departure. But no man ever succeeded in taking care of his name after he is dead. If it live at all, it will in a few years, come to be taken for just what it is worth, all the panegyrists and defamers notwithstanding. There is swung somewhere between heaven and earth a steelyard which weighs everything just right, though for a little while it may quiver uncertainly. If a man does his best while living, he need not be anxious either about his bones or his after-death reputation. He who has had a full chance at the world for fifty or seventy years ought to be satisfied. After he is dead let him keep still. He who serves God and his count is every day composing his own epitaph, deciding his own biography, and chiselling his own monument. He need not be afraid either of stone-cutters or critic.

AMEN AND AMEN.

WE are confident that one reason for the long prayers with which we are sometimes afflicted at religious meetings is an incapacity to wind up. After the brother has been praying about long enough, you see that he is trying to find "Amen." He does not want to come too suddenly upon you, and so he gradually makes that way; but he is like a Brooklyn ferry-boat aiming for the wharf where there is a good deal of ice in the river, and he bobs in and out, in and out, at last reaching it with a blundering stroke. Many of the brethren in the prayers take one-third of the time to get started and another third to stop. Why not with your first sentence plunge into what you most want, and stop when you get through, without any circuitous gyrations? Men keep on and on after they ought to stop because they do not know how to let down the brakes. We have a recommendation to make. If an isolated "Amen" would sound abrupt at the time you want to close, do as the Psalmist did when the prayers of David, the son of Jesse, were ended, exclaiming "Amen and Amen."

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Much-Maligned System of Civil Service form has received recent practical testimony in its favor. The postmaster at Indianapolis has given a system a fair trial, and now announces himself a thorough supporter of it. It appears also to work satisfactorily for the commissioners. Mr. Roosevelt visited the office during his western trip, and reports: "That the office is managed in strict conformity with the civil service law." The bulk of the old employees appointed under the last Administration have been retained, and the postmaster has consistently followed out the policy of making no changes only for cause, without regard to politics. In making appointments he has taken men from the head of the list, right in their order, without skipping any one. The faithful continuance of this policy will speedily beget confidence in the community, and then the members of the two parties will come forward indifferently to be examined. The postmaster spoke most highly of the relief given him by our system in entirely doing away with the importunities of place-hunters, and politicians." This testimony will, it may be hoped, encourage other postmasters to adopt the system.

The Difficult Question of an International Coin is current in all the countries represented in the Pan-American Conference appears to have been incapable of solution by the Conference. "On one point the members are a unit: they all believe that a coin would greatly facilitate mutual commercial transactions, and is, indeed, essential to their extension. It is when the question of the metal of the coin is to be settled that divergence of view arises. The Conference has, therefore, adjourned itself on record in favor of the coin, and has requested the President of the United States to appoint a special commission, to meet in Washington a year or less after the present Conference adjourns, to deal exclusively with this subject. The stipulation made by the Conference is that the coin shall be of a defined weight, standard fineness, and value, and that it shall be legal tender in all the countries. Its invariable equivalent in gold is also to be fixed, which is a difficult matter, as the value of silver fluctuates. There can, however, be no dispute as to the necessity for such a coin if the commerce between the Americas is to be permanently increased.

Reports from the Flooded Districts were More cheerful at the close of last week, though earlier in the week they were full of gloom. On Friday it was announced that the river was at a standstill and would soon begin to fall, much to the encouragement of the water-beleaguered people. At that point. All the other tributaries were rising rapidly, and the fact that the crest of the flood-wave in the Ohio had passed into the Mississippi seemed to justify the belief that the worst was over, especially for the country between Vicksburg and Cairo. Below Vicksburg it will be several days before any positive relief is experienced. The worst of the week seems to have been at Greenville and Huntington, Miss. The crevasse just below the latter place allowed the water to flow directly down upon it, and in a short time the people were compelled to abandon their homes. There was no escape to the rear, so they took refuge in cars lying on the track of the Mississippi Valley Railroad, and on the levee in front of the village. The levee for some distance above and below Huntington was crowded with refugees, many of them in the back country. Newspaper correspondents that the people on the levees have almost no protection from the weather, and otherwise expect great discomfort, but they show little disposition to leave the neighborhood of their homes. Farmers passing up and down the river would take them to places of greater safety, but they do not seem to go.

The Admission of Idaho to Statehood, which was voted by the House on April 3, is, it is stated, made a test case by which to settle in the future the validity of Speaker Reed's ruling. The Democrats in the House with one exception refused to vote on the question. As the number of votes was only 130, the question of quorum came up. There were many Democrats actually in the House, though not voting, but their names were taken down by one of the clerks, and, under Mr. Reed's ruling, they are regarded as present and helping to make a quorum. This is the case chosen for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Speaker's ruling holds in law. On the subject of admitting the Territory the Mormon question again arose, and

Mr. Springer made another effort to prevent the disfranchisement of men accused of polygamy. Mr. Lodge defended the clause in the Constitution which prevents polygamists voting. He contended that it was not a question of dealing with a specific crime of a particular individual. It was a question of dealing with a system which upheld and organized what was declared to be a crime under the laws of the United States. Still less was this a question involving religious liberty. From the beginning of the history of the Mormons they had defied the laws of the United States. Now the great tide of American civilization and population was coming over them from every side, and their effort was to get themselves into Statehood, so that, perhaps, they could find immunity, if not protection, by offering support to one or the other political party. Congress would not be justified in surrendering its control over the Territory if Idaho did not have such a clause in its constitution.

The Sale of Liquor by the Government to Soldiers at military posts is the subject of vigorous protest. Strangely enough, the practice is opposed by two very different classes of persons, acting from very diverse motives. The protest comes not only from the Women's Christian Temperance Union, but from saloon-keepers and post-traders. The system which is known as the "canteen system" is much in favor with the War Department, the officials of which claim that the soldier has less temptation when he buys liquor at the canteen than when he goes into a saloon, and, besides, gets purer liquor. But the post-traders and saloon-keepers oppose the system because it hurts their business, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union opposes it because it allows the sale of wine and beer at the posts under Government auspices. Efforts are being organized by both parties to induce Congress to abolish the system.

The Condition of the Panama Canal Appears to be utterly hopeless. A letter published last week from a correspondent of the New York Herald who has been over the ground describes the difficulties in the way of the original scheme as insuperable, as mountains would have to be cut through before a level canal could be constructed. Even to make a canal with ten locks does not seem possible without a preliminary expenditure of nearly a hundred million dollars. The work so far accomplished represents only one-quarter of the total required for a ten-lock canal, and only one-tenth of the technical work required for completing the canal on a level plan. Many engineers, both French and English, have carefully studied these various plans, and for the past year have been trying to solve the problem. Their labors have resulted in innumerable projects, more or less practicable, all of which are in favor of different combinations. Some demand the construction of an immense iron chain by which ships can be transported from one ocean to the other, while others propose to move ships up the incline by means of hydraulic power. There is little prospect of the work being resumed.

Russian Students in the Universities of Moscow and St. Petersburg have incurred the displeasure of the Czar. In Moscow six hundred students attending the institutions have been arrested. The disorders at the college were due to the arbitrary action of the director, who prohibited the circulation among the students of the Kreutzer Sonata, a work of Count Tolstoi, the social reformer. In St. Petersburg the university has been closed. The disorders are considered to be a sign of revolutionary plans in connection with the agitation in foreign countries regarding the treatment of political prisoners in Siberia, and the recent letter of Mme. Tschebrikova to the Czar. For weeks back there has been a concerted distribution of patriotic handbills, pamphlets, and proclamations all over Russia, scattered in bundles in the churches, theatres, hotels, and barracks by unseen hands, and utterly defying the efforts of the police to prevent their dissemination. Unhappily, there is no prospect of success for any revolutionary movement in Russia. The people are too ignorant, and too much cowed by prolonged subjection, to support the students in their rising.

Prince Bismarck Received a Genuine Ovation in quitting Berlin for his private residence at Friedrichsruhe on March 29. Before leaving he visited the imperial mausoleum at Charlottenburg, in which the remains of Emperor William I. are interred, and placed a wreath upon the coffin of his old master. Later in the day thousands of persons gathered in the Wilhelmstrasse and along the route to the railway station to witness the final scene in the Bismarck drama. Wearing the uniform of the Cuirassiers, Prince Bismarck left the Palace of the Chancellor at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and entered an open carriage that stood in waiting. As soon as he appeared he was greeted with stormy enthusiasm. The windows of the houses in the vicinity were crowded with spectators. The entire route was a sea of waving handkerchiefs. The crowd was so dense that the ex-Chancellor's horses were compelled to walk the entire distance from the palace to the station. There was a continuous roar of cheering. The whole diplomatic corps, and many distinguished personages were at the station to bid him farewell. Among the last to shake hands with him were Mr. Phelps, the American Minister and General Caprivi, Bismarck's successor.

BRIEF NOTES.

The great revival which has taken place in connection with the Turco-American Mission in Armenia has resulted in the addition of 534 new members to the church.

Rev. D. W. Evans is meeting with great success in Greenfield, Ind. Eighty-eight accessions have been made to the Methodist Protestant Church within five weeks, and persons are turned away for want of room.

Major Whittle has been holding evangelistic services in Greenwich, England. The Rev. Charles Spurgeon, a son of the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and who is minister of a church in that town, reports most beneficent results.

The Forsyth Street Methodist Episcopal Church of New York celebrated its centenary on March 30. There was a reunion of the congregation, at which General Clinton B. Fisk presided. Ex-Governor Lounsbury, of Connecticut, made an address.

Rev. Hiram Hutchins, the venerable pastor of the Bedford Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., preached his farewell sermons on Sunday last. It was the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, and he has been thirty-eight years pastor of the Brooklyn church. He will continue his connection with the church as pastor emeritus.

The Immanuel Baptist Church of Baltimore, Md., has found it necessary to build a new and more commodious house of worship. Under the pastorate of Rev. A. C. Dixon the old building has proved totally inadequate for the accommodation of the church. On the first day after the subscription-books were opened, $25,000 was subscribed. The building is to cost $50,000.

Mr. D. L. Moody holds his closing services in the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, New York, this week. To-night, to-morrow, and Friday he delivers addresses at 7:30 P. M. Last Sunday he preached in the Collegiate Reformed Church on Fifth Avenue and Twenty-Ninth Street, and is holding meetings in that church each day this week at 4 P. M. Tickets of admission may be had at the Y. M. C. A., Fourth Avenue and Twenty-Third Street.

At the annual meeting of the American Tract Society, held in Washington under the Presidency of Justice Strong, it was stated that the total receipts for the year were $304,263—a gain of $25,126 over the previous year. Of the new publications issued in the year a majority were in other languages than the English. Strenuous efforts are being made to provide literature for the immigrants. Grants of tracts averaged 750,000 pages each week, and 154 colporteurs were employed.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker received a letter post-marked New York, March 24, inclosing a $1,000 United States gold note, and one $500 gold note, which the sender desires him to place to the credit of the Conscience Fund. The sender, in his letter, says that years ago he defrauded the Government of quite a large sum of money. Since then the matter has lain heavily upon his conscience, and as he has made a little money he sends it to the Government. The $1,500, he says, is 25 per cent. over and above the amount taken.

Mr. E. P. Telford has commenced a series of two-weeks' services in the De Witt Memorial Church on Rivington Street, New York. The services he has just concluded in the Broome Street Tabernacle were as successful as those previously held in the Oliver Church, though the class of persons reached was so different. Mr. Telford has a marvellous power of adaptation, which was strikingly shown in the services of those two churches. Large numbers are being brought to Christ by the blessing of God on the English evangelist's labors.

A convention of working girls' societies is to be held in New York, April 15-17. Delegations are expected from the associations of New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and Philadelphia. Miss Grace H. Dodge will preside. Day sessions will be held in the Metropolitan Opera House, Broadway and Thirty-ninth Street, and the evening sessions in Cooper Union. The Convention is called to promote a union between the various organizations existing for the benefit of working girls, and the instruction of those proposing to organize such societies. Inquiries may be addressed to the Secretary, 262 Madison Avenue, New York.

THE ROUGH-HEWER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee? for your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of my mouth: and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth." Hos. 6:4, 5. Exhortation Rather than Explanation Needed—Unusual Means Necessary—The Lord's Question—I. The Disappointments of Love—Impressible Hearers—They Give Speedy Promise—Striking Promises—II. The Devices of Mercy—The Hewing of Sickness—Of Bereavement—Of Financial Ruin—Of Stirring Preaching—III. The Declaration of Justice—IV. The Path of Wisdom.

VERY simple is the way of salvation: very plain is the road home. The chapter begins with it: "Come, and let us return unto the Lord." By going away from the Lord, we have lost our privileges, have become wounded, and have lost ourselves. To find all these things again we must go back to the Lord from whom we have wandered. We must cry with the repenting prodigal, "I will arise, and go to my father;" and if we at once begin to carry out the resolve, the way home is not far to seek. Concerning salvation, we need only preach one sermon by way of explanation; but men need ten sermons by way of exhortation. Turn to the right when you come to the cross, and keep straight on, and you will get home, however much you have wandered from the right way.

Alas! too many of our hearers complicate this sweet simplicity. They will not be content to take the plain way; they love more winding paths. They will not drink of the cool, flowing waters, but they look for a mingled cup of their own filling. They are waiting: for what are they waiting? They are looking about: for what are they looking?

They Choose a Thorny Maze

instead of a straight road. The Lord God, when He is resolved to save, sees it needful to use peculiar methods with these, who will not be satisfied to receive the kingdom of heaven as a little child. Because they will not come when they are bidden, the Lord adds blows to His words. Because they will not come when they are gently drawn, they shall be roughly driven. By strong measures and strange methods He will bring back the stray sheep. "Yet doth He devise means, that His banished be not expelled from Him."

In the case before us, love seems to have reached its nonplus. Infinite love and boundless wisdom seem in this instance to be brought to a dead halt. God has been dealing with Judah and Ephraim in ways as wide as the poles asunder: He has been as a moth, which, without noise, frets the garment, and thus He has caused them a grave disquiet in a gentle and secret manner; but as this sufficed not, He has also turned His lion upon them, and by sharp afflictions and terrible visitations, they have been torn and wounded, as when a wild beast rends his prey in pieces. But neither the gentle nor the terrible has availed; they have remained hardened. What can now be tried? The Lord asks the question.

I. First,

The Disappointments of Love.

We have a number of persons about us of whose conversion we have been very hopeful. We know those who for years have presented cheering signs of a gracious work within them, and yet hitherto they have occasioned us grave disappointment. They bud, but they never fruit. Long have they disappointed us, and our fear is that they will disappoint us even to the end.

These people give very speedy promise. We have hardly begun with them; but we feel sanguine of success. We reckon on them at once, but we reckon wrongfully. We have not preached long before we see tears; we have not talked long before we perceive emotions. We feel sure that the Word of God will not return void from them, for they attend carefully, and are moved by the Word as the boughs of the forest are swayed by the wind. It all comes to nothing; but at first the promise hastened as the rod of an almond-tree. Oh these stony-ground hearers, what a fraud they are! These come by scores to the penitent form; but where are they afterward? These throng the inquiry-room, but never unite with the church. They make a great display of emotion; but it is all a flash in the pan. They are very impressible, but they are as impetuous as they are impressible. They never stop to think, but go for a matter blindly. They never look before they leap; they leap, and then they look, and come to the conclusion to jump back again.

These people give striking promises. For the morning cloud was a very striking promise of rain. So have some of you, my dear hearers, greatly cheered us with a fair prospect of your conversion. You made some very plain and decided remarks, and your life for a while appeared happily altered, so that we and others said, "We trust it is a work of grace." But you have deceived us; and, worse than that, you have dealt treacherously with God in this matter; for you have gone back to your old ways, though you know them to be evil. You yourself thought that you were converted, and you openly avowed that you were so, and you determined to be this, that, and the other; and yet you are none of these things. We could stand and weep over you, for we know not what to do next. God Himself seems to inquire of you, "What shall I do unto thee? What shall I do unto thee? Thy goodness is as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away."

Futile Hewing.

These persons give repeated promises. Though they have failed once, they very freely promise again; though they have failed twenty times, yet they confidently resolve anew. They are always beginning, never going on. The work of a minister with such people is endless. What would the hewer of trees do if the tree grew so fast as to fill up the gashes which his axe had made? This would be a case of labor in vain. Such is my work with many of you, my hearers. Practically, I have to deal with you as I began thirty years ago—if indeed you are not worse. If I were the hewer of timber, I should feel pleasure in the woodman's craft; but if each time I had half felled a tree its wound would heal up, I think I should give up in despair. Yet wherein does this differ from my case with you?

No doubt some give us early promise of better things, because they are under temporary excitement, and hardly know what they say; or they are afraid because of prevailing sickness, or fear of death and judgment. They have no sense of sin, but they feel a fear of hell. They have no wish to escape from doing wrong, but they want to save their skins from the punishment which follows upon wrong-doing. When they are ill they not only send for the doctor, but send for the Christian man to come and pray with them: they send for the doctor because they would be freed from pain, and for the other because they would be freed from hell. Every murderer would, of course, escape the gallows if he could; but this desire is no proof of repentance, and no sign of reformation.

II. But I must hasten now to notice, in the second place, with a view to the comfort of some here,

The Devices of Mercy.

"Therefore," says the text—what? Therefore I gave them up? Therefore I left them to themselves? No, not yet; but, "Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of My mouth." To many men whom God has predestinated unto eternal life it has happened that, after they have long resisted the drawings of divine grace, the Lord has dealt with them in quite another fashion, though with the same design.

In this case, according to the text, He hewed them by the prophets; but I have seen the Lord hew men with cutting providences. One man would not think till the Lord laid him on a bed of sickness. Even there he tried to brazen it out; but the sickness grew worse, and a more painful disease followed upon the first. Depression of spirit followed upon weakness of body; and suddenly the curtain seemed to lift, and the man was compelled to look into the eternal future, black and grim. He had always shunned that sight; but now it haunted him. He who would not think nor care about eternal things began to be exceeding thoughtful and careful about such matters. The Lord was hewing him with personal sickness, and it was of no use for him to attempt to stand out against Him.

The Axe of Death.

Or, the hewing has been by bereavements. His wife, who was the delight of his eyes, suddenly sickened and died. A little child followed: the darling of the household was laid upon its mother's coffin. When the second stroke came, the man cried, "O God, I cannot bear this! What wouldst thou have me to do?" But he still held out, and continued impenitent. He had one left—his daughter, the lone star of his life. On a sudden she was taken from him. Then he wept in the bitterness of his spirit, for he was a heart-broken man. In my experience, in dealing with anxious souls, I often meet with men and women who find life through the death of their best beloved. An open grave has been God's doorway to their hearts.

The rough hewing has often taken another shape, and has come in the form of loss and impoverishment. The man was getting on wonderfully in business: everything prospered with him, and his increasing wealth ministered to his presumption. He had an excursion for God's day, a jest for God's Word, a contempt for God's house, and an ill word for God's people. But suddenly there came a turn of the tide, and he was carried down-stream. He struggled against it; but he found himself hastening to the lower reaches of the river of debt, and drawing near to the sea of bankruptcy. He did not see that the hand of God had gone out against him, but cursed his bad luck, and resolved to fight it out. He had to leave his comfortable house, and live in a very reduced fashion, and he felt it much. But he did not yield. He would find a situation: he would earn his living by harder work. But he could not find a situation; he tramped London in vain till his bare feet almost touched the stones of the pavement, and his clothes grew ragged about him. Now, the prospect was grim indeed; for no citizen of the far country would even send him into his fields to feed swine. Then it was that he said, "I will arise and go to my father."

The Hewer in the Pulpit.

With certain others, the Lord does not so much deal with cutting providences as by sharp and convincing ministries. Do you not remember, some of you, before you found the Lord, how quietly you heard your minister, and were comfortable and sleepy under him? But the Lord came forth by that ministry against you, and you were sore wounded by it. You had amended your faults, and rectified your life, and you felt very much at ease. The evil spirit had gone out, and the house was empty, swept and garnished: you were in a very hopeful and happy condition. Do you recollect that dreadful sermon which, like a bombshell, broke through the roof of your house, and set the whole place on fire. You were very angry, but the deed was done.

I have known hearers exclaim, "I will never hear that man again. He makes me miserable. Why not hear him again? Do you want him to flatter you? I have no such commission." O my hearers, do you think that I come here on the Sabbath-day with an anxious heart, aiming at your gratification? Do you think that I play a fiddle that you may dance to it? God forbid that I should so ruin both you and myself! A minister flings his soul away if he spends his energies in the attempt to please his congregation. It may not be we that some of you should be pleased. Sometimes when a man grows outrageously angry with a sermon, he is getting more good than when he retired saying, "What an eloquent discourse!" I say the Lord uses ministries of a cutting kind to make men uneasy in their sins, and cause them to flee to Christ for peace.

Gashes in the Soul.

Beyond this, the Lord uses with many men very cutting operations within their souls. They feel spiritual hewings within, which are most terrible. It is my lot almost every day in the week to meet with those who are pressed beneath the heavy hand of conviction of sin. By long experience of the Lord's hewings, I feel at home where the axe has made gaping gashes, and the chips lie deep about me. But this is awful work in certain instances for the tree seems cut down close by the root. When the Lord puts back a shutter and lets a little light into the dark room of the soul, what filthy and loathsomeness appear where all seemed clean! The Lord does more than that; He takes up the cellar flap and lets the man peer beneath the surface into the dark vault of his heart. What a sink of depravity! What an abyss of deceit! No man's reason would survive a full sight of his own inner self. A cage of unclean birds is nothing to it. The lusts and filthy imaginations, the pride, the wrath, the deceit, the meanness of our natures, who can know them? When we see these hidden evils revealed by the Scriptures we are indeed of the Lord's mouth. I spoke to one the other day who said, "Sir, I am spiritually dead." I answered, "Jesus says, 'He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.'" He replied that he was without hope, and I reminded him that one time we also were without Christ and without hope, and yet we were made nigh. "Alas!" said he, "I have no strength for anything." I bid him remember that it is written, "When we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." "O sir," he said, "you are very foolish to turn things about; but I am lost." "Yes," I said, "and the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." If you will describe yourself as a pretty gentleman, I shall find something in the Bible wherewith to comfort you; but as long as you have only black words and condemning words wherewith to daub yourself, I feel that you are Christ's man, for you describe yourself just as the Scriptures describe those whom sin came to save." Painful as are God's strokes, rejoice to hear His axe going; for those whom the Lord hews to-day He will help to-morrow.

Slain by the Word

II. And now I have to notice with deep solemnity, for a moment only, which is placed in the midst of this revelation of mercy. What doth the Word say? "Thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth." Perhaps address one this morning who has promised fair heaven, but has deceived everybody, and now he has been dealing with him in another way, and he must feel the axe of affliction—if, after all, he remains obstinate, and will not yield to the love of God, his condemnation will be just. If, despite of this, he is determined to be lost, God's judgments will be as clear as the light of the morning, as the flash of lightning in a storm. It is great mercy that has dealt so unmercifully with your temporal estate. It is great love that has taken away from you your love. In any case, you have deserved it, and God's dealings with you are clearly righteous; you cannot question His procedure.

The Declaration of Justice

But if all this be in vain, and you pass into that state unsaved, God's eternal judgment must you will be "as the light that goeth forth." Will you plead for you? Methinks I see you in that last dread day. Yes, here he comes! This is man who knew all about Christ and His precious blood, and salvation by grace through faith! This is he who knew, but did not act as he knew. Who will be his advocate? Here he comes, the man who two Sundays in the year heard the gospel fully preached, and yet closed his ear to it. What excuse has he? Here he comes—the man who was pleaded with, but would not come; who lamented for him? Here he comes, the man who was the subject of many prayers, and many loving pleadings; the man that was so near to the kingdom as to be almost persuaded to be a Christian! What can be said for him? For this man so much was done that the Lord said, "What would have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it?" Mercy itself came to a pause. I said, "What shall I do unto thee? What shall I do unto thee?" Surely, it is now the turn for me to ask the same question. Will it not be the other case of, "He stood speechless; and the Lord said, Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth?" My God! am I speaking to one this morning whose case this will be? V. So, then, I finish with my fourth head, which is not in the text, and yet is the true drift of the text: consider

The Path of Wisdom.

Now all I have said, if you please, but listen to the voice which saith, "Come, let us return unto the Lord!" Why should ye be smitten any more? Will you revolt more and more. Why should you be like the horse or as the mule, which have no understanding, whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle? Why should you be "like dumb driven cattle?" Listen to the voice of wisdom, and be reconciled to God by the death of His Son. "Come, let us return unto the Lord."

This is very simple. So much the better for you. Think of it; nay, practice it. What is the way back to God? The Lord Jesus answers, "I am the way." Come Him to be your door of access to the great God on whom you have aforetime turned your backs. Along the blood-besprinkled way of the living sacrifice return unto the Lord your God.

Not only are the words simple, but they are encouraging. It is put here in a way that ought to encourage you; for others invite you, lest you be afraid to go alone—"Come, and let us return unto the Lord." Let us go together. Here, take my hand: I will go to Jesus as a sinner. All of us who have gone to Him aforetime, will go to Him again with you. Come! Do you hesitate? Come, let us go at once. Let us go together. We will pray for you, and for you; we know the road, and will lead it out to you. You are sitting side by side with your wife this morning, and you are neither of you saved yet. Oh, that the two of you would seize each other's hands and say, "Come and let us return unto the Lord!" And you, brothers and sisters, or you, friends, who know each other well, would it not be a happy thing if, hand in hand, ere you leave this place, you did return unto the Lord? Come! Come! Come! Let us return; why do we linger? Oh that all here present who have not come back to God by Jesus Christ would come in a great company to the Lord!

Does it seem too bold a thing for you to go back to God? Be not dismayed. Take heart because of the word of promise. You cry, "He has torn me: He has wounded me." Yes, that is why you should come to Him, for it is written, "He hath torn, and He will heal us; He hath smitten, and He will bind us up." "Look!" cries the sick man, "see what

A Gash the Surgeon Made!

He has gone away; do you think he will come again to me?" Come again? Of course he will. He must come again. If he made that wound, he had a purpose in it, and he will go through with his design. He has made the open wound because it was necessary to make it, and he has thereby bound himself to attend to you till you are healed. In conviction there is promise of consolation. It is not the nature of our good Lord to cause needless grief. His wounds intend a cure. The Lord who has broken your heart will bind it up. The Lord who has made you tremble at His name will yet make you rejoice in His salvation. He has said it: "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." The Lord will come to you in the grave of despair, and bid you live. Behold His gracious promise, and believe it to be true: "After two days will He revive us: in the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live in His sight." May we all live in His sight by faith in Christ Jesus; and to Him be glory for ever. Amen.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Trophies of United Prayer.—Mr. McLauchlan said: "I knew a mother who had six near and dear friends whom she wanted saved. For twelve months she prayed for them, and put forth every effort, but none of them were converted. Then she went to the prayer-meeting and asked the saints gathered there to join her in her petitions, and within two months all the six were in Christ. She used to say, as she lifted up her heart in thankfulness to God, 'I prayed for them, but I had not faith enough, but these good people in the meeting had enough, and between us we got them in.' Joint effort is a most powerful lever. Two or three of God's people assembled in one place, and with one accord, can obtain from the Lord wonders of grace. I have never known the joint prayers of Christians to fail."

First Sight of a Snowstorm.—Mr. McLauchlan said: "When I was preaching in dear Dr. Bonar's church he told me of a lady who had come from the West Indies. On the day of her arrival a snowstorm came on, and from her window she saw for the first time the earth covered with a white mantle. The trees and shrubs seemed to her the most beautiful thing she had ever seen. With a sharp knife she went down-stairs to cut off one of these frescoed branches; and as she went she thought how it would surprise her West Indian friends when she should display her treasure to their astonished gaze. She did not know, but soon discovered, that the snow would quickly disappear. Great was her grief when she found this to be the case. Our religion must not be like that snow-laden branch, its beauty melting away as soon as we have detached it from the tree of Sabbath observances, but remain white with heaven's light, and capable of being used on every day in the week as well as on Sunday."

A Girl's Dying Courage.—Mrs. Helen Williams relates: "Not long ago I stood by the death-bed of a little girl. From her birth she had been afraid of death. Every fibre of her body and soul recoiled from the thought of it. 'Don't let me die!' she said; 'don't let me die! Hold me fast! Oh, I can't go!' 'Jennie,' I said, 'you have two little brothers in the other world, and there are thousands of tender-hearted people over there who will love you and take care of you.' But she cried out again despairingly, 'Don't let me go! they are strangers over there.' She was a little simple-hearted girl, stronglimbed, fleet of foot, tanned in the face. She was brought up in the country; the fields were her home. In vain we tried to reconcile her to the death which was inevitable. 'Hold me fast!' she cried; 'don't let me go!' But even as she was pleading, her little hands relaxed their clinging hold from my waist, and lifted themselves eagerly aloft, lifted themselves with such straining effort that they lifted the wasted little body from its reclining position among the pillows. Her face was turned upward, but it was her eyes that told the story. They were filled with the light of heavenly recognition. They saw something plainly that we did not see; and they grew brighter and brighter, and her little hand trembled in eagerness to go where strange portals had opened upon her astonished vision. But even in that supreme moment she did not forget to leave a word of comfort for those who would gladly have died in her place. 'Mamma,' she said, 'mamma, they are not strangers; I'm not afraid.' And every instant the light burned more gloriously in her blue eyes, till at last it seemed as if her soul leaped forth upon its radiant waves, and in that moment her trembling form relapsed amongst its billows, and she was gone!"

Saved at the Sewing-Machine.—Mr. Thompson said: "I was preaching in East Kilbride, and one night a woman came into the hall, very anxious about her soul. I and some others spoke to her, but it was of no use, she left the hall unsaved. She came back night after night, but still was unable to find rest in Christ. One day I resolved to visit her at home. I found her busy at her sewing-machine, her feet on the treadle, and her hands guiding the work. There I told her the old, old story, but it seemed as if her eyes were sealed that she could not see, and I had to go away without the pleasure of seeing her born into the kingdom of God. That night she was at the meeting again, but what a change had come over her! Her face shone with a newly acquired joy, and her whole being seemed changed. At the end of the meeting I went to her and inquired, 'Is it all right now?' 'Yes,' she replied. 'Two hours after you left, as I sat at my work, I began to sing that hymn, "Take me as I am," and it seemed as if I were really saying it from my heart, and there and then I gave myself to Christ.'"

Why the Women Sold Drink.—The Speaker also relates: "In a town where seventy women held liquor licenses, deputies went round to them, asking them how they would vote on the question of prohibition. To our surprise, they almost all said they would vote against the liquor traffic, and in favor of prohibition. When asked why they would vote against the trade by which they obtained their livelihood, they replied, 'Oh, that is easily seen. If there were no liquor-shops our husbands would bring home their wages, and we should have no need to open liquor or any other kind of shop; but our husbands drink away all their money, and as we cannot stand by and see our children starve, we are forced to do something; and one poor woman said, 'Yes, it is a bad trade; but, you see, I am too weak to wash or scrub. I can scarcely do anything, but I can stand behind the bar and deal out liquor; and I have to do it, though I know it is a bad business.' Surely, the evils of the drink traffic are abundantly evident, when even those who are making money by it detest it, and would be glad to see it dead. What plea can it have that it should be allowed to exist, and any longer pollute this world with its long train of vice and iniquity?"

Bill Surprises His Wife.—"My Bible-Woman" once came to me and said, 'Bill's wife, the man who was converted at your open-air meeting, has a good story to tell you about him, if you would go down and hear it.' I went, and found her quite ready to tell me all about it. 'Well, you see, sir, it was last Monday, that was washing day, and the baby was teething, and things all seemed to be going wrong. I felt as if I could just sit down and have a good cry. The flour was gone, and I wanted to bake, so I told my boy to call in at the baker's and tell him to bring a stone of flour. The flour seemed long in coming, but at last there was a knock at the door, and when I opened it there stood a man with a sack of flour. "Why," I exclaimed, "I only asked my boy to tell you to send a stone of flour." "Oh, yes," he replied, "but your man came down and ordered a sack and paid for it. Where shall I put it?" "Put it where you like," I said, "there is some mistake; you are sure to be back for it." He put it down by the door, and was not long away, when there came another knock.

Count Herbert Bismarck.

Rev. W. F. Re Qua's Visit to an Indian Hut on the Prairie.

"Oh, he has found out his mistake already," I said, as I rose to answer it; but there stood another man, who said, "I have a ton of coals here for you." "What! a ton of coals for me?" I thought every one was going mad. "Who told you to send them?" "Oh, Bill came down and bought and paid for them." He put them down in the back yard and went away. Then Bill came in smiling, and I said, "Why are you so mysterious? What is all this about?" "Well," he said, "you know I signed the pledge, and now I save here and there; and when I heard you tell the boy to get a stone of flour I thought, Why should my wife not have a sack? And I knew you needed coals, so I thought you should have a ton of them." "And what did you do?" I asked. She blushed, and said, "I could not help it; I just put my arms round Bill's neck and kissed him."

COUNT HERBERT BISMARCK.

(See Portrait.)

WHEN Prince Bismarck resigned his offices recently, the world was informed that the great statesman's reason for retiring from the cares of state was his advanced age, his ill-health, and his urgent need of rest after a long and arduous public career. The world was sceptical. Whatever truth there might be in the facts, they did not believe that they were the cause of his retirement. The suspicion became certainty when it was announced a few days later that Count Herbert Bismarck, the elder son of the Chancellor, had also resigned, and that his resignation had been accepted. Count Herbert held the office corresponding to that which we call Secretary of State. It does not correspond exactly, because in Germany there is no Cabinet, but each member of the Government who is at the head of a department acts independently of his colleagues, and all are under the supervision of the Chancellor. Herbert Bismarck in that office might be supposed to be a representative of his father, and a pledge to Germany that the policy which has raised her to the highest position in Europe would be continued. When, therefore, he resigned his office, it was perceived that the Bismarcks—father and son—had the same reason for retirement. The Count is but little over forty years of age—having been born December 28, 1849. At that age a statesman has usually the best and most useful period of his life before him. The Count's retirement, therefore, implies a quarrel with the Emperor, and an indication that the Bismarckian policy is no longer to be the policy of Germany.

AN INDIAN HUT ON THE PRAIRIE.

(See Illustration.)

THE readers of this journal who have been contributing to the support of the Rev. W. F. Re Qua and his devoted wife will be glad to have this picture. It is an engraving from a photograph taken by Mr. Re Qua during his recent long journey across the Indian Territory to Lone Wolf's camp. It will be remembered that Mr. Re Qua's journey was undertaken at the request of Lone Wolf himself. He had promised Mr. Re Qua that if he would come to his camp he should have land on which to build a school-house, and he would urge his people to attend. Mr. Re Qua accepted, and now there is a comfortable building erected, and Lone Wolf has himself set an example to his people by sending his own son to receive Christian training.

It is impossible to recommend too strongly the claims of this work on the Christian public. Mr. Re Qua and his wife have labored hard and endured privations in living among the Indians, but they are both enthusiastic over the results of their work, and thank God most heartily for the blessing He has given to their labors. Mrs. Re Qua teaches school and helps the Indian girls to learn sewing and reading and writing, while her husband takes long journeys to preach the Gospel to people right in our midst who have never heard it before. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have enabled them to do this, and if the journal had done nothing else, this alone would be an achievement calling for devout thankfulness. We trust our readers will continue to help this self-denying couple who have proved their sincerity and devotion to a work which few would care to undertake, but which so urgently needs to be done. Mr. Re Qua's address is McAlister, Ind. Ter., where all contributions in money or clothing will be most gratefully received.

COALS OF FIRE.

"We love Him because He first loved us." I John 4:19. S. S. Golden Text for April 20.

THERE was a new minister at Deaneville. Many preachers had come and gone, but none had caused so much talk as had Mr. Martin. The little church was crowded at every service, and would soon have to be enlarged, if, indeed, a new one would not have to be built. The members of other churches went to hear Mr. Martin, as was the custom in the little town when a new minister came, but none of them "connected" themselves with his church. They preferred their own churches, and shook their heads when the success of Mr. Martin was mentioned.

"All excitement," said Deacon Fletcher. "It's like a fire of straw. Just see the kind of folks he allows to join. There's Jim Warner, who lives just outside my place. Jim has stolen everything of mine he could lay his hands on. He's got regular sticky fingers. I've had to watch and lock up everything. He's got religion, they say, and is going to join the church. He's not going to hold; it would be a good thing for me if he did. But it's a pretty church that has Jim Warner for one of its members. How would you like to have him in your pew, eh, Squire?"

Squire Lawson shrugged his shoulders, and held up his hands in deprecation. "I've had Jim in the prisoner's pen more than once," he said; "that's as near to me as I ever want Jim to be, thank you."

The ladies of the town were not more friendly to the movement than the Deacon and the Squire. Mrs. Lawson opined that Mr. Martin would have his hands full now Lottie Allen was a regular member. "She is quite a bad character, you know."

"They say Mrs. Cranston is half crazy with joy," said Mrs. Pennel, to whom the Squire's wife was talking. "She says it is the Lord's work. But then she always was a great one for revivals, and liked shouting and excitement. It would look better of her if she attended to her house more, and did not go to so many meetings."

"There's worse people than Mrs. Cranston," said the Squire's wife. "When I was sick she came and sat up with me, and her talk was real good. She prayed with me just like a minister. I wish I was as good as she is. She's been a professor many years, and I should think she feels nervous about the kind of people Mr. Martin is bringing in."

"Well, she mixes with them as if she did no mind. There are very few ladies who would like to sit down with the women that go there now. Have you heard Mr. Martin, Mrs. Lawson?"

"Yes, once. I did not like him at all. He preached as if every one there was living the worst kind of life. And he made so much of faith. I only believed, it did not seem to matter to him what kind of life you led; you might come right in. There'll be a pretty scandal there one of these days."

Mrs. Pennel made no reply; but she wondered Mr. Martin made any remarks about drinking, and the service which Mrs. Lawson attended. There were whispers about the town that Mrs. Lawson like her husband, was too fond of the wine-cup.

The scandal in Mr. Martin's church did not come, in spite of the predictions. The Sunday school was growing, but there were scarcely any well-dressed children in it. A few who did go were taken away, or left of their own accord; for Mr. Martin was apt to come in with a lot of dirty, ill-behaved boys and girls whom he found playing on some vacant lot, and had persuaded to come to school. The girls drew their pretty dresses away from the new-comers, and edged off from them and did not want to go to that school any more.

Gradually the church came to be regarded as kind of lazar-house, or a cave of Engedi, where nearly every member had been in disgrace, or in debt, or in trouble of some kind. Depreciatory references to it were made in the local paper and in society. Squire Lawson made several witty remarks about it in a public speech, and Mrs. Lawson refused an invitation to a wedding and to funeral when she heard that Mr. Martin was to officiate. She said she did not like Mr. Martin, and did not wish to mix with the rabble he would probably bring with him. In fact, among the ladies of Deaneville, Mrs. Lawson was regarded as the leader of the opposition to Mr. Martin and his church.

There was more truth than was generally known in the whispers about Mrs. Lawson. She had drifted almost unconsciously into the habit of drinking. When she was worried or low-spirited she had taken a little of the wine of which her husband had always plenty around, and finding that stimulated her, she had come to use more and more of it, until the habit was fixed. Squire Lawson, with that strange code of ethics that men have, was exasperated when he found his wife in the condition common enough in his own case. He stormed and threatened, but to no purpose, and finally in a fit of passion turned her out of door. She took refuge with her mother, who lived on the tskirts of Deanele, and hoped that her husband would aid for her when his passion had subsided. At the day wore on and no message came. The next day passed, and still no word from the Squire. The whole town must know by this time, but no one came to see her. Mrs. Watson was almost frantic.

On the third day, to her amazement, Mr. Martin called. At another time, and in her own house, she would have refused to see him, but now she was friendless and in such straits that she was glad of his visit. He said he had heard of her trouble, and had come to see if he could be of any service. The words were simple and so evidently sincere, that the wretched wife's heart opened to him and she told him all her story.

"Oh, Mr. Martin, you don't know how hard I tried," she said, in conclusion. "I struggled with my might, but the wine was there, and I could never resist the temptation, no matter how firmly I determined to do so."

"I know," the clergyman said, "my life was for many years a continual battle with temptation until I found the secret of strength. I am not surprised that you fell while you were depending on yourself. Let us pray about it."

After prayer the clergyman spoke to the troubled woman about God's love for sinners, of His sympathy, of the love Christ had manifested for the fallen and the sinful when He was here. He saw she was moved, and judging it best that she should have time for thought, he rose to leave. But before going asked if he should see the Squire on her behalf. "Would you really do that, Mr. Martin?" Mrs. Watson asked, in astonishment. "You do not know all I have said and done against you. Why would you of all others come to my help in my trouble?" "My Master's life and teaching guide me, my dear lady. He taught us to return good for evil. He loved us without regard to our conduct, and I love all who are in sorrow and need, and would help them if I can. It is a Christian's privilege. I will see the Squire for you if you approve, and try to get his trouble removed."

"You are a good man, Mr. Martin," said the woman earnestly. "I never was so sorry over anything as over abusing you. God is very good in sending you to me. I will try to do all you say." Mr. Martin went on his self-imposed errand, meditating much on the best way of approaching the Squire, and with an earnest prayer for help. There was no need of such preparation. He found the house in confusion and the Squire lying helpless and unconscious on his bed. He had been away from home in some adjacent village since the trouble with his wife. He had been drinking heavily to drown his self-reproaches, and in returning he had fallen from his horse. He had been conscious only for a minute since they brought him home, but in that minute he had asked for his wife. Mr. Martin hurried away and brought her to his bedside. The Squire did not know her then, but a few hours later he opened his eyes, grasped her hand, and with the word "Forgive" on his lips he breathed his last.

Mr. Martin had no more devoted member of his church in the years that followed than Mrs. Watson. She seemed untiring in her effort to atone for her former opposition to him. That he should have been her friend when she had no other, that he could have forgiven her ill-treatment and have come to her help in her extremity, never ceased to amaze her. "It must be Christ in him," she used to say. But above all, that through his guidance she had been led by Christ's help to overcome the habit that was ruining her, body and soul, inspired her gratitude and love. The Deaneville people wondered when she joined Mr. Martin's church, and wondered still more at her zeal and at her piety. She could give but one explanation for both mysteries. The servant of Christ had shown her by his own conduct what Christ was. His forgiveness and love were but a type of the forgiveness and love of her Lord. And she loved Him because He first loved her.

The Accident to the "City of Paris."—The Life-Boat Going for Help.

THE ACCIDENT TO THE "CITY OF PARIS." (See Illustration.)

SOME days of intense anxiety were experienced last week by a large number of persons in various parts of the country, who had friends on board the City of Paris. The fastest ocean steamer in existence left New York on March 19, and should have reached Queenstown, at her usual rate of travel, on March 25, but on March 29 no tidings of her had been received. She had on board 785 sacks of mail, 185 saloon, 83 intermediate, and 419 steerage passengers, besides her crew. To the intense relief of the public a cable message was received on March 30, stating that the missing steamship was then being towed into Queenstown by another steamer and three tugs, and all on board were alive and well.

The following vivid description of the voyage and the accident was collated from the narratives of the passengers: At 5:30 o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday, March 25, while the passengers were at dinner, a loud crash was heard, followed by the terrific roar of an explosion, and the great ship quivered from stem to stern. The next moment the thumping of the starboard engine jolted the knives and plates on the table, and before the frightened passengers could leave their seats the steamer listed to the left side, and the order rang out on deck to clear the lifeboats, as is usual in similar circumstances.

Many passengers fell on their knees in prayer. Others hurried to their staterooms to pack up valuables, while the great majority rushed on deck to ascertain the cause of trouble. The officers assured them that there was no immediate danger.

"I soon ascertained," says a passenger, "that the condition of the steamer was very serious. The starboard engine had given way in some unknown part, and the low-pressure cylinder had been smashed into fifty pieces. The iron bulkhead dividing the port and starboard engines had been broken, as were also the injection and water pipe connections, and through a hole in the bottom of the steamer, caused by the disconnected and broken machinery, the water was rushing into both engine-rooms; and, bad as all this state of affairs was for 1,000 souls far out in the Atlantic, it would unquestionably have been much worse but for the splendid daring and presence of mind of the first engineer, who, immediately after the smash, and in the face of the blinding and hissing steam which filled the engine-room, succeeded in shutting off the steam, and thus prevented what might have been a catastrophe for all aboard had the ponderous machinery been permitted to continue working.

"The pumps were now all set going, the boats were cleared, and provisions held ready for each one in case it should become necessary to take to them. Not a soul aboard the steamer went to bed that night, which was beautifully fine, and crowds of passengers remained on deck, while rockets were fired every half hour with a view to attract passing vessels.

"During the whole of the next day no ship of any class was sighted, although some of the officers were especially told off to scan the horizon with glasses. Meanwhile we drifted aimlessly about, now and then setting our jib to keep the steamer's head steady, but it was little use, as the wind was light. Many of the passengers now observed that the hull of the vessel, from the mainmast aft, had settled down in the water several feet, and this was a fresh cause for anxiety, and groups of them were hourly examining the water-line to ascertain if her water draught was increasing.

"Another day dawned, and no signs of assistance being at hand Captain Watkins determined to send one of the lifeboats to the Irish coast to report the disabled condition of the steamer. Having called for volunteers for perilous mission, Chief Officer Frederick Passow offered to take charge of the boat, and he secured the men willing to act as a crew. The boat, being supplied with three days' provisions, as well as colored lights and rockets for signals, left the steamer at a quarter to 2 P. M. on Thursday, March 27, having instructions to intercept any passing vessels, and inform them of the position and disabled state of the City of Paris. At 4:35 P. M. we lost sight of the brave fellows who, in an open boat 220 miles from land, risked their own lives on an errand to procure assistance for us.

"Few passengers expected to see the light of another day, for the big vessel settled steadily as the water gained upon the crew. Nevertheless all on board behaved admirably, placing the utmost confidence in the officers, who, cool and impassive, assured them that if the weather continued fine there would be no difficulty in keeping the steamer afloat until help arrived, as several of the bulkheads were intact. The crew still labored at the pumps in hourly relays. It was discovered that the continual effort sufficed to keep the ship afloat, and prayer-meetings were held in the cabin that the ocean might remain calm until assistance arrived.

"The prayers were answered. At daybreak on Friday morning a steamer was discovered close at hand. She was the Adriatic, of the White Star line, bound from Liverpool to New York, which our boat's crew had sent to our help. Boats were at once sent to the distressed vessel, and the captain of the Adriatic offered to take off the passengers of the City of Paris and carry them to New York. None of the passengers accepted this offer, as they had confidence by this time that the City of Paris would remain afloat. A steamer bound toward Queenstown was sighted. The vessel proved to be the Aldersgate, of London, from New Orleans, laden with cotton, for Liverpool. She at once took the City of Paris in tow. Before noon on Friday the American steamer Ohio, also bound for Queenstown and Liverpool, overtook the City of Paris, and with the help of three tugs, the Irish coast was reached on Sunday, March 30, to the great relief of all on board."

A DECISIVE MOMENT.

A GOSPEL tent was erected last fall at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y. Among those who strolled into it one Sunday afternoon were two young men, one of whom was nominally a Roman Catholic. He went in more out of curiosity, to see what a Protestant service was like, and to oblige the friend who accompanied him than from any other motive. He had never had reason for concern about his personal salvation, and if he had, he would have gone to his priest about it, as he believed that outside the Romish Church there was no salvation. However, he enjoyed the service, noted the simplicity and earnestness of the preacher, and liked the custom of the congregation joining in the singing. He went again and again to the tent, and was each time more impressed with the new views of personal religion he heard there. He began to be uneasy about himself and less confident of his safety for eternity. He heard that except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of God, and he knew that he had not experienced any change so radical as that. The young man began to think, and the more he thought, the more dissatisfied with his state he became. His friend, who had taken him to the tent, invited him to attend a meeting at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association. There again he heard the same story. He must pass into a new state of life to become a child of God. He wondered what it could be, but looking around at the bright, eager faces, he could see many who seemed to have realized the change by experience. His discontent with his former life led him to wish for it for himself. So, when nearly the close of the meeting, an invitation was tendered to any present who wished to become Christians, and who would raise their hands, his hand went up. He fully appreciated the significance of what he was doing, and was aware that it might involve separation from his church, but he wanted peace. It was the act of a man publicly declaring himself a seeker after Christ, and he so understood it. The act was decisive, and in that moment peace came. Later on, he learned the way of God more perfectly, and understood what faith meant, and how, through Christ alone, salvation might be had; but it was in the moment of that public declaration that he started in the Divine life. When he was received a few Sundays ago into a Presbyterian Church, he persisted in stating that, dark as his mind was when he raised his hand, he received in that moment the germ of the endless life and became a new creature in Christ Jesus.

A VOW AT A GRAVE.

AN affecting scene was witnessed a few days ago in a cemetery near New York. A funeral procession wended its way through the winding paths to a newly opened grave. It was only a child's funeral, such as may be seen any day. Persons who saw it pass, doubtless gave it no second thought. Children are born and die every day. It is the common lot. And this was little more than an infant. But little more than one year had passed since the little form, which was being carried to the tomb had entered the world. Yet how much it represented to the poor mother who followed it! The light and joy of the home were carried out of it when the little casket was brought out, and put in the hearse. The daily and hourly cares of the mother, which the little one's presence had brought, were over. The delightful occupations associated with the tiny dependent frame were gone, and the sweet lisps of "Mamma," and the merry laughter, were hushed. It seemed as if the very life of the household had stopped, too. Oh, yes, it was only a child who was going to the grave, but who can tell how much of the mother's life was being buried in that grave? The simple ceremonies were soon performed, and the earth was falling on the coffin lid, when the mother stepped forward. Falling on her knees at the edge of the grave she raised her eyes to heaven, and said, solemnly: "Lord Jesus, I give myself to thee, here and now." It was a strange scene. Grief was natural. Resentment and rebellion against God are all too common in such circumstances, but this was novel. Whether the mother had recognized in the loss of her child a call to repentance and consecration is not known. What struggle she may have endured before she could thus kiss the hand that had stricken her, no one can tell. Those who saw her say that a light came on her upturned face as she registered her vow. It was evidently a very solemn thing to her, as of one who plights her troth, with the consciousness that the words transform her future life. She was no longer her own, but belonged to Him, who had died for her, and who in mercy had afflicted her.

A MINISTER'S EXAMPLE.

How much harm a minister may unconsciously do by his example was shown in a confession made by the Rev. M. Guy Pearce, who is now an earnest advocate of total abstinence by word and conduct. He said: "There was a man in my congregation who was most intellectual, brilliant, and polished. I often sat at his table, entertained by the best of company. Every one present took his glass of wine, and surely there could be no harm in doing so in such company, I thought. One day I received a card at my house. It had evidently been written in a hurry, and bore the address of my friend, and these words, 'Come round and see father.' I went at once, and when shown into the room where the lady of the house was, I was surprised at her appearance. She stood with her eyes all ablaze, her lips tightly closed, and her face ghastly pallid; except for the dark circles under her eyes; and her first words were uttered in agonized tones, 'He has broken my heart.' Then it flashed upon me all at once that it was a case of drink. 'Where is he?' I asked. I entered the room to which she directed me and saw him sitting partially dressed before the fire. I went up to him and said, 'Man, you have broken your wife's heart,' and I shook him in my anger. Then he shook my hand off, and with a horrible hiccough, said, 'Wife, children, business, character, what are they to me? Give me my drink.' And I had sat at this man's table and given him my example. That is why it is unsafe to touch this drink. When I went home I said to my wife, 'Look here, I shall never again touch a glass of wine in any man's house. There is something awful in it, and after this when I want a glass of wine I shall take it at home.' And from that time, when offered wine, I turned my glass upside down, and excused myself, saying, 'Oh, I am a moderate drinker, and never take it except at home.' I was still blind to the evident teaching of the facts, which plainly showed that I should altogether give up strong drink, which was doing such deadly havoc on all sides, and in every grade of society, from the laborer in the saloon to the millionaire in his well-appointed dining-room."

PROTECTION FOR A MISSIONARY.

IN one district of the island of Madagascar, to which the Gospel had not yet penetrated, lived a large and powerful tribe, who, about twelve years ago, pleaded that a white teacher might be sent among them. A young man was despatched to see if he could open up the way for missionary effort. On his journey he came to a village where the people were having a great drink. Intoxicating liquor has penetrated there in its worst and vilest form, and is killing the people by hundreds. In this particular village all the people were drunk with the exception of the chief. When night set in those of the intoxicated men who could walk when staggering about among the houses which are made entirely of wood, bearing in their hands wisps of lighted straw, and often whole villages are set on fire by this culpable negligence, the unfortunate inhabitants perishing in the flames. This young man lay in bed watching the lights flit out and in among the huts, until at last they and he sunk to repose. About the middle of the night he was awakened by a man and woman talking at the outside of his tent. He arose, and going out found the old chief of the village and his wife. "Oh," said the chief, as he caught sight of him, "you just go back and take your rest. I was afraid that some of the men when under the influence of drink might harm you. That is why we are here to guard you." And they remained until the morning to look after the missionary. So the Lord raises up protectors for His people in the most unlikely places, and those who go on His service go not on their own charges.

A PUGILIST'S PROMISE.

IN a mission hall in London a stalwart, broad-shouldered man was giving an earnest Gospel address. One of his hearers had known him in other times when he was a prize-fighter, and was curious to learn what had caused the man to quit the prize-ring for the pulpit. After the meeting he went to the speaker and asked the question. The evangelist said: "That is soon told, sir. In my old fighting days I was sitting in a saloon writing a challenge for a man to come and fight me for $200. I was more than half drunk, when my little niece pushed open the door and said, 'Uncle, mother is dying, and she wishes you to come.' The fellows wanted to push her away, but I would not let them. 'Come here,' I said. She stood by my side, and I felt her hot tears falling on my hand. I could not stand that; so, saying to my companions that I would be with them again in a short time, I went to my sister's house, and there I found her dying. She took me by the hand and said, 'Will you meet me in heaven?' 'Oh yes,' I replied, 'I'll meet you there.' She was my sister, and dying, so I said it to please her, and I tried to get my hand away; but she held it, and I did not care to hurt her, you know. She went into a kind of stupor, and I could not force my hand away. Then she awoke, and looking at me, said, 'Kiss me.' I did so. 'Now, will you meet me in heaven?' 'Oh yes,' I said. 'But don't say it in that careless way. Promise me from your heart,' and I promised her. She let go my hand, and I went back to the saloon. But I said to myself, 'The saloon is not the way to heaven, and I have promised to go there,' so I left it. A few days afterward I was converted to God, and became a Methodist. God uses all kinds of means to call men to Himself, and that is the kind He used to call me."

WILD MARCH MUSIC,

Gentle and sweet melodies, sacred and secular songs, and all other kinds of music are in our thousands of books and millions of sheet music pieces!

YOUNG PLAYERS' POPULAR COLLECTION (Pap. $1. Bds. $1.25) New, bright and easy. 143 Piano Pieces.

WHITNEY'S ORGAN ALBUM (Bds. $2. Cloth $2.50.) By S. B. Whitney. 32 fine Organ pieces for Manual and Pedal, by 20 distinguished composers.

A helpful, useful friend to pupil and teacher is MASON'S PIANO-FORTE TECHNICS ($2.50) by Wm. Mason and W. S. B. Matthews. This admirable system of scales, arpeggios and all other needed technical exercises, with good directions, holds a high place in the esteem of thorough teachers, and should be everywhere used.

Our thoroughly good, genial and practical School Music Books are widely known and used. Do you use them?

SONG MANUAL Book 1, Primary, (30 cts., $3 doz.); Book 2, Medium, (40 cts., $4.20 doz.); Book 3, Higher Classes, (50 cts., $4.80 doz.) by L. O. Emerson, is his last and best book, and a rare good book for schools.

MOTION SONGS (25 cts., $2.28 doz.) by Mrs. Boardman, is a delight to teachers and children. Any book mailed promptly for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 367 Broadway, New York.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY

$150 to $1500 ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 1877

PRICE $180 They Lead the World! Sent for trial in your own home. ABSOLUTELY PERFECT Guaranteed Six Years. DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO! Cat. Free. ORGANS $35 to $500

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address on a postal for free sample copy of Phrenological Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "That Boy of Mine, and What to do with Him." Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 771 Broadway, N. Y.

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla
COMPOUND EXTRACT
TRADE MARK
100 Doses One Dollar

Hood's Sarsaparilla has by its peculiar merit its wonderful cures for the most stubborn blood purifier, strengthening the system, curing skin diseases, rheumatism, etc. Be sure to Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself. Hood's Sarsaparilla sold by druggists. $1. for $5. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

SCOTT'S EMULSION
Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphite of Lime and Soda

is endorsed and prescribed by leading physicians because both the Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites are the recognized agents in the cure of Consumption. It is as palatable as milk.

Scott's Emulsion is a perfect Emulsion. It is a wonderful Flesh Producer. It is the Best Remedy for CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, Bronchitis, Wasting Diseases, Chronic Coughs and Cold. Ask for Scott's Emulsion and take no other.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTEY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.

METAL CEILING
BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores, and Residences.
H. S. NORTHPROP,
18 Rose Street, New York

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerve
VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA
Appetizing--Easily Digested
Ask your Grocer for it, take no other.

MUSIC SALE To reduce stock of music will send by post-paid pieces full sheet music size, including songs, waltzes, quadrilles (with calls), a.c., by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, &c., for 20c. DOWN W. McGINTY and 100 songs, words and music. Satisfaction given or money refunded. Hathaway, 339 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S Catalog of new books, Target, by L. A. $2.50. Quick sale. Also, Home & Hen by T. L. Cuyler, 129,000 sold. Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT.

BRECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ill. BRECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

A LAWYER CONVERTED.

A recent service conducted by Mayor tie, he related the following incident: lawyer once came into one of our meet- He remained to the close, and came to the following two meetings. On st of these nights I was explaining and Repentance, showing how many e go wrong by thinking they must be feeling first, ignoring the fact that are disobeying Scripture, and looking f instead of Christ. I told them the of a boy who had left his home. His was dead, but he refused to stay and rt his widowed mother, having rel to see the world. He came home one and when he entered the house disd his mother on her knees praying r son, and telling God how he was ing her heart. The sight touched He saw how selfish and sinful he had and throwing himself beside his r, exclaimed, 'Oh, mother, pray for at your Saviour may be my Saviour. It was the sight of her whom he had red, and who still loved him, that ht him to a sense of his guilt, and it is ight of Him whom the sinner has ed that brings the tears of repen- to the eyes of the guilty one. As I eaking, the lawyer, with a laugh, l his face into a corner. I thought he en drinking, but he undeceived me. end of the meeting he jumped up face radiant with joy, and said, 'Fif- ears ago I was under conviction of sin. ther was a Methodist minister, and I I could get repentance. When I I made up my mind that I was one of shut out. I kept away from churches een years, saying I was an Atheist. I came into this meeting I know not, at word was just what I wanted, and at I have looked away from self to , I have found Him to be my Saviour.' lawyer became a Sabbath School su- ndent, and an earnest Christian r."

STREET PREACHER INTERRUPTED.

UNG college student, anxious to serve ster, went out to preach in one of the districts of London. A crowd soon ed, and among them were an infidel one of the colporteur which Mr. son's church sends out to sell Bibles in eets. The young preacher delivered nest discourse, when suddenly the in- terrupted him with a remark in which was some wit and much profanity. He gathering laughed, and the infidel ousaged to proceed. After he had orth for a time in his own style den- ing the Bible as false, and so on, the er was so upset that it was necessary colporteur to stand forward. "Did er know of a thief who liked a police-?" he asked the man who was inter- ing the service. "No, yer fool, no lid you!" was the reply. "We are properly matched, then; we shall get l now," said the colporteur. "But why he thief like a policeman?" he went "It is because he has broken the law. that is just like you," he added, look- ll at his man. "You don't like the ecause you have broken God's law." n went on to quote how men love ss rather than light, because their e are evil; the result being that the dis- was silenced, and on parting accepted , and shook hands.

AGASY CHIEFS RECONCILED.

RANGE custom of ratifying a peace rided by Miss Gilpin, a missionary in ascar. She says: "When Mr. Shaw eathed from the prison into which the t threw him when they invaded Mada- , he at once resolved to re-commence ors, but instead of returning to Tama- he Malagasy capital, where he might een a source of irritation to the French, ted to go south to some savage islands the Gospel had, up to that time, never preached. He had not been long with his wife and daughter when a oke out between three of the tribes. as his opportunity. He could not to them, but he gathered in all the ed of all the parties, and tending them lly, cured them of their wounds and hem back to their tribes. Soon the chiefs heard of it, and began to ask, 'What kind of man is this that lives among us?' They came to enquire and were told, 'I have come to teach you about Jesus Christ.' 'Well,' said they, 'you shall teach us.' 'But,' Mr. Shaw replied, 'how can I teach you while you are fighting?' The chiefs saw the reasonableness of this, and soon, through the mediation of Mr. Shaw, they ar- ranged a peace. The chiefs met together and swore friendship. Each pricked his arm with a knife and let the blood trickle into one cup, from which each in turn drank in confirmation of their vow."

SOLID SILVER SPOONS—FREE.

The firm who make the above offer in another part of this paper are perfectly reliable, and the premium box which they send out contains not only all the Sweet Home Soap and fine Toilet Soaps and the list of miscellaneous articles contained in the advertisement, but also a set of Solid Silver Spoons. Subscribers who write to them are perfectly safe in sending $6 dollars with the order, and this is the quickest and best way (on account of the extra present that is given for cash) to get goods from Messrs J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., who certainly exhibit an enterprise and liberal- ity in their desire to introduce their Soaps, which is almost unheard of.

CARPETS.

We invite inspection to our NEW SPRING STYLES.

Many exclusive patterns in novel effects in ROYAL WILTONS, WILTON VELVETS, MOQUETTES BODY AND TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, 3-PLYS, AND EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.

At Positive Bargains UPHOLSTERY GOODS.

Our assortment of fine Satin Damasks, Spun and Raw Silk Tapestries, Silk and Mohair Plushes was never so complete.

MATTINGS

Japanese and China Straw Mattings, OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION. White and Red Check Mattings FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS. Also fine seamless Japanese Mattings (Ningpoo Warps) for decorative purposes. A complete line of

FURNITURE,

Our own upholstery, at moderate prices. Agents for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.

We make a specialty of furnishing complete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.,

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad Absorbs all impurities from the blood. Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad Cures Biliousness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhoea, Malaria, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, &c.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Smallpox, Yellow, Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers.

Write for pamphlet, containing full instructions.

HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO., 81 John St., N. Y.

For a DISORDERED LIVER Try BEECHAM'S PILLS. 25cts. a Box. OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

RUPTURE CURED

with our Improved Elastic Truss worn with ease night and day, retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet. IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York.

SHORTHAND. Private instruction by practical ver- batim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

Not True

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearlina." IT'S FALSE—Pearlina is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearlina, the honest thing to do is—send it back.

JAMES PYLE, New York.

BOVININE, THE PERFECT NUTRIENT, is easy of digestion. Rapid in assimilation. Quick to Restore and Strengthen the Weak, the convalescent and the overworked. BOVININE largely increases the number of red blood corpuscles, often 8% a week. Expands the muscular activity, nourishes the vital organs, and, in the estimation of the medical profession, is the greatest flesh-producer now in use.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S

ROSES AND SEEDS

ING VINES, New Hardy FLOWERING PLANTS, New Summer FLOWERING BULBS. ALL THE FINEST NEW ROSES, New CHRYSANTHEMUMS, GLADIOLUS, TUBE- ROSES, New MOON FLOWERS, New and Rare FLOWER & VEGETABLE SEEDS. New GRAPES. Satisfaction guaranteed. OUR NEW GUIDE, 126 pp., handsomely illustrated. Write for it FREE. It will pay you to see it before buying. Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Rose Growers and Seedsmen, West Grove, Pa.

SCOTT'S FLOWERS

41 Years' Experience in growing our strong and reliable ROSES. Grand specialties in PLANTS, BULBS, & FLOWER SEEDS of extra choice quality. Rare Novelties of great beauty. Handsomely illustrated Catalogue for 1890, with a lovely Colored Plate of Beautiful New Roses sent FREE to any address. Send for it now. ROBERT SCOTT & SON, Philadelphia, Pa.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

EGGLESTON'S ELASTIC TRUSS THIS NEW Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Spring in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a per- son does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

The Great CHURCH LIGHT Frink's Patent Reflectors for Gas, Oil, or Electric give the most powerful, softest, cheapest, and best light known for Churches, Stores, Banks, The- atres, Depots, etc. New and ele- gant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches & the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations. I. P. FRINK, 651 Pearl St., N. Y.

SEATINGS AND FURNISHINGS for Churches, Halls, Sunday Schools, &c. Send for Catalogues, mentioning this paper. FORSYTHE & CO., 135 Degraw St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ideal Felt Tooth Polisher.

ENDORSED BY LEADING DENTISTS. NON-IRRITATING TO GUMS OR ENAMEL FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS

BAILEY'S REFLECTORS. Compound light-spreading sil- ver-plated Corrugated Glass. A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by Eck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Com- fortable. Successful where all Remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOX, only, 853 Br'dway, New York. Write for book of proofs FREE.

“MY FATHER KNOWETH.”

Precious thought, my Father knoweth,
In His love I rest;
For whate'er my Father doeth
Must be always best.
Well I know the heart that planneth
Nought but good for me;
Joy and sorrow interwoven,
Love in all I see.

Precious thought, my Father knoweth,
Careth for His child;
Bids me nestle closer to Him,
When the storms beat wild,
Though my earthly hopes are shattered,
And the teardrop fall,
Yet He is Himself my solace,
Yea, my “all in all.”

Sweet to tell Him all He knoweth,
Roll on Him the care,
Cast upon Himself the burden
That I cannot bear,
Then without a care oppressing,
Simply to lie still,
Giving thanks to Him for all things,
Since it is His will.

Oh, to trust Him then more fully!
Just to simply move
In the conscious calm enjoyment
Of the Father's love,
Knowing that life's chequered pathway
Leadeth to His rest,
Satisfied the way He taketh
Must be always best.

L. W.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

All derangements of the kidneys and liver, pains in the back, tired feelings, and weakness, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine is purely vegetable. It is sold by all druggists.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressing, need-ed, and can be mailed to the address of BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken with pleasure by delicate persons and children, who, after using it, are very fond of it. It assimilates with the food, increases the flesh and appetite, builds up the nervous system, restores energy to mind and body, creates new, rich, and pure blood,—in fact, rejuvenates the whole system.

FLESH, NERVE, BLOOD, BRAIN.

This preparation is far superior to all other preparations of Cod-liver Oil. It has many imitators, but no equals. The results following its use are its best recommendations. Be sure, as you value your health, and get the genuine. Manufactured only by Dr. A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

WANTED, AGENTS

Introduction by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. One agent writes, “I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 80 orders.” I will pay $25 towards Dr. Talmage's new church, in the name of the agent, for every new agent hired from this advertisement, who sells 50 copies of the “Legacy.” Usual profits to the agent. Address, W. J. HOLLAND, 130 Nassau Street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

A Wealthy Manufacturing Co. Gives Gratis Six Solid Silver Spoons.

Our object in making the following liberal proposal is that you may become one of our permanent patrons and always use our Family Soap, “Sweet Home,” and fine Toilet Articles, and also by speaking to your friends in praise of the fine quality and high character of our Soaps, secure them also as regular patrons for our goods.

Our Soaps are the purest, best, and most satisfactory, whether made in this country or Europe; everyone who uses them once becomes a permanent customer. We propose a new departure in the soap trade and will sell direct from our factory to the consumer, spending the money usually allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, in handsome and valuable presents to those who order at once. Our goods are made for the select family trade and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial we accompany each case with many useful and valuable presents.

Wanted, a few reliable MEN and WOMEN to show the premiums, advertise, and recommend our soap and toilet articles in their respective neighborhoods; this is a pleasant and very profitable employment. We pay cash for the service.

Send us your name on a postal card and we will ship you on terms given below, a Box containing all of the following articles:

- ONE HUNDRED CAKES “Sweet Home” Family Soap, enough to last a family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes and has no superior.
- SIX BOXES BORAXINE.
- One-Fourth Dozen Modjeska Complex-ion Soap.
- One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.
- One-Fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.
- One-Fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.
- One-Fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.
- One-Fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.
- One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream.
- Soothing, Healing, Beautifies the Skin, Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.
- The above are articles of our own manufacture which we take great pride in presenting to the readers of this paper.
- One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
- One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder (very best).
- One Arabesque Mat.
- One Glove Buttoner.
- One Package “Steadfast” Pins.
- One Spool Black Silk Thread.
- One Gentleman's Handkerchief, Large.
- Fourteen Patent Transfer Patterns for stamping and embroidering table linen, toilet mats, towels, tidies, etc.,
- One Lady's Handkerchief.
- One Child's Lettered Handkerchief.
- One Wall Match Safe. (can be seen at night.)
- One Package Assorted Scrap Pictures.
- Two Celluloid Collar Buttons, (Patented).
- Twenty-three Pictures of the Presidents of the U. S.

In addition to all of the above articles we place in each box ONE ALBUM containing pictures of the following celebrities:

- Wm. E. Gladstone, General Scott, Bismarck, Thomas Edison, Daniel Webster, Benj. F. Morse, J. G. Whittier, Jos. Jefferson, Geo. Bancroft, Benj. Franklin, Abraham Lincoln, H. M. Stanley, Ulysses S. Grant, Oliver Perry, Robert E. Lee, Goethe, Gen. Sheridan, Schiller, Thos. Carlyle, Alex. Hamilton, Commodore Farragut, John H. Payne, “Stonewall” Jackson, Etc., Etc., Etc.

A SPECIAL OFFER TO THE READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

We hereby promise that in addition to all the articles named above, to include in every box purchased by subscribers, who will agree to recommend “Sweet Home” Soap to two or more friends, ONE SET (SIX) SOLID SILVER TEASPOONS, PLAIN PATTERN—such as your grandmother used, very rich and elegant, (will Last a Life Time).

We know the great value of our articles, as we make them ourselves, and are willing to put them to the severest kind of a test, hence will ship the box on thirty days' trial, and if you are not fully satisfied with it send us word and we will remove it at our own expense.

Our Price for the Great “Sweet Home” Box is Only Six Dollars.

Write your name and address plainly on a postal card, mail same to us, and a case of these goods will be shipped to you on thirty days' trial.

J. D. LARKIN & CO. Factories:—Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Streets, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Some people prefer to send cash with order; we do not ask it, but in such cases we place one Solid Silver Sugar Spoon in the box (in addition to all the other extras) and ship the same day the order is received; all other orders being shipped in their regular turn.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes can be bought free. Write to Geo. A. Scott, (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

Rev. T. DeWITT TALMAGE'S GATHERED GEMS

containing 30 of his best Sermons and a full History of his Life. 130 pages, 20 full-page illustrations, including a splendid portrait of Talmage. Low price and quick sales is my motto. Price, bound in cloth $1.50; half Russia, $2.00. 50 per cent discount to live agents. Send 50 cts. for Prospectus and package of Circulars, and go to work. Address

J. B. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

A WHOLE PRINTING OUTFIT, COMPLETE AND PRACTICAL. Just as shown in cut. 3 Alpha sets of neat Type. Bottle of Indelible Ink, Pad, Trimmers, in neat case with catalogue and directions “HOW TO BE A PRINTER.” Sold up any sale, prints cards, paper, envelopes, etc., made live. Worth 50c. The best gift for young people. Postpaid only 25c. 2 for 50c, 5 for $1. Agents wanted. Ingersoll & Bro., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

DRESS GOODS.

We shall have the following specialties on sale this week in our salesroom, in the basement. Entrance through the store or direct from Broadway.

One line of Imported Pattern Dresses, containing 6 yards of fine Trimmed Cloth and 4 yards of silk and white Tamise Plaid, in eight new shades, $6.75 each.

42-inch all wool Tennis Stripes and Plaids at 50 cents per yard.

Plain Colored Costume Cloths, 44 inches wide, at 65 cents per yard.

40-inch all wool black and white Shepherd Checks, at 45 cents per yard.

Homespun and Worsted Stripes, 44 inches wide, at 75 cents per yard.

James McCreery & Co.
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

DR. JAEGER'S Sanitary Woolen System Company

827 & 829 Broadway, New York

HERMANN SCHARFFER, President; ERNEST BERNHARDT, Vice-President

Note our Trade Mark closely!
BEWARE OF IMITATION
We ask attention to our Complete Assortment

SPRING AND SUMMER

UNDERWEAR

The genuine sanitary goods are manufactured under the supervision of Dr. Jaeger, and sold by the above-named Company and their authorized agents only.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Speciality

Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company

827 and 829 Broadway, New York

LADY WANTED SALARY $85 to $100 per week. (LADIES $1.50 SPECIALTY FIRM) For our business in each locality. Intelligence and energy, but no experience, necessary. Also good MAID SECTION: Salary $100. GAY BROS. & CO. Capital $500,000—credit High, 84 Hende St., N. Y.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

HEAL ALL. Ointment for Burns, Scalds, Bruises, and Sores of all kinds. Pain away in one minute. Cures quickly and no scar. Box sent post-paid for 25 cents in stamps. JUSTICE, 323 Central Ave., Newark.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 16. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF JULES SIMON, DAVID DALE, AND JOHN BURNETT, DELEGATES TO THE BERLIN LABOR CONFERENCE.

MYERS AND SELLERS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER. By Mrs. M. Baxter. News from New Books: A Short-Weight Candidate, Etc.

THE NECESSITY OF THE SECOND ADVENT. By

Rev. E. R. Craven, D. D.

WILL IT LIFT? By Rev. J. Jackson Wray. (Continued.)

A SUMMARY OF THE EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

SPIRITED PRAYER-MEETINGS. By Dr. Talmage.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER: A Peculiarity

in Citizenship—The Unknown Relatives of a Foundling—The Citation of an Ancient Authority, Etc.

WARNING AND REWARD. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE PROF. DELITZSCH.

VIEW OF RIO JANEIRO FROM THE BAY.

THE TRAINING OF A WAIF: A Story of the S. S.

Golden Text. (With Illustration.)

A Sailor Converted in a Thunderstorm—An Ostracised

Convert—A Tutor Taught—A Promise Evaded, Etc.

MR. DAVID DALE.

MONS. JULES SIMON.

MR. JOHN BURNETT.

The Berlin Labor Conference—Three Delegates—The Arrival of Delegates at the Palace.

THE BERLIN LABOR CONFERENCE.

The Significance of the Meeting—The Gathering of the Delegates on March 15—The Nations Represented—Baron Von Berlepsch's Inaugural Address—The Work of the Conference—The Final Sitting—A German Statesman's View of It—The Famous French Delegate—Prince Bismarck's Palace, Where the Conference Met.

THE Berlin Conference for the amelioration of the condition of workingmen, which was summoned by the Emperor of Germany, and has just concluded its labors, has a significance far above its immediate results. It was inevitable that its decisions should have no enactive force, but should be chiefly of an advisory character. It will remain for the various countries represented in the Conference to take the conclusions arrived at into consideration, and adopt such of them as may commend themselves to the men in power. It is in the Recognition of Grievances,

which the assembling of the Conference implies, that its greatest significance lies. Too long the monarchs and statesmen of Europe have given their attention to the wealthy and powerful classes, to the founding of colonies and the extension of trade, to international jealousies and quarrels, and have paid no attention to the wrongs and the miseries of the workingman. The young Emperor of Germany deserves all honor for the initiative he has taken in this new departure. His motive may have been the selfish one of cutting the ground from under the feet of the Socialists, who are the enemies of his throne; but the fact of his showing concern for the welfare of the laborer, whatever may have been his motive, deserves credit, and we heartily hope that his example may be followed by other personages of exalted station.

Legislation Needed.

The doctrines of political and social economy, the doctrines that rule the world in our day, the doctrines of the devil, are opposed to any government interference with the relation between employers and employed. The law of supply and demand, it is contended, will regulate all that, and it does. It regulates it so that the employer can use the human material as he uses inanimate material, to build up a great fortune, and with no more regard for the one than the other. The poor we have always with us, and their number grows with increasing rapidity. During this century there has been a greater competition for employment than in any previous time; and where there is competition the wages and rewards of the employees must diminish. The employer may demand what is unjust, and tell his employee that if he does not accede to it there are others ready to take his place who will accede, and the employee knows it is so. He toils and suffers, and sees his condition and that of his fellows tending swiftly downward until he wonders whether his children will be able, by the utmost industry and frugality, to keep themselves from starvation. Laws are needed in every land to prevent oppression, to protect the weak and poor from the cruel selfishness and rapacity of the rich and the strong. Nowhere are there such laws in active operation, because it is the class which needs to be restrained which makes the laws. It is, therefore, a happy augury for a better time when so powerful a monarch as the Emperor of Germany invites other nations to send representatives to confer on the condition of the poor, and to suggest measures for their benefit. It establishes a precedent, and it encourages the hope that we are on the eve of a better time, when justice shall be enforced, and men shall not only have employment, but enjoy a fair share of the results of their labor.

The Meeting of The Conference took place on March 15, in the famous room in Prince Bismarck's palace, in which the Berlin Conference met in 1878 to compel Russia to disgorge the prey she had wrested from Turkey. The illustration on the first page represents the arrival of the delegates, and with that picture we give portraits of three prominent members of the Conference. An immense crowd outside of the palace watched the arrivals in silence. There was no demonstration of any kind, except slight cheering when the British members passed through the lines kept by the police. About fifty delegates in all were present, representing the Governments of Germany, England, France, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Luxemburg, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Portugal. Baron Von Berlepsch received them for the Emperor, and in the course of his opening address said that, in the view of the Emperor, the labor question demanded the attention of all civilized nations, since the peace between the different classes of the populations appeared to be imperilled by the industrial competition. To seek a solution of this question was not only a duty of humanity, but also the duty of statesmen, upon whose sagacity the task devolved of providing for the welfare of the citizens, and preserving to them the inestimable blessings arising from centuries of Christian civilization. All the nations of Europe were in a similar situation, hence an attempt was justifiable to bring about an agreement between the Governments in order to meet their common dangers, by combined preventive measures. In conclusion he expressed his conviction that the labors of the Conference would have a beneficial influence throughout Europe.

The official programme of the subjects to be considered, comprised among others the regulation of mine work with reference to the prohibition of the labor of women and children underground; the shortening of shifts in particularly unhealthy mines; the ensuring of a regular output of coal by subjecting the working of mines to international rules; the regulation of Sunday labor, and also the regulation of the labor of children and females. They were questions having no political significance, and they touched but the fringe of the great question, but they were the formal adoption of a principle of interference in labor questions, which cannot but extend until more vital questions are decided. The delegates to the Conference were requested in the Emperor's name to preserve absolute secrecy regarding the debates of that body until the official stenographic report was published at the close of the Conference. It was, however, learned day by day what subject had occupied the meetings, and in brief the decision arrived at.

The Work of the Conference commenced with the appointment of three committees. The first, on Work in the Mines, presided over by Herr Hanchecorne, head of the Berlin Mining Academy. The second, on Sunday Labor, having for its president, Bishop Kopp, and for its vice-president the Danish delegate, Tietgen. The third committee on the Labor of Women and Children, the president of which was the distinguished French delegate, Jules Simon, with the Hungarian delegate, Schnierer, as vice-president. The greater part of the work was done in these committees, but six plenary meetings of the Conference were held to receive the reports of the committees, and decide on their acceptance or rejection. Among the technical decisions of the Conference were: That ten hours labor should constitute the maximum day for youths between fourteen and sixteen years of age; that children under twelve ought to be excluded from work in factories. Only males over fourteen years of age shall be employed in mines; female labor underground shall not be allowed; children's labor in factories must depend upon their completion of the prescribed school course; the employment at night of persons under fourteen years of age is prohibited, or, where permitted, only six hours' labor out of twenty-four, with a half-hour interval, shall be required; the employment of children in unhealthy or dangerous trades is prohibited; Sunday shall be a day of rest in all employments except those in which work is necessary for the continuity of production, or which can proceed only at certain seasons, and in those cases the laborer ought to have every alternate Sunday free of work. The Conference also recommended the optional establishment of courts of arbitration, consisting of representatives of the employers and the employed, to settle labor disputes.

The Final Sitting

of the Conference took place on March 29. Baron von Berlepsch, who presided, said he believed the delegates had arrived at decisions which would form the basis and develop the idea of protecting and securing the material and moral welfare of the workingmen, and that they had found a common standpoint for a solution of social questions by individual Governments according to exceptional circumstances. He reminded the delegates that the well-being of the workingmen depended largely upon the Governments safeguarding the existence and prosperity of industry. In conclusion, the Minister conveyed to the delegates the Emperor's warmest thanks for their wise and searching labors, and his desire that God's blessing would help the seed, that their works might bear fruit.

The address was greeted with loud applause. Sir John Gorst, one of the English delegates, thanked the Emperor for summoning the Conference, the issue of which had been extraordinarily gratifying. He hoped this would not be their last meeting. When millions of children were rescued from misery, and millions of women were restored to domestic life, they would remember with thankfulness that this great good was initiated by the Emperor. After other delegates had thanked Baron von Berlepsch, the Conference was formally closed.

Hopes of the Conference

leading to beneficial results have come from many quarters; not least sanguine was that of one of the most conspicuous of German statesmen, Ludwig von Windthorst, who said to a correspondent of an American journal, "The idea of social reform will develop more and more. I am sorry Russia and America did not take part in the Labor Conference. Every state where there is not slavery, but free labor, is interested in the result of this Conference. I and my friends were delighted at the Kaiser's having taken the initiative. The agitation that leads to socialism and nihilism exists also where slave exists, as in the East; only there it is not on the surface. Of a million votes cast for the social candidates here, I do not believe more than ten at most fifteen per cent. came from genuine social democrats. The larger portion were cast by workmen, who think that the success of socialism would benefit their condition and who form the dissatisfied elements. I hope and pray for the success of the Labor Conference. It is impossible for one nation alone to do much to improve the condition of the workingman. The calling together of this Labor Conference will redound to the eternal glory of the Kaiser, even if no immediate good result. The idea has been put forth—it will not die."

A Distinguished Delegate

who received marked honor from the Emperor and Prince Bismarck, was the French delegate, Jules Simon. He is in every respect a remarkable man. The correspondent of an American journal, who saw him just before setting out for Berlin, said: "One must see and hear this distinguished man to appreciate his rare gentleness and earnestness, which lend a double charm to his words. Seven years old on December 31 last, he is journeying down the shady side of life, honored and respected as few of his countrymen are. Member of the Académie Française for over twenty years; Senator, Prime-Minister under Marshal MacMahon, perpetual secretary of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor, and prominent in a host of charitable societies. A powerful orator and writer, Director of the Crédit Foncier, and one of the most influential political journalists in Paris, he is one of the ablest and busiest living Frenchmen. "It is with the greatest reluctance," said he, "that I have accepted the invitation extended to me by the Government to be one of its representatives at the Berlin Labor Congress. In the first place, I am simply overwhelmed with work, and at my age I can ill spare the necessary time. Besides that, the more I reflect upon the character of the Conference the more certain I am that my time will not be wasted. It is a grave responsibility which I am loath to undertake. It is only in deference to the solicitations of M. Spuller and others that I have consented."

Bismarck's Palace,

in which the Conference was held, and of which a picture appears on the first page, is thus described by an American traveller, who visited it before the great statesman quitted it on the resignation of his offices: "No. 76 in the Wilhelmstrasse, near Unter den Linden, the famous promenade, is an old building of common aspect, three stories high, and without any other external decoration than a soldier's guard under the porch. The offices and the private apartments are almost contiguous. Back of the house is a large garden, almost a park, where the Chancellor likes to walk, his hands crossed behind his back, in Napoleonic fashion.

"The first room you enter after leaving the ante-chamber is called the 'Chinese Hall,' on account of its tapestry in brocaded silk, representing scenes of the far East, and fabulous birds. Next comes the billiard-room, presently transformed into a hall, or museum of souvenirs. The billiard-table, covered with its green cover, is encumbered with knick-knacks, gifts, presents of all kinds, and from all places and parties, mixed up with diplomatic citizenship, richly decorated or framed. The room, receiving light from two windows, especially acts attention, for this is the Chancellor's library, abinet. The mahogany desk is a simple affair, plenty of drawers and two seats; a stuffed armchair is for Bismarck's use, and a leather-covered chair is for his secretary, who sits opposite him, on the other side of the desk. In front of the desk, and hanging on the top of a small piece of furniture, is portrait of the daughter of the Chancellor, now married to Count Rantzau, and whose little son, comes every morning, dressed in the uniform of a cuirassier, to kiss the hand of his grandfather, is also his godfather. Speaking of the Chancellor's daughter, it can be said that she is a splendorous, with opulent hair and large dark eyes. In the library, or cabinet, there is really no library, but a complete collection of meerschaums, military caps with the wide red stripe, broadsword, deerskin gloves, spread here and there every piece of furniture. An extremely wide mirror occupies the back part of the cabinet. Bismarck enjoys resting on it after dinner, while he reads the papers, before retiring. The bedroom communicates with the library; it has only one bed, and a blue silk screen surrounds the bed, which is of immense proportions. The drawing-room of the Princess also adjoins the library; it is a large hall decorated with family portraits, and furnished with sofas in red damask. She occupies the most modest rooms looking on the garden, and opening upon the drawing-room. In her bedroom she occupies the place of the mirror wardrobe. Every day Bismarck, on showing the conjugal duty to some Saxon musicians, said, pointing to his wife, 'You see, it is my wife who holds the reins, and I advise those of you who are married to do the same; it is an infallible means for economy and savings.'

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lesson for April 27, Luke 8:4-15; Golden Text, Luke 8:18.

Wisdom, not Talent, the Way to Knowledge—The Parables—The Wayside Hearers—The World's Own—The Rocky—Ground Hearers—The Chalk—The Test of Affliction—A Common Cause of Backsliding—The Trial of Non-Appreciation—The Seed Among Thorns—Anxieties to be Overcome—The Burden-Bearer—The Will of the Self-life—The Seed in Good Ground—Fruit-Bearing.

AND when much people were gathered together, he came to Him out of every city, He spake a parable. This had not been His wonted way of teaching, and it was a surprise to the disciples. He came and said to Him, "Why speakest thou to them in parables? He answered and said to them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." (Matt. 13:10, 11.) Only disciples, only He who "will do His will shall know of His doctrine." (John 7:17.) Understanding of the things of God is given, not to the talented, but to the obedient. Mind and intellect cannot master the things of God. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." (1 Cor. 2:14.) "Whosoever hath"—the receptive and the obedient soul which receives of God His Holy Spirit to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not," whosoever depends on himself, and is not receptive, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." (Matt. 13:12.) There was a speciality about this parable. Jesus said of it to His disciples, "Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all the parables?" (Mark 4:13.) He who knows not that which concerns the very alphabet of the Spiritual cannot understand the language of that life; he who does not understand how to enter into the kingdom of God, cannot understand the things of the kingdom.

The sower went forth to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the wayside; and it was den under foot, and the birds of the heaven devoured it." (R. V.) The sower is Christ Himself, and that which soweth the good seed is the Son of man." (Matt. 13:37.)

Those by the Wayside

they that hear; then cometh the devil ["immediately," Mark 4:15] and taketh away the word from their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved. These are the thousands that fill our churches, chapels, mission halls, and open-air services, but who neither believe nor are saved, for they give no response to God, and regard the Word as something quite outside of, and apart from themselves; the devil has the mastery of these, and keeps them in darkness. Yet these hearers are responsible; the Holy Spirit is in the world to convince "of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment" (John 16:8), and He does His work, in some way or other, on every unsaved man. These, who are the world's own, can never plead at the judgment seat that the Holy Ghost has never convinced them. His mission to convict has been to the world, and most surely they have heard His voice. God's love to the world has been preached to them. God and the devil have both appealed to them, and they have chosen to "give place to the devil," and most assuredly they will be lost. Such were Felix and Agrippa; one said, "Go thy way for this time (God's time); when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee" (Acts 24:25); the other, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." (Acts 26:28.) Alas, the larger number of hearers are of this class!

And Some Fell Upon a Rock,

where it had not much earth, and immediately it sprung up because it had no depth of earth (Mark 4:5), and as soon as it was sprung up it withered away, because it lacked moisture. When the sun was up, it was scorched." (Mark 4:6.) The characteristics of this kind of plant, this kind of conversion, are want of depth, inability to bear the light, and want of moisture, i. e., living water, or the Holy Ghost. The whole being has not been turned over from self to God. The natural heart has not been broken up, the Word is received on the surface, in the mind and intellect—perhaps, in a measure, in the affections also—but the will has not been broken, the citadel has not been won for God. Such are converted after a fashion; they "hear" and "receive the Word with joy;" it suits them, they feel happy, and everything which makes them happy is welcome; it makes them pleased with themselves, and this ministers to the self-life; they believe, they accept forgiveness, they testify, but they cannot bear the strong, searching light of the Word, as it calls them to live "not unto themselves," to be "crucified with Christ," to "resist not evil" to "endure grief, suffering wrongfully." The heart is a rock after conversion as it is before: "When affliction or persecution ariseth for the Word's sake, immediately they are offended." "In time of temptation" these all "fall away."

As long as the truth of God ministered to their own self-life, and they only had happy feelings, self-satisfaction, and the applause of men, they were all right, but when the call came for them to leave their self-life and minister to Him, they fell away. Oh how little ordinary Christians understand the true Christ-life! Oh how many more rocky-soil Christians there are, those who fall away, than of those who "endure unto the end." (Matt. 24:13.) Perhaps three out of every four of the so-called conversions which take place in our missions and special services are of this order. Talk quietly with backsliders, and you will find that most of those who have fallen back have done so because some one offended them, or because they were not appreciated, or because they did not feel so happy as at first. It is self which causes backsliding, these men are always dealing with men rather than with God; in a Church they expect everything from the preacher, and criticise him constantly; they are always taking offence because someone has not noticed them—that someone perhaps being too occupied with God at the moment. Or, it may be, they have expected to be asked to take a prominent part in some meeting, and the leader has not got it clearly from the Lord that they are His choice.

And Some Fell Among Thorns,

and the thorns sprang up with it and choked it." That which fell among thorns are they which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Nothing is said of the falling away of this class; they remain, but remain to be the stumbling-block of the world, the element of the decay in the churches, the rasp or the file which God uses to polish the more faithful. Alive but sickly, bringing forth fruit, but it is only "wild grapes" (Isa. 5:2), none brought to perfection. While the devil took away the good seed from the wayside hearers, and the flesh turned back the stony-ground hearers, the world has power over the thorny-ground Christians. "Their heart is divided," like that of Israel of old; "he bringeth forth fruit unto himself," (Hos. 10:1, 2.) Cares, riches, pleasures, these are the thorns which dispute the ground with the Word of God. But what has a true Christian to do with cares? "Oh" you say, "the business, and the family, and the church are my anxieties." Whose business? yours or God's? whose family? yours or God's? whose church? yours or God's? If you and God have separate interests, if you hold your possessions as yours, your children as yours, your work for God as yours, and yet yourself as the Lord's, no wonder the complications are endless. But how can cares press upon you, which you, in obedience, have cast upon the Lord? If He bears the burden you cannot be bearing it too; it must be gone from you to be really upon Him. It wrongs our God when we bear our cares upon us; we are misrepresenting Him. He is the "Shepherd," and while He is our Shepherd we "shall not want." While we do want, we are not really trusting our Shepherd. Then there is "the Deceitfulness of Riches."

(Matt. 13:22.) Why deceitfulness? Because they promise so much, and give so little. Every accession of property is an extra responsibility, every additional servant, or carriage, or greenhouse, or acre of land, increases the burden of life. There is much more comfort with less of this world's goods. One who can always ride in a carriage loses the enjoyment of healthy walking exercise, one who always had a great choice of diet loses the keen appetite which plain food always engenders. "I must consider my position," is directly opposed to "Whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister, and whosoever of you will be chiefest shall be servant of all." (Mark 10:43, 44.) "I must have some little enjoyment" reveals a heart not really filled with Christ; the thorns of self are drink in the juices of the soil, and the Word becomes unfruitful. Such was Lot, a saved man with a divided heart. Such a man must make his choice, or God will make it for him. Lot lost all, not by willingly renouncing it for God with true nobility of heart, but by seeing it burnt up away from him, while he was hurried away to a mountain cave away from the ruined riches, to amass which had been his life work. Where was the fruit of Lot's life? What souls will be found in heaven as the fruit of his labors? When he did begin to preach, the word of warning sat so ill upon his worldly lips, that "he seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law." (Gen. 19:14.)

And Some Fell on Good Ground."

"That on the good ground are they which, in an honest and good heart, having heard the Word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." The good ground may once have been a rock, but it is no longer. Perhaps it has been blasted with trial and bereavement, the plough and the harrow have gone through it, it yields, it has become receptive. The Word enters in and occupies the soil, the soil lets itself be absorbed by the seed, it ministers to the seed, and does not attempt to master it, but rather to be mastered by it. In such a soil, the seed brings forth fruit, "some thirty-fold, some sixty-fold, some an hundred." (Mark 4:20.) Here the whole being is laid open to God, the will is given over, God becomes Proprietor, Master, Director. The heart is given up undividedly. This is a true conversion, this is he who "hath the Son," and "hath life." (1 John 5:12.) "This is life eternal," for there is nothing to hinder such a heart from knowing God, and His Son Jesus Christ. (John 17:3.) In such a life, the man or woman has become "a new creature; old things," the rock, and the thorns, the self as the life's centre, and with it the clinging to the cares, riches, and pleasures, "have passed away, behold, all things are become new." (II Cor. 5:17.) Before, all was considered as to how it affected self, now it is, "How does this affect Jesus?" In the good soil there is much to be done, it needs watering, and ploughing, and harrowing from time to time. He who brings forth fruit must be purged that he "may bring forth more fruit." (John 16:2.) But he has been made partaker "of the Divine Nature" (II Pet. 1:4), the life within him is the life of Christ dwelling within; it is not his mind and reason which have become converted, but the whole man has "passed from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." (Acts 26:18.) Such are always fruit-bearers, but the fruit differs, "some thirty-fold, some sixty-fold, some an hundred." God alone can be judge of relative fruitfulness. He alone who saw greater service in the two mites of the poor widow than in the gold of the wealthy, can judge the relative value of men's life.

BUYERS AND SELLERS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, April 13, 1890.

"It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer; but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth." Prov. 20:14.

Solomon Exploring in Disguise—A Bargain for a Coat in Jerusalem—Petrarch's Veracity—The Temptations of Business Men—I. To Sacrifice the Truth—Iniquitous Stratagems to Secure Buyers—Merchants Lured to Dissipation—The Curse Gathering—II. To Adopt the Maxims of Trade—Sin Not Less Sinful in a Director—A Man Held by His Foot While the Tide Rose—Pompey's Stratagem—III. To Shirk Individual Responsibility—IV. To Postpone Duty and Recreation—A Merchant Reminded of His Fire Insurance—A Sailor's Praying-place—V. To Neglect the Soul—The Approaching Conflagration.

PALACES are not such prisons as the world imagines. If you think that the only time kings and queens come forth from the royal gates is in procession and gorgeously attended, you are mistaken. Incognito, by day or by night, and clothed in citizens' apparel, or the dress of a working woman they come out and see the world as it is. In no other way could King Solomon, the author of my text, have known everything that was going on. From my text I am sure he must, in disguise, some day have walked into a store of ready-made clothing, in Jerusalem, and stood near the counter and overheard a conversation between a buyer and a seller. The merchant put a price on a coat, and the customer began to dicker and said: "Absurd! that coat is not worth what you ask for it. Why, just look at the coarseness of the fabric! See that spot on the collar! Besides that, it does not fit. Twenty dollars for that? Why, it isn't worth more than ten. They have a better article than that, and for cheaper price, down at Cloathem, Fitem & Brothers. Besides that, I don't want it at any price. Good morning." "Hold," says the merchant; "don't go off in that way. I want to sell you that coat. I have some payments to make and I want the money. Come now, how much will you give for that coat?" "Well," says the customer, "I will split the difference. You asked twenty dollars, and I said ten. Now I will give you fifteen." "Well," says the merchant, "it's but take it at that price." Then the customer with a roll under his arm started to go out and enter his own place of business, and Solomon in disguise followed him. He heard the customer as he unrolled the coat say: "Boys, I have made a great bargain. How much do you guess I gave for that coat?" "Well," says one, wishing to compliment his enterprise, "you gave thirty dollars for it." Another says, "I should think you got it cheap if you gave twenty-five dollars." "No," says the buyer in triumph, "I got it for fifteen dollars. I beat him down and pointed out the imperfections, until I really made him believe it was not worth hardly anything. It takes me to make a bargain. Ha! Ha!" Oh man, you got the goods for less than they were worth by positive falsehood; and no wonder, when Solomon went back to his palace and had put off his disguise, that he sat down at his writing-desk and made for all ages a crayon sketch of you: "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer, but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth."

A Great Sacrifice,

There are no higher styles of men in all the world than those now at the head of merchandise in Brooklyn and New York and in the other great cities of this continent. Their casual promise is as good as a bond with piles of collaterals. Their reputation for integrity is as well established as that of Petrarch residing in the family of Cardinal Colonna, and when there was great disturbance in the family the Cardinal called all his people together, and put them under oath to tell the truth, except Petrarch, for when he came up to swear, the Cardinal put away his book and said, "As to you, Petrarch, your word is sufficient." Never since the world stood have there been so many merchants whose transactions can stand

The Test of the Ten Commandments.

Such bargain-makers are all the more to be honored because they have withstood, year after year, temptations which have flung many so flat, and flung them so hard, they can never recover themselves. While all positions in life have powerful besetments to evil, there are specific forms of allurements which are peculiar to each occupation and profession, and it will be useful to speak of the peculiar temptations of business men.

First, as in the scene of the text, business men are often tempted to sacrifice plain truth, the seller by exaggerating the value of goods, and the buyer by depreciating them. We cannot but admire an expert salesman. See how he first induces the customer into a mood favorable to the proper consideration of the value of the goods. He shows himself to be an honest and frank salesman. How carefully the lights are arranged till they fall just right upon the fabric! Beginning with goods of medium quality, he gradually advances toward those of more thorough make, and of more attractive pattern. How he watches the moods and whims of his customer! With what perfect calmness he takes the order, and bows the purchaser from his presence, who goes away having made up his mind that he has bought the goods at a price which will allow him a living margin when he again sells them. The goods were worth what the salesman said they were, and were sold at a price which will not make it necessary for the house to fail every ten years in order to fix up things.

Iniquitous Stratagems.

But with what burning indignation we think of the iniquitous stratagems by which goods are sometimes disposed of. A glance at the morning papers shows the arrival at one of our hotels of a young merchant from one of the inland cities. He is a comparative stranger in the great city, and, of course, he must be shown around, and it will be the duty of some of our enterprising houses to escort him. He is a large purchaser and has plenty of time and money, and it will pay to be very attentive. The evening is spent at a place of doubtful amusement. Then they go back to the hotel. Having just come to town, they must, of course, drink. A friend from the same mercantile establishment drops in, and usage and generosity suggest that they must drink. Business prospects are talked over, and the stranger is warned against certain dilapidated mercantile establishments that are about to fail, and for such kindness and magnanimity of caution against the dishonesty of other business houses, of course it is expected they will—and so they do—

They Take a Drink.

Merchants lodging in adjoining rooms find it hard to sleep for the clatter of decanters, and the coarse carousal of these "hail fellows well met" waxes louder. But they sit not all night at the wine cup. They must see the sights. They stagger forth with cheeks flushed and eyes bloodshot. The outer gates of hell open to let in the victims. The wings of lost souls flit among the lights, and the steps of the carousers sound with the rumbling thunders of the damned. Farewell to all the sanctities of home! Could mother, sister, father, slumbering in the inland home, in some vision of that night catch a glimpse of the ruin wrought they would rend out their hair by the roots and bite the tongue till the blood spurted, shrieking out: "God save him!"

What, suppose you, will come upon such business establishments? and there are hundreds of them in the cities. They may boast of fabulous sales, and they may have an unprecedented run of buyers, and the name of the house may be a terror to all rivals, and from this thrifty root there may spring up branch houses in other cities, and all the partners of the firm may move into their mansions and drive their full-blooded span, and the families may sweep the street with the most elegant apparel that human art ever wove, or earthly magnificence ever achieved. But surely for those men, and if it does not seize hold of the pillars and in one wild ruin bring down the temple of commercial glory, it will break up their peace, and they will tremble with sicknesses and bloat with dissipations, and, pushed to the precipice of this life, they will try to hold back, and cry for help, but no help will come; and they will clutch their gold to take it along with them, but it will be snatched from their grasp, and a voice will sound through their soul, "Not a farthing, thou beggared spirit!" And the judgment will come and they will stand aghast before it, and all the business iniquities of a life time will gather around them, saying, "Do you remember this?" and, "Do you remember that?" And clerks that they compelled to dishonesty, and runners and draymen and bookkeepers who saw behind the scenes, will bear testimony to their nefarious deeds, and some virtuous soul that once stood aghast at the splendor and power of these business men will say, "Alas! this is all that is left of that great firm that occupied a block with their merchandise and overshadowed the city with their influence, and made righteousness and truth and purity fall and the galling fire of avarice and crime."

A Curse is Gathering

While we admire and approve of all acuteness and tact in the sale of goods, we must condemn any process by which a fabric or product is represented as possessing a value which it really does not have. Nothing but sheer falsehood can represent as perfection boots that rip, silks that speedily lose their lustre, calicoes that immediately wash on stoves that crack under the first hot fire, books sufficiently bound, carpets that unravel, old furniture rejuvenated with putty and glue, and sold having been recently manufactured, gold watch made out of brass, barrels of fruit, the big apples on the top, wine adulterated with strychnine, hosiery poorly woven, cloths of domestic manufacture shining with foreign labels, import goods represented as rare and hard to get, because foreign exchange is so high, rolled out on a counter with matchless display. Imported indeed, but from the factory in the next street. A pattern already unfashionable and unsalable palmed off as a new print upon some country merchant who comes to town to make his first purchase of goods and going home with a large stock of goods warranted to keep.

Trade Customs.

Again, business men are often tempted to make the habits and customs of other traders their rule of rectitude. There are commercial usages which will not stand the test of the last day. Yet men in business are apt to do as their neighbors do. The majority of the traders in any locality are lax in principle, the commercial code in that community will be spurious and dishonest. It is a hard thing to stand close by the law of right when your neighbor by his looseness of dealing is enabled to sell goods at a cheaper rate and decoy your customers. Of course you who promptly meet your business engagements, paying when you promise to pay, will find it hard to compete with that merchant who is hopelessly in debt to the porter for the goods, and to the landlord whose store he occupies, and to the clerks who serve him.

There are a hundred practices prevalent in the world of traffic which ought never to become a rule for honest men. Their wrong does not make your right. Sin never becomes virtue by being multiplied and admitted at brokers' board or merchant exchange. Because others smuggle a few things in passenger trunks, because others take usury when men are in tight places, because others deal in false stocks, because others palm off worthless endorsements, because others do nothing but blow bubbles, do not, therefore, be overcome of temptation. If low pretension and fictitious credit, and commercial gambling may awhile prosper, but the day reckoning cometh, and in addition to the horror and condemnation of outraged communities, the curse of God will come, blow after blow. God will forever and forever be the only standard of right and wrong, and not commercial ethics.

Young business man, avoid

The First Business Dishonor,

and you will avoid all the rest. The captain of a vessel was walking near the mouth of a river when the tide was low, and there was a long steel anchor chain, into one of the great links of which his foot slipped, and it began to swell and he could not withdraw it. The tide began to rise. The chain could not be loosened nor filed off in time, and a surgeon was called to amputate the limb, before the work could be done, the tide rolled over the victim, and his life was gone. And I have to tell you, young man, that just one wrong into which you slip may be a link of a long chain of circumstances from which you cannot be extricated by the ingenuity of your own, or any help from others, the tides will roll over you as they have over many. When Pompey, the warrior, wanted to take possession of a city, and they would not open the gates, he persuaded them to admit a sick soldier. But the sick soldier after a while got well and strong, and he threw open the gates and let the devastating army come in. One wrong admitted into the stream may gain in strength until, after a while, it flows open all the avenues of the immortal nature, and the surrender is complete.

Again, business men are sometimes tempted to throw off personal responsibility upon the moral institution to which they belong. Directors of banks and railroad and insurance companies sometimes shirk personal responsibility underneath on of the corporation. And how often, when the banking-house or financial institution exiles through fraud, respectable men in the Board of Directors say, "Why, I thought all was going on an honest way, and I am utterly confounded by this misdemeanor!" The banks, and the fire and marine insurance companies, and the road companies, will not stand up for judgment the last day, but those who in them acted rightly will receive, each for himself, a reward, and those who acted the part of neglect or trickery will, for himself, receive a condemnation. Unlawful dividends are not clean before God because those associated with you who grab just as big a share as you do. He who countenances the dishonesty of the firm, or of

The Corporation,
The corporation, takes upon himself all the moral liabilities. If the financial institution steal, he steals. If they go into wild speculations, he himself is a gambler. If they needlessly embarrass a creditor, he himself is guilty of cruelty. If they swindle the public, he himself is a defrauder. No financial institution ever had a money vault strong enough, edit stanch enough, or dividends large enough, policy acute enough to hide the individual sins of its members. The old adage, that corporations have no souls, is misleading. Every corporation has as many souls as it has members.

Again, many business men have been tempted to postpone their enjoyments and duties to a future season of entire leisure. What a sedative the Christian religion would be to all our business men instead of postponing its uses to old age or death, it would take it into the store or factory or daily engagements now! It is folly to go amid uncertainties of business life with no God to sustain them. A merchant in a New England village was riding by a horse, and the horse lifted his foot and stepped into a pool of water; and the merchant, to escape the splash, stepped into the door of an insurance agent, and the agent said, "I suppose you have come to renew your fire insurance." "Oh," said the merchant, "I had forgotten that." The insurance was renewed, and the next day the house had been insured was burned. Was it all accidental that the merchant, to escape a splash from a horse's foot, stepped into the insurance office? No, it is providential. And what a mighty solace for a business man to feel that things are providential! It is peace and equilibrium in such a consideration, and what a grand thing if all business men could realize it!

The Castle in the Air.
Many, although now comparatively straitened in difficult circumstances, have a goodly establishment in the future planned out. They have in imagination built about twenty years ahead a house in a country not difficult of access from the great city, for they will often have business, or old acts to settle, and investments to look after. The house is large enough to accommodate all their needs. The halls are wide, and hung with pictures of hunting-scenes and a branch of antlers, are comfortable with chairs that can be rolled out on the veranda when the weather is inviting, and shut out under some of the oaks that stand sentinel about the house, and rustling in the cool breeze, are songful with the robins. There is just land enough to keep them interested, and its crops of vast fabulous richness springing up under application of the best theories to be found in the agricultural journals. The farm is well stocked with sheep and horses, and sheep that know the voice of their master have a kindly bleat when one goes forth to them. In this blissful abode their children are instructed in art and science and religion. It shall be the old homestead to which the boys shall be directed their letters, and the hill on which the house stands will be called Oakwood or Hill or Pleasant Retreat or Eagle Eyrie. May the future have for every business man here all that is good and more beside! But are you postponing your happiness to that time? Are you

Adjourning Your Joys?
Suppose that you achieve all you expect—and then you mention it is not up to the reality, because the mountains will be brighter, the house grander, the scenery more picturesque—the mistake is the less fatal. What charm will there be in a quiet life for a man who has thirty or forty years of conforming his entire nature to the excitement of business? Will flocks and herds with their bleat and moan be able to silence the insatiable spirit of acquisitiveness which has for years had full swing in the soul? Will the hum of the breeze soothe the man who now can find his only enjoyment in the stock market? Will leaf and cloud and fountain charm the eye that has for three-fourths of a lifetime found its chief beauty in hogheads and bills of sale? Will parents be competent to rear their children for high and holy purpose, if their infancy and boyhood and girlhood were neglected, when they are almost ready to enter upon the world and have all their habits fixed and their principles stereotyped? No, no; now is the time to be happy. Now is the time to serve your Creator. Now is the time to be a Christian. Are you too busy? I have known men as busy as you are who had a place in the store-loft where they went to pray. Some one asked a Christian sailor where he found any place to pray in. He said, "I can always find a quiet place at mast-head." And in the busiest day of the season if your heart is right you can find a place to pray. Broadway and Fulton Street are good places to pray in as you go to meet your various engagements.

Go Home a Little Earlier and get introduced to your children. Be not a galley-slave by day and night, lashed fast to the oar of business. Let every day have its hour for worship and intellectual culture and recreation. Show yourself greater than your business. Act not as though after death you would enter upon an eternity of railroad stocks and coffees and ribbons. Roast not your manhood before the perpetual fires of anxiety. With every yard of cloth you sell, throw not in your soul to boot. Use firkin and counting-room desk and hardware crate as the step to glorious usefulness and highest Christian character. Decide once and forever who shall be master in your store, you or your business.

Again, business men are often tempted to let their calling interfere with the interests of the soul. God sends men into the business world to get educated, just as boys are sent to school and college. Purchase and sale, loss and gain, disappointment and rasping, prosperity, the dishonesty of others, panic and bank suspension, are but different lessons in the school. The more business, the more means of grace. Many have gone through wildest panic unhurt. "Are you not afraid you will break?" said some one to a merchant in time of great commercial excitement. He replied, "Aye, I shall break when the fiftieth Psalm breaks, in the fifteenth verse, 'call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee.'"

The store and the counting-house have developed some of the most stalwart characters. Perhaps originally they had but little sprightliness and force, but two or three hard business thumps woke them up from their lethargy, and there came a thorough development in their hearts of all that was good and holy and energetic and tremendous, and they have become the

Front Men in Christ's Army,
as well as light-houses in the great world of traffic. But business has been perpetual depletion to many a man. It first pulled out of him all benevolence, next all amiability, next all religious aspiration, next all conscience, and though he entered his vocation with large heart and noble character he goes out of it a skeleton, enough to scare a ghost.

Men appreciate the importance of having a good business stand, a store on the right side of the street, or the right block. Now every place of business is a good stand for spiritual culture. God's angels hover over the world of traffic to sustain and build up those who are trying to do their duty. To-morrow if in your place of worldly engagement you will listen for it, you may hear a sound louder than the rattle of drays and the shuffle of feet and the chink of dollars stealing into your soul, saying, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you." Yet some of those sharpest at a bargain are cheated out of their immortal blessedness by stratagems more palpable than any "drop-game" of the street. They make investments in things everlastingly below par. They put their valuables in a safe not fire-proof. They give full credit to influences that will not be able to pay one cent on a dollar. They plunge into a labyrinth from which no bankrupt law or "two-thirds enactment" will ever extricate them. They take into their partnership the world, the flesh, and the devil, and the enemy of all righteousness will boast through eternal ages that the man who in all his business life could not be outwitted, at last tumbled into spiritual defalcation, and was swindled out of heaven.

Perhaps some of you saw the fire in New York in 1835. Aged men tell us that it beggared all description. Some stood on the house-tops of Brooklyn, and looked at the red ruin that swept down the streets, and threatened to obliterate the metropolis. But the commercial world will yet be startled by a greater conflagration, even the last. Bills of exchange, policies of insurance, mortgages and bonds and Government securities, will be consumed in one lick of the flame. The Bourse and the United States Mint will turn to ashes. Gold will run molten into the dust of the street. Exchanges and granite blocks of merchandise will fall with a crash that will make the earth tremble. The flashing-up of the great light will show the righteous the way to their thrones. Their best treasures in heaven, they will go up and take possession of them. The toils of business life, which racked their brain and rasped their nerves for so many years, will have forever ceased. "There the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Short-Weight Candidate.*

It was not long prior to one of our Presidential elections. The contest in one of the great political parties was so sharp between three or four of the prominent candidates for the nomination, that it was easily seen that no one of these could probably secure the requisite two-thirds vote in the approaching convention. Then there was a conference at the national capital among the shrewdest of the party leaders, to select some new man to be sprung upon the convention, at the fitting moment, as a compromise candidate. This conference settled down on two names, and three representative gentlemen were requested to visit these men quietly, and decide which of the two was to be preferred in the emergency. Their report was to settle the question. They went on their mission.

As if casually in his city, these gentlemen called on one of these two possible candidates, and deliberately proceeded to judge him, without, of course, his suspicion of their purpose. Just think of it! In an hour it was to be decided whether or not he was fit to be President of the United States, with a place in history, and with almost infinite possibilities of good or evil. He was unsuspectingly lifted into the scales and there weighed. The scales were turned southward, and eastward, and westward, that the light might strike the beam from all directions. He was clearly of short weight. The mental verdict of those gentlemen, as they left that man at the close of the interview, was, "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." The other man of the two named was preferred. He was nominated. He was elected. His place is in history. So may it be with any of you—in a degree. The present hour may be the most important in your life, as settling the public estimate of you, or as deciding your destiny for all time; and this without any knowledge on your part that such is the crisis.

Heroes in Intention.

During the last year of our civil war, a veteran brigade, which had lost heavily in a week of battles, returned to its camp after its seven days' absence, and a little before midnight its officers and men lay down for their long-delayed rest. Hardly had they fallen asleep, when they were started up by a summons to fall into line, and to make a hurried march of four or five hours for the purpose of assaulting, at daybreak, a line of the enemy's works, which they knew to be practically impregnable. Then it was that, in weakness of body and torpor of mind, a half-awake officer, formally excused by the surgeon from immediate active duty, had to meet the question, all alone in the gloom of the night, whether he would remain there at rest, or rouse up and use his little remnant of life strength in the effort to cheer his men as he went on with them to death.

It was heroic in that officer to decide to rise and move forward at that hour; none the less heroic because of the fact that, before the enemy's stronghold was reached, the order for its assault was countermanded, and the world never knew of the occasion which tested those soldiers' heroism. And that incident was but one of a thousand similar occurrences. Officers were even promoted in rank during that war for volunteering to lead a forlorn hope which was not led. Their heroism was thus recognized without the opportunity of its display.

* From Character Shaping and Character Showing. One of six volumes of bright, useful essays by Dr. H. Clay Trumbull. Published by John D. Wattles, Philadelphia.

THE NECESSITY OF THE SECOND ADVENT.

By Rev. E. R. Craven, D. D.

The Central Doctrine of Pre-Millennarianism—Said to be Inconsistent with Other Doctrines—The Spirit as a Renewer—Paul Called in an Appearing—Consistent with the Continuance of the Spirit's Work—The Whole World Not to be Converted Before Christ Comes—An Obstructing Column.

THE central doctrine of Pre-Millennarianism is this: That an advent of Christ in His glorified body is ever imminent for the establishment of what is generally known as the Millennium. We believe that when the gospel of the kingdom has been preached as a witness in every land (as it has already been)—that when the elect number of the Gentiles has been gathered in—we believe that then the Redeemer shall come to Zion; that then He shall destroy Antichrist by the brightness of His Appearing; that then He shall gather now-blinded Israel to His side; that then "the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the Saints of the Most High."

The Catholic doctrine, which this is said to contravene, is that it is the office of the Spirit to apply the redemption purchased by Christ—that the Spirit is the Renewer. This doctrine we believe and proclaim as completely, we think, as any class of men. It may be said, however, that whatever our thoughts may be, the doctrine of a Pre-Millennial Advent is logically inconsistent therewith—inconsistent either with the continuance of the Spirit's office after the appearance of Christ, or with His dignity in the exercise thereof.

That our doctrine is not, in Jehovah's esteem, inconsistent with the idea of the continuance of the Spirit's office in a glorious and miraculous Appearing of Jesus is manifest from

The Declarations of the Scriptures.

The Apostle Paul was called and converted in such an Appearing. (Acts 9:3-10.) And yet he writes to Titus (3:5): "According to His mercy He saved us (not you, but us, including Himself,) by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." The Apostle, be it remembered, was "as one born out of due time" (1 Cor. 15:8), not late, but early. He was born, not as a lagging member of a brotherhood already called, but as the elder brother of blinded, persecuting Israel, "the pattern of them that should afterward believe" when the Lord should rend the veil from their hearts. He was the type of those to be in like manner effectually called in the day when the promise spoken by Zechariah (12:10) shall be fulfilled, "I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the Spirit of grace and supplications: and they shall look upon Me whom they have pierced." The glorious Appearing unto Paul was but the harbinger, the morning star, of the day which shall yet be; the work of the Spirit wrought in him was but the earnest of that which shall then be wrought in now-blighted Israel.

It may be said, however, that while our doctrine is not inconsistent with the continuance of the Spirit's work, it is inconsistent with His dignity in that continuance. This objection can proceed on only one of two foundations, both of which I will briefly consider.

The first is that our doctrine implies that the Spirit cannot renew the world by Existing Instrumentalities

—that the Spirit is unable to renew it without the presence of Jesus. We hold no such heresy as this, nor is it logically connected with our doctrine. That the Spirit will not thus act without the presence of our Lord, we believe and affirm—that He cannot, we deny.

There is indeed a secondary, a subordinate sense, in which it is necessary Christ should appear in glory before the Spirit performs His great work of renewing the nations—a necessity arising from what is essential to the fulfilment of prophecy—from what is essential to the realization of declared purposes. Thus, for instance, it was necessary that Christ should be born in Bethlehem, and that He should be sacrificed in Jerusalem. Not necessary in the nature of things—another town than Bethlehem, another city than Jerusalem, might have been chosen. Not necessary as a matter of ability that He should have been born at all, or that He should have been sacrificed at all. He could have destroyed His murderers. But necessary in order to the fulfilment of prophecies concerning Him, necessary to the carrying out of the declared purposes of Jehovah. This use of the term is often confounded with the former, and hence, I suspect, the objection. In this secondary sense, and in this only, is it affirmed by any that it is necessary Christ should come before the general renewal of the world by the Spirit.

Cognate with the general objection we have been considering is another, viz., that our doctrine is inconsistent with the doctrine that the Spirit is to convert the world simply through the instrumentality of the preaching of the Gospel by a militant Church. We admit the inconsistency—nay, we proclaim it—affirming that the doctrine with which ours is inconsistent is neither scriptural nor Catholic.

Every prevalent error, I may remind you in passing, has its basis in truth. It is a truth that the Church was commanded to go forth and preach the Gospel among all nations—it is a truth that during the absence of her head, by such labor under the influences of the Spirit, she propagates herself, gathering from among all nations the elect number of the Gentiles—the bride preparing for the bridegroom. Now, it is manifest that this gathering is of the Redeemer—which coming is in order to the inbringing of the Millennium. We therefore say, and the Church has ever said, that in laboring to spread the Gospel we are laboring to bring in the latter day of promised glory. And here is the confusion. On our own platform we are striving in order to that end, but not directly thereto. The distinction I contemplate between striving in order to an end, and striving directly thereto, may be made clear by a simple illustration:

In Order to the Coming

In the dominion of some earthly king there stands a granite mountain that retards the march of improvement. Broken into fragments, it would not only cease to retard progress, but its particles disintegrated would themselves become the instruments of blessing. The monarch commands his servants to labor to break in pieces that mountain. In obedience to his commands they go forth with pick and shovel and barrow to attack that which resists, and to utilize that which they gather. They labor in every part, and from every part they gather with toil that which is useful. Now, there are two objects of labor conceivable—the one is, that, laboring in every part they shall dig down the mountain—this is, labor directly to the end; the other object is, that, laboring in every part and gathering that which is useful, as do the others, they may prepare shafts and chambers in which some skillful engineer shall pour his dynamite, and in a moment, when the right time comes, blast that which hindereth unto usefulness—this is labor in order to the end.

Now, our belief is that the latter is the form of Labor Assigned to the Church,

which in these modern days has been by multitudes interpreted as the former. Our belief is that when the Church has accomplished her appointed work—when the right time shall arrive—the Master shall come with the mighty outpourings of His Spirit; and that the mountain of ignorance and sin shall flow down at His presence.

Such, we believe, is the doctrine of the Word of God. Does it, as is alleged by some, cut the nerve of missionary effort? It was by the hope begotten and fostered by this doctrine, that the Apostolic Church was energized; the hope that they might see the King in His beauty ere their eyes closed in death—that their tongues might swell the glad halleluiah that should welcome His approach—that they, by labor wrought by their redeemed hands, might hasten even unto their own day the coming of the time when He, the Redeemer, might see in fullness the fruit of the travail of His soul, and be satisfied.

Oh glorious doctrine! oh glorious hope sprung from its bosom! Wonder you if those into whose hearts it has entered have been the pioneers, the foremost laborers in missionary effort? With heart and with voice we must ever echo the cry of him who once leaned on Jesus' breast and longed for His reappearing: "Even so; come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

"The Christian Herald" Binder.—Numerous applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely. A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

WILL IT LIFT?

THE STORY OF A FOG.

By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,

(Continued from page 231.)

ONCE put on the theme of the Craske fam Jimmie Sladd grew eloquent, and all unconsciously his auditor was no other than Gilbert Craske himself, he gave that worthy his opinion of him.

"Ah, sir," he said, "Gilbert Craske had makin's of a man in him. He went across the to Australia, to better hisself, he said; but I kr that if Farmer Leaming's dower would ha' had I he would ha' stayed i' this country. Why, I you, I could see as plain as a pike-staff, an' so co other folks, that he loved the very ground walked on. But her folks said he was poor l an' so they threw cowl water on it. The mai was right enough herself, she was, an' loved hearty, an' a bonnie lass she was as ever milke cow or managed a dairy. I know she did; aye, does yet in her 'art, I warrant, tho' what's com her I cannot tell, an' where she is I don't kn They didn't mak' much out by denyin' Gil Craske. It was a bad business for Alice Lean when she married Leonard Graythorpe."

"What!" said Gilbert, in evident surprise; "she marry Leonard Graythorpe, the son of old nelius Graythorpe, who used to live at Hille Farm?" He was clearly deeply interested, and c not speak of her without a tremor in his voice.

"Hey, that she did, poor gell, an' more's pity. It was a blunder on her part for two rea—she didn't care for him; how could she, you kr when Gilbert Craske was number one? There, room i' such a case as that for a number two. I never believe it. If you fill a bottle up to the there isn't room for any more, an' if a heart's o' love, there's nowt drops outside 'at owt's called by that name, sartainly not to get wed; but that's neither here nor there. An' then he a poor chap i' business. He had a good farm, might ha' turned a pretty penny all the year had it. But he wasn't what I call judgmatical didn't know how to contrive. He was that o nate he wouldn't tak' onybody's advice, more's pity. I don't know hoo you find it, sir; but I thinks 'at it's folks who won't tak' ony advice stands i' greatest need on it."

"He was oftener at Hildrop Inn, I've gr 'feared, than at Hildrop Farm, especially afte began to get down-hearted like. An' so th went to the bad—a reg'lar smash, you see. he fell ill an' died, he did; an' then things w sold up, an' Missis—I was shepherd there the young ladies couldn't howd up their hea, Faringham parish, an' they went away to Lu I think; but nobody's heerd on 'em, an' I know where they are. It were a bad job, werry She were a rare good 'un, Missis was. I wish married Gilbert Craske!"

"So do I, Jimmie Sladd, so do I," said Gil Craske, with a sob in his voice that even the st of his palm upon his knee could not drown. mie Sladd lifted his dim gray eyes on the sp in great wonderment, whereupon Gilbert conti—"Here's another go!—for your sake, I n Jimmie, for your sake; then you might have shepherd at Hildrop Farm to this day." Hil not stay to ask, just then, how that would fo but it served his purpose, and Jimmie was grateful for the interest shown by Mr. Allans his own humble fortunes.

"And who resides at Hildrop Farm now, mie?" said Gilbert, after a pause.

"Nobody. Why, sir, the farm is up for The bills is out, an' Reckitt, the auctioneer, put it under the hammer next week, they say."

"Indeed!" said Gilbert, and said no more; he resolved at once that he would attend th

By-and-by Jimmie Sladd was dismissed, many thanks, an engagement to come again talk of Faringham in the olden days, and als a bright gold coin in his unaccustomed palm.

In the dingy little sitting-room in which we the acquaintance of Millie Graythorpe, that ythul maiden with the fair face and feeble fram lying on the sofa, bearing calmly and patient the bondage of her mysterious disease. She was with rare artistic powers, and had she only bee to use her crayons and follow her favorite pur she felt that she could have been content to be the cross of her forced imprisonment, and have lpe for the dawn, though it might be distant, of bet ter and a brighter day. But her nervous forc had fallen to so low an ebb that she could scarcely pencil in her fingers, much less could she guide movements so as to trace on paper the "fair creations of her mind." All that she could do, poor child, was to live a shadowed and submissive life, to assume a cheerfulness which she seldom felt, for the sake of her mother and her sister Mercy. Widow Graythorpe's health was failing too, wearying away under her anxiety about her darling, and tiresome toil with the needle, the only means she had of earning daily bread. Had she been the bread-winner, matters must have gone hardly indeed both with herself and the hapless Millie. Mercy, stronger, more hopeful, and of a stouter art, was the mainstay of the little household, though she would have said, and did say, that it was other's goodness and power with God that "kept them alive from famine."

Mercy was clever in all sorts of ornamental and useful devices, and these, under her deft and skillful fingers, were rapidly produced. It was the consummate taste evidenced in all of them which gave these little articles whatever value they possessed; and thanks to the little Dutchman of the picture-op, whose acquaintance she had made, she found market for them, though the pittance they procured was small.

While Millie had been able to draw, they had been able to "rub on" without very serious privation; but now the struggle was hard and constant, the harder that Millie was "nothing bettered, it rather grew worse." The sweet girl was fading away before their eyes for want of nourishing food and change of air. The mother was growing less capable of labor day by day, and Mercy, brave and able Mercy, felt that the burden of life was becoming almost too heavy to bear. Many a time and oft she kneel by her bed, weeping as she prayed, saying as she wept, until her poor tired frame and weary heart found transient rest in sleep. I do not know what these three would have done in those darkest of dark days if they had not had the support which true religion gives to all single-minded believers in Jesus Christ, the One Unfailing Friend. Friends had gone, money had gone, health was failing, their prospects, poor enough at their best, were declining, and a heavy cloud, dark and dreadful, was settling down upon them, with not the thinnest token on its frowning edge of any silver lining to the hidden side. As yet, however, trust in God is strong, and Mercy stoutly affirmed that it must there.

One evening, Mercy and her mother were seated at a somewhat scanty fire, and the dim rays of an insufficient lamp threw their feeble beams on the pale face of Millie, as she lay on the sofa propped up by pillows scarcely whiter than her face. Widow Graythorpe heaved a long and tremulous sigh, and Mercy saw that she was gazing with inexpressible grief upon her youngest-born. Instantly she arose and took her place at the piano, which more than once or thrice she had been on the eve of selling, and which even now was doomed to go, that Millie might not want the nutritious dainties of which she stood in need. It would have gone long before but for Millie's tearful pleading to the contrary. "Not that, dear sister," she had always said; "its music of more use to me than either food or medicine, especially when your dear voice mingles with its chords." In another moment the little room was brightened and brightened with the mingled melody of voice and music, as Mercy sang—

Still will we trust, though earth seem dark and dreary,
And the heart faint beneath the chastening rod;
Though rough and steep our pathway, worn and weary,
Still will we trust in God."

"So we will, Mercy dear!" said Millie, smiling through her tears. There was a faint rose-tint on her pallid cheeks as she continued, turning to her mother, "Come and kiss me, mother darling; 'still will we trust in God!' His compassions fail not." Nothing loth, for Mercy's winsome charm had wrought its sweet design, the widow bent above her daughter; and whispered, as the love-light of heaven shone through her tears, "Yes, Millie, my darling child, still we will trust in God!"

Scarcely had the last sounds of Mercy's song died away than the landlady of the rooms in which they resided made her appearance. "There's a curious sort of a 'cabbie' in the passage," said she, "inquiring for a young woman as fell under his 'owd oss's legs.' I haven't had any such experience as that, and I can't exactly be called a 'young' woman; but the man seems to be in downright good earnest, and I thought possibly it might be one of you."

"I'm the young woman that had that privilege," said Mercy, smiling at the remembrance of the November fog. "Kindly ask him up, Mrs. Tasker. What can he want with me, I wonder?"

In a few moments, our old acquaintance of Goodge Street, Jarvie, appeared on the landing, with his hat and whip in his hand, while with the other he touched the spot where his forelock would have been if Old Time had left him such an ornament. The arbitrary old gentleman with the scythe, however, had mown it off, and a good many other locks besides. He wore the old-fashioned "coachman" overcoat, with its three or four capes.

"I beg your pardon, Miss," said he, respectfully, "I'm a-trying to find a young 'ooman—I mean a young lady"—this correction was inspired by an appreciative glance at the fair vision before him—"that managed to get mixed up wi' my hoss an' cab a little while ago, all along of a fog so thick that King Pharaoh's Egyptian business must have played second fiddle to it."

"And what do you want with her, now you have found her?" said Mercy, smiling at the cabman's exceedingly odd way of putting it. "I am very much obliged to you, and the gentleman who was with you, for the very great care you took of me."

"That's just where it is, Miss," said "Cabbie." "The gentleman sort o' lost his balance when he said 'Good evening' to you; an' I don't wonder," he continued, looking at Mercy in honest admiration, "an' he forgot to take the address. I saw him arterwards, an' says he to me, 'Jarvie, if you can find that house for me I'll tip you a fi'-pun' note.' Well, Miss, I ha'n't fingered a flimsy o' that sort for many a day, an' I don't mind ownin' that it would be as welcome as a feed o' oats to a hungry 'oss. I've sort o' argified it out, by the help o' my pipe in my chimley corner, and I says to my missis, says I, 'It's — Street, or I'm a Dutchman.' So I asks at every 'ouse, until here I is, an' there you are; and that fi'-pun' note's a goin' to find its way into my wescut pocket. Thank you kindly, Miss, and I wish you a werry good night." So saying, the cabman made another respectful bow and turned away.

"Nay, you must not go yet," said Mercy, somewhat alarmed as well as puzzled. "The gentleman was a perfect stranger to me, and I don't think it is any further business of his as to where I live. What did he want the address for?"

"That I can't tell you," said Jarvie; "leastways, I may have a hidea"—this with another glance at Mercy's face and figure—"but no harm, Miss, that I'll wager. He's of a right good sort, I'm sartin, as I have werry good reason to know."

"But what is the gentleman's name?" persisted Mercy.

"Here it is, Miss," said Jarvie, and putting his hand into the pocket of his capacious and well-worn waistcoat, he brought out quite an assortment of odds and ends of various kinds, and selected a small scrap of paper, creased and dirty. It required careful handling—too careful for his rough and unaccustomed fingers—for it parted in every fold, and as the writing was pencilled, and had been smudged out by careless handling, it was utterly impossible either for the cabman or Mercy, or anybody else, to find out what had been written there. On the cabman's face came a look of blank dismay.

"Well, I never!" said he, as the "fi'-pun' note" receded into the dim distance, "I'm done again! I'll tell you what it is, Miss, that there fog must have bewitched! It's gotten into the entire business, and I'm blessed if I think it'll ever lift."

"Well, I'm sorry for your disappointment," said Mercy, compassionately, "but I'm not sorry that the gentleman is still in a fog; for I am quite clear he has no business here."

The cabman carefully gathered the pieces of paper together, baffled, but not inclined even yet to let the "flimsy" slip from his fingers, and silently turned away. Little did the maiden know of the brighter day that would have dawned on her and those she loved more than her own life, if only the fog would lift.

Hilldrop Grange was put up for auction in course of time, and became the property of "Richard Allanson, Esq., of New South Wales." Many were the inquiries made, and persistent were the questions asked, as to who and what the lucky purchaser was, and as to what he was likely to do with his new possessions. But all was in vain. Mr. Allanson had paid down a considerable deposit, and had provided proof enough that he was well able to pay the rest; and even the auctioneer could say no more than that he was a successful colonist, whose countless flocks and herds whitened the hills and covered the valleys of Australia—hills and valleys which, like the flocks and herds that browsed upon them, were all his own.

Now it so happened on the evening of the sale the new proprietor of Hilldrop Grange was dining with the late owner, who resided at some considerable distance, and who had arranged that his guest should spend the night with him, instead of returning to his usual quarters at the Hilldrop Inn. Jared Higginbotham had been present at the sale, and, as the host of the hotel where the rich Australian was stopping, he was closely cross-questioned as to what he knew of the new-comer who had become the owner of Hilldrop Manor.

Now the devil of envy had got full possession of Jared's soul, and he was not slow to throw about hints, doubts, innuendoes, and suspicions, that all is not gold that glitters, and that it would be well for prudent Faringhamites to be cautious before they put too much confidence in a man who came from nobody knew where, and had got his money, if indeed he really had it, nobody knew how. "I should not wonder," he had ventured to say, "if Mr. Allanson's wealth, of which we hear so much, should turn out, like the coins in the Arabian Nights, to be nothing but a heap of leaves; but we shall see." Higginbotham had ascertained that Mr. Allanson was not returning to the inn until next day, and as he walked home in the gloom of the chill winter night he gave himself over to the tempting employment of calling up the scene which he had himself witnessed in Mr. Allanson's private room. Again he saw the tall and manifold piles of gleaming gold which covered so large a patch of the mahogany table; again he saw the bundles of bank-notes, that at the lowest estimate must have represented some thousands sterling; again he heard the magical music of the chinking coins.

All this was in his own house, and within easy reach of his own hand; yet it was not his own, neither might he, according to the law, touch so much as a single coin. He felt this to be a positive injustice, and strode along the winter highway chafing under a sense of bitter wrong. Then came the thought that, in a few days at the furthest, this precious store of wealth would pass forever beyond his reach. The purchase of the Hilldrop estate, which was both large and valuable, would require it all, probably more than all; and in that room, his room—for was it not his house?—that room where to-night were heaps of gold, to-morrow there would be nothing, nothing but the worn and dingy furniture of a wayside inn. To-night, to-morrow, and all through the intervening hours, the room would be unoccupied, free for him to go and come, just as he pleased! The tempting devil with the yellow visage was again beckoning him, and he felt that he must follow. Again the golden coins tinkled, again the crisp notes whispered, and both the voices shaped themselves into this fascinating invitation—"Come and take us, make us all your own!"

(To be Continued.)

A PREACHER'S LIMP.

THE recognition of a chaplain by a former under-graduate was the occasion of a trial of wit some time ago. The Chronicle of Charlottesville, Va., says that when James L. Orr was Speaker of the House of Representatives he visited the Warm Springs of North Carolina, where Dr. William S. White was also staying. Dr. White was chaplain of the university at which the Speaker studied, but as they had not met in many years neither recognized the other, though sitting in the same room at the hotel. After a time Dr. White rose and walked across the room with the old-time limp in his gait. Mr. Orr immediately recognized him, and asked him if he were not the Chaplain at the University of Virginia at such a time, naming the year. The Doctor replied that he was. "I was there," said Mr. Orr, "a student at the time, and I knew you by the peculiar limp of your step." "Well," said the doctor, a little severely, "it seems that my limping made a deeper impression on you than my preaching." "Ah, Doctor," quickly replied Mr. Orr, "I deem it the highest compliment we can pay a clergyman to say he is known by his walk rather than by his conversation." Mr. Orr's reply showed his ready wit, but it also pointed a further application. The world is so censorious, and so little disposed to forgiveness that a flaw in the spiritual walk is quickly noticed, and remembered after many excellences are forgotten. (Gal. 6:1, 2.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be made payable at Station D, New York.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we state that no change has been made in our terms to agents. They are allowed, on all ordinary subscriptions, the same commission as in former years.

SPIRITED PRAYER-MEETINGS.

IN all the land the question arises, How shall prayer-meetings be made interesting? It is a most vital and practical subject, in which we are all involved. We are cognizant of the fact that there have been great revolutions in devotional meetings. In our boyhood days in the country we were compelled, week by week, to attend prayer-meeting. We only went because we were compelled to go. In that region and in those days it was considered evidence of the fact that a man was ripe for heaven if, week by week, he could endure the hardships of the prayer-meeting. The men and women who lived near to God and were almost ready for heaven, enjoyed the meeting from the first word to the last, and it was through these beneficent influences that they passed into the glories of the better land. And yet, for the people of the world there was no possible charm. On the contrary, there was a repulsion. Our unwillingness to go to those meetings was set down as a prophecy of something very bad in the future. But in our modern prayer-meetings one-half of the audience is made up of those who are not professors of religion. They have, however, a high regard for Christian things, and expect some day to find themselves in the kingdom of God, and, if they should speak out their minds, would confess the fact that they find the weekly evening meetings very interesting. They have come to understand that Christians have no monopoly of a religious service. If those who are Christians need to meet amid such heavenly influence, then how much more do those need it who have not espoused the cause of the Saviour?

* *

There are three or four things necessary in order to make a prayer-meeting interesting. In the first place, there ought to be hearty, cheerful, and inspiring salutation at the very beginning. A Wednesday or Friday evening meeting differs from the formal Sabbath service. We are always glad when we see people come in on Friday night and sit down and begin to talk to those next to them. We are not shocked at the smile or the handshaking. We are very glad to see people whispering together, asking how their families are, whether the sick are recovering, and, indeed, if there be financial trouble hovering over a man, it is well for those who sit next to him to ask him how he gets on now, and whether his prospects are improving. Very often the best influences the people get out of a Christian meeting are during the first five minutes, and before the leader of the meeting has taken his place. There is something in sitting down amid a warm-hearted Christian people, feeling that all around about are interested in you personally.

Years ago, in Philadelphia, there was called together a meeting of the veterans of the war of 1812. They came in large numbers, delegations from the different States; but after the meeting was organized, it was found that there were no delegates from New York State and from several other States. After the meeting had been begun some time the doorkeeper cried out, "The New York delegation of veterans has arrived!" The whole audience rose up and greeted them with cheer after cheer; and no sooner had they been seated than the announcement was made that the Baltimore delegates had arrived, and as the veterans tottered in on their staffs the congregation rose up again and cheered. If we could realize what a prayer-meeting is, if we really appreciated what it is to be associated with the men and women of God, it would seem, when some Christian man entered the door at such a meeting, as though the announcement were made, "Here comes a son of the Lord Almighty!" And as a Christian woman came in, as though some voice announced through the building, "Here is a queen unto God forever!" And as a cluster of Christian people appeared, it would seem as though a delegation from the very skies had descended, and there would be exhilarations and inspirations, and although there might be no audible cheering, there would be a profound thrill that would go through the whole assembly. For there are veterans in our devotional meetings—men who have been in many a fight for Christ; and not only so, but they have gained many a stout victory, and they are on the way to the glorious hour when the Lord will disband His troops, and they will go home amid the shouting of angels. Oh let there be at the beginning of every such devotional service a cheerful salutation, a high and glorious appreciation of the fact that we belong to a Christian brotherhood.

* *

In order to make a weekly meeting interesting, we need spirited music. How often it is the case that a dull tune will go droning through an assemblage! It needs to be pushed at the start, and drags all the way through: here a man humming a little, and there a woman dipping into the song, but no great hearty outburst of Christian sympathy; and when we get through with the tune we sit down exhausted. There is no lifting up of the soul toward God, no rising into heavenly aspirations, no coming into sympathy with God, and the angels who stand around His throne singing through all eternity. Let our music be spirited. Let us join in it, not only with all our hearts, but with all our voices. We have never heard one song in the Christian church that comes up to a model we have formed in our mind of what a Christian song in a sanctuary ought to be. We had some intimation of it once in a little assemblage of Germans. We had some intimation of it in an African church in Charleston, but in educated Christian assemblages we have never yet heard such an outburst of sacred melody as we think ought to come from a devout assemblage.

* *

Still farther: in order to have a devotional meeting thoroughly interesting, we want the right kind of prayers. Let the first characteristic be brevity. We never hear a man pray over five minutes but we get tired. We may be peculiar in this, but we find ourselves, after five minutes have passed, looking through our fingers to see if he is not going to stop, and, when we do that, we find others looking through their fingers for the same purpose. There may be occasions when, before God in a public assemblage, as on Sabbath-day, when the wants and the sorrows of a great congregation are to be presented, as well as their joys, a man may pray seven or eight minutes; but it is a rare thing that any man is called upon to occupy the attention of the people so long. The reason people make long prayers is that they are under the delusion they must go over the whole ground. But you cannot go over the whole ground in five hundred years. We have received so much at the hands of God in the way of mercy, we owe Him so many thanksgivings, we have committed so many sins, we have so many confessions to make, that it is absurd for a man to expect to go over the whole ground. Let us pray out of our own wants out of our own experiences, out of our own exigencies. If we have been especially favored of God, do not let us be afraid to thank Him all the way through. If we have been cast down in sorrow, and tempted and tried, let us pour out our griefs before Him in earnest importunity for relief. If there are those in our households who know not God, let us beseech most earnestly for their redemption. When a man prays out of his own experience, and is inspired by the Spirit of God, he will get through in five minutes. It is the cold-hearted man, and the man with whom religion has got to be a dull formality, who prays on, and prays on, supposing that when the apostle charges us to pray without ceasing he refers to a public exercise instead of referring to a heartfelt experience, which keeps a man always in a praying mood. Pray short! Pray short!

AMUSEMENTS.

You can judge of the moral character of any amusement by its healthful result or by its baleful reaction. There are people who seem made up of hard facts. They are a combination of multiplication tables and statistics. If you show them a beautiful rose, they will submit it to a botanical analysis, which is only the post-mortem examination of a flower. They have no rebound in their nature. They never do anything more than smile. There are no great tides of feeling surging up from the depths of their soul, in billow after billow of reverberating laughter. They seem as if nature had built them by contract, and made a bungling job of it. But, blessed be God, there are people in the world who have bright faces, and whose life is song, an anthem, a psalm of victory. Even the troubles are like vines that crawl up the side of great tower, on the top of which the sunlight sits, and the soft airs of summer hold perpetual carnival. Now, these exhilarant and sympathetic and warm-hearted people are the most tempted to pernicious amusements. In proportion as a ship is swift, wants a strong helmsman; in proportion as a horse is gay, it wants a stout driver; and these people, of exuberant nature will do well to look at the reaction of all their amusements. If an amusement sends you home at night nervous, so that you cannot sleep, and you rise in the morning, not because you are slept out, but because your duty drags you from your slumbers, you have been where you ought not to have been. There are amusements that send man next day to his work bloodshot, yawning, stupid, nauseated; and they are wrong kinds of amusement. There are entertainments that give man disgust with the drudgery of life, with tools because they are not swords, with working-aprons because they are not robes, with cattle because they are not infuriated bulls of the arena. If an amusement sends you home longing for a life of romance and thrilling adventure, love that takes poison and shoots itself, moonlight adventures and hair-breadth escapes, you may depend upon it that you are the sacrificed victim of unsanctified pleasure. Our recreations are intended to build us up, if they pull us down as to our moral or as to our physical strength, you may come to the conclusion that they are obnoxious.

CURRENT EVENTS.

International Arbitration was Formally Entered by the Pan-American Conference last week. The delegates have no power to bind the Governments which they respectively represent, but the animity with which they acted on this important question is a happy augury of its realization. They commended the negotiation of a general treaty between the republics of North, South, and Central America, and Hayti, to refer all disputes, differences, and contentions that may arise between any two of the nations to arbitration for settlement. There is no restriction of choice of arbitrators, unless it is specifically agreed beforehand that unanimous judgment shall be required, a majority of the arbitrators shall decide the question at issue. It is provided that ratifications of the treaty shall be exchanged at Washington, and it shall be in force twenty years from the date of proclamation.

Wise Provision in the New Tariff Bill, as adopted by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, is that abolishing the duty on imported works of art. The duty has always been vexatious, and since the rate was trebled, seven years ago, the protests against it have been many and loud. The principle of protection is to protect and encourage domestic industry, yet in this case the strongest opposition to the duty has come from the only class it would benefit. Artists themselves petition for its removal. The duty is not imposed for the sake of money it brings in, but in order that our own artists may have an advantage in our market over foreign artists. It is evident, therefore, that as artists want the duty abolished, there is no sense in retaining it. As a means of education, and for the public taste and for the student of art, it cannot afford a European tour, the free importation of foreign pictures and sculptures is desirable. It may be hoped that Congress will adopt the recommendation of the committee.

The Proposal to Remove the Southern Utes from Colorado to Utah is one which should evoke an unequivocal public protest. They are well-behaved, they have been very successful, with very slight assistance from the Government, in bringing the lands they now occupy under cultivation. Last season, according to the report of the Government agent, they produced 400,000 pounds of oats, wheat, and barley from six hundred acres of land. They are making rapid progress toward civilization, and their removal would discourage them, and confirm in belief in the selfishness and treachery of the Government. The Indian Rights Association, which probably knows more about the question than any other authority, strongly advocates their being allowed to remain where they are, and the Legislature of Utah has passed a resolution protesting against their being located in that Territory. There appears to be no real reason for removing the Utes, except that they occupy land which certain influential parties covet, for all the reasons alleged are trivial and illegal. If the lands were allotted to them in severalty, there would be no barrier to travel and free communication, which is the chief plea for their removal. The Government should listen, by the earnest protests of patriotic and God-fearing citizens, that the nation will not approve an act of injustice to these Indians, and that the national honor is concerned in their being protected in their just rights.

The Formal Resignation of Prophetic Functions by the President of the Mormon Church attended the annual Conference in Salt Lake City April 5. Orthodox Mormons have always held that the government and policy of the Church was dictated by special revelations from God to the prophet who is the head of the Mormon Church at the time being. Woodruff, who now holds that position, exploded that doctrine, as to its future application, in his Presidential address to the Conference, declared that the day of revelations had ended. He had revealed enough of the mysteries for people to see salvation, and there was no need of seeking for more divine utterances. The statement caused general surprise, though the more intelligent Mormons, who watched the policy of their leaders, must long ago have suspected that the policy was dictated by human motives, and not by revelation from God. It was too selfish, and too narrow in its spirit, to have had superhuman origin. President Woodruff now plants himself on a practical basis, and henceforth Mormons may criticize the policy without fear of irreverence. As his position is one of enormous influence, it is much to be hoped that he will not be too certain that revelations have ceased. If he would humbly seek to learn God's will about Mormonism, and obey it, he would have announcements still more startling to make to the Church.

Another Destructive Tornado, Causing Serious damage to property, and the loss of live-stock, but happily with comparatively small loss of human life, was reported last week. The State of Ohio and parts of Illinois suffered most heavily. A press dispatch from Canton, O., states that on April 8 a funnel-shaped cloud swept across Medina County, demolishing hundreds of houses and barns. The storm went on through Summit and Stark counties, then, turning eastward, overturning freight trains, rooting up trees, and unroofing buildings, it struck Alliance, Beloit, and Highland Park, Ill. It demolished a Roman Catholic church and several large buildings at Highland Park. The deaths of ten persons along the track of the storm are reported, and many persons received injuries from the flying debris. Cattle lay dead in all directions. At Norwalk, O., a factory was blown down, and several girls employed in it were injured, some, it is feared, fatally.

Serious Labor Disturbances Have Developed in Vienna. A large number of men in various trades are on strike in the Austrian capital, and on April 8 they held a meeting, which the police attempted to disperse. The policemen were stoned by the crowd, and many of the strikers were arrested. Later, 8,000 unemployed men held another disorderly meeting, which culminated in a serious riot. The mob demolished the police guard-room, set fire to a spirit-shop, prevented the fire-engines from approaching, plundered several Jews' shops. The police were powerless, and the troops which were called out were compelled to fire several blank volleys before the rioters dispersed. The rioters afterward sacked another tavern and smashed all the windows in the place. Every vehicle that passed was stoned by the mob. Two squadrons of cavalry and a battalion of infantry at length dispersed the rioters, after wounding many of them. It is believed that an international association of working men's unions has been secretly formed to promote objects they have in common.

The British Government's Scheme for the Relief of Irish tenants is vigorously denounced by Lord Randolph Churchill, who was formerly one of the chief members of the Cabinet. He has also proposed a plan of his own, which has the merit of better security for the money to be advanced, as well as containing a scheme of modified home government. He proposes that, instead of continuing coercion, Parliament give Ireland popular local government similar to the English and Scotch government, which, instead of inspiring despair, would lead to prosperity and contentment. "If this were done, a request for British assistance in the purchase of land would come in the natural course of things, and similar demands for other public purposes would follow. Instead of dealing with the tenants directly, the state would deal with the local bodies."

The Demonstration of the Russian Students, it is now known, was occasioned by the outrages in Siberia, which moved them to indignation against the Czar's Government. "Many of the young men," says the European correspondent of a New York journal, "have been rusticated, and not a few, including several professors, are now in prison as political suspects, with a fair prospect of Siberia. But the real danger for the Czar lies not in noisy demonstrations of excitable boys, but in the calm, remorseless plottings of the extreme sections of Nihilists, educated men who have made up their minds that the regeneration of their country can come only after a social and political cataclysm. The arrests made from time to time, and the mysterious suicides and disappearances, prove beyond a doubt that the extreme party has adherents in the ranks of the imperial bodyguards, among the nobility, and even in the palaces of the Czar."

Mr. H. M. Stanley Arrived at Brindisi and started for Brussels on April 10, after an absence in Africa of more than three years. In an interview with a correspondent of the New York Herald at Brindisi, Mr. Stanley expressed his views of the present and future condition of Africa. He said that the Equatorial province abandoned by Emin has been conquered long ago by the Mahdists. Four stations were in their hands when they left. There was nothing in the country to resist their advance. He had no doubt that the Soudan could be retaken, but such a project would cost fifteen million dollars. Mr. Stanley said: "It would be useless to start with less; I doubt very much that the Soudan could be civilized with that amount of money, but I say that a good beginning could be made and the foundations of a government substantially built." As to Emin himself, Mr. Stanley said that if he had not gone to his rescue, "Emin would have been at this moment a common slave. The Mahdists would have made him share the common fate. Nothing could have saved him. If I had found Emin with a strong and stable force and an established authority I would have given him ammunition." As it was, finding him irresolute, Mr. Stanley urged him to leave, and gave him a full year in which to make up his mind. When he returned, Emin was a prisoner, with no alternative but to escape if he could. Emin's own letters proved that he was aware his position was desperate.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. E. P. Hammond has returned to Hartford, Conn., after a most successful evangelistic tour.

At the last communion service in the Presbyterian Church at Sitka, Alaska, twenty-five persons united with the church.

A prisoner who was tried on a charge of larceny at Rochester, N. Y., recently, told the judge that he was eighty-five years old, and that he had spent thirty-five years of his life in prison.

The Women's Board of Foreign Missions (Presbyterian) held its twentieth annual convention at Elmira, N. Y., April 9 and 10. Dr. Jessup, of Syria, and Rev. A. C. Good, from Africa, delivered addresses.

The Rev. W. Hay Aitken, the well-known English missionary, has been invited to go out to South Africa and hold a series of mission services in the colony. Mr. Aitken has accepted the invitation, and will shortly start for the Cape of Good Hope.

The Rev. E. Walpole Warren, rector of Holy Trinity Church, New York, gives an address to railroad men at the building of the Young Men's Christian Association, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, on the last Sunday afternoon of each month.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada reported for its eleven conferences, for 1889, a membership of 228,959, and 217,737 Sunday-school scholars. It raised for missions $215,755, and has 489 missionaries, 596 paid agents, with returns from its missions of 46,944 members.

The Conference of working women's clubs assembled in Cooper Union, New York, yesterday. Mrs. Edward P. Terhune (Marion Harland) delivered the opening address. The sessions are continued to-day and to-morrow in the Metropolitan Opera House. There are eighteen of these clubs in New York alone, with an aggregate of 2,151 members.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman baptized a Hebrew lady on Sunday last at his Hebrew-Christian Church, St. Mark's Place, New York. Her testimony in publicly confessing Christ showed that her act was the result of deep feeling and enlightenment by the Holy Spirit. Many earnest inquirers are searching the New Testament under Mr. Freshman's guidance, of whom he has good hopes.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler preached his farewell sermon on April 6, as pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. In his review of his thirty years' pastorate of the church, he said that the membership had risen from 250 to 2,350, five mission churches had been built in the city, and $605,000 had been spent for religious and benevolent purposes, beside $700,000 in maintaining worship. The fund being raised as a testimonial to Dr. Cuyler amounts to $30,000.

Mr. D. L. Moody preached last Sunday in the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church, New York. On the previous day he spoke twice in Association Hall. This week he is holding services in Harlem. Twenty churches down-town have united in arranging for a series of evening meetings, to commence April 22. Two services will be held each evening. On April 22, 23, and 24 the services will be held at 7:45 P. M., in the Presbyterian Church, Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue, and at 8:15 P. M., in Emmanuel Chapel, in Sixth Street, near Avenue C. On April 25, 26, and 27 the meetings will be in the Allen Street Methodist Church and the Mariners' Temple. With these Mr. Moody's mission in New York closes.

After the funeral of the Rev. Stephen Barnwell, of Louisville, Ky., whose portrait appeared in this journal last week, Bishop Dudley and the clergy of the diocese drew up and signed a memorial, expressing their esteem for their departed brother, and their appreciation of the services he had rendered, during his ten years' pastorate in Louisville, to the church and to the public. In the course of the memorial they said: "Tears have stood this day in the eyes of men unused to weep, men not bound to him by ecclesiastical relationship, because of their remembrance of the man who went in and out among them, with love for men in the gleam of his eye, the tones of his voice, and the grasp of his hand." Mr. Barnwell served four years in the Confederate army in the war.

WARNING AND REWARD.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Moreover by them is thy servant warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward." Psa. 19: 11.

The Uses of God's Word—Light and Life—I. Its Keeping Power—The Believer in an Enemy's Country—Warnings Against Surprises—Pointing Out Sin—The Ten Lanterns—Reminders of Duty—Warnings of Weakness—Of Temptation—Of Trial—Individual Warnings—The Second Advent Clearly Taught—II. The Reward for Keeping the Word—By Earnest Study—By Zeal in Its Defence—By Careful Observation—Great Quiet of Mind—Increase of Knowledge—Usefulness to Others—Two Practical Lessons.

THE Psalmist, in this psalm, has compared the Word of God to the sun. The sun in the heavens is everything to the natural world, and the Word of God in the heart is everything in the spiritual world. The Word of the Lord makes our day, it makes our spring, it makes our summer, it prepares and ripens all our fruit. Without the Word of God we should be in the outer darkness of spiritual death. I have not time this morning to sum up the blessings which are showered upon us through the sun's light, heat, and other influences. So is it with the perfect law of the Lord; when it comes, in the power of the Spirit of God upon the soul, it brings unnumbered blessings: blessings more than we ourselves are able to discern.

David, for a moment, dwelt upon the delights of God's Word. He said, "More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb."

The Revelation of God

enriches the mind with knowledge, the heart with comfort, the life with holiness, the whole man with divine strength. He that studies, understands, and appropriates the statutes of the Lord is rich in the truest sense—rich in holiness for this life, and rich in preparedness for the life to come. But in the sacred Book we find not only an enrichment of gold laid up, but a present abundance of sweetness to be now enjoyed. He that loves the inspired Book shall have wealth for his mind and sweetness for his heart.

But David is mainly aiming at the practical; so, having introduced the sun as the symbol of God's Word because of its pleasurable influence, he adds, "Moreover by them is thy servant warned; and in keeping of them there is great reward." On these two things we will meditate under the following heads—First, their keeping us, "By them is thy servant warned;" secondly, our keeping them, "And in keeping of them there is great reward."

I. First, their keeping us; "By them is thy servant warned." We are in an enemy's country: we are always in danger; we are most in peril when we think ourselves most secure. You will find in the histories of the Bible that the most crushing defeats have fallen upon armies on a sudden, when they were off their guard. The army of Christ has need always to set its pickets and appoint lest the adversary take us unawares. We can never tell when we are likely to be assailed; we shall be wise to assume that we are always surrounded by enemies. God's Word is our keeper, the watcher of our souls; and when a danger is approaching, it rings the alarm and gives us warning. The different parts of Scripture, the statutes, the doctrines, the ordinances, the promises, the precepts—all of these act like pickets to the army, and arouse the Lord's soldiers to resist sudden assaults: "By them is thy servant warned."

Its Sentinels,

In what way does God's Word warn us? In many forms it thus operates. I would say, first of all, by pointing out sin and describing its nature and danger. We have here the mind of the Lord as to moral conduct, and so we are not left to guesswork; but we know by unerring teaching what it is that the Lord abhors. Those ten commandments are like lanterns set around an opening in the street, that no traveller may drive into danger. God only forbids that which would injure us; and He only commands that which will be for our lasting good. Spread out before you the law of God, and you may say of it as you read it, "By these commandments is thy servant warned." In my walks I see notices bearing the words "Trespassers beware!" and I am kept from wandering.

Next, the Word of God warns by reminding us of our duties. We are not only taught negatively what we should not do, but positively what we ought to do; and thus we are warned against sins of omission. The Lord does not pay us for our work as though we were hirelings, and our labor meritorious; but still, according to His grace He rewards His faithful servants, and so encourages them diligently to obey. Every Bible precept should be an arrow aimed at the heart of our carelessness and forgetfulness. Then should we often say with David, "By them is Thy servant warned."

The Word of God also warns us of our weakness in those duties which it commands, and of our tendency to fall into those Sins Which it Forbids.

It sets before us a noble example, but it bids us remember that only by divine power can we follow it. It spreads before us a programme of perfect holiness, but it does not flatter us with the notion that by our own strength we can carry it out. Scripture is continually warning us of the deceitfulness of our hearts, and of the tendency of sin to advance from one stage of evil to another. Holy Scripture shows us our spiritual inability, apart from the Divine Spirit; and greatly do we need warnings in this way, for we are given to be self-sufficient. Pride will shoot forth with the very least encouragement. We buckle on our harness, and begin at once to shout as if the battle were won. How soon we think ourselves near perfection, when indeed we are near a fall! If we give way to pride, it is against the admonitions of the divine statutes; for, in this matter, "By them is Thy servant warned."

So does the Word continually warn us against the temptations which are in the world in which we live. Read its story from the first day of Adam's fall to the last chapter of its record, and you shall find it continually representing the world as a place of trial for the heir of heaven. It is indeed as a sieve, in which the true corn has no rest, but much tossing to and fro. Christ seems praying over us every day as we read the Scripture, "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil."

Here, let me add, we are warned over and over again against the temptations of Satan. Certain theologians, nowadays, do not believe in the existence of Satan. But in a Christian life is a force with which he must reckon, or he may fail through ignorance. Some especially have had sore conflict with this evil one, and certain tried ones are scarcely a day without being tormented either by the howling of this dog or else by his snapping at their heels. He cannot possess us as he possesses many of the ungodly; but he worries whom he can't devour with a malicious joy. Whatever "modern-thought" ministers may have to say about him, the inspired Scripture does not leave us ignorant of his devices, but sets us on our guard against his terrible power, bidding us pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the Evil One."

The Power of Satan

The teachings of the Lord also warn us to expect trial. The Bible never promises the true believer an easy life: the rather does it assure him that he is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward. There is no soaring to heaven on the wings of luxurious ease; we must painfully plod along the pilgrim way. We see on the page of inspiration that we cannot be crowned without warfare, nor honored without suffering. Jesus went to heaven by a rough road, and we must follow Him. Every believer in the cross must bear the cross.

Personal Premonitions.

God's Word also warns us by prophesying to us of things to come. I cannot enter just now into what is a very interesting point of experience, namely, the singular fact that the Bible is used of God to warn individuals of events about to occur to them. The Book is full of prophecies for nations, but at times it becomes prophetic to individual believers. Have you never had impressed upon your mind a passage of Scripture which has followed you for hours, and even days, and you could not tell why, till an event has happened which has so exactly tallied with that Scripture that you could not but remark it, as having prepared you for the circumstance? Will not your morning reading sometimes forestall the sorrow or the duty of the day? Have you not often found that if you read the Bible consecutively, somehow or other the passage which comes in due course will prove to be as truly a lesson for the day as if it had been written on purpose to meet your case? I am far from being superstitious, or wishful to encourage faith in mere impressions, but I cannot shut my eyes to facts which have happened to myself. I know that I have received, through this Book of God, messages to my heart, which have come with peculiar power and suitability; so that I have been compelled to say with emphasis, "By them is thy servant warned. But the Bible warns us of great events, especially of the Lord and the coming judgment. It does not clearly tell us when our Lord will appear, but warns us that to the unprepared He will come as thief in the night. It warns us of the general judgment, and of the day when all men shall live again and stand before the great white throne. It warns us of the day when every secret shall be revealed and when every man shall receive for the thing that he has done in his body, according to that which he hath done, whether it be good or evil. "By them is thy servant warned." Oh that we may so take the warnings of Holy Writ as to be ready for death, ready for judgment, and ready for that first sentence which can never be reversed! If we were truly wise, these warnings would put salt into our lives, and preserve them from the corruption which is in the world through lust.

The Second Advent

Beloved, I trust that every one of us who knows the Lord, will use His holy Book as the constant guard of his life. Let it be like a fog-signal to you going off in warning when the road is hidden by cloud. Let it be like the red lamp on the railway, suggesting to you to come to a stand, for the road is dangerous. Day and night, wherever I may be, may a word from the oracle of God sound in my ears, and keep me from sleeping on the brink of the abyss! May no enemy be able to steal upon us when sleeping in false security; for it is high time that we awake out of sleep; and this Book tells us

II. And now I have to speak to you upon

Keeping the Word

of God. To keep the Word of God is, first of all, earnestly to study it so as to become acquainted with its contents. Know your Bible from beginning to end. I am afraid there is but little Bible-reading nowadays. If the Word of God had been diligently studied, there would not have been so general a departure from its teachings. Bible-reading people seldom go off to modern theology. Those who feed upon the Word of God enjoy it too much to give it up. The Bible is the thesaurus of heavenly knowledge; the cyclopedia of divine science: remark, learn, and inwardly digest the same, and then you will be keeping the sayings of God.

But we cannot keep them without going further than this: we must be zealous in their defence. May it be said of each one of us, "Thou hast kept my word." When you find others denying God's truth, hold you the faster to it. When they are against it, be prepared to give a reason for the hope that is in you with meekness and fear. It is no easy task to stand fast in the faith to-day; for the current which runs toward unbelief is strong and torrent, and many have been taken off their feet by it, and are being carried down to the cataract of error. May God help you to say with the pilgrim in Vanity Fair, "We buy the truth!"

The Truth in Action.

But this is not all, we must go much further: there must be a careful observance of the law of the Lord. We cannot be said to keep God's Word if we never carry it out in our own lives. If we keep the commandments, but do not obey them, we increase our sin. If we understand the truth and talk about it, but are slow to live according to it, we will become of us? This is not to keep God's Word, but to hold the truth of God in unrighteousness. This may, in some cases, be a presumptuous sin. When thy knowledge far exceeds thy practice, heed lest thou be guilty of sinning wilfully. We must keep the Word of God in the sense in which our Lord used the word when he said, "If ye love Me, keep My commandments."

But now the text says; "In keeping of them there is great reward;" and here you must have patience with me while I set out the great reward which comes to obedient believers. There are many rewards, and the first is, great quiet of mind. "God's peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." When a man hath done what God bids him do, his conscience is at peace; and this is a choice boon. I can bear anybody to be my foe rather than my conscience. We read of David, "David's heart smote him." That was an awkward knock! When a man's own conscience is his enemy, where can he run for shelter? Conscience smites home, and the wound is deep. But when a man can conscientiously say, "I did the right thing, then the censures of other men go for little,

A martyr was fastened to the stake, and the sheriff who was to execute him expressed his sorrow that he should persevere in his opinions, and compel him to set fire to the pile. The martyr answered: "Do not trouble yourself, for I am not troubling myself. Come and lay your hand upon my heart, and see if it does not beat quietly." His request was complied with, and he was found to be quite calm. "Now," said he, "lay your hand on your own heart, and see if you are not more troubled than I am; and then go your way, and, instead of pitying me, pity yourself." When we have done right we need no man's pity, however painful the immediate consequence. In keeping the Word of the Lord there is great reward, even if it bring no reward. The approbation of God is more than the admiration of nations. Verily this is great reward. The next great reward is increase of divine knowledge. If any man will know the will of Christ, let him do that will. When a young man is put to learn a trade, he does so by working at it; and we learn the truth which our Lord teaches by obeying his commands. To reach the shores of heavenly wisdom

Every Man Must Work His Passage.

Holiness is the royal road to scriptural knowledge. We know as much as we do. "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." It may be, you sit down and consider the doctrine; but you cannot understand it. You turn it over and consult a learned divine; but still you cannot understand it. Be obedient, pray for a willing heart to do the will of God, and you have already received enlarged capacity, and with it a new light for your eyes; you will learn more by holy practice than by wearisome study. The Lord help us to follow on to know the Lord, for then shall we know!

Moreover, in keeping the commandments we increase in conformity to Christ, and consequently in communion with God. He that doeth as Christ did is like Christ; for our likeness is moral and spiritual. In measure we receive His image as we work His deeds; and then, as Christ lived in constant fellowship with God, because He did always the things that pleased God, so do we walk in the light, as God is in the light, when we yield obedience to the divine will. If thou walkest in sin, thou canst not walk with God. If thou wilt be obedient, then shall all clouds be chased away, and thy light shall shine brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Sinning will make you leave off communion with God, or else communion with God will make you leave off sinning; one of the two things must occur.

Power in Prayer.

This will be followed by the fourth great reward, namely, power in prayer. Jesus says, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." If you will read in the Gospel of John, you will frequently see how success in prayer is, in the case of the believer, made to depend upon his complete obedience. If thou wilt not hearken to God's Word, neither will He hearken to thy word. Some people complain that they have no power with God; but has God any power with them? Look to the holiness of your lives, and cease to wonder at the failure of your prayers.

This will generally be followed by another great reward, namely, usefulness to others. He that keepeth the commandments of the Lord will become an example that others may copy, and he will wield an influence which shall constrain them to copy him. Do not you think that many Christians are spiritually childless because they are disobedient? Nothing can come out of a man unless it is first in him; and if it is in him it will be seen in his life as well as in his teaching. If I do not live as I preach, my preaching is not living preaching. I could indicate men of great talent who see no conversions; and one does not wonder, for in their own lives there is no holiness, no spirituality, no communion with God. I could mention Christian people, with very considerable gifts, who have no corresponding measure of grace, and hence their labor comes to nothing. Oh, for more holiness! Where that is manifest, there will be more usefulness.

There are two things I want to say before I sit down. The first is, let us hold fast, tenaciously, doggedly, with a death grip, the truth of the inspiration of God's Word. If it is not inspired and infallible, it cannot be of use in warning us. I see little use in being warned when the warning may be like the idle cry of "Wolf!" when there is no wolf.

Everything in the railway service depends upon the accuracy of the signals: when these are wrong, life will be sacrificed. On the road to heaven we need unerring signals, or the catastrophes will be far more terrible. It is difficult enough to set myself right and carefully

Drive the Train of Conduct,

but if, in addition, I am to set the Bible right, and thus manage the signals along the permanent way, I am in an evil plight indeed. If I may not implicitly trust my Bible, you may burn it, for it is of no more use to me. If it is not inspired, it ceases to be a power either to warn or to command obedience. Beloved, others may say what they will, but here I stand as witness: "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

While you hold fast its inspiration, pray God to prove its inspiration to you. Its gentle but effectual warning will prove its inspiration. This precious Book has pulled me up many times, and put me to a pause, when else I had gone on to sin. At another time I should have sat still had it not made me leap to my feet to flee from evil or seek good. To me it is a monitor, whose voice I prize. There is a power about this Book which is not in any other. I do not care whether it be the highest poetry or the freshest science; each must yield to the power of the Word of God. Nothing ever plays on the cords of a man's soul like the finger of God's Spirit. This Book can touch the deep strings of my being, and make the life-floods to flow forth. The Word of God is the great power of God; and it is well that you should know it to be so by its power over you. May the Lord work in us to will and to do of His own good pleasure; then shall the Book be more and more precious in our eyes; and this sense of its preciousness will be one of the rewards which come to us in keeping the statutes of the Lord! So be it unto you, through Christ! Amen.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.

A Peculiarity in Citizenship has Been Disclosed by recently published governmental documents. In making arrangements for the approaching census, the commissioner was embarrassed by the condition of the Territory of Alaska. The Territory has an area of 512,000 square miles, yet at the last census it had a population of only 33,426, in all, and of these only 430 were whites. How to get an accurate enumeration of such a people in a country of so wide an extent and presenting so many difficulties of travel, was a problem not easy to solve. Finally it was decided to give the superintendence of the census there to Mr. Ivan Petroff, whose intimate acquaintance with the Territory has made him an authority on all questions affecting it. Mr. Petroff is a Russian by birth, and was a citizen of Alaska when it was purchased by the United States from Russia in 1867. He is now a citizen of the United States, but not by birth nor by naturalization. His citizenship is described, in the official documents relating to his appointment, under two heads. In one case he is registered as a citizen "by treaty," and in another as a citizen "by purchase." In Christ's kingdom every citizen might be so described. None are entitled to citizenship by birth. The privilege has been purchased for them by the precious blood of Christ, and is secured by the eternal covenant ordered in all things and sure. (Heb. 12 : 22-24.)

Unknown Relatives Watching a Young Man's career have recently made themselves known to him. A Boston journal states that about twenty years ago a male infant was found in the streets of that city, wearing costly clothing, and having around its neck a gold chain to which was suspended a locket with a name engraved upon it. A childless tradesman at Hartford, Conn., read of the circumstances, and offered to adopt the boy, educate him, and rear him as his own child. He grew up without any knowledge of his parents, but was made acquainted with the circumstances under which he was found, and he was known by the name on the locket he had worn as a baby. He quarrelled with his foster parents, and went to work in another town. Ultimately he was serving as a waiter in a hotel in Rhode Island. He was very poor before he obtained that employment, and had suffered many hardships. A few weeks ago he received a mysterious letter from Providence, R. I., directing him to call at a certain house, where he would hear of something to his advantage. He went, and was informed that he was the heir of a wealthy old man who was his grandfather. Both his parents were dead, but as long as they lived they had kept track of him in all his wanderings, and before they died had informed the old man of the whereabouts of his grandson. Their conduct appears very unnatural. It is astonishing that, having cognizance of his hardships, they forbore to assist him, or to make themselves known to him. The condition of men in this world is exactly the reverse of this. While God is continually watching over them and doing them good, they do not acknowledge Him. (Isa. 51 : 13-15.)

The Curious Delusion of a Pugnacious Sparrow has given a family some amusement at Leominster, Mass. A child in that city placed in the garden a small piece of looking-glass, in an upright position, and for a week a sparrow has spent three hours each day capering in front of it. It will stand and peck away at its reflected self until it gets thoroughly excited, then run back and forth along the fence, then return to its attack, and continue it until it falls exhausted and apparently dead. On recovering, it flies away, only to return at the same hour the next day and renew the conflict. The sparrow evidently supposes that in fighting its own reflection it is doing battle with some deadly foe. Human beings never make such mistakes, though we often hear of men being their own worst enemy. Such men, looking back on a misspent life, will wish that at the commencement of their evil courses they had seen themselves in a true light, and had entered on a struggle with themselves, ending in the annihilation of self and the exaltation of Jesus as Ruler of their lives. (Rom. 7 : 18, 25.)

The Citation of an Authority Caused Some amusement in court during the delivery of judgment in a divorce case some time ago. A lawyer, relating his reminiscences of court life recently, said that a certain Chief-Justice before whom he practiced was fond of fortifying his decisions by precedents drawn from the English courts. He astonished the bar, however, one day by a much more ancient citation. In giving judgment on an application for divorce by a woman who claimed it on the ground that her husband wished her to go with him to live with his parents, the judge declared that the first legal precept applicable to the matter is recorded in Gen. 2 : 24, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife." The audience is said to have smiled, but nobody ventured to dispute the antiquity of the citation. The audience need not have smiled. If our judges always went to the Bible for guidance we should not see so many miscarriages of justice as we now witness. Legislators and lawyers have never found a more perfect model than the law of God. (Ps. 19 : 7, 8.)

The Dangerous Character of Common Leaves is the subject of warning in a scientific journal. It says: "Some of our most admired flowers, which we should least willingly banish from cultivation, are associated with green leaves of a very poisonous character. The narrow long leaves of the daffodil act as an irritant poison; the delicate compound leaves of the laburnum have a narcotic and acrid juice which causes vomiting, and has not infrequently led to death. The leaves of the meadow saffron, or autumn crocus, give rise to the utmost irritation of the throat, thirst, dilated pupils of the eyes, with vomiting and purging. The dangerous character of aconite, or monk's-hood leaves is doubtless well known, but each generation of children requires instruction to avoid above all things those large, palm-shaped leaves, dark green on the upper surface. Leaves of coarse weeds provide an abundant quota of danger, but frequently their strong scent and bitter, or nauseous taste give warning against their being consumed." It is so in the moral world as well as in nature. Warning is not needed so much against the coarser forms of sin as against evils attractive in appearance, but deadly in their effects. (Prov. 1 : 17.)

The Death of a Heroine of the War is Announced in the Globe-Democrat of St. Louis. It states that Mrs. Ellen Hardwicke is dead at Missouri City, having reached the age of nearly ninety years. In 1863 she kept a hotel in Missouri City, and among her guests was a Union soldier who was wounded. His presence there became known to a band of Confederate soldiers, who, being exasperated by the death of some of their comrades, determined to kill him. Mrs. Hardwicke closed her doors against them, but he could be seen through one of the windows lying on a lounge. They began firing at him through the window, but Mrs. Hardwicke, at the risk of her life, interposed her own person between the lounge and the window,

The Late Professor Delitzsch.

Mrs. Bristowe Makes the Acquaintance of the Waif.

So brave an action impressed the Confederate soldiers and they withdrew. The wounded Unionist recovered and rejoined his regiment. Subsequently he was one of a command sent on an expedition up the Missouri River. The Union soldiers started to clean out the town, and this man, remembering that he owed his life to the heroism of Mrs. Hardwicke, ran ahead to her hotel and, planting himself in front of it, declared that not a thing about the place should be molested. There was no time to explain, but the man made up for that by the emphasis with which he announced that he would defend the property with his life. As he evidently meant to keep his word, the hotel and its contents were not disturbed. This man was more mindful of his obligations than are many Christians, who, when there is opportunity for serving Christ by labor or by money, forget that He interposed between them and their doom, and saved them by the sacrifice of His own life. (Titus 2:14.)

A Hindoo Priest Exposed.—In a Letter From the Rev. G. P. Arogyam, who is laboring in India under the auspices of the Bible Society, he thus describes an incident in his work which took place a few months ago: "I had in the afternoon been in a Hindoo temple, and on going to the back-yard I saw what I had never seen before, namely, religious flogging. The thing was done by a priest, who had no commiseration for the poor ignorant people, and always struck as hard as he could. I was horrified with the idea; and when the priest had finished, wishing to expose the farce of the whole thing, I came forth, and taking his whip in my hand, I said in Malay, 'You have now been flogging a man who believes that by that means he can obtain the salvation of his soul; now, if you believe that men are saved by flogging them, I offer myself to flog you.' The priest was confused and ashamed, I believe, but the people saw what I was after, and some of them came to tell me that they quite agreed with me. I said a few words about God's love toward men, how we are healed and saved only by the stripes which Jesus bore for us, and asked the people to buy the Gospel, where they could read the wonderful story in their own tongue, which they most readily did."

THE LATE PROF. DELITZSCH, D. D., PH. D.

(See portrait.)

WHAT this generation owes to the profound scholar who has just died in Leipzig, and whose portrait is here given, the world will never fully know. In an age when the Bible has been assailed with more acumen and virulence than ever before, and when men have been told that only those who are ignorant of science can believe the Bible, that the world must give up one or the other, such a man as Delitzsch has been of inestimable value. In a land famous for learning, he was one of the most respected scholars, a man revered for his erudition, at whose feet scholars, themselves noted for their learning, sat humbly receiving instruction, yet a profound believer in the teaching of the Bible. It was felt that no man need be ashamed of his Christian faith while Delitzsch avowed himself a believer. Like our own McCosh, young men, tortured by doubt and assailed by sneers, pointed to him as a proof that learning and faith could exist together, and took courage. In him the critical and exegetical faculties were combined with exact scholarship in an almost unique degree. The German theologians who have made most of the din in modern controversy have gained their fame very much by speculative criticism of an iconoclastic character. Dr. Delitzsch, while critical acumen abounded in his work, always steadily and quietly followed a truly scientific method of treating his subjects of research. He was, from first to last, a devout and evangelical leader of theological thought.

Franz Delitzsch was born in Leipzig in 1813. He died in his native city on March 8, 1890, at the advanced age of seventy-seven years. Though born of Christian parents, he was brought up by a Jewish scholar, who took charge of the boy when in early life he was left an orphan. After a careful elementary education he was sent to the Gymnasium, where he began the study of Hebrew, and there he became, as he himself says, a thorough rationalist. "I felt myself drawn towards God," he says, "but the person of Christ meant nothing to me." He began his university career, and plunged deep into the great systems of philosophy. Christian friends, however, were trying to gain him over to evangelical truth. He resisted a long time, but yielded at last, and he always remembered the spot at Leipzig where the ray of divine light entered into his soul, and where he was able to say of Christ, as Thomas did, "My Lord and my God."

From this time Delitzsch studied theology and Oriental philology. He became connected with missionary efforts among the Jews—a work to which he has rendered signal services. At Leipzig he was intimate with the missionaries, Messrs. Goldberg and Becker; the latter initiated him into the study of rabbinical Hebrew. One great desire engrossed him at this time, and was the subject of much prayer: he longed for the conversion of his Jewish benefactor. Some years later his prayer was answered, and Hirsch Levy fell asleep in Jesus.

In 1842 Delitzsch obtained the degree of Doctor in philosophy, and the right to teach in the German universities. It is a custom in German universities that, when the professors attain to celebrity, they are called, when a vacancy occurs, to a more important seat of learning. Delitzsch was not long without receiving such a call. In 1867 the University of Leipzig offered him the chair of Old Testament Theology. In this great centre of German learning, and of Lutheran faith, Delitzsch taught for more than twenty years, and there he ended his earthly career. There was no theologian in Germany who, with such a widely extended reputation, wrote with so much simplicity and such painstaking accuracy. A Hebrew scholar of the highest order, versed in all Hebrew literature, he has published commentaries on the principal books of the Old Testament—Isaiah, Habakkuk, the Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, and Genesis. These commentaries are remarkable for exact scientific research, for the importance attached to grammatical construction, and for the astonishing erudition which they display. But the most practically useful of all his works, to which he gave his years of ripest scholarship, and which was to him a labor of love, was The New Testament in Hebrew. This work was first published in 1877, and has gone through eight editions. It has been the means of spiritual blessing to many Jewish young men, who have read in their own language of Him who is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah. What makes his works especially valuable is the devout religious spirit that reigns throughout in a degree rarely met with in the exegetical writings of our day.

RIO JANEIRO.

(See illustration on page 253.)

THE view of the capital of Brazil from the bay never fails to delight the man who sees it for the first time, however unimpressible he may be. A series of strangely shaped hills on the left of the entrance to the harbor especially attracts attention. Owing to their striking resemblance to the outstretched human figure, they have collectively been called "the Stone Man," of which the famous "Sugar-Loaf Hill" forms the feet, and the "Gavia" the face in profile. The bay itself presents one of the grandest views it is possible to imagine. Huge granite piles, assuming the most fantastic shapes present steep sides sheer to the water, forming on either side of the entrance a line of natural fortresses. Within the vast oval basin, some thirty miles long by twenty broad, the horizon is everywhere broken by magnificent ranges of mountains. On the western shore, to the left, are the suburbs of Botafogo north of the headland of Morro do Flamengo, and still farther to the north the little chapel of Nossa Senhora da Gloria, unite in one exquisite picture. The eastern shore forms at the entrance a deep, bright, flanked by a projection of land terminating in two points.

The city lies on the western shore of the bay. Its oldest quarter, which dates from 1564, is built on an irregular plain between two series of detached rocky hills. Here are the landing-places, the quays and the building until recently the residence of the Emperor. It is a vast, though not beautiful, building. The streets of the city are irregular, ill-paved and ill-kept, and surprise the visitor, who, seeing city first from the water, and his feeling of admiration giving place to disgust. Beginning has, however, been made in sanitary reform, and plans have been made for widening the streets, as the finances of the municipality admit of the purchase of old and dilapidated buildings. The population is estimated at 100,000.

Formerly the people are Roman Catholics, but a very large proportion of them are practically infidels. There is the same difficulty in Brazil as in Mexico of conducting missionary operations. The people are proud, and resent any evangelical preaching as an assumption of foreign superiority. The best hope for the evangelization of the country is in the system successfully adopted by Bishop H. C. Riley in Mexico of establishing a national church, the preachers in which shall be native Brazilians preaching to their countrymen. It has been Bishop Riley's hope to bring them from Mexico this way. Young Brans who have heard the word, and have been brought to the knowledge of God, would become the most successful of all missionaries if they had the training which the Bishop's schools were established to supply. He is earnestly trying to maintain these schools, and we are happy to learn that the articles which have appeared from time to time in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD depicting his work have brought to him the pecuniary help which he is so wisely and so usefully expending in Mexico. All who are willing to aid in the work of evangelizing Spanish America, for which there has never been so good a time as the present, may send their contributions to the treasury of J. P. Heath, Esq., 43 Bible House, New York.

THE TRAINING OF A WAIF.

Story of the S. S. Golden Text for April 27, "Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given." Luke 8:18.

(See illustration on page 252.)

"You have been a good friend to me, Mrs. Bristowe," said a woman who lay dying in one of the squalid rooms of an old house in a degraded quarter of a great city. She was speaking to a lady bent over her with great pity and sorrow expressed in her face. "Ever since I began to work in your house," the hoarse, broken voice went on, "I have had some comfort in my hard life."

"Don't speak of that now; I wish I could have aided you more; but you did not let me know how you lived, until you were sick, and I had to hunt for you."

"Well, you see, ma'am, Hoolan hates to have his name come about his place. And he ain't always in a state when he is fit to be seen. I'm his wife, and don't want to say anything against him. But I ought it was best not to let you know. It was kind of you to come, though, when I fell sick. Hoolan thinks so, too; and he's thankful."

"Fit of coughing that shook the poor, wasted body as if it would shake it to pieces, interrupted Mrs. Bristowe did what she could to relieve and as soon as she was resting quietly again the pathizing lady said, "I do wish there was something I could do for you!"

"There is, ma'am, but I hardly like to ask you. I wouldn't, if there was any other way with hope."

"Oh, do tell me," said Mrs. Bristowe. "I had never seen anyone lived in such misery. It makes my heart ache to see it. I feel I have been wicked to go so happily, and with so many comforts, taking no thought for the wretchedness around me. What can I do for you?"

"It's my Clara," said the dying woman. "She's only fourteen now, and there'll be no one to look after her when I'm gone. It's not much I've been able to do for her, and she's grown up wild. I had to go out to work, and she's been neglected. Hoolan's sent her to the saloon for beer, and she's got to know people she ought not to know. There's good in her, but she's had no chance. I'm afraid she'll go to the bad when she's lost her mother, if there's no one to say a word to her. I thought, perhaps, you might let her go on errands for you sometimes, and give her good advice. I don't want her to live such a life as I've lived, and perhaps worse. I'm sure she might be saved, if she was looked after."

View of Rio Janeiro from the Bay.

"I will do it, Mrs. Hoolan," said the lady. "I will do all I can for her."

"God bless you, ma'am," said the poor creature, fervently. "It's the one thing that hangs heavy on me while I lie here alone. It's worse than the pain. I shall die easy now. It's awful to think of what Clara would be without some one to show her right. I can trust her to you. God alone knows how thankful I am to you."

Mrs. Bristowe told her husband of the charge after the poor woman was dead. "I want to have her here," she said, "and see what we can do for her. We have no children and I shall be glad to have the care of this poor waif. I have spoken to her wretched father and he is quite willing. He seems to think of her as an incumbrance, and is glad to be relieved of her."

"Is it not rather a large contract, my dear?" Mr. Bristowe suggested. "You don't know what fearful propensities these children have. If you would like to try, I am willing, and you can but abandon the effort if it proves too much for you."

Clara looked more like a wild animal than a child, when Mrs. Bristowe first saw her, when she went to the place where Mrs. Hoolan died. She had grown worse in the few days that had passed since she had been free from her mother's control. Her face was dirty, her hair uncombed, the one garment that did duty for a frock was ragged and filthy, and she wore neither shoes nor stockings. There was beauty in her face under the dirt, but her eyes had a hard, precociously cunning expression, not encouraging to the hopes Mrs. Bristowe cherished.

"Will you shake hands with me, Clara?" she said, holding out her hand. "Your mother asked me to be a friend to you, and I want to be that. I want to help you to have a happier, better life. You will like that, won't you?"

Clara stood staring at the lady in astonishment, vaguely comprehending what was intended. She made no motion to take the offered hand. "I shall get along all right," she said. "I'm going to the saloon to work; Mrs. Reilly says I may."

The idea of the saloon was horrifying to Mrs. Bristowe, and she waited to see Clara's father, who was coming in to his mid-day meal. Hoolan was not so depraved as to approve of his daughter going to the saloon, and he was fully alive to the advantages of Mrs. Bristowe's offer to take the girl. He cheerfully suggested thrashing his daughter till she couldn't stand, if she refused to go with Mrs. Bristowe. It was the only form of training he had any faith in. When that was declined, he said "All right, manage it yourself. I'll tell her what she'll get, though, if she don't agree to go, and promise to behave too."

The promise of nice clothes, and a pretty little room for herself with a carpet on the floor, and a garden with flowers growing in it, overcame Clara's preference for the saloon when supported by her father's threats, and she was duly installed in Mrs. Bristowe's house.

The struggle of the next few months was an experience never to be forgotten either by Mrs. Bristowe or her charge. The stages of progress were almost imperceptible. It was only by looking back to the beginning that Mrs. Bristowe realized that there was any progress at all. And it was only from her strong faith in the power of Jesus to subdue the most stubborn nature that she gained encouragement to persevere. "I sha'n't!" was at first Clara's blunt answer to any request that she disliked. Then her objection was not manifested in words, but in sullen opposition. Later, sullenness disappeared, and there was a weary, careless acquiescence in Mrs. Bristowe's wishes. Clara was finding that she profited even by what she hated. She could not understand what good there could be in so many ablutions, and in learning to read and write. But Mrs. Bristowe's tact and unflinching patience succeeded in getting her to comply. At length the child began to take a pleasure in pleasing her, and then Mrs. Bristowe knew that the crisis was safely passed. When Clara would do willingly and spontaneously something to which she had an aversion, for the sake of pleasing her protector, there was hope.

"I cannot think how you can have the patience to bear with the child," Mr. Bristowe had said, after some outburst.

"I cannot think how God has the patience to bear with us," was the reply. "We resist, we rebel and when we have to yield we are sullen and repining. Yet He bears with us until we reach the stage when we say with the Master, 'Not my will, but thine, be done.' There is nothing higher, and Clara is reaching it. I need only to look in my own heart to find reasons for sympathy with her. I do not despair."

Mrs. Bristowe now took more interest in the poor than she used to do, visiting them in their homes and taking comforts for the sick. One day she had occasion to go into the neighborhood of Clara's former home, and she took the girl with her. It was nearly two years since Clara had been there, and she looked about her with strange interest. She was silent and thoughtful, and after her visit she went straight to her own room. Half an hour later Mrs. Bristowe went there to seek her and found her on her knees, her face wet with tears.

"Oh Mrs. Bristowe," said the girl, when the lady entered, "what do I owe you! I never knew it all till to-day. I have been a foolish girl. I'd have been ruined but for you. I'll never oppose you again. What you wish, I wish; I've been asking God to help me."

"That is good news, Clara, you will grow faster now in the right. There is no other way. When we reach the point of cheerful delight in God's will, and wish what He wishes, then we can learn of Him. To those who have that, more will be given. We hear His voice and take heed. I have been trying for years to reach that stage. It is the good ground in which He sows precious seed. Let us thank Him together."

A PROMISE EVADED.

We read of the serpent that "he was more subtle than any beast of the field," and there are few of us who sometime in our life have not had occasion to prove how the characteristic clings to the being whom the serpent represents. An incident illustrating the fact is quaintly described by a clergyman in a large city, who is combating the plague of drunkenness in his parish, and has established a Bible class for workmen, in the hope of leading them to better things. He mentions "one man who was alternately my hope and despair. He was a powerful man physically. Look at him as he stands singing the hymn. He is a skilled workman. That his gifts are exceptional is proved by the fact that though he will wantonly stay away from work without a word of warning or explanation to his employers, he is always received back again as soon as he presents himself at the big gates of the foundry. Just now you would think that you see a veritable saint. And, indeed, he is no hypocrite; he means to live a Christian life. Yet hardly a week ago I saw him in such a condition that you would have said the man was only fit for a lunatic asylum. His wife had begged me to call. The house was in great disorder. A loud voice was roaring out some Bacchanalian song, which ceased as I entered the room, where, half lying, half sitting on a sofa, I saw my poor friend, evidently on the verge of delirium tremens. With a great effort he pulled himself together, rose from the sofa, offered me his hand and said, 'I'm ashamed of myself. I know I promised to give up drink. Look here; you see these bottles? They were full of port wine yesterday; now there's not a drop left. I said I wouldn't drink spirits, and I haven't; but the devil got hold of me, and says he to me, says he, 'Jack, you've worked hard, you've got a good bit o' money; have a drop, you've a right to it.' 'No,' says I, 'I said I wouldn't, I'm a man o' my word.' 'Jack,' says he again, with a grin, 'you said nothing about port wine.' 'Right you are,' said I; so I ordered in them bottles, and I've worked away at 'em till there's none left. I said, 'Have a sleep and some tea, and promise me you'll have no more drink.' That evening I saw him again. He was quiet and subdued. He asked me to pray with him, and no one could have doubted that he meant to be a different man in future. 'I shall be at church to-morrow and at Bible class next Saturday night, you'll see; my head's too bad to come to-night.' He was at church, and he did come to the Bible class. But I have never seen a man so strong and so weak."

A MOMENT OF PERIL.

"DURING a time of persecution in Madagascar," says Miss Gilpin, who has labored for some years as a Missionary on that Island, "there was one house in which meetings for worship continued to be held. Late at night, coming by all the by-ways and quiet roads, the people would slip in, and at one o'clock in the morning the service would begin, conducted by the woman whose house it was and her husband; and all the time she had her slave-boys posted round the house to give warning of the approach of soldiers. Once there had been an unusually large meeting, and some people had already left, when they came rushing back, saying the soldiers were upon them. Hoping they would not search the house, some of the people were hastily thrust into a large cupboard on the stairs. The soldiers arrived and said, 'You have had a meeting here?' 'Yes,' was the reply; 'and there are still some of the people here?' an officer rejoined. He got no answer, and proceeded to search the house. When he came to the cupboard he plunged his spear right into it. The onlookers were almost paralyzed with horror. The point of the spear struck against the wall, and when the officer withdrew the spear and saw that it was clean, he said, with a grim smile, 'There is no one there.' Then the searchers left the house and all escaped. The brave woman who kept the house had a strange history. Her father had been a chief in a district of Madagascar, which did not acknowledge the rule of the king. But the king conquered it and took the chief captive. After a time the king treated him as a friend, giving him ample accommodation for his wife and children. He also granted him permission to go to Mauritius to study medicine. When he had finished his studies he returned, and soon afterwards the king died—he had killed himself with drink. He left twelve wives, one of whom killed the others and seized the throne. She fell ill, and sent for the prisoner-king, and he treated her so successfully that she was soon restored to health. He received rewards, and was taken into favor, but the jealousy of the nobles was aroused, and they determined upon his destruction. He was accused of bewitching the queen, and, condemned by her majesty, now roused to anger, to drink the tangrin, which is an imagined test, showing whether the person be guilty of witchcraft or not. The test showed him to be innocent. They said he was innocent, and sent him a present of a barrel of rum. He could not resist the temptation; he drank the rum and died; his wife and children were sent out of the place and all his property taken from them. When the daughter grew up she became a Christian and married a Christian convert. It was she who kept her house open for meetings during the persecution."

A MINISTER'S MESSAGE.

An accident recently ended a dispute between an evangelist and a clergyman, about a sermon which the former had preached in the latter's church. This is the story as told by the evangelist: "I was preaching in a parish church, and on the first two nights of my mission the minister quite agreed with all I said, but on the third night I could see by the gloomy expression of his face that his opinions were not identical with mine. After the service I spoke to him and found out what was wrong. He said, 'In the course of your address you offered immediate salvation to 600 of my parishioners, saying they could be saved before they left the pews.' 'Yes,' I replied, somewhat astonished, 'I could not do anything else, and the fault is theirs if they do not take it.' While our meeting had been going on, the blacksmith of the place, and an attendant at the parish church, had met with an accident while engaged at his work. A doctor was procured at once, but he could do nothing, save advise the man to prepare for death, as the injury would prove fatal ere the morning. A messenger was despatched to the minister, and arrived just as he and I were discussing immediate salvation. The pastor asked me to go to the man and tell him the Gospel. 'But what shall I tell him?' I asked. 'Oh, tell him your experience.' 'No,' I replied, 'I shall not, I am going to deliver your message to him. What shall it be?' 'Tell him to trust God, and above all things, that 'Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation,' for he will not live till the morning,' said the minister. 'But,' I replied, 'that was my text to-night, which so much vexed you.' He saw now his mistake, and acknowledged it. The blacksmith trusted Christ, and I expect to meet him in heaven. Salvation is an act. Jesus has done the work. You have only to accept the finished work of redemption. Cease your own efforts and take Christ as He offers Himself to you."

THE BRAND OF CAIN.

At a mission in London, conducted by Mr. J. Gough, a man was present one night recently who had a downcast, sullen look. After the meeting, Mr. Gough, who had been interested in the man, from whom every one seemed to stand aloof, followed him and spoke to him. "Did you like the meeting?" he asked. "Like it? No!" was the answer, very rudely given. "Of course I did not like it. I don't want anything of the sort;" and so saying, he pushed his way out. Nothing daunted, Mr. Gough followed him, and asked him to come back. "Stop; you do not know whom you are speaking to. You do not know me, or you would not go on like this," the man said abruptly. "I am a murderer!" and then he told his story. Some money had been left to him some years ago, and with it he had rented a low lodging-house. Here he one day discovered that one of the bad characters whom he had been harboring had taken away his wife. "I'll shoot him!" he had vowed: and having bought a pistol, he kept watch day and night for the return of his enemy. At last the day came. He saw the man enter the house (as he thought). Blinded by passion he fired, but shot the wrong man. The victim fell to the ground, and was taken up lifeless. He was sentenced to a term of penal servitude. He had now only recently come out of prison. Finding himself alone, without a friend, a very Ishmael—for men looked at him with horror, even his old companions turning away from him in dread—he once took a dose of poison, meaning to end his existence. "I have the pistol now," he said. "I have bought another. Yes, I have meant to do it. I am seeking everywhere the other man. I mean to shoot the right man yet! Oh, sir, I am a wicked man," he broke out at last. "I am a wicked man! There is no hope, no hope for a sinner like me." The darkness of the street prevented the use of the precious Book; but Mr. Gough knew well how to quote one verse after another that could exactly meet this need. "Come now, let us reason together," he said, speaking very slowly and distinctly; "though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

The man started. This was evidently such news as he had never heard before. He was induced to return to the now empty room where prayer was offered for him. Before he left the mission that night, he was a changed man. His anger was gone. He gave up his pistol and declared himself ready to forgive his enemy.—He had accepted Christ.

200,000

Estey Organs have been sold in the last fifty years.

An enormous number! No other Organ has been so popular. No other Organ has had such a sale.

We want to secure the best conception of 200,000 Organs. We ask some reader of this paper to give us an illustration of the number 200,000 which will show how great it is.

Here is one specimen illustration.

In the open air an organ can be heard distinctly one quarter of a mile. 200,000 organs, placed that distance apart, would make a continuous chain of music extending twice around the entire globe. A chord struck in your factory could be sent around the world twice and returned again to your factory.

This is a good illustration. Perhaps you can do better. Will you not try?

ESTEY ORGAN CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

Branch Offices: 159 Tremont Street, Boston. 831 Broadway, New York. 18 North 7th Street, Philadelphia. State and Jackson Streets, Chicago. 916 Olive Street, St. Louis. Marietta and Broad Sts., Atlanta, Ga.

An interesting Book of Facts (containing 24 pages with 46 illustrations) entitled, How Large is 200,000, will be mailed free; one copy to one address.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
AUTOGRAF OF
OF HARTSHORN'S
THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

RIDGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to Ridge & Co. (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Do Pissisewa, Juniper Berries, and other well known and valuable vegetable remedies, in peculiar combination, proportion and procuring to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power possessed by other medicines. Its effects remainable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, psoriasis, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Local druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

If you have a COLD or COUGH acute or leading to CONSUMPTION, SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA IS SURE CURE FOR IT

This preparation contains the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites and fine Norwegian Cod Liver Oil, as by physicians all the world over. It is palatable as milk. Three times as efficacious as plain Cod Liver Oil. A perfect Emulsion, better than all others made. all forms of Wasting Diseases, Bronchitis, CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, and as a Flesh Producing there is nothing like SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is sold by all Druggists. Let no one profuse explanation or impudent entrance induce you to accept a substitute.

A LIGHT EQUAL TO GAS. Everlasting Wick. Nothing, as it will never burn. Nothing but the oil burn. Wick is Mineral Wool. cannot burn, and no smoke or soot to discolour chimney, &c. Gives a white brilliant light. Agents can furnish with it. Retail price. We will send 3 samples for 10c. Small wicks, 20c. a doz., $2.25 a gross. Large wicks, 25c. a doz., $2.75 a gross. Large, 30c. a doz., $3.00 a gross. 1 Gross, assorted sizes, $2.75. All post paid. Address, F. O. WEHOSKEY, Providence, R. I.

Rev. T. DeWITT TALMAGE GATHERED GEMS containing 30 of his most valuable sermons and a full list of his Life. 230 pages, 20 full-page illustrations, including portraits of Talmage. Low price and quick sales is the reason. Price, bound in cloth $1.50; half Russia, $2.00; 50 per cent. to live agents. Send 50 cts. for Prospectus and package, and go to work. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

25¢ PRINTING OUTFIT. A WHOLE PRINTING OUTFIT, COMPLETE AND READY TO USE. Just as shown in cut. 8 Alphabets of fancy type. Beads of Indian Treasures, in neat case with catalogue and directions. 50¢. PRINTER. Set up any name, print cards, paper, envelopes, &c. in line. Worth 50c. The best gift for young people. Postpaid only 25¢. 6 for $1. Agents wanted. Ingersoll & Hiron, 65 Cortlandt St., New York.

AGENTS: E. B. TREATS' Catalogue. Send for new books. Shots at Targets, by E. B. Treats, 25¢. Quick, by E. B. Treats, 25¢. Also, Home & Hired, 40¢. Best author, by T. L. Cuyler, 19¢. 100,000 sold. Curiousities of Bible, 25¢. By Mail, E. B. TREATS.

"READY FOR BUSINESS" book. Occupation. Describes the trades and occupations, and what to do in each, price, 75¢. Send free the story of "My Cousin Brother," and what he led us into, on a subject. Send address on postal to I. Wells Co., 771 Broadway, New York.

FOR CONVERTED IN A THUNDERSTORM.

g the people who came to a sailors' was a man who frankly admitted came for the sake of the meals proffered at a nominal price. The speaker not interest him. However, he came; and at last the ice was broken. The star has just died," he said. "Oh, awful death it was! 'I won't die!' shouting—'I won't die!'" "Oh," friend who was speaking to him, as a terrible way to die! You know it die some day. There is no use in 'I won't!' It must come. Death if you somewhere. Friend, you are y. What will you do?" Very earnest more the Gospel plan of salvation set before him, and he was entreated and find the Saviour. He left not to return until after two years passed. He then told the following "It is all right now! My soul is he said, as he warmly greeted his and then in answer to his questions, quod "I was at Malta, and on duty it keeping watch. A thunderstorm n—the lightning flashed; it was a night! I was standing at my post, without any shelter, when all of a I seemed to receive a violent blow y shoulder. The pain quivered all y arm. I knew what was the mat- I had been struck by lightning. I to the ground, all that you had said ere came to my mind. I remem- and began to pray. 'Lord save 'I said 'save my soul!' And my was heard. There and then I found our; and He has been with me ever I know that my sins are forgiven," n has proved the truth of his testi- an earnest, consistent walk; and his sailor profession still calls him to istances, whenever he returns to he pays one visit at least to his friends, and kneels to pray in the ere he heard words that have proved eternal life.

OSTRACIZED CONVERT.

of the converts won for Christ in through the labors of the China In- mission, has by his patience and gen- overcome the prejudices of his fam- Drysdale, one of Mr. Taylor's mis- s, says: "Wang is a young man of enty-two years, but appears much ad has a young wife and little daugh- e earns a livelihood as a traveling on a small scale. Before he heard pel he was a staunch Mohammedan, is foster parents; his ancestors have to the Mohammedan faith for 300 I remember on New Year's night e), when all were enjoying them- th feasts, idolatry services, etc., to rise and joy I found this young man nees in our little hall praying to God him to be Jesus' disciple, to influ- e people of the city, and to prosper k. He became earnest in his devo- ad at home, amid the revealings and s of his own household, neighbors, mer companions with whom he used t, gamble, and do all manner of evil, orted, prayed, praised, and read Word, that they also might know the salvation. Wang soon had a good the fundamental truths of the Scrip- nd by his consistent walk and con- n we had the assurance that he had from darkness into the glorious ut now came the fiery trial for the one y rescued from sin and the devil. d him plainly that he would have resecution after his baptism than be vious to it. His reply was 'I do not. Neighbors (all Mohammedan) cursed d spit at him, and said he had apostas- the true faith, and was no longer stay or eat food with them. An at- was made to keep him from coming ice by hiding away his outdoor gar- but it failed. Without a cap or coat, id shoes on his feet, and no socks, he d our premises looking brighter than During one of his journeys some afterwards, we sent to inquire about To our surprise we found both father other much changed in their opinions, ud in their testimony to the improve- in their son's behavior since his conversion. His father's testimony was: 'The doctrine of Jesus is exceedingly good. What my son should do he does. What he should say he says, but what he should not do or say he does not.' They are both now regularly attending our services, drawn hither, not by our preaching, but by what they have seen of Christ in their son. There is no preaching so effective as the preaching of the life."

A TUTOR TAUGHT.

AMONG recent incidents reported by the founder of the China Inland Mission, is the conversion of the Chinese tutor, who has been employed for some years in teaching the missionaries the Chinese language. The way it came about is thus described by the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor: "Two girls from the North of Scotland went to America, and after some time they felt that it was their duty to serve the Lord in the foreign mission field in China. They asked, and obtained the sanction of their parents. The father of one of them said, when she communicated her desire to serve her Master abroad, 'Is there anything too good for Jesus? Should I not gladly give Him anything and everything? and should I withhold my daughter?' When the girls arrived in China they were placed under a native schoolmaster, who for a long time had instructed missionaries in the language, but had never given his heart to Christ. They had not been long there when he found himself wondering at their general behavior. There seemed to be, in them and about them, an influence which he could not understand, and which he perceived in them more strongly than he had ever done in any of his former pupils. He was very familiar with the New Testament, having used it as a text book, but he was proud, and, despising the Christian religion, clung to his old traditions. Under the influence of these two ladies, however, a change took place. He began to read the Bible in a new light, and within three months was converted to Christ, and preaching His Gospel, hundreds being converted through him. A month later, she who had been the means of bringing peace to his soul passed away. It seemed as if her mission was ended in the bringing of that now zealous worker into the Master's service. Her harvest directly seemed a small one—only one soul! But how large may yet be the sheaves that her life and example produced."

England Credits America with the most Successful Relief of Deafness. At the test recently made in London with different devices for the relief of deafness, gathered from all parts of the world, the verdict was unanimously in favor of the invention of H. A. Wales, of Bridgeport, Conn., as in many cases where all others failed his invisible device was successful.

PIANOS
$150 to $1500

PRICE
$180

UNIVERSITY
ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 1877

They Lead the World!

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT
Guaranteed Six Years.

DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!

Sold Direct to families. No Middle-men.

Cat. Free.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

ORGANS
$35 to $500

WANTED, AGENTS to sell "THE CHRISTIAN'S LEGACY." Introduction by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. One agent writes, "I have a record of hours worked in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 89 orders." I will pay $25 towards Dr. Talmage's new church, in the name of the agent, for every new agent hired from this advertisement, who sells 50 copies of the "Legacy." Usual profits to the agent. Address, W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

P.D.&S.Pens

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.!

Send 10 cents for Sample Card with 12 Pens. A. S. BARNES & Co., New York.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

CARPETS

We invite inspection to our

NEW SPRING STYLES.

Many exclusive patterns in novel effects in ROYAL WILTONS, WILTON VELVETS, MOQUETTES, BODY AND TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, 3-PLY, and EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.

At Positive Bargains

UPHOLSTERY GOODS.

Our assortment of fine Satin Damasks, Spun and Raw Silk Tapestries, Silk and Mohair Plushes was never so complete.

MATTINGS

Japanese and China Straw Mattings, OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION. White and Red Check Mattings FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS. Also fine seamless Japanese Mattings (Ningpoo Warps) for decorative purposes. A complete line of

FURNITURE,

Our own upholstery, at moderate prices. Agents for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.

We make a specialty of furnishing complete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.,
SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK.

WILD MARCH MUSIC,

Gentle and sweet melodies, sacred and secular songs, and all other kinds of music are in our thousands of books and millions of sheet music pieces!

YOUNG PLAYERS' POPULAR COLLECTION (Pap. $1, Bds. $1.25) New, bright and easy. 143 Piano Pieces.

WHITNEY'S (Bds. $2, Cloth $2.50.) By ORGAN ALBUM. S. B. Whitney. 33 fine Organ pieces for Manual and Pedal, by 20 distinguished composers.

A helpful, useful friend to pupil and teacher is MASON'S PIANO-FORTE TECHNICS (32.50) by Wm. Mason and W. S. B. Matthews. This admirable system of scales, arpeggios and all other needed technical exercises, with good directions, holds a high place in the esteem of thorough teachers, and should be everywhere used.

Our thoroughly good, genial and practical School Music Books are widely known and used. Do you use them?

SONG MANUAL Book 1, Primary, (30 cts., $3 doz.); Book 2, Medium, (40 cts., $4.20 doz.); Book 3, Higher Classes, (50 cts., $4.80 doz.) by L. O. Emerson, is his last and best book, and a rare good book for schools.

MOTION SONGS (25 cts., $2.28 doz.) by Mrs. Boardman, is a delight to teachers and children. Any book mailed promptly for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 367 Broadway, New York.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Absorbs all impurities from the blood. Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Cures Biliousness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhoea, Malaria, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, &c.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Smallpox, Yellow Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers.

Write for pamphlet, containing full instructions. HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO., 81 John St., N. Y. Box 2112.

RUPTURE CURED

with our Improved Elastic Truss worn with ease night and day, retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.
822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Comfortable. Successful where all Remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOX, only, 658 Broadway, New York. Write for book of proofs FREE.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. WYSE. DEAR SIR:—I was a sufferer from kidney disease for several years, and made every effort to obtain relief, but failed in every instance until I procured a bottle of Wyse's New Remedy. I took half of a bottle, which to my great delight relieved me of all the troublesome symptoms in a very short space of time. I am so much improved that I consider myself out of all danger, if not entirely cured of the disease. JAMES S. BARRON. 329 West 22d Street, New York.

TESTIMONIALS.

From AMOS J. CUMMINGS, member of Congress; Ex-Senator ALBERT DAGGETT; Ex-Police Commissioner DEWITT C. WHEELER, and others. Sent free by mail.

WYSE'S NEW REMEDY

FOR DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS AND LIVER.

WYSE'S NEW REMEDY Has become celebrated for the successful treatment and cure of the following diseases: Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brickdust Deposits, Mucous Inflammation of the Kidneys and Bladder, Pain in the Back, Weak Kidneys, Retention of Urine, Gleet, Gravel and all diseases affecting the Urinary Organs.

WYSE NEW REMEDY COMPANY,
PROPRIETORS,
157 W. 23d St., New York.

For sale by all druggists. Sent by express on receipt of One Dollar. Mention this paper.

DR. JAEGER'S Sanitary Woolen System Company,
827 & 829 Broadway, New York.

HERMANN SCHAEFFER, President; ERNEST BRONER, Vice-President.

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT THIS TRADE MARK.

Note our Trade Mark closely! BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment of

SPRING AND SUMMER UNDERWEAR.

The genuine sanatory goods are manufactured under the supervision of Dr. Jaeger, and sold by the above-named Company and their authorized agents only.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Specialty. Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,
827 and 829 Broadway, New York.

UNION INVESTMENT COMPANY,
Capital, --- $1,000,000.
KANSAS CITY, MO.

7 per cent. investment interest semi-annually. The direct obligation of the Company secured by business property and recommended by prominent business men and bankers of Kansas City. Send for circulars with full particulars.

W. P. RICE, Pres. Union Investment Co. O. F. PAGE, Treas.

METAL CEILINGS.

BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores, and Residences. ARTISTIC

H. S. NORTHROP,
18 Rose Street, New York.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught by mail or personally. Situations procured all pupils when competent. Send for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

JUST FOR TO-DAY.

Lord! for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Keep me, my God, from stain of sin,
Just for to-day.

Let me both diligently work
And duly pray;

Let me be kind in word and deed,
Just for to-day.

Let me be slow to do my will,
Prompt to obey;

Help me to mortify my flesh,
Just for to-day.

Let me no wrong or idle word
Unthinking say;
Set thou a seal upon my lips,
Just for to-day.

Let me in season, Lord, be grave,
In season gay;
Let me be faithful to Thy grace,
Just for to-day.

So, for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray;
But keep me, guide me, love me, Lord,
Just for to-day.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

It is pure economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for it is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 Doses One Dollar." It is stronger, purer, and better than any other blood purifier.

Henry Gaze & Son, the originators and first conductors of Oriental tours, of 940 Broadway, New York City, offer most attractive summer trips to Europe at $150 and upwards, including all expenses; also two Fall trips to the Holy Land and Round the World.

The statement has been made on high authority that "Cocoa contains as much flesh-forming matter as beef." General use has proved it a luxury for those in health, and admirably adapted for the sick, and we are glad to observe its rapidly growing popularity. By many it has been considered beyond the reach of the poor, but certainly a drink which costs less than one cent a cup, and is so nourishing to the body as well as grateful to the taste, must be regarded as cheap. Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa is absolutely pure and it is soluble, no chemicals are employed in its manufacture. The preparations of this house have steadily maintained the highest reputation at home and abroad since its foundation in 1780.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 299, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

PURE SONGS FOR CHORUS
SUNDAY SCHOOLS 35 EACH
PRAYER AND PRAISE 360 DOZ
GENERAL USE 750 PER DOZ
TWO BEST BOOKS OF THE DAY
BY A. G. HAYGOOD & R. M. MINTOSH
ADDRESS: J. W. BURKE & CO., MACON, GA.

SALESMEN WANTED. Limited number of go-ahead men wanted in soliciting department, and to train others. $100 per month and over. Liberal allowance for expenses. Permanent position to active men. Established 15 years—largest trade. Mention CHRISTIAN HERALD. Address, W. FORD ADAMS & CO., 41 Great Jones St., N. Y.

OILOGRAPH AGENTS WANTED.—$5 to $10 per day collecting small pictures for us to copy and enlarge. Satisfaction guaranteed and a $4 outfit free. Address A. DUNNE & CO., 56 Rende St., N. Y. Name Christian Herald.

SHORTHAND Private instruction by practical verbatim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

HEAL ALL. Ointment for Burns, Scalds, Cuts, Bruises, and Sores of all kinds. Takes pain away in one minute. Cures quickly and leaves no scar. Box sent post-paid for 25 cents in stamps. J. SJUTICE, 323 Central Ave., Newark, N. J.

Ready May 1st, 1890.

WINNOWNED SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, By IRA D. SANKEY.

One of the largest and most useful collections of NEW and SELECTED songs for SUNDAY SCHOOLS ever published in a single volume.

224 pages. 35 cents per copy in any quantity; single copies for examination, by mail, on receipt of price.

BIGLOW & MAIN,

76 East Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,

74 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati.
19 East 16th Street, New York.

NUTRITION Is FIRST in importance. Medication second in all illness. Perfect Nutrition is possible with BOVININE, containing as it does every element necessary for making new and pure blood. BOVININE makes the flesh firm and rosy; gives color to the lips and cheeks and brightens the eyes by its blood-making and tissue-building properties. No medication whatever enters into its composition, it being a Food only, but the most effective as yet devised by human research and experiment.

BEECHAM'S PAINLESS PILLS EFFECTUAL. WORTH A GUINEA A BOX. For BILIOUS & NERVOUS DISORDERS

Such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Fullness and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness, and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c.

THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES.
BEECHAM'S PILLS TAKEN AS DIRECTED RESTORE FEMALES TO COMPLETE HEALTH.

For Sick Headache, Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, Constipation, Disordered Liver, etc.,

they ACT LIKE MAGIC, Strengthening the muscular System, restoring long-lost Complexion, bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. One of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PROPRIETARY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England. Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York, Sole Agents for the United States, who (if your druggist does not keep them) WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS on RECEIPT of PRICE, 25c. A BOX. (MENTION THIS PAPER.)

TRICESTIA

PEPSIN, BISMUTH, and NUX VOMICA.

In this preparation we have combined the remedies which above all others have become established as invaluable in the treatment of the various forms of digestive disorders. The Pepsin used is concentrated and of the highest digestive power. The Bismuth of the purest the market affords. The Nux Vomica is the best English extract.

The efficacy of this combination lies in its triple effect—that of the actual solvent action of the Pepsin on alimentary articles—the prevention of fermentation and formation of gases by the Bismuth, and the stimulant effect of the Nux Vomica on the secretion of the digestive fluids.

Prepared in Powder and Tablets.

PRICE, 25 AND 50 CENTS PER BOTTLE, POST-PAID.

A. J. DITMAN, Chemist,

BROADWAY AND BARCLAY STREET, NEW YORK.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE REGISTERING BANK?

It is a sure plan to save money. Dimes are registered each time, and cannot be taken out till $10.00 is saved. Simple, accurate, an elegant ornament. Over 100,000 sold during the last six months. Price, $1.50. Send for circular.

W. E. PIAGET, Sole Agent,

Mention this paper. 301 Broadway, New York.

SILKS.

In our new salesroom, in the ment, we will offer on Monday following specialties:

Figured India and China Silks, 50, 60, 65, and 75 cents per yard. Plain India and China Silks, 20-inch, 50 cents; 27-inch, 65 cents per yard, choice colorings. Colored Surahs, 20-inch, 50 cents; 24-inch, 65 cents per yard. Black Surahs, 24-inch, 55 cents per yard.

Black Faille Francaise, best made for wear, at 70 cents, 80 cents, and $1.25 per yard.

Black Satin Damasse; in Plain and Striped effects, at 60 cents per yard.

James McCreery & Co.
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.
NEW YORK.

BOOK WITH EVERY BAR SOAP

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS 1889.
W. BAKER & CO.
Breakfast Cocoa
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble
No Chemicals
are used in its preparation. It is three times the strength mixed with Starch, Arrowroot and is therefore far more economical than one cent a cup. Delicious, nourishing, strengthening, and suitable for invalids as well as persons.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester.

VanHouten's Cocoa
"BEST & GOES FARTHER"
The purest, most soluble—the original. Invented, patented and made in Holland. Delicate, stimulating, nutritious, and better for the nerves than tea and coffee. Ask for VAN HOUTEN'S and take no other.

LOVELY WOMAN
HOW CAN YOU TOLERATE Freckles, Yellow or Muddy Skin, Moth, Wrinkles, or any other form of facial disfigurement by using Dr. Ammett's French Arsenic Ointment. You can possess a beautiful complexion, and lovely complexion. Perfectly safe, and the only positive beautifier of the face. $1.00 per box by mail to any address. Fulton Mfg. Co., 72 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

YOU CAN LAY BY $500 TO $1000 a year by working for us. You can in any surer or simpler way than by using Dr. Ammett's French Arsenic Ointment. Those who work either whole or part time are not required for answer. JNO. C. WILSON, Publisher, Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

XIII., No. 17. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE CONVENTION OF WORKING WOMEN'S SOCIETIES—PICTURE OF THE MEETINGS IN NEW YORK LAST WEEK.
 SUFFERING WITHOUT PAIN. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Evening.
 THE RULER'S DAUGHTER. S. S. Lesson. By Mrs. L. Baxter.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS: The Poor Man's Prophet—The King in Disguise, Etc.
 HOW SOON WILL CHRIST COME? An Address by Mr. Thomas Parsons.
 WILL IT LIFT? A Serial Story. By Rev. J. Jackson Wray. (Continued.)
 A SUMMARY OF THE EVENTS OF THE WEEK.
 PORTRAITS OF THE LATE MR. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, REV. ALEXANDER M. MACKAY, AND CANON BUTLER.
 PICTURE OF THE FUNERAL OF A BUDDHIST HIGH PRIEST.

POSSESSING POSSESSIONS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER: An Expatriated Twin—A Wedding-Plate on a Coffin—Foreign Noblemen in New York—An Eccentric Judge in Perplexity, Etc.
 A FRIEND AT COURT: A Story of the S. S. Golden Text.

METROPOLITAN OPERA HOUSE

A Glimpse of the Soul—A Prayer Overheard—Barbarous Funeral Rites—An Argument in a Coal-Mine—A Friend's Fatal Plea—A Call to a Drinking Man—Desolation in Africa—Tod Lincoln's Intercession—Maternal Instinct Failing—A Colporteur's Tact—A Party of Four, Etc.

PARK AVENUE HOTEL

The Convention of Working Girls' Societies in New York—The Metropolitan Opera House—The Park Avenue Hotel—The First Session. (See page 260.)

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

SURGERY WITHOUT PAIN.

"The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear." Matt. ix: 5. The Call of the Early Ages for Surgeons—Their Disadvantages—Famous Surgeons of Ancient Times—A Galaxy of Living Surgeons—Tenacious Old Diseases Still Active—The World's Demand for Painless Cures—Christ the Only Surgeon Who Could Effect Them—His Fondness for Chronic Cases—The Sufferer of Eighteen Years—The Cripple of Thirty-eight Years—Chronic Cases of Confirmed Sinfulness—The Divine Oculist—Sufferers Still Needing Him—The Divine Aurist—The Restored Ear of Malchus—The Cure of the Deaf Mute—Might Have Had Large Fees—Will Cure all the World's Wounds.

"DOCTOR," I said to a distinguished surgeon, "do you not get worn out with constantly seeing so many wounds and broken bones and distortions of the human body?" "Oh no," he answered, "all that is overcome by my joy in curing them." A sublimer or more merciful art never came down from heaven than the art of surgery. Catastrophe and disease entered the earth so early that one of the first wants of the world was a doctor. Our crippled and agonized human race called for surgeon and family physician for many years before they came. The first surgeons who answered this call were ministers of religion, namely, the Egyptian priests. And what a grand thing if all clergymen were also doctors, all D. D.'s were M. D.'s, for there are so many cases where body and soul need treatment at the same time, consolation and medicine, theology and therapeutics. As the first surgeons of the world were also ministers of religion, may these two professions always be in full sympathy! But under what disadvantages worked, from the fact that the dissection of the human body was forbidden, first by the pagans and then by the early Christians! Apes, being the brutes most like the human race, were dissected, but no human body might be unfolded for physiological and anatomical exploration, and the surgeons had to guess what was inside the temple by looking at the outside of it. If they failed in any surgical operation they were persecuted and driven out of the city, as was Archagathus because of his bold but unsuccessful attempt to save a patient.

The Early Surgeons

But the world from the very beginning kept calling for surgeons, and their first skill is spoken of in Genesis, where they employed their art for the incisions of a sacred rite, God making surgery the predecessor of baptism; and we see it again in 11 Kings, where Ahaziah, the monarch, stepped on some cracked lattice-work in the palace, and it broke, and he fell from the upper to the lower floor, and he was so hurt that he sent to the village of Ekron for aid; and Esculapius, who wrought such wonders of surgery that he was deified, and temples were built for his worship at Pergamos; and Epidauros and Podelirius introduced for the relief of the world phlebotomy; and Damocedes cured the dislocated ancle of King Darius, and the cancer of his queen; and Hippocrates put successful hand on fractures, and introduced amputation; and Praxagoras removed obstructions; and Herophilus began dissection; and Erasistratus removed tumors; and Celsus, the Roman surgeon, removed cataract from the eye, and used the Spanish fly; and Heliodorus arrested disease of the throat; and Alexander, of Tralles, treated the eye; and Rhazas cauterized for the prevention of hydrophobia; and Percival Pott came to combat diseases of the spine; and we have had, among others, a Roux and a Larray in France, an Astley Cooper and an Abernethy in Great Britain, and a Valentine Mott and Willard Parker and Samuel D. Gross in America, and a galaxy of living surgeons as brilliant as their predecessors. What mighty progress in the baffling of disease since the crippled and sick of ancient cities were laid along the streets, that people who had ever been hurt or disordered in the same way might suggest what had better be done for the patients; and the priests of olden time, who were constantly suffering from colds received in walking barefoot over the temple pavements, had to prescribe for themselves, and fractures were considered so far beyond all human cure that instead of calling in the surgeons the people only invoked the gods!

In Our Own Century

But notwithstanding all the surgical and medical skill of the world, with what tenacity the old diseases hang on to the human race, and most of them are thousands of years old, and in our Bibles

we read of them: the carbuncles of Job and Hezekiah; the palpitation of the heart spoken of in Deuteronomy; the sun-stroke of a child carried from the fields of Shunem, crying, "My head! my head!" King Asa's disease of the feet, which was nothing but gout; defection of teeth, that called for dental surgery, the skill of which, quite equal to anything modern, is still seen in the filled molars of the unrolled Egyptian mummies; the ophthalmia caused by the juice of the newly ripe fig, leaving the people blind at the roadside; epilepsy, as in the case of the young man often falling into the fire, and oft into the water; hypochondria, as of Nebuchadnezzar, who imagined himself an ox, and going out to the fields to pasture; the withered hand, which in Bible times, as now, came from the destruction of the main artery, or from paralysis of the chief nerve; the wounds of the man whom the thieves left for dead on the road to Jericho, and whom the good Samaritan nursed, pouring in oil and wine—wine to cleanse the wound, and oil to soothe it. Thank God for what surgery has done for the alleviation and cure of human suffering!

The Anæsthetics.

But the world wanted a surgery without pain. Doctors Parre and Hickman and Simpson and Warner and Jackson, with their amazing genius, came on, and with their anæsthetics benumbed the patient with narcotics and ethers as the ancients did with hasheesh and mandrake, and quieted him for a while, but at the return of consciousness distress returned. The world has never seen but one surgeon who could straighten the crooked limb, cure the blind eye, or reconstruct the drum of a soundless ear, or reduce a dropsy, without any pain at the time, or any pain after, and that surgeon was Jesus Christ, the mightiest, grandest, gentlest, and most sympathetic surgeon the world ever saw, or ever will see; and He deserves the confidence and love and worship and hosanna of all the earth, and hallelujahs of all heaven. "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear."

I notice this Surgeon had a fondness for chronic cases. Many a surgeon, when he has had a patient brought to him, has said: "Why was not this attended to five years ago? You bring him to me after all power of recuperation is gone. You have waited until there is a complete contraction of the muscles, and false ligatures are formed, and ossification has taken place. It ought to have been attended to long ago." But seemed to prefer inveterate cases. One was a hemorrhage of twelve years, and He stopped it. Another was a curvature of eighteen years, and He straightened it. Another was cripple of thirty-eight years, and he walked out well. The eighteen-year patient was a woman bent almost double. If you could call a convention of all the surgeons of all the centuries, their combined skill could not cure that body so drawn out of shape. Perhaps they might stop it from getting any worse, perhaps they might contrive braces by which she might be made more comfortable, but it is, humanly speaking, incurable. Yet this divine Surgeon put both His hands on her, and from that doubled-up posture she began to rise, and the empurpled face began to take on a healthier hue, and the muscles began to relax from their rigidity, and the spinal column began to adjust itself, and the cords of the neck began to be more supple, and the eyes, that could see only the ground before, now looked into the face of Christ with gratitude, and up toward heaven in transport. Straight! After eighteen weary and exhaustive years, straight! The poise, the gracefulness, the beauty of Healthy Womanhood Reinstated.

Christ the Surgeon

The thirty-eight years' case was a man who lay on a mattress near the mineral baths at Jerusalem. There were five apartments where lame people were brought, so that they could get the advantage of these mineral baths. The stone basin of the bath is still visible although the waters have disappeared, probably through some convulsion of nature, the bath, one hundred and twenty feet long, forty feet wide, and eight feet deep. Ah, poor man; if you have been lame and helpless thirty-eight years, that mineral bath cannot restore you. Why, thirty-eight years is more than the average of human life! Nothing but the grave will cure you. But Christ the Surgeon walks along these baths, and I have no doubt passes by some patients who have been only six months disordered, or a year, or five years, and comes to the mattress of the man who had been nearly four decades helpless, and to this thirty-eight years' invalid said: "Wilt thou be made whole?" The question asked, not because the Surgeon did not understand the protractedness, the desperateness, of the case, but to evoke the man's pathetic narrative. "Wilt thou be made whole?" "Would you like to get well?" "Oh yes," says the man, "that is what I came to these mineral baths for; have tried everything. All the surgeons have failed and all the prescriptions have proved valueless, and I have got worse and worse, and I can neither move my hand or foot or head."

Oh, if I Could Only Be Free

from this pain of thirty-eight years!" Christ, Surgeon, could not stand that. Bending over the man on the mattress, and in a voice tender with sympathy, but strong with all omnipotence, He said: "Rise!" And the invalid instantly scrambles his knees, and then puts out his right foot, then his left foot, and then stood upright as though he had never been prostrated. While he stands looking at the Doctor with a joy too much to hold, the Doctor says: "Shoulder this mattress! for you are not only well enough to walk, but well enough to work, and start out from these mineral baths. Take up thy bed and walk!" Oh what a Surgeon for chronic cases then, and for chronic cases now!

This is not applicable so much to those who are only a little hurt of sin, and only for a short time, but to those prostrated of sin twelve years, eight years, thirty-eight years. Here is a Surgeon who can give immortal health. "Oh," you say, "I am so completely overthrown and trampled down with sin that I cannot rise." Are you flatter down this patient at the mineral baths? No. Then rise. In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, the Surgeon who offers you His right hand of help, I bid thee rise. Not cases of acute sin, but of chronic sin—those who have not prayed for thirty-eight years, those who have not been to church for thirty-eight years, those who have been gamblers, or libertines, or thieves, or outlaws, or blasphemers, or infidels, or atheists, or all these together, for thirty-eight years. A Christ for exigencies! A Christ for a dead man. A Surgeon who never loses a case!

The Divine Oculist.

In speaking of Christ as a surgeon, I must consider Him as an oculist, or eye doctor, and an aurist, or ear doctor. Was there ever such another oculist? That He was particularly sorry for the blind folks, I take from the fact that the most of His works was with the diseased optic nerves. He has not time to count up the number of blind people mentioned who got His cure. Two blind men in one house, also one who was born blind; so that it was not removal of a visual obstruction, but the creation of the cornea, and ciliary muscle, and crystalline lens, and retina, and optic nerve, and optic gland; also the blind man of Bethsaida, cured of the saliva which the Surgeon took from the tip of His own tongue and put upon the eyelids; also the blind men who sat by the wayside. In our civilized lands we have blindness enough, the ratio fearfully increasing, according to the statement of Boston and New York and Philadelphia oculists, because of the reading of morning and evening newspapers on the jolting cars by the multitudes who live in the city and come in to business. But in the lands where this Divine Surgeon operated, the cases of blindness were multiplied beyond everything; the particles of sand floating in the air, and the night dews falling on the eyelids of those who sat on the top of their houses; and in some of the lands it is estimated that twenty out of a hundred people are totally blind. Amid all that crowd of visionless people, what work for an oculist! A man who do not believe that more than one out of a hundred of that Surgeon's cures were reported. He went up and down among those people who were feeling slowly their way by staff, or led by the hand of a son or rope of dog, and introducing them to the fires of their own household, to the sunrise and the sunset, and the evening star. He just ran His hand over the expressionless face, and the shutters of their windows were swung open, and the restored man went home, crying, "I see! I see! Thank God, I see!"

Is Still Curing the Blind.

That is the oculist we all need. Till He touches our eyes we are blind. Yea, we were born blind. By nature we see things wrong if we see them at all. Our best eternal interests are put before us and we cannot see them. The glories of a loving and pardoning Christ are projected, and we do not behold them. Or we have a defective sight which makes the things of this world larger than the things of future, time bigger than eternity. Or we are or-blind and cannot see the difference between blackness of darkness forever and the roseate ring of an everlasting day. But Christ the geon comes in, and though we shrink back afraid ave Him touch us, yet He puts His fingers on closed eyelids of the soul, and midnight becomes noon; and we understand something of the joy he young man of the Bible, who, though he had er before been able to see his hand before his , now, by the touch of Christ, had two head- s kindled under his brow, cried out in language : confounded the jeering crowd who were den- g the Christ that had effected the cure, and ted to make Him out a bad man, "Whether be a sinner or no, I know not; one thing I know, : whereas I was blind, now I see."

The Divine Aurist.

ut this surgeon was just as wonderful as an st. Very few people have two good ears. Nine of ten people are particular to get on this or : side of you when they sit or walk or ride with , because they have one disabled ear. Many e both ears damaged, and what with the con- t racket of our great cities, and the catarrhal ibles that sweep through the land, it is remark- : that there are any good ears at all. Most won- ful instrument is the human ear. It is harp and m and telegraph and telephone and whispering- ery all in one. So delicate and wondrous is its truction that the most difficult of all things to nstruct is the auditory apparatus. The might- of scientists have put their skill to its retuning, sometimes they stop the progress of its deca- ce, or remove temporary obstructions, but not e than one really deaf ear out of a hundred usand is ever cured. It took a God to make ear, and it takes a God to mend it. That makes curious to see how Christ the surgeon succeeds in aurist.

Ve are told of only two cases He operated on as ear surgeon. His friend Peter, naturally high- pered, saw Christ insulted by a man by the name Malchus, and Peter let his sword fly, aiming at man's head, but the sword slipped and hewed the outside ear, and our Surgeon touched the eration and another ear bloomed in the place of one that had been slashed away. But it is not outside ear that hears. That is only a funnel gathering sound and pouring it into the hidden l more elaborate ear. On the beach of Lake lilee our Surgeon found

A Man Deaf and Dumb.

e patient dwelt in perpetual silence, and was echless. He could not hear a note of music or lap of thunder. He could not call father or ther or wife or children by name. What power i waken that dull tympanum or reach that chain small bones or revive that auditory nerve or open : gate between the brain and the outside world? e Surgeon put His fingers in the deaf ears and tated them, and kept on agitating them until : vibration gave vital energy to all the dead parts, l they responded, and when our Surgeon with- ew His fingers from the ears, the two tunnels of nd were clear for all sweet voices of music and endship. For the first time in his life he heard : dash of the waves of Galilee. Through the ert of painful silence had been built a king's hway of resonance and acclamation. But yet was dumb. No word had ever leaped over his . Speech was chained under his tongue. Vocal- tion and accentuation were to him an impossi- bility. He could express neither love nor indigna- n nor worship. Our Surgeon, having ll now unloose the shackle of his tongue. e Surgeon will use the same liniment or salve at He used on two occasions for the cure of blind ple, namely, the moisture of His own mouth. e application is made. And lo, the rigidity of e dumb tongue is relaxed, and between the ngue and teeth were born a whole vocabulary, d words flew into expression. He not only heard t he talked. One gate of his body swung in to : sound enter, and the other gate swung out to t sound depart. Why is it that while other sur- ons used knives and forceps and probes and ectroscopes, this Surgeon used only the ointment His own lips? To show that all the curative ver we ever feel comes straight from Christ. nd if He touches us not, we shall be deaf as a rock nd dumb as a tomb. Oh thou greatest of all aurists, mpel us to hear and help us to speak!

Unbarred His Ear,

But what were the Surgeon's fees for all these cures of eyes and ears and tongues and withered hands and crooked backs? The skill and the pain- lessness of the operations were worth hundreds and thousands of dollars. Do not think that the cases He took were all moneyless. Did He not treat the nobleman's son? Did He not doctor the ruler's daughter? Did He not effect a cure in the house of a centurion of great wealth, who had out of his own pocket built a synagogue? They

Would Have Paid Him Large Fees,

and there were hundreds of wealthy people in Jeru- salem, and among the merchant castles along Lake Tiberias, who would have given this Surgeon houses and lands and all they had for such cures as He could effect. For critical cases in our time great surgeons have received a thousand dollars, five thousand dollars, and, in one case I know of, fifty thousand dollars, but the Surgeon of whom I speak received not a shekel, not a penny, not a farthing. In His whole earthly life, we know of His having had but sixty-two and a half cents. When His taxes were due, by His omniscience He knew of a fish in the sea which had swallowed a piece of silver money, as fish are apt to swallow anything bright, and He sent Peter with a hook which brought up that fish, and from its mouth was extracted a Roman stater, or sixty-two and a half cents, the only money He ever had; and that He paid out for taxes. This greatest Surgeon of all the centuries gave all His services then, and offers all His ser- vices now, free of all charge.

"Without Money,

and without price" you may spiritually have your blind eyes opened, and your deaf ears unbarred, and your dumb tongues loosened, and your wounds healed, and your soul saved. If Christian people get hurt of body, mind, or soul, let them remember that surgery is apt to hurt, but it cures, and you can afford present pain for future glory. Beside that, there are powerful anesthetics in the divine promises that soothe and alleviate. No ether or chloroform or cocaine ever made one so superior to distress as a few drops of that magnificent anodyne: "All things work together for good to those who love God;" "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

What a grand thing for our poor human race when this Surgeon shall have completed the treat- ment of all the world's wounds! The day will come when there will be no more hospitals, for there will be no more sick, and no more eye and ear infirma- ries, for there will be no more blind or deaf, and no more deserts, for the round earth shall be brought under arboriculture, and no more blizzards or sun- strokes, for the atmosphere will be expurgated of scorch and chill, and no more war for the swords shall come out of the foundry bent into pruning- hooks. While we shall see the victims of accident or malforma- tion, or hereditary ills on earth, become the athletes in Elysian fields. Who is that man with such bril- liant eyes close before the throne? Why, that is the man who, near Jericho, was blind, and our Surgeon cured his ophthalmia! Who is that erect and grace- ful and queenly woman before the throne? That was the one whom our Surgeon found bent almost double, and could in no wise lift up herself, and He made her straight. Who is that listening with such rapture to the music of heaven, solo melting into chorus, cymbal responding to trumpet, and then himself joining in the anthem? Why, that is the man whom our Surgeon found deaf and dumb on the beach of Galilee, and by two touches opened ear-gate and mouth-gate. Who is that around whom the crowds are gathering with admiring look and thanksgiving, and cries of "Oh, what He did for me! Oh, what He did for my family! Oh, what He did for the world!" That is the Surgeon of all the centuries, the Oculist, the Aurist, the Emanci- pator, the Saviour. No pay he took on earth. Come, now, and let all heaven pay Him with worship that shall never end, and a love that shall never die. On His head be all the crowns! In His hands be all the sceptres! and at His feet be all the worlds!

In the Heavenly Country

"The Christian Herald" Binder.—Numerous applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely. A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

The Poor Man's Prophet.*

AMOS is specially the poor man's prophet, for he was a poor man himself; not a courtier like Isaiah, or a priest like Jeremiah, or a sage like Daniel; but a herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit in Tekoa, near Bethlehem, where Amos was born. What was the secret of this inspired herdsman's strength? He believed and preached the kingdom of God and His righteousness; the simple but infinite difference between right and wrong, and the certain doom of wrong, if wrong was persisted in. No wonder that the Israelites thought Amos a most troublesome and insolent person. No wonder that the smooth priest Amaziah begged him to begone, and talk in that way some- where else. The two could no more work together than fire and water. Amos wanted to make men repent of their sins, while Amaziah wanted only to make them easy in their minds; and no man can do both at once. When a man dares to preach like Amos, he is no more likely to be popular with the wicked world than Amos was popular, or St. Paul was popular, or our Lord Jesus Christ,

The King in Disguise.

Suppose that at some meeting of citizens, publicly convened for deliberation, an individual, abject in mien and poor in apparel, should present himself for our notice; and that, when he proceeded to address us in language of serious admonition, we re- sented what we reckoned his presumption, repressed him, and turned him out with abuse, our conduct would be not a little censurable, as a breach of the great law of the fraternity of all men, and a viola- tion of the rights of citizenship. Well, we have expelled him from our assembly; but there he is back, with the crown of royalty on his head. How much more criminal it would be to treat him with indignity now. His flesh is now the flesh of a king; it is sacred; touch it not for harm; protect it with loyal care. The divine nature of Christ was a crown to His human nature; not changing that human, so as to render it essentially different from ours, but giving it official pre-eminence—royalizing it. What must sin be in the judgment of Heaven, that, when He who was crowned with the diadem of Godhead presented Himself on our behalf, His substitution was not refused as if it had been exorbitant to ask so much? Does the kingly crown save the king from feeling like other men? He felt as keenly as we feel—even more keenly; for in mental suffer- ing, at least, the nature, being more refined, is nec- essarily more sensitive in proportion as it is sinless.

Heredity.

We are tempted at times to say, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." That is, we are punished not for what we have done wrong, but for what our fathers did wrong. Men complain of their ill luck and bad chance, as they call it, till they complain of God, and say, as the Jews said in Ezekiel's time: God's ways are unequal, partial, unfair.

God does visit the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation—but of whom? Of them that hate Him. If a family, or a class, or a whole nation become incorrigibly profligate, foolish, base—in three or four genera- tions they will either die out or vanish. Whole na- tions will sink thus; as the Jews sank in Ezekiel's time, and again in our Lord's time; and be con- quered, trampled on, counted for nothing, because they were worth nothing.

But suppose that the children, when their fath- ers' sins are visited on them, are not incorrigible. Suppose they are like the wise son of whom Ezekiel speaks (18 : 14), who seeth all his father's sins, and doeth not such like—then has not God been mercif- ul and kind to him in visiting his father's sins on him? He has. God is justified therein. His eter- nal laws of natural retribution, severe as they are, have worked in love and in mercy if they have taught the young man the ruinousness, the deadl- iness, of sin. Men fall by sin; they rise again by re- pentance and amendment. They rise—they enter into their new life weak and wounded from their own fault. But they enter in, and from that day things begin to mend—the weather begins to clear; the soil begins to yield again; punishment gradu- ally ceases when it has done its work; the weight lightens, the wounds heal, the weakness strength- ens, and they are made men of again and saved.

* From The Sermon Bible: Isaiah to Malachi, the fourth of the volumes on the Old Testament, containing extracts from the sermons of famous preachers. Pp. 511; price $1.50. Pub- lished by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

THE CONVENTION OF WORKING GIRLS' SOCIETIES IN NEW YORK LAST WEEK.

(See illustration on first page.)

ONE of the most remarkable conventions of our time assembled in New York last week. It was a convention composed exclusively of ladies, and was managed with a promptitude and business-like skill which compared favorably with conventions of the sterner sex. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in accordance with its principle of keeping its readers informed of the most interesting events of the day, presents this week a picture of a session in the Metropolitan Opera House, taken by our own artist, and pictures of the exterior of the building, and of the Park Avenue Hotel, the headquarters of the chief delegations.

The assembly called itself a Convention of Working Girls' Societies. At its first session, on April 15, eight hundred lady members, delegates, and friends of the association occupied every available seat in the spacious room; something like two hundred more stood about the aisles, and crowded in the corridors, listening eagerly to the proceedings. Miss Grace Dodge presided, and with her on the platform were the members of the Executive Committee in charge of the Convention: Miss Virginia Potter, Secretary; Mrs. Richard Irvin, Jr., Mrs. Gaspar Griswold, Mrs. Archibald Alexander, Miss Rebecca F. Morse, and Miss Jane B. Potter.

Origin of the Convention.

This Association of Working Girls' Societies was formed in February, 1884, with the following objects: To strengthen, to knit together, and to protect the interests of the several societies. To hold meetings, when the reports of the societies shall be presented, and to make more generally known their aims and advantages. To promote the general adoption of the principles upon which the societies have been formed. To secure the services, by co-operation, of good teachers, lady physicians, and lecturers. To keep the several societies informed of such classes and schemes as are proved valuable. To encourage and assist in the establishment of new societies.

The association is composed of three bodies: the New York association, numbering twenty-two clubs; Boston, eight clubs; and Brooklyn, eleven. Philadelphia has also most successful societies, headed by the New Century Working Women's Guild, and each of these various societies, as well as others, numbering 100 in all, had its representative among the delegates assembled at this great Convention, whose object was the discussion of the various interests of working girls' clubs, the promotion of a stronger bond of sympathy among existing clubs, the instruction of those who are organizing new societies, and the development of new schemes and ideas for the benefit of working girls.

The Component Societies.

The object or purpose of each individual club or society is to command for working girls opportunities for education and improvement, which the majority of them have missed through the necessity of becoming wage earners when scarcely more than children. By paying a small monthly due the members command pleasant rooms that are open every night for educational and social uses. By forming classes and sharing the expense, they obtain the services of a teacher in the various branches which would be beyond their reach individually, and through club membership they are associated as friends and co-laborers with some of the strongest, sweetest, and most cultured women of the cities in which they reside, through whose efforts, in addition to their own, the Working Woman's Club is not only a possibility but a living reality, whose far-reaching effects are difficult to determine.

The First Session

had for its chief feature an address by the President, Miss Grace Dodge, who enjoys the honor of being the founder of the first working girls' club in America, and the first directress of the association. She opened the meeting with a few earnest words of prayer, and then, after the reading of several papers of three minutes each, by various members, proceeded to deliver an address on "The Method and Value of Practical Talks in the Club." She incidentally explained one of the most valuable features of the organization. She said that club life grew and originated in talks on matters of importance in daily life. That in this age, when newspapers and books carry to us ideas of thought to the workers in factory or shop, the busy men and women have little time to develop thought or to formulate ideas, and little opportunity to discuss them, and that one club member had said she was glad to join the club just to "talk out" things as she never had done before. Their object is to discuss plain, every-day matters, to bring beautiful meaning into daily duties, to develop better ways of performing them, to strengthen character, and to prepare for the probable wifehood and motherhood of the future. The topics thus discussed form the subject of thought and conversation through the working-days that follow. Health, dress, laws of cities and States (especially those relating to tenement houses and factories), grandeur of womanhood, her powers and possibilities, and the deeper questions of purity and beauty of character. The leader presents the topic during the first fifteen minutes, the members discuss it the following quarter of an hour, and the leader gathers up the thoughts again, conclusively presenting them in suitable sequence. The topics are chosen by the members themselves frequently, and their discussion tends to give higher ideas of the power of womanhood, the dignity of labor, and the importance of the part that each life, however obscure, plays in the history of the world. In a word, to teach each member to become mistress of herself.

The Grand Celebration

was held in the evening, to which the public was admitted. That is, any lady; gentlemen were sternly excluded. The meeting took place in the large hall of Cooper Institute, which was filled to the doors, even the aisles being crowded. Miss Dodge again presided, and, as it was the sixth anniversary of the founding of the first Working Girls' Club, her opening prayer was one of thanksgiving for years of blessing. At its conclusion the multitude of sweet voices joined in singing the New York Club song: Here, where all is bright and happy, cheerful hearts we bring,

Leaving now our work for pleasure, gaily let us sing,
While the hours are passing, in our many ways
Heads and hands must labor through the busy days;
But we've learned the lesson work is right and blest,
So we sing rejoicing, knowing all is best.
While a tender longing grows in ev'ry heart,
Let us work together though we seem apart;

Let us work together though we seem apart.
Kindly thoughts for helping others make our burdens light,
While with light of loving friendship all our paths are bright.

CHORUS.

Close together still may we as friends and sisters stand,
Nothing can divide our ranks while clasping hand in hand.

The Report

was anything but the dry, formal statement which such documents usually are. Miss Dodge, in reading it, commenced with a reference to the first annual meeting five years ago, at which there were only 500 members, ten regular and two honorary societies. She went on to say: "To-night at our sixth annual meeting we have eighteen societies and eight honorary members in our association, and welcome delegates from about fifty societies, seventy-five co-operative societies, banded together to secure for individual members moral, social, and intellectual advancement. Our larger clubs number some 260 members each, and the smaller have at least thirty members. The classes taught include cooking, embroidery, plain sewing, music, millinery, stenography, German, first aid to the injured, and for Bible study. Practical talks and lectures are given in fifteen societies, some of the most valuable being those on the physical development of women.

"Our aim is toward self-support, and we congratulate certain societies upon approximating closely to it. The most beautiful work of the clubs is that accomplished for the benefit of some one outside the organization. Presents made for children at Christmas, the barrels filled with useful and needed articles to be given away, hospitals visited, and resolve clubs formed to 'lend a hand' wherever opportunity offers. In four societies

'Three P' Circles

have been started for the development of a more earnest type of womanhood, taking the motto Purity, Perseverance, and Pleasantness. The auxiliary society, which has been organized to receive legally the gifts which the General Council were powerless to hold, has already been presented with Miller Place, a summer home, where at medium rates working women spend their vacation, and $18,000 from the Young Women's Aid Society for the purpose of erecting another holiday house on the Miller property. The work of the society includes also the management of the concerts at Cooper Union

Hall, two of which have already been very successfully carried out. We hope to start a journal, which shall be the organ of our society. When the convention closes we hope also to organize

A B. W. and M. Branch

for the young brides, wives, and mothers who were formerly club members. And when we have wives, mothers, and babies all enrolled we shall hope still further that the brothers and young husbands shall unite and co-operate with us in developing means for self-culture and a higher life. In saying good night to you all, I can hardly do better than give you the New Year's motto of Truth, Tolerance, Courage, Love, and to wish for you all that we may grow more and more in true loyalty to each other, and may find ourselves, with the help of our Heavenly Father, nobler, truer, stronger women, endowed with all purity and character.

What a Woman Can Do

Mrs. E. P. Terhune (Marion Harland), told sisters with much practical good sense. She said, among other things: "Men say there are things a woman cannot do, carry an umbrella on a wet day, sharpen a pencil, or throw a stone. I asked a college boy why, and he said he supposed they couldn't 'because they weren't built that way.' But we can go on tilting our umbrellas, and whittling pencil points, and tossing instead of flinging pebbles, while we are secure in the knowledge that all men who ever wore beards, from Adam to Benjamin Harrison, never have and never will make a home. They try it in shanties, quarters, apartments, and even palaces, but a woman with a baby and a broom could make a better home out of a dry-goods box set up on one end, than a man could out of any or all these things.

"What kind of a wife can a girl make who never thinks of anything but her trade, her clothes, and herself? Empty-headed wives, who can talk of nothing that interests an intelligent man, are responsible for three-fourths of the drunkenness and unfaithfulness that makes hell of homes. You who are familiar with the streets containing the houses of workingmen know the type of woman I mean. How, when the wedding finery wears out, she goes about in tattered garments, collarless neck, shaggy shelled tresses, sitting aimlessly on doorsteps, with her elbows on her knees, or nursing pygmy children. God help them and her!"

Miss Potter's Address

was the chief feature of the business meetings on April 16. Miss Clara S. Potter is a daughter of Bishop Potter, of New York. She is a Directress of the New York Association of Working Girls' Societies, and the originator of the scheme for providing a co-operative seashore home where working girls can spend their vacation at a cost within their means. After several practical subjects, such as the formation of provident and benevolent circles, had been discussed, Miss Potter gave an address on Summer Vacations, in which she outlined the plans for the support of the seashore home, and showed how, by the principle of co-operation, unnecessary expense could be saved, and how, by skilful management the home might be made a means, at trifling cost, of recuperating physical and mental energies and affording thorough enjoyment. What is done in the same line in other cities was described to the Convention by Miss Emily L. Morgan, of Hartford, Conn., and Miss Haywood.

The evening was devoted to visits of the out-of-town delegates to the clubs of New York, where they were cordially and hospitably received, and entertained with exhibitions of calisthenic exercises.

The Closing Session

of this bright and dainty Convention was held on April 17, when Miss Corner, of Montreal, told of the Montreal Industrial Union; Miss Chapin read a paper from Miss Hurley, of Chicago, describing the Working Women's Improvement Association there; Miss Browning, of Lawrence, Mass., described the successful experiment conducted by the women of her town in getting up a club for the mill girls; Miss Smoot, of Washington, spoke of the one hundred assemblies of working girls which the Knights of Labor have established; Miss Graeff read Mrs. Turner's description of the efforts of the New Century Guild, of Philadelphia, to organize factory women into clubs; Miss Holman, of Philadelphia, told about "Lend a Hand" clubs in the mining regions; and Miss Jarvis, of Danielville, Conn., and Mrs. Warner, spoke of clubs which had been successfully maintained in country towns. A discussion then followed on the appointment of women as inspectors of factories.

The final hour was passed in the settlement of a permanent basis for the Association. The resolution had been framed by the committee appointed that special business, and were presented by its president, Miss Edith M. Howes, of Boston, Mass. They were as follows:

Whereas, This Convention realizes that the time comes for the formation of an organization; and Whereas, It is more than ever convinced of the need and value of co-operation; therefore be it resolved, That this Convention recommends the formation of a united association of working girls' societies, whose constitution and by-laws shall be submitted to each uniting association for its approval; a committee composed of the first directress and secretary of each association, be appointed, and his was adopted, thereby making the association permanent. Mrs. Lizzie Hayes presented a resolution complimentary to Miss Grace Dodge, the first man, which was passed with applause. Miss Edith M. Howes, of Boston, for the Committee on Resolutions, reported resolutions thanking the New York clubs for their hospitality, and Miss Dodge for "unfailing tact, promptitude, courtesy, and ability" as a presiding officer. That closed the convention. Miss Dodge spoke a few earnest words, and the assemblage was dismissed.

THE RULER'S DAUGHTER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lesson for May 4, Luke 8: 41-56; Golden Text, Luke 8: 50.

Conquest of the Keys—The Pledge and Proof of Resurrection Power—Guidance Assured—Jairus an Open Believer—Confidence in Christ's Power Deared—The Healing of the Woman—A Touch of Faith—The Healing Confessed—The Faith of Jairus Tested—The One Indispensable Condition—The Power of God not to be Used Mechanically.

THE Lord Jesus had already manifested His power over death in raising the widow's son from the dead. Glory be to God, He hath "the keys of hell of death"! (Rev. 1: 18.) He took on Him flesh and blood, that "through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2: 14), and take possession of the earth which had fallen into Satan's hand by the fall of man. In the Old Testament the appeal to man's faith in God is made on the ground of His power in the past; again and again we hear of Him who made heaven and earth; "in the New Testament the appeal to our faith is on the ground of Christ's resurrection, and His consequent power over death, which could raise Himself and others from the dead, how should He not be able to deliver us from sin and danger? He has conquered the mightier, let us trust Him for the lesser.

In the case of Jairus's daughter was a grave one; in Mark's gospel we read, "Behold there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; when he saw Him he fell at His feet, and besought Him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live" (ver. 22); the Lord Jesus was occupied in teaching the disciples of John in the house of the publican (Matt. 9: 10, 14, 18; compare Luke 5: 27-29); how should He decide which was more pressing of the two calls upon Him—to continue His teaching or to heal this one little girl? There was no indecision about the actions of the Lord Jesus, His one stringent, unvarying rule was: "I came down from Heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me." (John 8: 28.) The Father never failed to direct Him. His elder Brother, claimed the promise, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which I shall go; I will guide thee with mine eye." (John 8: 28.) God awakened His ear morning by morning "to hear as the learned," and He "was rebellious, neither turned away back" (Isa. 50: 10); thus He knew, and thus He did, His Father's will, and He could say, "I do always those things which please Him." (John 8: 29.)

And He has opened this way of blessedness and peace for us to walk in: indecision and hesitation are not of faith in God; any uncertainty about the will is a shadow of darkness upon our path; we say that we have fellowship with Him, and yet in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth."

He is Pledged to Guide us, if we rely on our own wisdom, on the counsel of men, or on anything else but His written Word. His direction, we are uncertain as to our way, because we are wanting in communion with Him. It is our privilege to do always, without exception, those things which please Him, but in order so to do, it is absolutely necessary that we should abandon our will, and cease to have a choice about anything except to choose Jesus.

Jairus had no doubt of the power of Jesus, and he was not afraid for others to know he had applied to Him. He did not call Him aside quietly and ask Him to come and see what He could do, as some do who make use of Jesus to try the experiment whether healing by faith will succeed with them, thus putting their Lord on a par with all kinds of other physicians and remedies, and by their very uncertainty rendering it impossible to Him to undertake their case. Jairus said, openly, before all who were around, and after declaring that his daughter was at the point of death, "Come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live." Jesus went with him without delay, "and much people followed Him and thronged Him" (Mark 5: 23, 24), no doubt out of curiosity to see what would be the issue. That they should regard it as an uncertain experiment was no hindrance to the Lord, but those who had applied for the exercise of His power must be able to count upon Him, and according to their faith it would be unto them.

It would seem that not a moment was to be lost, every breath might be the last; and it must have been an unspeakable trial to the faith and patience of the anxious father when there was an interruption on the way. "A woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any, came behind Him and touched the border of His garment: and immediately her issue of blood stancheth." What will not sufferers undergo to obtain relief! We have heard lately of in the end of his little finger. He had not the fortitude to endure it, and had the first joint amputated; the pain settled in the second joint, and he had that amputated; then the third, then the hand, then the whole arm: all in vain, the pain only increased. He tried all kinds of remedies, and at last took large doses of morphia, but the disease only continued to gain upon him; he "was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse."

A Doctor who had Intense Neuralgia

This poor woman had spent her all to obtain relief, and she had nothing for all her outlay; what a picture of those who fall back upon their own resources for deliverance from sin, for power in labor for the Lord, and also, as in this case, deliverance from disease! God can, and often does, make use of physicians to help those who suffer, but no remedy is certain in every case; the hand of God, which may bless it in the one may hinder it in another. At last the poor woman decided to abandon herself; strengthened, perhaps, by the faith of the father who had left his dying child's side, in the certainty of obtaining healing for her from the Lord Jesus, "she said within herself, If I may but touch His garment I shall be whole." (Matt. 9: 21.) She carried out her purpose, and after having touched Him, not before, "she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague." (Mark 5: 29.)

Having once received the blessing, she was responsible to acknowledge it; "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God." (Luke 12: 8.) "Jesus said, Who touched Me?" At first all denied, and "Peter and they that were with Him" reasoned with Him, that the multitude thronged and pressed Him, and many, of course, must touch Him under such circumstances. But "Jesus said,

Somebody Hath Touched Me:

for I perceive that virtue is gone out of Me." The pressure of the crowd and the touch of faith were totally different things; virtue did not go out of Jesus in response to the unthinking multitude, who were curious to see the issue of Jairus's appeal, but there was one who had cast her hopeless case upon Him who had just put His healing power to the proof, and had brought her sick body in contact with Him who "took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses;" and He who never could be unconscious of the smallest real application made to Him, who is sensitive to the smallest touch of faith, discovered that which had been taking place. "And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before Him, she declared unto Him before all the people for what cause she had touched Him, and how she was healed immediately. And He said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace."

The delay on the way to his house must have seemed to Jairus almost unpardonable and almost heartless, and while Jesus spake these last words to the woman, "there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Master." What a moment for the father! Had it not been for the delay of this woman, he might, perhaps, have been in time. Now all hope was gone. Moments like this come in the life of each of us, when such great impossibilities meet us, that we are ready to ask, "Can God Himself do anything at this juncture?" and we need to recall the mighty power of a Creator, and the death-conquering power of a Redeemer, that our faith may recover its balance. Jesus came to his help, and in His firm, decided, quiet way said, "Fear not; believe only, and she shall be made whole." He who spoke is Himself the "Resurrection and the Life."

"Fear Not; Believe Only."

This was, and is, God's essential condition and requisite from man, in order that Jesus may do His mighty works. To fear, after we have committed anything fully to the hands of Jesus, is to imply either want of will or want of power in Him to undertake it. "Fear not," in its frequent occurrence in the Word of God is not simply an exhortation, or an encouragement which we can take or leave at pleasure; it is a distinct command, which we sin in disobeying. "Believe only, and she shall be made whole;" this made the restoration of his daughter dependent on Jairus's faith.

When Jesus came to the house, He took with Him only those whom He could count upon. The multitude, whose curiosity had been aroused, were not permitted to be spectators of the power of Christ's resurrection, already to be manifested upon the dead. Peter, who knew He was the Christ, James, the first apostle who should die for His sake, and John, "whom Jesus loved," were the band of first-fruits chosen to be with Him at this solemn moment, "and the father and mother of the maiden." But within the house there were others, whose unbelief might be a hindrance, and He said, "Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth," for death is sleep in the eyes of Him who hath the keys of death. "And they laughed Him to scorn, knowing that she was dead."

And He Put Them All Out;—

the atmosphere of unbelief was too heavy for the Son of God to breathe. Let us learn a lesson here—that the work of God can never be done mechanically. Some Christians will send to ask prayer for a certain thing from many prayer-meetings, thinking that the greater the number of Christians who pray for the thing, the more likely will the answer be. Is not this counting upon man rather than upon God? Real prayer is the work of the Holy Ghost through us, and we cannot command it as we would turn on a tap. There are some believers who are too little imbued with the sense of God's intense holiness to take really upon them some subjects of prayer, and it is only when God has prepared the heart by a continual consciousness of His near, solemn presence that we can draw nigh and put to the test a power of God which, to the eyes of men, has long lain dormant. When Jesus was there alone with the parents and His chosen three apostles, He took the corpse by the hand and said, "Maid, arise! and her spirit came again, and she arose straightway; and He commanded to give her meat." And then He who had insisted on the open confession of the woman with the issue of blood, charged the parents of the girl to "tell no man what was done." He would not that a young girl should be a centre of attraction; let her learn to be modest and retiring, while the woman who had sought so long in vain for help owed it to the honor of Jesus to speak of what had been done in her.

A PARTY OF FOUR.

AT one of his meetings in connection with the present Temperance revival at Toronto, Canada, Joe Hess enlisted the earnest attention of a great audience when, in touching and effective language, he told the story of what became of "the other three fellers" who were with him the night he entered the Burdick meeting in Rochester, N. Y. Hess came out a reformed man. The others pursued their evil ways. To-day one is in Auburn State prison, serving out a term for murder committed the day following Hess's reformation. The second, within ten days of that memorable night, committed suicide; the third is in Joliet State prison, under a fifteen years' sentence for a terrible crime, "Drink," in the words of Hess, "did it all."

HOW SOON WILL CHRIST COME?

An Address by Mr. Thomas Parsons.

I HAVE been converted now for forty years, and the second coming of Christ was a dark thing to me before I was converted, but I was converted in the Church of England by a sermon on the Coming of Christ. I thought, if Christ should come now I am not fit to meet Him. Yet when He rolled the burden of unforgiven sins off my breast through believing on His precious blood, the doctrine of His Second Advent became the sweetest portion of the Book of God. The very thought of this event has prompted me to work zealously for Him for many years past.

Now, God has in these last days shown His servants the very time when the Lord will come, as I will now proceed to explain.

Daniel's Prophetic Dates

I am going to deal with as far as the Holy Ghost will enable me. In Dan. 8:14, we read that one Saint came unto another saint, and said, "How long shall be the vision appertaining to the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation, to give both the Sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" and the answer was, "Unto 2,300 years, then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed." In Dan. 9:25 we read, that from the going forth of the command to rebuild Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince being cut off, there were to be three-score and two weeks. These weeks, although no doubt to be in the future fulfilled as weeks of days, are nevertheless held by thousands of theologians to have been fulfilled in the past as weeks of years, that is to say, as 483 years ending with Messiah the Prince being cut off. King Artaxerxes in the 20th year of his reign commanded Nehemiah, his cupbearer, to go and rebuild Jerusalem, not merely to rebuild the temple as commanded to Ezra. If you look in the margin by the side of Nehemiah 2 you will find that this command was given in Nisan 445 B. C. and Christ was "cut off" in the month Nisan, or April, in Passover week in A. D. 39, exactly 483 years after Nisan B. C. 445. Still further, these 69 weeks or 483 years were stated in Dan. 9:24 to be "determined" or divided off from the 2,300 years mentioned in Dan. 8:14, and in fact to be or portion of the 2,300 years, which therefore similarly and simultaneously began in Passover Week in Nisan B. C. 445 and consequently ended in Passover Week 1856, which point of time likewise is the end of the 1,290 years of the desolation of the Holy Land by the combined Papal and Mohammedan powers commencing in 566 A. D. The great event on the last day of Passover Week 1856, was the signing of the Crimean War Treaty of Peace, in connection with which the cleansing of the sanctuary of the Holy Land from Mohammedan tyranny commenced. The two dates of the 2,300 and 1,290 years ended then simultaneously in 1856.

The First Section

I can well recollect that year, for I happened to be in the Strangers' Gallery in the House of Parliament when Lord Palmerston, on Monday, April 28, 1856, brought in a copy of that Treaty of Peace granting religious liberty to all subjects of the Sultan in Turkey and the Holy Land. That was the commenced Overthrow of the Mohammedan Power.

Before that day it was death to a Turk or a Mohammedan to change his religion. I studied at the Church Missionary College, and a fellow student, John Williams by name, had a brother who was only allowed six days to flee from Constantinople when it became known that he was a Christian, and this John Williams had to flee too, and that was how he came to England. After that treaty, however, these two brothers went back to their own country, and have since lived there safely.

But you will ask, What has this to do with 1901? Let me take you to the last chapter of Daniel, and there you will find two dates. How long shall this desolation exist? "From the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, shall be 1,200 years." The 1,290 years commenced in 566, and ended in 1856, which was also the end of the 2,300 years from B. C. 445. Now read the next verse in the last chapter of Daniel, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the end of the 1,335 years." Here we have 45 years in excess of the 1,290, and 45 years starting on the last day of Passover Week 1856, when the 1,290 years ended, must end on the last day of Passover Week, April 11, 1901, which will thus be

The Last Day of this Age.

But there are many events to happen between now and the End of this Age, on April 11, 1901. And the most important of these coming events is the Advent of Christ as a Bridegroom "in the air" to translate alive to heaven 144,000 living Christians on 5th March, 1896, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon (by Jerusalem time), that being the time of the evening sacrifice in the temple at Jerusalem, and the Ninth Hour at which Christ was crucified. Six years, then, from to-day we prove from these Scriptures that Messiah will come, i. e., on the 5th March 1896. As a prelude to this event, there will be a command sent forth to rebuild the modern Jerusalem on November 8, 1894, exactly 2,345 literal days before the Last Day, April 11, 1901, just as the ancient command went forth 2,345 years before 1901. And then from November 8, 1894, there will be Sixty-nine weeks of literal days to the Second Advent of Christ on March 5, 1896, just as there were Sixty-nine Weeks of years from B. C. 445 to Christ being cut off at His First Advent in A. D. 39. (Dan. 9:25.)

And even some time before this momentous command to rebuild Jerusalem on November 8, 1894, there will be the greatest European war ever known, beginning in this year 1890 or 1891 in order to change more than 20 States in Caesar's Roman World into Daniel's Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms.

The Franco-Prussian War of 1870 was terrible, but not on such a vast scale as that which is to occur before the close of 1891. There never has been such a war as this will be. Instead of, like the Crimean War, involving only some, it will involve all the nations of Europe. Are they not preparing for it? And this will be the fulfilment of the "wars and rumors of war" foretold by Christ to be a sign of His Second Coming. What are all the millions of soldiers going to do? What are they preparing for? God has told us in His Word. What the people of the world know not, God's people know. There will be transforming the 23 kingdoms of the Continent into a Confederation of Ten Kingdoms prefigured by the ten toes of the image in Dan. 2:45, and Dan. 7:24. There you read about the image with the head of gold, the breast of silver, loins of brass, and the two iron legs made with an admixture of clay. We are now close down to the ten toes of the image. What do these ten toes consist of? Not of iron or clay, but of iron mixed with clay. That means Monarchy and Democracy. That means that the workingmen will all exercise governmental power as well as the monarchs. This is a time when workingmen are confederating themselves in companies, and assuming more control of their respective countries.

A Gigantic War

After the formation of the Ten Kingdoms, about 1892, the Antichrist will rise as a Little Sovereign near Macedonia, and become King of Syria about 1894, and will make a Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews according to Dan. 9:27, from Passover Week, 1894, to Passover Week, 1901. He will be a Napoleon, because his number is 666, according to the Greek alphabet. I believe God is able to raise a man up from the grave, if needs be, and I expect that Antichrist (as held by many expositors) will be a man who once lived and died, and will come up out of the bottomless pit to carry out the purposes of the Eternal One. He is called that was, and is not, and yet shall ascend from the bottomless pit, and is wounded to death and healed of his mortal wound," as stated in Rev. 17:11 and 13:3.

"The Wild Beast"

Now, this Antichrist is the "little horn" that is to arise in some part of the present Turkish Empire, probably near the top of Greece. He will get power over three of the Ten Kingdoms at first, for he is to pluck up three of the ten horns. But later on, about 1897, by becoming the leader of the Socialists and Communists, he shall subdue all the Ten Kingdoms of the European Confederacy. But from 1894 to 1897, he will only be King of Syria, King of the North, as it says in Dan. 11:21, 40; ultimately he will conquer the whole of the Roman Empire

As it was in the Days of Cæsar.

To the Jew this Napoleon will make himself a Jew. He will be a man that is wily and has a long head. In order to protect Jews in the city of Jerusalem from Russia and adjacent countries, he will say, "I will help you to re-establish yourselves in Jerusalem. I will make a league with you for seven years. You shall have your own temple and sacrifices, again, as in the days of yore." (Dan. 9:27.) To the Mohammedans he will say, "I am your Mahdi,

I will do more for you than any Mahdi ever did before," and in this way he will go on until he finally becomes the great Antichrist. He will then set up his own image in the Jewish Temple; and he will not only do that, but he will set it up in every temple and every public place throughout his dominions. Like Nebuchadnezzar he will set up an image, and compel every one to fall down and worship him, and those who do it will be compelled to bear his name, which will be signified by the number 666 on their foreheads and on their hands. Then every one who will not worship the image will receive the number, we are told, will be put to death and we are told they will be beheaded (Rev. 20:10) most probably by the guillotine, as that is the customary mode of execution on the Continent. Millions will worship this image or forfeit their lives, this being the terrible time of which Daniel speaks. May God in His mercy save you and me from a time as that!

WILL IT LIFT?

THE STORY OF A FOG.

By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,

Author of "Simon Holmes," "Nestleton Magna," "The New Mellowdew," etc., etc.

(Continued from page 267.)

WHEN Jared Higginbotham entered the kitchen, Jimmie Sladd was seated in the chaise longue, apparently dozing under the influence of the welcome warmth. Passing into the bar, he found it unoccupied; the auction sale in Faringdon had drawn the usual habitués of that quarter to "King's Head," and the "Hilldrop Inn" was that evening in the shade. The barmaid had nothing to do, and she and her mistress, a quiet, somewhat ailing woman, were seated in a little parlour behind the bar engaged on some important work connected with a "Sunday dress."

Jared went up-stairs; but why did he walk softly, and move along with such a stealthy step? He had no business in Mr. Allanson's room, he looked and acted as though he knew he was not. He closed the door after him, turned the key quickly, and silently drew down the blinds, and set alight the wax candles standing on the sideboard. Then his eye fell on a small chest which stood in the corner just behind his guest's armchair; he had every reason to believe that the smaller box, the box that held the money, was kept in that chest. The chest was locked.

A feeling of relief followed that discovery—the last faint impulse of honesty. It was followed by a turn by strong vexation. Open it he must! But how? Leaning against the door he heard a faint jingle. Mr. Allanson had hung his overcoat behind it, and the noise was the noise of keys. Surely the owner must have put them there by accident.

This man could congratulate himself on his good fortune, could even regard it as a good omen, for as a token that the gods were willing. The chest was opened, the treasure-box extracted, the chest was refastened, the keys were replaced, and in a few moments, gliding through the shadows and into the night—the now black winter's night—the thief was hurrying through the wood, across the fields, and soon the treasure-box was hidden, hidden cunningly and well, in a heap of crumbling fragments of sculptured stones and other débris covered with a thick tangle of nettles, brambles, briars, and rank grass, among the ruins of St. Edward's Abbey.

The evil work was quickly done; as quickly as the thief returned, and entered the inn unnoted, whistling the bars of a familiar song, and thinking how easily, how very easily, the deed was done. Jimmie Sladd still sat by the kitchen hearth. "Well, Jimmie," said Jared, "you know the value of a warm corner on a night like this. Have you been to the sale?"

"Nay, not I, marry," was Jimmie's reply. "I keep pretty close by my own hearth this winter weather. I shouldn't have come here to-night when I was here last night in Mr. Allanson's room. He lent me his great-coat to go 'ome wi', an' it might bring it home to-day. He said if he wanted I might hang it up behind his door. Mrs. Higginbotham said I might go an' hang it up myself, so I did, an' I've been here ever since. It's no work gettin' away again."

Jared Higginbotham was surprised at what he heard, and in that moment another devil, somefold worse than the last, entered his heart.

Jimmie Sladd was to bear vicariously the blame and punishment of the actual thief. "He a top of something to warm you, Jimmie, before you go. I'll brew a cordial for you," said Jared. "Thank you kindly," responded Jimmie, nothing at all.

The cordial, in the shape of some kind of mulled wine, was speedily forthcoming, and under the influence of the potent beverage Jimmie soon dropped leep. Taking his colored pocket-handkerchief from the pocket of the shepherd's smock, Jared blew the stairs again, dropped it behind the chest, and dropped also a coin from his own pocket to bear it company. He returned to find a neighboring farmer seated on the long settle near the fire. "Come, Jimmie," said Jared, loudly, "you had better go home."

The shepherd roused himself and said, "Bless me, I didn't know a' I'd gone to sleep."

No: folks seldom do, Jimmie, till they wake up in the morning," said Jared. "Did I understand you to say that you had been in Mr. Allanson's room to-night?"

"Yes, I shouldn't ha' gone, but—"

"No, you shouldn't!" said Jared, sharply, closing the door on the retreating shepherd. And then turning to the farmer, he said, "He's a cunning customer, that praying Jimmie. What business did he up-stairs, I should like to know?"

In the course of the following day, Gilbert Craske or Richard Allanson, for the time being—returned to his quarters at Hilldrop Inn. He was in capital spirits. He had dearly desired to become the owner of Hilldrop Manor, and now the coveted possession was his very own. He had paid a considerable deposit, and had received preliminary papers which gave him an indisputable claim upon the property, the remainder of the purchase-money was paid down on a certain date, which had been fixed by mutual agreement.

When this matter had come up, Gilbert had made a very early day for the final payment. He had most of the money by him, and his thoughts were to conclude the purchase forthwith, and thus make assurance doubly sure. But the local solicitor whom he had engaged to look after his interests in the matter, and to conduct the transaction through, had strongly urged him to take the longer period for payment that the sellers would allow. "You see," said Mr. Varley, his man of law, "that I give you time to overhaul again, not only all the deeds pertaining to the title, but the condition of the estate itself, and if matters should turn out unsatisfactory—I don't say they will, but if they should—why, you can withdraw from the transaction. You had better lose the deposit than find it you have made a mistake after the purchase is complete."

When the "screw" was brought to bear on the attorney for the other side, that legal gentleman proved very willing to agree to an extended term. "The fact is," said he, "that but for the extravagance of the present proprietor there would have been no need to sell the estate at all; and provided that good security is forthcoming, it will really be no detriment for me, as the owner's representative, to take care of his interests by keeping so large a sum of his loose hands for awhile." So a not very early date was fixed, and so far the transaction was complete.

"Well, landlord," said Gilbert to Jared Higginbotham, as he passed upward to his own rooms; "you see I am very likely to be a near neighbor of yours. I saw you at the sale, so you know all about it."

"Yes, sir," said Jared, doing his best to look down to be self-possessed and cool; "I understand that you are to be my future landlord. I hope you—" "Oh, you need not trouble yourself about that," said Gilbert. "I am not likely to interfere with you. I have not the slightest intention of making any change in the tenancies; and, indeed, as I mean to put the whole property in good repair, I shall be very glad to do anything in reason that you may require. You've done very well, I'm told, in the past, as landlord of the "Hilldrop Inn," and I heartily hope you will do as well or even better in the time to come."

Just at that moment, Jared Higginbotham dearly wished that a certain box that he knew of was lying safely inside the chest in Mr. Allanson's room, instead of reposing amid the brambles and briars of the ruins of St. Hildred's Abbey. But the deed had been done, and "all the king's horses and all the king's men" could not undo the ill deeds of the night. Wrong-doing is sadly easy; undoing wrong is always hard, and at times is utterly impossible. Right-doing becomes an easier business the more it is followed up. "I wish I had," is a hopeless sentence; "I am glad I did," sleeps on a soft pillow and has no bad dreams.

As Gilbert closed his room door after him somewhat quickly, the great-coat hung thereupon swung against it, and the bunch of keys sent their familiar jingle to his ear. "What's that?" said Gilbert to himself, and inserting his hand in the pocket he brought them forth and looked at them with strong surprise. "Well, here's a go!" he continued, falling back on his favorite expression, "what an egregious donkey I must be, to be sure, to be capable of leaving my keys in such a place as that! It's lucky it was only dear old Jimmie Sladd that I lent my coat to, or I might have found myself in the wrong box—no, I should have lost the right box. There's a joke; but that would have been no joke for me."

In blissful ignorance, Gilbert sat and gave the reins to pleasant thought, dreamed day dreams, and built airy castles; in one of which he saw a cozy parlor in the Manor House, with an old-fashioned ingle, on which a glowing fire was burning, throwing a cheerful brightness on the pictures on the walls; himself seated in the one nook, and in the opposite a certain erstwhile widow, still fair and comely, through with much of silver in her hair—a face he had looked upon and loved in the young fresh years of long ago—a face he had last seen, and still loved, looking on him beneath a lighted lamp, and through the gloom of a London November fog. Then he heaved a sigh, long and heavy; and for awhile keys and inn and Manor House were all forgotten as he asked himself the questions, "Will it lift? Shall we ever meet again?"

Gilbert Craske was moody for awhile; then the maid-servant brought in his tea, and gradually, as he discussed the "cup that cheers," and the hot crumpets that bore it company, Richard became himself again, and dismissed the sighing and the wondering by saying to himself, "Cheer up, Gilbert; by God's help they must and shall be found."

After he had busied himself with the papers he had brought with him from the solicitor's office, he made a series of calculations with his pencil, and having got the figures to his mind, he took out his keys and turned to the strong chest that stood in the corner behind his chair. The night was chill, and Gilbert was in a mood to take things easy and make matters as comfortable as he could. So he drew the chest nearer to the fire, that he might enjoy its warmth while the while the contents of the chest should pass under his review.

This act disclosed the colored pocket-handkerchief lying between it and the wall. He took it up, and lo! something fell with a ringing sound, and rolled along the floor. In another moment Gilbert stood up in silent surprise, looking at a bright-faced coin lying in his palm. It bore a "speaking" likeness of the last King, but, alas! it could not "speak" the story as to how it came to be there. It flashed in the lamp-light, bright and shiny; but, alas! it could flash no telegram concerning the evil fingers that last had the handling of it, and had left it there.

"Well, this is a go!" said Gilbert, in a whisper, and he actually looked at the chest itself with a view to discover some crack or opening through which it might have dropped out from the inner store, forgetting that in that case it must have passed also through the side of the inner box before it could have seen the light. Forthwith he applied the key, opened wide the lid of the chest so that the light both of lamp and fire should fall within. His eye instinctively sought the corner in the chest where the box had lain; and found there naught but empty space. Dazed at the discovery, he hastily displaced the rest of the contents, but found no sign. A serious, anxious look overspread his face; for a moment or two he knelt upright, his two hands laid on the edge of the open chest, and stared blankly at the wall beyond. Then he slowly rose, walked to and fro across the room, and finally stood before the fire with a hand in each pocket, gazing into its red heart, as though he would read the secret there. He heaved a long-drawn sigh, as he said, "Well, this is a go!"

And it was a "go." So thoroughly a "go" that it was gone! and Gilbert Craske knew himself to be poorer by a very large sum than he was twenty-four hours before! Mum and moody, silent and sorrowful, Gilbert Craske sat long beside the fire, his elbows resting on the arms of his chair; his head bent low; his dreams and his air castles gone, gone with his vanished gear; and on his heart a great fear, a weight as of heaviest lead, as he thought—not of himself, true man, but of the mean, miserable thief, whoever he might be, who had sold his soul for gold.

He rang the bell; pulled the old-fashioned cord of plaited woolen with its heavy tassel at the end with unconscious vigor, and Jared Higginbotham, who had been seated in the bar, weakly strengthening his nerves with brandy, and waiting for that call, became ashy pale as the sound smote him like a knell, and half stopped the beating of his heart.

He did not answer it at once—he dared not; but called the servant-maid to go and see what was required. He took a turn or two up and down the stable-yard behind the inn, gathered himself together, and by the time he felt able to stand his ground, the maiden appeared at the kitchen door, and said, "Mr. Allanson would like to speak with you, if you are disengaged." How gladly would Jared Higginbotham have been "engaged," if thereby he might have shunned that interview! But the die was cast; his hand had cast it! and at all hazards he must bear the brunt.

Gilbert Craske had closed the chest, thrust it back into its place, and was seated calm and self-possessed, even to the holding of his long churchwarden pipe between his lips. "I saw that you were at the sale yesterday, landlord," said Gilbert, as one who felt inclined for a little gossip. "Did you bring anybody home with you? There were several strangers there, I think."

"No," said Jared, "not a soul. Business is wretchedly bad now. A couple of 'commercials' are all we have seen at Hilldrop this week."

A few meaningless remarks followed about the sale, and then Gilbert said, "I find a thing or two mislaid, and can't just put my hands upon them; has anybody been putting the room to rights?"

Jared answered, "No, sir; nothing but as usual. Nobody comes here but the mistress and the upper girl. Oh yes," he continued, as if it had struck him, "Jimmie Sladd was up here last night. He brought your great-coat back; and as you told him he might come and hang it behind the door, mistress let him do it. He stayed up a bit, warming his hands most likely, poor old chap; but, bless you, Jimmie wouldn't meddle with anything—not he. Maybe you've put the things aside somewhere and forgotten. Jimmie's all right."

Soon after the landlord left; but Gilbert Craske still sat silent and distraught. "Yes," said he, "Jimmie's all right, that I could swear, I think; but if Jimmie's all right, who's all wrong? Well, well, this is a go!" The abstraction of the box with its store of monied treasure had inflicted on Gilbert Craske a very serious loss, and had it occurred previously to the auction at which Hilldrop estate was sold, it would have made that event all but impossible, or at any rate would have led him to "think twice before he ventured on it." Now that the money had gone, with but small chance of being restored, Gilbert, with his customary promptitude, set himself to provide ways and means for paying down the purchase-money on the specified date, according to arrangement. His property in Australia was very large, and his son Gilbert, or "Gil," as his father familiarly and lovingly called him, had been left behind to conclude its transfer to certain colonial purchasers, and to wind up the whole of their affairs in that region. Then "Gil" was to follow his father to the old country, as he had elected to make England his future home.

Gilbert Craske was much relieved to find that there was time for a letter to reach his son, and time for his son to reach England in response to his call before the time expired on which the estate must either be paid for or forfeited. But there was little more than just time enough, and the matter brooked no delay. At once, therefore, he communicated with his son. He wrote a long letter—very, very long, as Jared Higginbotham thought, who could not avoid making frequent errands to Gilbert's private room to obtain an inkling of what was going on. At last the letter was sealed, addressed, and stamped, and when the writer was seen carrying it himself, Jared considerably offered to send it to the post. "No, thank you, landlord," said Gilbert, quite airily, "it is quite an important document, and has a good deal of fate behind it; I would rather see it safely in the post myself," and so saying, walked off to Faringham, leaving Jared with an uncomfortable flutter at the heart, as he wondered whose fate was in the balance with that formidable brief.

(To be Continued.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be made payable at Station D, New York.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we state that no change has been made in our terms to agents. They are allowed, on all ordinary subscriptions, the same commission as in former years.

WHAT WORK IS HONORABLE?

THE summer is not far away, and the students of colleges and seminaries with small means or no means at all, are already consulting where they shall go. Among the White Mountains, we have noticed, for the last few years, unusual intelligence and courtesy on the part of those who serve at the hotel tables. We found out that many of them were students from colleges and seminaries—young men and women who had taken this mode of replenishing their purses and getting the benefit of mountain air. We felt like applauding them. We have admiration for those who can be independent of the oppressive conventionalities of society. May not all of us practically adopt the Christian theory that any work is honorable that is useful? The slaves of an ignominious pride, how many kill themselves earning a living! We have tens of thousands of women in our cities, sitting in cold rooms, stabbing their life out with their needle, coughing their lungs into tubercles, and suffering the horrors of the social inquisition, for whom there wait plenty of healthy, happy homes in the country, if they would only, like these sons and daughters of Dartmouth and Northampton, consent to serve. We wish some one would explain to us how a sewing-machine is any more respectable than a churn, or a yardstick is better than a pitchfork. We want a new Declaration of Independence, signed by all the laboring classes. During very hard times two Italian artists called at our country home, asking if we did not want some sketching done, and they unrolled some elegant pictures, showing their fine capacity. We told them we had no desire for sketches, but we had a cistern to clean, and would pay them well for doing it. Off went their coats, and in a few hours the work was done, and their wages awarded. How much more honorable for them to do what they could get to do, rather than to wait for more adapted employment. Why did not the girls of Northampton spend their summers embroidering slippers or hemming handkerchiefs, and thus keep at work unobserved and more popular? Because they were not fools. They said: "Let us go up and see Mount Adams, and the Profile, and Mount Washington. We shall have to work only five hours a day, and all the time we will be gathering health and inspiration." Young men, those are the girls to seek when you want a wife, rather than the wheezing victims of ruinous work chosen because it is more popular. About the last thing one would want to marry is a medicine-chest. Why did not the students of Dartmouth, during their vacation, teach school? First, because teaching is a science, and they did not want to do three months of damage to the children of the common school. Secondly, because they wanted freedom from books as man makes them, and opportunity to open the ponderous tome of boulder and strata as God printed them. Churches and scientific institutions, these will be the men to call—brawny and independent, rather than the bilious, short-breathed, nerveless graduates, who, too proud to take healthful recreation, tumble at Commencement Day into the lap of society so many Greek roots.

GEORGE H. STUART.

A GRANDER philanthropist, a more diligent reformer, a more consecrated Christian, America never had than George H. Stuart, who has recently crossed the border-line between this and the better world. We remember him as the most magnetic presiding officer we ever saw take the chair in any patriotic or religious meeting. What he said before the speaker whom he introduced, and what he said afterward concerning that speaker, were often the most remarkable things of the occasion. But what Mr. Stuart did for wounded and dying soldiers will always be the most conspicuous chapter of his life. I was with him in many journeys, the object of which was to hold meetings to raise funds for the Christian Commission, of which he was the President. "Halt!" cried the army sentinel on one of the battle-fields of the Civil War, as Mr. Stuart, at midnight, was going from hospital to hospital, in the barns and farm-houses. "Halt! Advance, and give the countersign!" Mr. Stuart answered the guard by saying, "I do not know what your countersign is, but my countersign is the Lord Jesus Christ, in whose name I am looking after the wounded." "Oh," said the guard; "Mr. Stuart, is that you? I belonged to your Sunday-school class in Philadelphia. Pass on, Mr. Stuart." When this glorious old philanthropist a few days ago went into the radiant presence of his Lord, I am not positive as to what Christ first said to him in greeting, but I should not wonder if the first salutation was, "I was sick, and ye visited me." He was disciplined by the denomination to which he belonged for giving out and singing hymns of a version not authorized by that Church, but he has arrived now where, with all the Christian soldiers whom he consoled in their last hours, and a multitude that no man can number, he is singing, without hindrance or a criticism, from the Apocalyptic version, "Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Him who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever."

A DEFECT IN SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

BLACKBOARDS, circular seats, pictured walls, ventilated rooms, the "International Series," and more intellectual teachers, are some of the things upon which the Sabbath-schools of to-day must be congratulated above all their predecessors. We remember the Sabbath-schools of our boyhood with no great rapture. What with the old school-house, and the hard bench, and the hot Sabbath afternoon, and the exhausted atmosphere, and our new shoes that pinched, and our new hat that we feared might get spoiled, and the teacher who used to crack us about the head with a Bible when we were inattentive; we formed the idea that religious ways were not ways of pleasantness. In most things the Sabbath-school has advanced, and is the strongest wing of the Lord's host. In the great battle that now opens, we expect more from the infantry than from the heavy artillery, for it takes them so long to bring up their batteries. But in one respect the Sabbath-school has fallen back, and that is, in the verbatim memorizing of the Scriptures. It is well to get the general facts about Joseph and David and Christ, but nothing can take the place of verses "learned by heart." That idea is almost abandoned in our modern Sabbath-school. Neither the International Series of lessons nor anything else can atone for this. The children of to-day, when they go into the pulpits and business circles ten years hence, will not have a minute and accurate acquaintance with the Bible promises and warnings, as the men and women who were cultivated in the inferior Sabbath-school of thirty years ago.

What we want more than anything else for our children is the Bible packed away in their heads, so that they can in times of trouble and temptation recall the inspired passages without the omission of a word or the transposition of a sentence. God's Word is just right, and cannot afford to be twisted or misquoted. Long after we are dead our children will be assaulted by troubles, where the chapters of general facts about Joseph will not do them as much good as one passage like this, resurrected from their memory: "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee; neither shall the covenant of peace be removed, saith the Lord thy God, hath mercy on thee." We are not writing about abstraction, but crying out against an appalling evil, when we say that with very rare exceptions (so rare that we have not seen one for fifteen years) the Sabbath-schools of this country have abandoned the exact memorizing of the Scriptures. Let us proclaim Revolution. Let us add to all our magnificent modern Sabbath-school improvements the lost art. We do not need the impervious shield of Scripture promise half so much for ourselves as our children will need it. We are only in the morning skirmish; they will be in the Armageddon.

PARENTAL BLUNDERS.

A GREAT error prevalent in the training of children is the one-sided development of either the physical, intellectual, or moral nature at the expense of the others. Those, for instance, greatly mistaken who, while they are faithful in the intellectual and moral culture of children, forget the physical. The bright eyes half-quenched by night-study, the cramped chest that comes from too much bending over school desks, pale cheeks, and the gaunt bodies of multitudes of children, attest that physical development does not always go along with intellectual and moral. How do you suppose all the treasures of knowledge the child gets will look in a shattered casket? And how much will you give for the wealthiest cargo when it is put into a leaky ship? How can that bright, sharp blade of a child's attainments be wielded without any handle? What are brains worth without shoulders to carry them? What is a child with a magnificent mind, but an exhausted body? Better that a young man twenty-one go forth into the world without knowing A from Z, if he have health of body and energy to push his way through the world, than at twenty-one to enter upon active life, his head stuffed with Socrates and Herodotus and Bacon and La Placé, but no physical force to sustain him in the shock of earthly conflicts. From this infinite blunder parents how many have come out in life with genuine genius that could have piled Ossa upon Pelion, and mounted upon them to scale the heavens, and have laid down panting with physical exhaustion before a mole-hill. They who might have thrilled senates, and marshalled armies, and startled the world with the shock of their scientific batteries have passed their lives in picking up prescriptions for indigestion. George Washington, in early life was a poor speller, and spelled hat "h-a-double-t," and a ream of paper he spelled "rheam;" but I knew enough to spell out the independence of this country from foreign oppression. The knowledge of the schools is important, but there are other things quite as important.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Vexed Question as to State and Federal Jurisdiction involved in the shooting of Judge Terry California last summer was decided by the Supreme Court on April 14. It will be recollected that Terry was shot by a United States marshal, under the belief that he was about to murder Justice Field, of the Supreme Court. The State of California claimed the right to try the marshal for murder, but it was disputed on the ground that the federal courts alone had jurisdiction in the case, and they discharged the marshal. The Supreme Court now declares that he was properly discharged from custody. The gist of the decision is that the killing of Terry was done "in pursuance of the laws of the United States," and that the marshal is guilty of no crime under the laws of California. A matter for regret that in a case involving so important a principle the court was not unanimous. Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Lamar dissented.

The Relief for which the United States Supreme Court and many litigants have long been wishing appears to be now approaching. The delays in trying a case decided by the highest tribunal in the land have long been a scandal, and a source of annoyance and loss to suitors. There are now cases still undecided that were entered three years ago. There has, however, been a reluctance manifested to increase the number of justices in that court, and also a doubt whether an increase would not add to the difficulty. A measure which passed the Senate on April 15 embodies an ingenious method of dealing with it. It transfers to the district courts jurisdiction in a large number of cases which now are decided only in the Circuit Courts, and it computes the Circuit Courts Courts of Appeal, whose jurisdiction in the majority of cases will be final. The Supreme Court will thus be called upon to decide only cases of exceptional importance, which can be too numerous to overtax its powers of review. The Circuit Court is to be composed of three judges. This will involve the appointment of about fifteen new judges. The justices of the Supreme Court are also to be relieved of circuit duty. It is understood that this plan has the approval of both Congress and lawyers, and may be expected to expedite business.

The Pan-American Conference Practically Completed its labors on April 18. A difficulty arose at the last sitting, on the question of arbitration, the principle of the delegates being opposed to the general declaration "That the principle of conquest shall never hereafter be recognized as admissible under American law." After considerable debate Blaine solved the difficulty by proposing a substitute, which was adopted. It ran as follows: First, that the principle of conquest shall not, during the continuance of the treaty of arbitration, be recognized as admissible under American public law. Second, That all cessions of territory made during the continuance of the treaty of arbitration shall be void if made under threats of war or the presence of an armed force. Third, Any nation from which such cessions shall be exacted shall demand that the validity of the cessions so exacted shall be submitted to arbitration. Fourth, Any renunciation of the right to arbitration made under the conditions made in the second section shall be null and void. This agreement is a distinct success, which is worth all the trouble of the Conference. The most important results of the Conference besides this are the plans for the International railroad, and the steamship service. The subject of the International coin, which the Conference was expected to settle, is relegated to the meeting of a special Conference.

Regulation Governing Appropriations for Federal Buildings is endorsed by the House Committee on Post-Offices and post-roads. A measure which that Committee has ordered to be favorably reported provides that any town in the United States in which the annual postal receipts amount to $3,000 may have a new post-office erected with a special appropriation. It provides that an architect and superintendent of construction in the Post-Office Department shall prepare plans for the buildings of generally uniform exterior design and interior design and finish, at a cost not to exceed $25,000. The amount appropriated for these buildings is to be $10,000,000 for the year 1890-91, to be distributed at the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It is argued by the friends of this measure that it would save money to the Government in rental, at the same time that it would give the Congress of the necessity for a great deal of legislation. A report from the Postmaster-General shows that under the bill there would be about 1,500 towns, 174 of which are in New York, that would be entitled to have buildings erected for them, and that the cost would be about $30,000,000.

The Dispute With Canada on the Question of the sealing-ships which were seized last year by the United States revenue cutters, and their cargoes confiscated, is reported to have been settled. A press dispatch from a Washington correspondent, published last week, states that Mr. Blaine has conceded the rights of the Canadian ship-owners for compensation for the loss of their vessels. Minister Tupper estimates the damages at $200,000, and this amount is deemed moderate if the seizures were illegal. This admission is involved in the abandonment of Mr. Blaine's contention that Behring Sea is a closed sea under the exclusive jurisdiction of our Government, and it is only on this basis that the British and Canadian negotiators will consent to the signing of a treaty. Evidence showing the loss sustained by the owners of seized vessels has been laid before the conference by Mr. Tupper. In past times a dispute of this nature would not have been settled in friendly conference, but by reprisals, and possibly by war.

General Caprivi, the Successor of Prince Bismarck, made his inaugural speech to the Prussian Diet on April 15. It was chiefly of a personal character, and he expressly stated that he had no intention of disclosing the Government programme. He said that the inauguration of a new era was not to be expected, although a more harmonious solidarity would be manifested among the members of the Diet. The Chancellor said he would allow the widest scope to practical criticism, and would adopt what was good wherever it was found. He would co-operate with all persons having at heart the interests of Prussia and aiming to foster the monarchical feeling in Prussia and the national feeling throughout the Empire.

The Public in Paris and Berlin is Looking Forward with apprehension to the first of May. The mysterious entity which is supposed to exercise a limited control over the Labor Unions of the world is organizing simultaneous demonstrations for that day in all the capitals of Europe. In Paris, Berlin, and London there is to be a great procession of the workmen of the respective countries, who are to go from the country districts to the capitals and join their city brethren in an imposing demonstration. In Paris handbills by thousands have been distributed among the toilers of the city, setting forth the objects of the demonstration, chief among which are the reduction of the hours of the working day to eight, the limitation of female and children labor, and the suppression of night labor. Both the French and German Governments have issued a notice that no procession will be allowed. As the workmen of both cities appear resolved to carry out the programme, collisions with the authorities are feared.

The Outrageous Flogging to Death of the Russian lady in Siberia is put in a more heinous light by the later detailed reports than it was at first. A reputable medical journal states that Dr. Gurvich, the physician of the prison in which Mme. Sigida was flogged, was strongly opposed to the flogging. He furnished the governor of the prison with a certificate setting forth that Mme. Sigida was receiving treatment at his hands for heart disease. It had long been customary for prison officials to accept such a certificate as sufficient warrant for suspending their infliction of corporal punishment. But under the order of Baron Koneff, Governor-General of the province of the Amoor, directing that the prison rules should be rigidly enforced in the case of political prisoners, the governor of the prison decided that the flogging should be administered in spite of the physician. Dr. Gurvich thereupon remonstrated strenuously, and refused to be present at the flogging. Despite these remonstrances the lady was rudely seized, her clothes stripped from her in the presence of soldiers, she was thrown upon a bench, and held down while one hundred cruel blows fell upon her bared back.

The English Treasury Statement for the Year was explained to the House of Commons on April 17. It revealed a humiliating condition of social customs, though the Secretary of the Treasury had reason to congratulate himself and House on the financial results. John Bull has consumed so much beer and spirits during the past year that the Government's coffers are unexpectedly overflowing. The duth on beer alone, Mr. Goschen, the Secretary, said, had been more than he expected by $1,350,000. Commenting on the gross revenue from alcoholic beverages, which amounted to nearly $150,000,000, Mr. Goschen said that the figures showed a universal rush to the beer barrel, the spirit bottle, and the wine decanter. It was a circumstance that must be deplored. A closer examination would not diminish the surprise, for the largest increase had been, of all the spirits in the world, from rum! He had taken pains to discover who drank the rum. It was drunk mainly at seaports. The increase from rum had been twelve per cent.; from British spirits, seven per cent.; from wine, ten per cent.; from beer, four per cent.; from brandy, six per cent. In 1888 the number of drams taken reached 245,000,000; in 1889, 275,000,000. This increase had enabled him to pay $41,000,000 off the National debt. He proposed to lay increased duties both on spirits and beer, and to reduce the duty on tea for next year.

BRIEF NOTES.

The American Home Missionary Society makes the gratifying announcement that it is out of debt.

The next Ecumenical Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will be held in Firenze, Italy, in 1891.

The liquor dealers' organ in Chicago says that though a thousand-dollar license is legalized robbery, high license is preferable to prohibition.

Friends of the McAll Mission in Paris distributed 50,000 copies of the gospels, 22,000 religious newspapers, and over 250,000 tracts at the gates of the recent Exhibition.

The one hundred and second General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Thursday, May 15, 1890.

Mr. George Müller, the founder of the Bristol Orphanages, has returned safely from his extended missionary tour in India, China, Japan, and other parts of the world. He was absent about two and a half years.

Miss L. M. Von Finkelstein, the devoted laborer among the Jews in Palestine, has been married at Delhi, India, to Mr. C. E. Mountford, of that city. After a period of rest she purposes visiting the chief cities of India, giving her expositions of Palestine manners and customs.

A meeting on behalf of Indian and negro work was recently held in St. Paul's Church, Baltimore. General Armstrong, of the Hampton Institute, delivered an address. Several Indians and some of the colored students were present in school uniform. Two of the Indians explained the manner in which the school is taught.

The Revision question in the Presbyterian Church appears to be decided. Of the 212 Presbyteries 122 have now voted on the question. Of these 82 are in favor of revision, a majority of two to one. The Presbyteries which have thus far voted represent a large majority of the ministers and communicants of the Church.

Mr. Moody commenced his services in lower New York yesterday, by preaching in the Presbyterian church at Fourteenth Street and Second Avenue, and later, the same evening, in Emmanuel Chapel, in East Sixth Street, near Avenue D. Tickets are issued admitting holders up to ten minutes before the service begins, after which there is no restriction.

A call has been issued for a National Temperance Congress, to be held in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on May 14 and 15. At this meeting it is desired that all classes of temperance people shall be represented. Everyone who is opposed to the rum-shop is invited to assist in making the meeting a success. Among those whose names appear on the call are the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, ex-Judge Noah Davis, Clinton B. Fisk, Miss Frances Willard, the Rev. Dr. MacArthur, the Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, Dr. I. K. Funk, and John N. Stearns.

Various religious and philanthropic institutions have received large bequests under the will of Mrs. Charles H. Rogers, of Ravenswood, L. I. Among them the American Bible Society, the American Home Missionary Society, and the Seamen's Society get $5,000 each. The Tract Society and the Sunday-school Union of Philadelphia, get $10,000 each. The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations of New York, Jerry McAuley's Cremorne Mission, and the Home for the Friendless and Fallen, are among other beneficiaries. The aggregate amount of these bequests is $152,500.

Mr. E. P. Telford brought to a close on April 17 his six weeks of service for the churches of the New York City Mission and Tract Society. He has spent two weeks each at the three English-speaking churches of the Society, and in each of them he has met with great success. It is too early to speak of the final results of the work, for time alone can test this; but hundreds have been to the inquiry-rooms, and in many cases the Society is assured that the work has been a genuine one. Mr. Telford has gone to Chicago, but it is hoped that after the conclusion of his services there he will return to New York and resume his labors.

POSSESSING POSSESSIONS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." Obad. 17.

Blessing and Judgment Combined—The Joy and Terror of Christ's Second Coming—A Promise Holding Good for all Time—I. A Privilege to be Desired—The Possessions at the Disposal of Believers—Faith the Sole Condition—Many do not Possess all They Might Have—Do not Hold Firmly What They Enjoy—Do not Realize Things to Come—Do not Take Possession of the Land—II. A Favor to be Desired—The Deliverance on Mount Zion—The Deliverance of Others—III. The Conspicuous Character—There Shall be Holiness—A Holy Place—Holy Teaching—Not Sermons on Strikes—Holy Pleading—Holy Living.

THIS is a remarkable passage. Its wording is singular. It begins with a "but," because the previous verses have been denouncing judgments upon Edom. When God comes forth to punish His enemies, He also comes forth to bless his friends. When Pharaoh is overthrown in the Red Sea, it is that Israel may pass onward to Canaan; when Amalek is overcome, it is that Israel may be at peace. There is a black cloud, as well as the silvery rain. The acceptable year of the Lord is the day of vengeance of our God. This combination so constantly occurs that the Psalmist said, "I will sing of mercy and judgment." The sword of vengeance is displayed at the same time as the sceptre of grace. In that last great day, that which is the joy and expectation of His people, will be confusion to His adversaries. To the ungodly, "the day of the Lord will be darkness, and not light." God grant to you and to me that we may know on which side we stand, and may be found in Christ, wearing His righteousness, accepted in the Beloved, so that whenever the Lord cometh forth with plagues for His adversaries, he may have a favor toward us.

Coming of the Lord,

I make no doubt that this promise has been fulfilled already, and that there was a time when the house of Israel, restored from captivity, came back to Zion, and Edom was utterly consumed. "The house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it." But the former fulfilment of a promise does not make it useless, like a cheque which has been paid; the promise may be presented again, and it will again be honored. God's rules of action are immutable, and hence what He did to one company of His people He will do to others of them. The temporary restoration of the captives to Jerusalem can only have fulfilled the promise upon a very small scale; it has a wider meaning than such an event could exhaust. The Lord is prepared to do the same on a larger scale for all those who put their trust in Him.

I. First of all, consider

A Privilege

to be desired. The land of Canaan had been granted to Israel by the Lord of all. Each family had a lot and portion which belonged to it for ever, being entailed upon it by a covenant of salt. Through their sins, the tribes were carried into captivity, the land was taken from them by their conquerors, and they could no longer possess their possessions. Now, the promise comes to them by the prophet Obadiah: "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." A property may be my lawful possession, and yet, for divers reasons, I may not be able to get at it: it may be in the hands of one who defrauds me of it, or I may be far away and unable to reach it. The words are singular, but their meaning is distinct: "They shall possess their possessions."

Let us use the words as applicable to souls who shall be led to take what is promised to believers. "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." We set before many of you, every Sabbath day, the great possessions of eternal life, of pardon, of justification, of the new birth, sanctification, and all the other treasures of the covenant; but though they are set before you, and you long after them, many of you feel unable to grasp them as your own. You know that the tenure of these possessions is faith; but either you do not understand what faith is, or you, for some other reason, fail to exercise it, and so you do not appropriate what the gospel freely gives to you. You are either confused by ignorance, or dazed by fear as to your sin, or held back by the temptations of the devil. I pray that you may have grace speedily to take what Jesus freely gives, so that you may come to possess your possessions.

You who now believe were once strangers to such an extraordinary joy as that which comes by faith. You wandered up and down in sin, knowing nothing of what free grace and dying love had done for you: but now you have come to God, and you have ventured by faith to take possession of what the Lord so freely offers in the gospel; and behold, it is revealed to you that in the purpose of God, even from everlasting. Now is it fulfilled to you—"The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions." If you have now the confidence to believe in Jesus Christ, and to say, "My beloved is mine, and I am His," then you shall know that in grasping blessings, you do but come to your own; you possess your possessions.

These Things were Yours

Let us go a step further. Beloved friends, many by faith have laid hold upon the covenant possessions, but yet they do not to the full possess them. The text leads me to pray that believers may enjoy fully what they have grasped by faith. Christ is mine; but, beloved, who among us knows all that is ours in Christ? He is a casket, which is all ours, but we do not open its doors, and take out all its treasures. Our possessions in Christ are very wide; but we need to be bidden, like Abraham, to lift up our eyes to the north, and to the south, and to the east, and to the west, that we may form a clearer idea of the goodly land which the Lord our God has given us.

I fear we do not by enjoyment possess our possessions. Alas! with many believers, times of actual enjoyment are rare: they can talk about the blessing, but they do not habitually rejoice in it themselves. "Oh, yes," they say, "it is a very delightful thing to be washed in the blood of the Lamb." But do they enjoy the Peace Which Flows from Cleansing?

Have they "received the atonement," and with it that peace with God which follows upon justification by faith? Do they delight in "the peace of God which passeth all understanding"? You know, dear brethren, that it is your high privilege to have access to the mercy-seat; but do you use that access, and come often and boldly to the throne of grace? Do you avail yourselves of your opportunities? Do you make the utmost use of prayer? In other holy matters, do you really stand where God would have you stand? Are you as rich as Christ has made you? A man may have large possessions, and yet be practically poor, because he is miserly in his expenditure. Is it not so with many a child of God? All things are ours, and yet we live as if nothing were ours. Let our prayer be that we may use and enjoy to the utmost all that the Lord has given us in His grace, and so possess our possessions.

Go a step further. We possess our possessions when we hold firmly what we enjoy. Too many Christians hold their blessings with a feeble hand; they expect where they ought to enjoy, and think where they ought to know. They are never sure, and thus they do not "possess their possessions." They are not sufficiently at home with spiritual things to be said to possess them. It is a grand thing when the grace of God enables a man to say, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him." When happy feelings vanish, faith abides the same. Be it night or be it day, our soul waits upon God; for our expectation is from Him.

I have not come to the end of my tether yet. I will fix another meaning upon these words, and apply them to souls realizing things to come. Brethren, we have possessions which we have not yet seen, and cannot as yet enter upon.

We Believe in the Second Coming of our Lord from heaven, and in the glory that shall follow. We believe in the resurrection of the dead, and the eternal bliss of the godly in heaven. We believe that we shall dwell with Christ for ever and ever. Can we possess these possessions even now? We cannot now rise from the dead, for we are not yet buried; we cannot yet walk the golden streets, for we have not passed through the gate of pearl. Yet, by the realizations of faith, we may make these things to be so near that we may measurably enjoy them even now, and so already possess our possessions. "He hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Though we are not actually in heaven, yet in union with our Lord we are virtually there. Even here we may possess our possessions by enjoying a period of rest, "as the days of heaven upon the earth." Already we have the earnest of the inheritance in the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and we have obtained that inheritance in Christ. More and more may we enjoy the peace, the rest, the purity, the victory of heaven, and thus possess our possessions.

One other meaning, and upon this I am going to lay emphasis: we long to see souls winning glory for Jesus. The whole world belongs to Christ, and in His name we are to possess it for Him. As we see not all things put under Him; but our enemy abides in His strongholds. "There is much land yet to be possessed," and we must go on our conquest in the name of Jesus. We carry the war into the enemy's country, and surround fort after fort for Jesus. This land is a part of Christ's own kingdom; let us take it. Is this to be done? It must be done! We must not be satisfied till millions bow at our Lord's feet—until Jesus, the grace of God, possesses the east and the west, the north and the south. I regard this as a promise to us: "The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions."

II. So much upon the main part of our discourse: there are two other things to be handled, and first, comes this—

A Favor to be Remembered:

"Upon mount Zion shall be deliverance." This fact should help us to possess our possessions. See what God has done for us! What can He do for us? Is anything too hard for the Lord? Let us see the force of the passage, let me put out its meaning.

We have been saved; for "Upon mount Zion shall be deliverance," and we have found it so. Christ Jesus we have been saved. The Revelation has it, "In mount Zion there shall be those that escape." We have escaped from death, and hell. Delitzsch reads it, "Upon mount Zion will be that which has been saved." Yes, we have been saved, saved from spiritual death, saved from punishment, saved from sin itself, saved to the glory of our God! Because of this deliverance, let us go up and publish salvation, and proclaim the name of our Deliverer. Harken unto His voice, ye captives, that ye also may be delivered. Look to Him, ye perishing, that ye may be saved.

We are few, comparatively. I reminded you of that reading of the text—"Upon mount Zion shall be an escaped remnant." I will not make guess as to what the number of God's chosen will be at the end; but at present, taking the most charitable view of things, the saved ones are as a handful of corn on the top of the mountains, or as the gleanings of the vintage. The world lieth in the wicked one, but those who are in Christ Jesus are a small remnant. That cheering word, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," is Still Applicable to the Church.

Yet let us not despair: if God has saved us, though we be but few, He will accomplish His purpose for us. He saveth not by many nor by few: His right arm getteth unto Him the victory. Yet able to possess the land, few as ye are. Only go forth in the same spirit as the twelve did when the Holy Ghost rested upon them at Pentecost; as few as you may be, you can yet subdue the nation to Christ.

Notice this, that we are set for the deliverance of others. The Lord's purpose of grace to any man does not end with the personality of that one man. He chooses one man with a view to others. Brethren, we ought to go in and possess the land, to win the people for Jesus, for therefore are we chosen. Has He saved you? Has He taken you out from among the fallen mass of mankind? Has He chosen you by His discriminating grace? If so, then, you are not your own, you are His forever, and you are not to live for yourselves, but for His glory, and for the making known of His salvation among your fellow-men; wherefore, beloved, take heart and courage, and let your souls be big with high enterprise and noble purpose. Say to yourselves, "It shall be true, 'the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions,' for we know of a truth that there is deliverance upon mount Zion."

III. Our final word is perhaps the most important of all. I call your attention to a third matter,

The Character to be Conspicuous.

"Upon mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness." It is through holiness that the house of Jacob shall enter into that possession of which I have spoken at so great length. If the no holiness, then there has been no deliverance, and there shall be no possessing of possessions. Holiness is a link which is essential to the golden chain of blessings. If we are without holiness, we shall not see the Lord on our side.

To give you the bearing of the words before us, I mark, first, that it might be translated, "Upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be sanctuary," or, "a holy place," an inviolable sanctuary of God. The people of God are the temple of God. The Church of God should be God's peculiar dwelling-place, wherein He walks as a king in his own palace.

The Temple of the Godhead,

First of all, the person of Christ, and next the Church of the living God. "This is my rest; here will I dwell, for I have desired it." With what dignity is the church invested, when it is in very truth the temple of God! Unless we can realize this, we shall not possess our possessions. If your church membership is a mere trifle to you, if you think that a church is simply a community of people who meet together for religious purposes, you miss the mark. The church must be the sanctuary of God—the place where God reveals Himself; and it is not so, the men and women who make up the church have never tasted the divine deliverance, either will they possess their possessions. Without the presence of God in the church, it has no power to subdue the world to the faith.

The great thing that makes God's people a holy people is the presence of God with them. He sanctifies both the place of His abode and those that come near to Him. It is holy ground where Jehovah reveals himself, though it be but in a bush, and is everywhere; but He is not everywhere as He is in His church. There is a special, gracious presence of God in the midst of His chosen people; and it is that makes them "holiness unto the Lord." The Church needs reviving at home. We hear much of "getting up a revival." What idle talk is that! If the Church of God becomes spiritually sickened, the revival will come, but not else. Let us carefully see to our holiness, and God will see to our success.

Next to this, there must be holy teaching: "there must be holiness." All the teaching that goes forth from us must be God's holy truth, and not the wisdom of human wisdom. Instrumentality must be used for what it aims at, and soul-saving sermons must deal with sin and salvation, and with the blood of Jesus. What have we to do with themes which are foreign to our design? If I were to come hither and talk to you about strikes, or home rule, or socialism, and should then pray to God to convert souls by my discourse, would it not be a mockery, worse? I think so. Zion must have holy teaching if she is to have conquering power. There must be holiness in the form of

Holy Pleading.

In this church, which has enjoyed so much of divine favor, could be in every member aroused to mighty intercession for the souls of men, should we not see great things? If every member were in earnest in praying for the visitations of God, and if every one pleaded day and night for the display of divine power, and added to his pleading that which would prove it to be sincere, namely, his own individual effort, what a day would break upon us! It would be a morning without clouds! I see no reason why it should not be so.

One thing more—there must be holy living. Prayer-meetings: what are they if they are held by a number of people who do not serve the Lord at home? Preaching: what is that, if the preacher teaches what he has never experienced, and is not prepared to practice? Teaching in Sabbath-schools: what is that, if the children are taught by frivolous lessons, whose lives are destitute of piety? God will not bless us, to the effecting of His purposes of salvation, unless we are clothed with holiness as with a garment. Zion's priests must put on their snow-white garments of holy living if they are to offer an acceptable sacrifice before Jehovah. If I might plead on my knees, with tears in my eyes, I would beseech every brother here to be holy. Suffer the word of exhortation. As we so eagerly desire that we may have a great increase to this church through numerous conversions, let us lay it to our hearts, that we must be holy; for if we are not holy we shall

Not be Fit to be Blessed.

The unholy worker is not really in earnest. Do you not know, yourselves, that when you have listened to a clever preacher who has no spirituality, but is a mere actor, and known to be of worldly habits, his preaching has no power in it for you? What he said was all very well, but it fell flat: he was a clever and eloquent man, but he did not touch you. When I heard George Müller, some years ago, there was nothing of oratory in what he said, but then there was George Müller behind it, and every syllable had weight. That blessed man spoke as one who had experience of what he said. His long life of faith in God made every word powerful with the heart and conscience. Teachers of Bible-classes and schools, a holy life must be your power in your classes, or your words will be to your children as idle tales!

If they see your lives to be unholy, the ungodly will reject your testimony, and it will be no wonder that they do so. They want to reject it; they are looking out for excuses for rejecting it, and they will gladly find an argument in your unhallowed conversation. They will say, "The man does not believe it himself, or else he would not live as he does." Shall the taught excel the teacher? You lose your leverage of power if you fail in holiness.

What is more, saints cannot pray for a blessing on a work which is not holy. If you work for God in an unholy way, or work for God rightly, yet, nevertheless, are inconsistent in your ordinary life, the people of God will be grieved, and will find it impossible to pray for you.

Can Any Good Come

to a ministry for which we cannot pray? Unless the people of God see in a man downright consecration to God, and holiness of spirit and life, they cannot feel union of heart which produces intercession.

Lastly, God Himself will not own a ministry which is not accompanied by holy character. How can God set His seal to an unholy life? Ah, brothers! if we can go into the world and sin as others do all the days of the week, it will be in vain to pull over us the garb of sanctity on the Sunday, and say, "I am witness for Christ." What does God think of such conduct? Does he call on evil men to be His witnesses? He hates hypocrisy, and therefore he cannot append the "signs following" to a ministry which is impure. Oh my brethren, we desire honor from the Lord in conversions.

Oh you that are not yet believers in Jesus, how much I wish that you were so! May you be led to believe at once in Him whose death must be your life, who must Himself be your salvation. Look to Him and live! And you that are Christ's I beg you to remember the remarkable expression of the text, and may you "possess your possessions"! Amen.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.

An Expatriated Twin is Living in France Unconscious of his true name and parentage. A Boston lawyer has recently related an incident of his professional experience of a very romantic character. Carefully suppressing names, but strongly insisting on its veracity, he told the story of injustice and wrong. He said that his father had for a client a wealthy merchant whose ambition it was to found a family which should be famous for wealth and influence. But he had no son to perpetuate his name. It was a constant grief to him until middle age, when the joyful news that he might expect a child at last came to fill his cup with happiness. He hoped and prayed that it might be a boy, and, in spite of his usual worldly wisdom, made certain offerings in a superstitious spirit worthy of a darker age to ensure the realization of his desire. His wife gave birth to twins and died a few weeks afterward. The father seemed as disappointed at having two sons as he had been before at having none. They would divide his estate, and the ambition to found a rich family would be retarded, if not thwarted. He took both the children to Europe and remained away several months. When he returned he had but one son, and he said the other had died in France. To his lawyer, however, he told the truth. The child was still living in the care of a French family, who had undertaken to bring him up as their own. But in case of the son whom he had retained dying, the lawyer was instructed to reclaim the other son and tell him the story. The merchant had the favored son well educated, and had the satisfaction, before he died, of seeing him develop the qualities which promised the fulfillment of his ambition. The lawyer kept his secret, but in view of eventualities told his own son the circumstances before he died. The young lawyer revealed them to the merchant's son, who promptly went to France to find his twin brother. When he returned he said that he had found him prosperous and contented, and therefore he had left him in ignorance of his strange history. The son, like the father, seems to have had more ambition than natural affection, and the expatriated twin has now little prospect of getting any share of his father's estate. It is not so with God's children. Though some nations have been in His wisdom more favored than others, Christ said that "the other sheep which were not of this fold" He would bring in, and there would eventually be only one fold and one shepherd. (John 10:16.)

A Wedding Plate on a Coffin was the Strange contrast observed by a gang of workmen in New York on April 4. It was decided a year ago, by the members of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, on Hudson Street, to dispose of the church property and to rebuild up-town. Opportunity was given to any families, who had their dead buried in the churchyard to remove them to modern cemeteries. Many corpses have been so removed. The church purchased a lot in Woodlawn Cemetery for the reception of the remainder, and last week the removal of about four hundred was effected. In taking up a coffin containing the body of a child which had been interred nearly a century, the little copper plate on which the child's name was inscribed fell off the lid. On its reverse was some engraving which on being cleaned proved to be an invitation to a wedding reception. Evidently the engraver, in executing the order for the plate for the coffin lid, had turned over a plate in his stock which had been used to print the cards of invitation, and had engraved on its other side the inscription for the child's coffin. There was a pathetic incongruity in his act coming to light now after nearly a century; but if we had more generally the view of death which the Bible teaches, it would not appear so incongruous. The body of the believer which we commit to the grave will arise to attend the marriage supper of the Lamb. (Rev. 19:7-9.)

The Large Number of Foreign Noblemen in New York is reported by a citizen whose business brings him in contact with our foreign population. He says that representatives of some of the most ancient and illustrious of European families are here in unusual numbers. They are not the society counts and barons who figure in the newspapers and are prominent in social matters, but they are quiet, modest, retiring, and in the main highly cultivated noblemen, who have been driven from their own countries either by prosecution or domestic misfortunes. Some of them have left home under a political cloud, but these men affiliate with socialists and anarchists, more or less, and are not known among their quiet and well-bred brethren who live on the extreme east and west sides of the town. Many a man of noble lineage is to be found among the parishioners of the small east and west side Catholic churches, and a few of them make their headquarters in modest little cafés and restaurants in the French and German quarters of the town. There are among the teachers of languages, music, and riding, in New York, members of families that have been famous in the histories of France and Germany. The men themselves live with a philosophical acceptance of fate, and are simply waiting for the tide to turn, so that they can return to their native shores. Their importance is known by the deference which their countrymen always pay them. Can so much be said for Christians who, as subjects of Christ's Kingdom, should be simply waiting for His coming, and keeping themselves free from worldly entanglements and alliances with the world? (1 Peter 1:6, 7.)

An Eccentric Judge in a Rural District of Pennsylvania adopted a Solomonic method of dealing with conflicting evidence. On April 5 a farmer appeared before him with a complaint that a man had stolen his pigeons. He had lost them, but could not tell how they had disappeared, until, riding through a village at some distance from his home, he saw a flock of pigeons on another man's farm, and recognized them as his own. The defendant had witnesses as to his character, and he also averred that he had possessed these identical pigeons long before the complainant professed to have lost his flock. This was also sworn to by his witnesses, though with less certainty about dates. The judge listened with no little perplexity. Cross-examination only made the matter more doubtful. It was evidently a case of hard swearing on one side or the other. Finally the judge determined to put aside the evidence and try an experiment. He ordered the birds to be brought into court, and a colored ribbon to be attached to the leg of each. Then in the presence of the witnesses the birds were set at liberty, and an officer of the court was sent to each farm to report. In a short time the officer at the plaintiff's farm returned with the news that the pigeons, after circling in the air for some time, had settled on the roof and appeared to be quite at home. The judge concluded that there could be no further doubt as to the legal owner, and gave judgment accordingly. In these days of worldliness and latitudinarianism the earnest Christian is often in doubt as to whom some who call themselves Christians really belong, nor do they appear sure themselves. God has uttered the pathetic reproach against such wanderers: "The ox knoweth his owner and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." (Isa. 1:3.)

The Late Canon Butler.

The Late Mr. Randall.

The Late Mr. A. Mackay.

THE LATE HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL.

ONE of the most industrious and painstaking members of the National Legislature is lost to us by the death on April 13 of the well-known Democratic member of Congress, whom Pennsylvania has for so many years sent to Washington. Of late years, since the Tariff became so prominent a subject of discussion in and out of Congress, Mr. Randall has been as popular with the Republican party as with his own. He was a strong advocate of protection, and consequently was often found voting with the Republicans against the Democrats. Nevertheless, on all other questions he was true to his party, and he sincerely believed that on the Tariff question his standing was more consistently Democratic than was that of his colleagues. In all his speeches and votes there was never a question as to the high patriotism of the man, or a doubt as to his integrity and conscientiousness. Such statesmen are an honor to any land, and in this day they are especially valuable, and can ill be spared.

Samuel Jackson Randall was born in Philadelphia October 10, 1828. His father was an eminent lawyer and politician. After leaving school young Randall entered mercantile life in the employment of Messrs. Robert Earp & Co., the hardware merchants of Philadelphia. He was industrious, intelligent, and extremely exact in the performance of his duties, and soon rose to be a junior member of the firm. After four years in that business he began to take an active interest in politics, and was elected in three successive years a member of the City Council. He was afterward elected to the State Senate for the term 1858-59.

Mr. Randall was elected to Congress in 1862, and was re-elected at every subsequent election until his death, although his district seldom chose another Democrat to any office. Except for a brief absence while in military service, and during his last illness, he rarely missed a session of the House in all that time. He belonged to the City Troop, of Philadelphia when the war began, and went to the front with that body in May, 1861, for ninety days. When he returned home he wore the stripes of an orderly sergeant. The Troop had been attached to the Second Cavalry of regulars, then commanded by George H. Thomas. Mr. Randall's brief but creditable service brought him still further honors after he entered Congress, for when the Confederate forces moved toward Washington in 1862, and a call was issued for the State troops, he was commissioned cornet, with the rank of captain. He did good work in scouting as well as in battle, and received a special letter of commendation for himself and his command after Gettysburg.

Mr. Randall's party was in a hopeless minority when he first entered the House, but he proved so skilful an adept in the rules of the House that he was frequently able to prevent the passage of a bill to which he had objections. When a Democratic House was elected, his friends made a strong fight to win the speakership for him, but Michael C. Kerr carried off the prize. Mr. Randall was made chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and in that position much of his most congenial work was done. On Mr. Kerr's death Mr. Randall was elected Speaker, and took his seat at the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress. He was re-elected by the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses. His party lost control in the next House, but in the Forty-eighth Congress he was again a candidate for the nomination. Meanwhile, however, the Democratic party had drifted in the direction of tariff reduction, and Mr. Randall's attitude on that question being well known, Mr. Carlisle received the nomination, and was elected. Mr. Randall again secured the chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations, and resumed his former work. His personal following in his party continued to dwindle after that time, and he was never again a candidate for the higher office. He continued, however, his industrious labors in the House, carefully watching especially all financial measures.

Mr. Randall had been brought into association with Mr. Wanamaker in Philadelphia, and when the latter went to Washington to become Postmaster-General their intimacy became still closer. Mr. Wanamaker spoke to the statesman on the subject of personal religion, and found that he was already convinced of his need of a Saviour. Under Mr. Wanamaker's guidance he was led to make a public profession of his faith in Christ, and was received into the membership of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church in Washington.

THE LATE CANON BUTLER,

Originator of the White Cross Societies.

THOSE of our readers who are members of White Cross Societies will be glad to get this portrait of the brave clergyman who has just gone to his reward. Almost alone among his brethren of the English Church he dared to stand up and denounce the prevalent vice, and insist that the Church should initiate a movement for its extirpation. He was scoffed at, urged to silence on a subject repulsive to refined ears, and sneered at and ridiculed by wrongdoers and their friends. But the movement started; it quickly reached these shores, and has now its pledged societies all through the land. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which espoused the cause when all the secular and many of the religious journals were howling denunciations of Mr. Stead, Canon Butler, and their friends, is glad to give the portrait of the heroic pioneer whose loss his Church is deploring.

Canon George Butler, of Winchester, England, was the son of a famous scholar and divine. He was doing a valuable but quiet, unostentatious work as Principal of Liverpool College, when the revelations of the vicious condition of upper-class society were made. Shortly afterward he rose to the Church Congress and read, or rather attempted to read, a carefully and discreetly written paper, "The Moral Duty of the Church in Reference to Social Questions." Public opinion was not then enlightened on this painful topic as it is now; the Canon had scarcely begun to read when he was literally howled down in that assemblage of professing Christians, and he was ultimately obliged to desist.

THE LATE MR. A. M. MACKAY.

THE sad news of the death of this famous missionary is published by the New York Herald in a cable dispatch. Mr. Mackay was one of the original party of eight missionaries who went to Uganda in Africa, in 1876. At the end of last year he was the only one of the party still on the field. Some of the others had been murdered by the savage young King Mwanga, others had died of disease induced by the fatal climate, and the remainder had returned home invalided. For many months after the King had killed Bishop Hannington, Mr. Mackay was in hourly peril of the same doom. Frequently the King notified him to prepare for death, but the tact and gentleness of the missionary disarmed his hostility. Finally Mwanga ordered him to quit his territory, and Mackay found that he would surely be killed if he remained, crossed the frontier, but remained within easy reach of Uganda. Latterly, Mwanga having himself been exiled by the Arab marauders, who stirred up subjects against him, applied to Mr. Mackay for help to recover his lost throne. To some extent Mr. Mackay is believed to have helped him, and at last accounts he was expecting the restoration of the monarch to summon him back to his labor.

Mr. Mackay was a man of rare intelligence, a civil engineer, who had abandoned his profession when it was most lucrative, that he might go and preach the gospel in Africa. He contributed much to our knowledge of the interior of the Dark Continent. His heroism was truly admirable, and his coolness in the face of a barbarous death was astonishing. His labors in Uganda were greatly blessed, and his death is a heavy loss to the cause of African missionary labor.

A FRIEND AT COURT.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text. "Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole." Luke 8:50.

A LARGE crowd was gathered around an old building. It was a heterogeneous group of men and women. Persons from the lowest class, dirty, degraded, side by side with well-dressed, pro-is-looking men of acute intelligence and alert of manner. Inside building there were similar but other groups consulting together. Men passed among them on way in and out, busy, but without the eager, anxious look that sat on the faces of most of the others. The old building was a court, and in chief room of it a judge sat, trying criminal cases. There was an expectancy about the place on the fact that a great murder was coming on. The eyes of passers-by were directed freely to a group in one corner of all outside the court-room, and another would point out this to an acquaintance, who then look at it with new interest. They were the parents and relatives of the prisoner, the young man who, in another hour, would go on his trial for the murder. As we draw near to that group, which is the father with face red and lined with distressing anxiety, the mother weeping silently, the brother and sisters in the state of suspense.

"It is not too late yet," a big self-possessed man is saying to the father, whom he has drawn a little aside. "I can get Mr. Senior to take the case even now. I have some influence with him. The son is coming on, and Senior says I can give him the vote of my ward. He won't refuse me, and I'll get the lad off. There is not another lawyer in the State, and not too conscientious when he has a client in his place. He'll fight it tooth and nail, and if I can get an alibi will work, he knows where to witness or two that will swear through a wall. You say the word, and I'll have him on his side of half an hour."

"Oh, Tom," says the father; "you're a good man, and you mean well, but I don't believe in your methods. I've trusted the case to Hawkins, and I'll leave it with him. I believe in him, though I don't like a young man."

"But, man alive!" says the other, "your son's at stake! This is not a time to be squeamish about methods. High-principled, aristocratic law-like Hawkins are not what you want. Hawkins will be thinking about his own character and not to do anything that might compromise his family. His father wants the nomination for governor, and he has to be careful. What you are a real smart lawyer like Senior, who is not particular. Senior's record would not be hurt, never he did. He knows it could not be worse if it is, but he brings his clients through."

"Oh, use, Tom, I'm firm. I don't know exactly what Hawkins means taking, but he's my man. I've put the case in his hands. Here he is now! As just come from the prison. I'll go and see him."

The father crosses to a doorway where a young man is standing looking around for him. He goes to the lawyer's words and then raises his hand in horror. He puts them over his face, and his frame shakes as if convulsed by sobs. The lawyer puts his hand on his shoulder and apologetically tries to cheer and encourage him. He is partially successful, for the father takes his hand and looks up into his face with an expression of confidence, but with an agony of despair in his eyes. The lawyer goes into court, and the father of the prisoner comes back to the group.

Mr. Hawkins has decided to have Will plead guilty, he says, sorrowfully. "What?" shrieks the mother. "Oh my poor boy! They will hang him!"

The father groans, and his former adviser again goes to him.

"The man must be mad," he says, "and you must be mad, too, to trust him. Why, it's throw away the case away. Guilty! No, sir! Why, it's a lie to plead guilty. Will is committing suicide. It does not care. What's Will to him? It's a lie to you and his poor mother, and the rope will hang himself. It's mad infatuation to be so wrapped up in that lawyer. Well, if you will, you will, and there's an end of it."

The Body of a Burmah High Priest on the Way to Cremation.

"Oh Tom, don't be so hard," says the father, trembling. "Hawkins seems to know, and he does feel for us—I'm sure of that. Last thing he said was, 'You trust in me and you'll have your son in your home again safe.' I'm going to do it, for he's a good man and he wouldn't deceive me."

"Well, you've got a lot of faith in him, to stake the boy's life, and your own and your wife's peace, on him, for you'll never be happy again, neither of you, if Will is hanged."

"I know that," says the father, "and Hawkins knows it, too; I've told him. He ain't the careless man you think. He's sympathetic and he suits me. I believe the straight course is the one to take."

The rush into the court-room at this moment shows that the case is coming on, and the afflicted group goes in with the others. There is no need to follow them, for we know the issue. It is soon over. The prisoner is condemned to be hanged, and the crowd hurries out of the court-room to see him enter the Black Maria waiting outside. The father looks heart-broken when he comes out, with his arm around the waist of his poor gray-haired wife, who can scarcely walk, or see her way for tears. The brother and sisters of the condemned man follow them, and they seem to feel as if they were going to his funeral. The young lawyer is with them. His face is full of distress, too, but he speaks comforting words to them, and bids them not despair.

"Nonsense!" says the big pompous man; "not despair! Why, the case is lost! Will is as good as dead! What can they do but despair?"

"I don't know what he means," the father says, after the lawyer has left them, "but he seems confident. 'You trust in me,' he says now, like he did before the trial; and I'm going to. I ain't going to give up hope yet." It was a splendid, heroic avowal. Rare indeed for a man to have inspired such confidence in another. The mother wished the case had been put in Mr. Senior's hands, but she trusted in her husband's wisdom, but oh, her boy! She could think of nothing else.

Another scene three months later. A gloomy November day was near its close. In a bedroom of a quiet house is the father of the condemned man moving in his stocking-feet softly around a bed on which his wife lies apparently near death. He tends her carefully, administering the medicine with anxious face. The old clock in the hall below has just struck eleven. There is noise in the street, and the old man wishes the people would go home and leave the street in quietness. But it is election night, and there is sure to be this shouting and brawling for another hour yet. He takes no interest in the election this year—does not even know the tickets. He has kept within doors, occupied with his wife's illness. There is a ring at the bell. The sick woman starts, but tells her husband to see who it is, as all the family are in bed. He is vexed at the disturbance. Probably it is some old political friend come to tell him the result of the election, about which he does not care a jot. Why should he care who wins, when his son lies in jail under the awful sentence of death?

He goes down the stairs softly, and draws the bolts of the door. It is election news, but the old man is wrong in thinking it does not concern him. Young Mr. Hawkins is on the stoop, and as he comes in he grasps the old man by both hands. "We've won!" he says.

"We?—Who?—What do you mean?" asks the old man, not understanding the lawyer's coming to him to share in his elation. He must know that politics don't interest him now.

"Mean?" says Mr. Hawkins. "Don't you understand? My father is elected Governor of the State. How about a pardon for your son? Ah! now you are interested. Well, he will be pardoned. I talked it over with my father long ago. He understands the case, and he'll grant the pardon. I like you; you trusted in me when you could not see how it was possible things could come right. Not many would have done that. Your faith is rewarded now."

"God bless you, sir!" says the old man, in broken voice. "Let me go right up and tell his mother."

OBSEQUIES OF A HIGH PRIEST IN BURMAH.

(See Illustration.)
A TRAVELLER in Mandalay, the capital of Burmah, sends a description of the strange ceremonies attendant on the funeral of a Buddhist High Priest, and a picture of its chief feature. That was the effigy of an elephant made of a bamboo framework and covered with paper ingeniously made to resemble an elephant's skin. It was of gigantic proportions and on its back was the bier, of carved and gilt or painted woodwork. The imitation elephant, looking astonishingly like life, stood on a platform with wheels, to be drawn along the street. On the bier was a coffin which contained the mortal remains of the deceased Right Reverend Phoongye, after lying in state, embalmed of course, during the prescribed months of mourning, at the monastery over which he had formerly presided, to the religious edification of Buddhist believers. Accompanied by different other vehicles, bearing figures of sacred symbolic import, and by a procession of yellow-robed monks, priests, acolytes, and servants of the church, exhibiting emblematic devices, chanting or shouting words of praise, this elephantine hearse arrived at the appointed place of cremation. Here was erected the funeral pyre, an imposing edifice of wood fantastically shaped and built up; its lower part was formed so as to resemble flames rolling and curling their billowy crests to and fro, above which rose a pagoda, open at the front side, with a canopied bier to receive the corpse of that most holy man. Thousands of people belonging to all classes of Burmese native society, were assembled to behold this interesting spectacle. The wood of the pyre, rendered more inflammable by a coating of resinous or pitchy substance, having been ignited, after the utterance of sundry hymns and prayers, the body was speedily consumed. In some instances the fire has been kindled by means of rockets attached to ropes, along which they ran blazing and fizzing up into the midst of the woodwork; but this practice was recently forbidden, as likely to cause a dangerous conflagration. The ashes of the Phoongye were collected in a sacred urn, to be preserved in the "Kyoung" where he had formerly dwelt, in the monastery precincts, until a special pagoda is built for the permanent shrine,

A GLIMPSE OF THE SOUL.

BELIEVERS in materialism are on the increase in these days of the exaltation of science. "This is the end," say many who look on death. But are they safe in thinking so? There are many incidents recorded which, apart from Scripture, may well give them cause to doubt their theory that there is no life separate from the body. A few such, of recent occurrence, are mentioned in this month's Times of Refreshing, the excellent periodical issued by Dr. Cullis, of Boston, Mass. A well known popular lecturer, one of whose addresses is here reported, said:

I was astonished, on taking up the biography of Louisa May Alcott the other day, to read an account of her sister's death. Miss Alcott was a person of a very cool temperament. Her father, the celebrated Bronson Alcott, was a man of vivid imagination. If he had had such an experience as this which his daughter describes, I should have thought he had been misled by his imagination. But the mother of Louisa M. Alcott was also a woman of practical sagacity and great coolness of temperament. The mother and daughter sat at the bedside. She says, "When my sister died, I saw something like an almost inconceivably delicate mist rise from the body, ascend and disappear." I turned to my mother and found that her eyes were following the direction my own had taken. I asked, "What did you see?" and she described exactly what I had seen. We went to the physician and said, "What was it that we saw?" And that physician, in Concord yonder, where there is no superstition, said to them, "You saw life departing visibly from the physical form." All that is in the biography. Why do I recite this? Oliver Wendell Holmes, some years ago wrote a preface to a book on visions, and he is an authority on physiology. He says he has been at deathbeds where the impression has been conveyed to him irresistibly, that something (that is a vague word)—something passed from the body into space. Professor Hitchcock, of New York City, says, that as a friend of his lay dying, the breath ceased, the eyes lost their lustre, so that those who stood about the bed said, "He is gone." Then suddenly the eyes opened widely, a look of surprise, of adoration, of bliss, was in the whole face, which was marvellously luminous. This occurred while the pendulum swung several times. The light finally faded, and the man was gone. I heard Professor Hitchcock state those facts in his own parlor. He puts them into his new book, "Eternal Attonement." What do the dying see? What do the dying hear? Do they not simply leave the body, as the butterfly leaves the chrysalis, and go into a life higher and purer than this! Oh no! death is not the end of life. It is the entrance to another form of life.

A PRAYER OVERHEARD.

WHEN the Prodigal Son returned home, his father saw him a long way off. Who can tell how long that father had yearned over him and prayed for him, and how much those prayers may have been the means of bringing the erring one to himself, far away in the swine-field? Instances are on record of prayers so influencing hard hearts. One such, uttered in the ears of one apparently incorrigible, produced instantaneous contrition. The story is told by a friend of the afflicted family. He says:

"I knew a young man of much promise, the only son of praying Christian parents. As he grew up he began to keep questionable company and very late hours, often coming home at an early hour in the morning. His father's loving remonstrances were quite in vain, and it took all the mother's soothing influence to prevent an open rupture between the father and son. Things went on thus for a considerable time, the son sadly misbehaving himself, and the mother screening him; but she died, and the father and son were left alone. Her death greatly affected both, and for some time the young man gave up his evil ways, and spent his evenings at home; but gradually the influence of his mother's death wore off, and the old habits re-asserted themselves. His father one night waited for him, and followed him to his bedroom. There was a terrible scene. The father upbraided his son with his depravity, and threatened to turn him out of doors if he did not mend his ways. The son, excited by liquor, grew angry, and resented his father speaking to him as if he were still only a boy. In his passion he raised his hand, and with one blow felled his father to the ground; then, alarmed at what he had done, he fled from the house. For years he led a wretched, dissolute life; then a fearful thought seized him. Poor and destitute, he wrought his way to his native town, and, availing himself of a favorable opportunity, slipped into his old home, and made his way to his father's private room. He ransacked every drawer, but could find no money. Just then he heard a step on the stairs. Well he knew it. At once he took refuge beneath the bed. The old man entered, and without looking about, threw himself upon his knees, and began, 'O God, save my boy! Save him and bring him home to me in safety!' The words went to the prodigal's heart as he lay there, and crawling from his hiding place, he cried, 'Father, I have come!' and the next moment they were locked tightly in each others' arms."

BARBAROUS FUNERAL RITES.

THE advocates of Foreign Mission work are often opposed by men who contend that the heathen people are happy as they are, and that there is no need to send the gospel to them. Occasionally a ray of light falls on the condition of these "happy people," which shows what they really are, and how terrible is the suffering they inflict and endure through ignorance. Their ideas of God are of a being who must be appeased by self-torture and the torture of others, lest they suffer by His anger. If once they knew Him as a God of love, how gladly they would abandon their barbarous practices. Only last year a ceremony was performed, which shows in appalling colors, how urgent is the need for enlightenment.

The steamer Congo recently brought down the river a party of traders, who have been for several months in New Calabar, Africa. They said that Imphy, the King of Aboc, had died in the early summer of 1889, and they went to pay their respects to the new King. As it was two months since Imphy died, they supposed that the usual barbarous rites would be over, but they arrived when the "lu lu" ceremonies were being performed over the deceased monarch. These rites had been in operation for about two months, and some forty people had been slain to appease the "lu lu" gods. The old king was then lying in a large, deep grave, which had been dug for him. Nine of his young wives were lying there with him. Each of them had had both of her wrists and ankles broken, so that she could neither walk nor crawl. Thus tortured, seven of them were laid side by side in the bottom of the grave. The king's corpse was laid across them, and the two remaining women were laid down by the side of the corpse. Four men, armed with clubs, were stationed around the grave to knock back any who undertook to crawl out. There the nine women were left without food or water for four or five days, till death ended their torment. Other atrocities, too horrible for description, were being perpetrated in the town; the traders could do nothing to hinder them, and they made haste to leave the accursed spot.

AN ARGUMENT IN A COAL MINE.

An earnest minister in the mining districts being unable to get the miners to church, obtained permission to descend into the pit, and talk to them as they were at work. One of the first men he met below the surface was a rough foreman. To him he spoke dwelling on the free salvation. "I cannot believe in a religion like that," said the foreman, "it is too cheap. There's more sense in what the Catholics say. It aint likely God is going to let in a man just because he believes. You can't get nothing for nothing in this world, and its just the same for the next." Without an immediate answer to his remark, the preacher asked, "How do you get out of this place?" "Get into the cage," was the reply. "But do you not need to help to raise yourself?" said the preacher. "Of course not," said the miner, "the engineer sees to that." "But what about the people who sank the shaft? Was there much labor or expense about it?" "Yes, indeed. The shaft was sunk at great labor and expense, but it is our only way out and without it we should never get to the surface." "Just so. And when God's Word tells you that whosoever believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life, you at once say, 'Too cheap, too cheap,' forgetting that God's work to save you and others was accomplished at a vast cost, the price of our lives being the death of His own Son."

A FRIEND'S FATAL PLEA.

The fear of being made ridiculous produced terrible results during some services in Scotland recently. Two young men were at one of the meetings and one of them was much impressed by the addresses. When the invitation was given to all who wished to find salvation, to stay to a special service for inquirers, this young man said to his friend "I shall stay." "They will come about you and talk to you," said his friend. "I don't care," said the former. "They can but make me a Christian and after all that is what I want." "Oh don't be a fool," was the reply. "They will make a fool of you as sure as you stay. Come along." The two left the building together, and on their way home, called at a saloon, where they stayed drinking till a late hour. As they staggered out at closing time, the young man seemed to have lost his dread of becoming a fool, and his mentor seemed to have lost the concern about his friend which he felt at the evangelistic meeting. They pursued their unsteady way home until they came to a level railroad crossing. As they staggered across it, their senses were too much benumbed by the liquor they had taken to exercise ordinary prudence. The young man who had yielded to his friend's plea was a little ahead, and before he could get off the track, an express train came upon him like a flash, passed on and left his lifeless body crushed and mangled on the road. His last opportunity of salvation had been rejected, and he would not be a fool for Christ's sake had given the greatest proof of folly a human being can give—that of losing his own soul which Christ died to save.

Henry Gaze & Son, the originators and first conductors of Oriental tours, of 940 Broadway, New York City, offer most attractive summer trips to Europe at $150 and upwards, including all expenses; also two Fall trips to the Holy Land and Round the World.

WILD MARCH MUSIC,

Gentle and sweet melodies, sacred and secular songs, and all other kinds of music are in our thousands of books and millions of sheet music pieces!

YOUNG PLAYERS' POPULAR COLLECTION (Pap. $1. Bds. $1.25) New, bright and easy. 143 Piano Pieces.

WHITNEY'S ORGANO ALBUM (Bds. $2. Cloth $2.50.) By S. B. Whitney. 33 fine Organ pieces for Manual and Pedal, by 20 distinguished composers.

A helpful, useful friend to pupil and teacher is MASON'S PIANO-FORTE TECHNICS ($2.50) by Wm. Mason and W. S. B. Mathews. This admirable system of scales, arpeggios and all other needed technical exercises, with good directions, holds a high place in the esteem of thorough teachers, and should be everywhere used.

Our thoroughly good, general and practical School Music Books are widely known and used. Do you use them?

SONG BOOK 1, Primary. (30 cts., $3 doz.); MANUAL BOOK 2, Medium. (40 cts., $4.20 doz.); Book 3, Higher Classes. (50 cts., $4.80 doz.) by L. O. Emerson, is his last and best book, and a rare good book for schools.

MOTION SONGS (25 cts., $2.25 doz.) by Mrs. Boardman, is a delight to teachers and children. Any book mailed promptly for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

"READY FOR BUSINESS" is the best book On Choosing an Occupation. Describes the trades and professions, and what to do in each, price, 75 cents. Will send free the story of "My Cow-Boy Brother," and what he led us into," on the same subject. Send address on postal to Fowler Wells Co., 771 Broadway, New York.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

Peculia

To itself in many important particulars, Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and aration of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla secures the full curative value of the best remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which it can be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in smaller bottles require larger doses not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record abroad, no other preparation has ever such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Beware.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell.

100 Doses One Dollar

GAIN ONE POUND A DAY

A GAIN OF A POUND A DAY IN CASE OF A MAN WHO HAS BECOME RUN DOWN, AND HAS BEGUN TO THAT REMARKABLE FLESH PRODUCE

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL WITH Hypophosphites of Lime & IS NOTHING UNUSUAL. THIS HAS BEEN PERFORMED OVER AND OVER AGAIN. PALATABLE AS MILK. DORSED BY PHYSICIANS. SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. AVOID SUBSTITUTION IMITATIONS.

CARPET

We invite inspection to our NEW SPRING STYLES. Many exclusive patterns in novel effects. ROYAL WILTONS, WILTON VERMORELS, BODY AND PAPER BRUSSELS, 3-PLYS, and EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.

At Positive Bargain UPHOLSTERY GOODS

Our assortment of fine Satin Damask, Raw Silk Tapestries, Silk and Mohair Plush never so complete.

MATTING

Japanese and China Straw Matting. OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORT. White and Red Check Mattings. FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS. Also fine seamless Japanese Mattings. Warps for decorative purposes. complete line of

FURNITURE

Our own upholstering, at moderate prices for Hall's Celebrated Bedding. We make a specialty of furnishing Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

ALL TO A DRINKING MAN.

men will listen to stories of ghosts and ready credence to strange and aral experiences, few will believe in the of God's interference in the af- fe. Yet there is better evidence atter than the former. There are reformation of life which are almost us, which can be accounted for only a theory. The subjects of these who are the only persons able to thoritatively, so account for them. point is that of a man, who for ears past has gone about the villages and speaking for Jesus in the sa- the races, and at the fairs, or wher- pated men are to be found. He remarkable history. His own ac- it is as follows:

in 1869, he was sitting in a sa- one of his associates in sin. Sud- oice, as if from out of the unseen id to him, "John, you'll have to way of drinking." He started to ook his hat, and said to his com- William, "I'm to drink no more or anybody else." Looking at him ment, his friend said, "What's the ith you, Jack?" Without another n left his comrade and the saloon, never again entered. The Spirit as now working in his conscience t power. His sense of sin and dan- so overwhelming that he was no le to continue his work as a hand- ver. His anguish compelled him to his bed. At last he obtained ough the text, "God so loved the t He gave His only begotten Son." th he was a new man. After some health gave way, and being no able of manual labor, he began nt life of usefulness, in which een successful in bringing many Christ. Is there any power but id which could have so transformed

SOLATION IN AFRICA.

RR CROSS, writing from Nyassat- ally, says: "Every now and again news of the Arabs and their allies acked such and such a village, and hty men and captured women. go, when the road to Tanganyika opened, there was a village every it miles all along the way. Now ravel for three or four days and e a village or meet a creature. ages are all destroyed, and the tured as slaves and driven off by It makes one's blood boil at the is of these red-handed ruffians, ngaged in a work which Living- ago could only compare to hell hear the wail of grief, and to people you spoke to, and that u fowls and potatoes two or three are now butchered, and the wo- irls dragged off to the Arab slave y well cast a gloom over one's t more, it is distressing to have e cast themselves on their knees or you to help them, and to know n do little or nothing. Ethiopia es is begging the whole civilized ave her from the cupidity and her wanton oppressors.

NCOLN'S INTERCESSION.

dy has heard of President Lin- for his son Tod. Major Whittle address related an incident of its lustrate a gospel truth. He said e occasion a wounded soldier went e House to plead with the Presi- son for a discharge that he might his native place. He had been ided, and had laid for weeks in d, and believing that he would pletely recover but would die t back to the front, his one desire his family again; but word had that no soldiers were to be dis- any consideration; so this man g vain attempts to see the Presi- s hanging about the gates of the Mansion one day on his usual er- little Tod saw him. The soldier ad, and the little fellow gazing ed what was wrong. On being once replied, 'Oh, I can get you ather; come along.' When they came up to the room where the President sat, the sentinel would not let them pass in; but when the door opened Tod cried out, 'Father, let my friend and me in,' and in came the boy, leading the invalid soldier who hobbled along on crutches. His story was soon told, and the kind-hearted President forthwith wrote out his discharge. How is the poor sinner to approach God? Not by his own ability or merits. Christ said, 'No man cometh to the Father but by me.' For His sake, and through Him, the way of access is always open and none who approach with that all-prevailing name on their lips are shut out."

MATERNAL INSTINCT FAILING.

WE are accustomed to speak of maternal love as the strongest feeling in human nature. "Can a woman forget her sucking child?" It is an evidence of the power that the liquor habit can wield when once it is firmly acquired. But cases have been known in which it has proved so strong as to make a mother unnaturally careless about her child. Major Whittle tells of one instance which recently came under his own observation. He says: "I knew a woman who took to drink, and so completely did she get under its power that she would have done anything, however wicked and extravagant to obtain it. Her infant child sickened and died. She went to the parish and asked and received a coffin, but instead of burying her baby, she took the coffin, along with all the little things that had belonged to her child, and sold them, disposing of the coffin to a woman who also had lost her little one. Then she buried the body of her child without anything on it, with only the cold, black earth for a covering. So drink destroyed all natural feeling, and made that woman even lower than a beast; even natural maternal instinct was destroyed."

A COLPORTEUR'S TACT.

AN earnest Christian man in Ireland, being bereaved of his wife and child, and being alone in the world with an income sufficient for his few wants, relinquished business and devoted his life to going about the country selling New Testaments at cost price. The Roman Catholic priests opposed his work, and forbade the people purchasing the books. The colporteur immediately replenished his stock with the Romish version of the Testament, and sallied forth again, feeling sure that even that imperfect translation could be used of God for conversion. One day as he was riding along on his tricycle he met a priest, and halting, he showed him a copy of the Testament, and asked him if he had any objection to him selling it to Roman Catholics. The priest said he had, but when he opened the Book he saw on the first page the name of one of his bishops, who had given his consent and authority to the work. "No," said the priest, "I have no objection, for it has the approval of my church." Two women coming up at the moment, he begged the priest's pardon, and offered each of them a copy, which they purchased, and said they would read it, as they had the authority of the priest for doing so.

WANTED, AGENTS to sell "THE CHRISTIAN'S LEGACY."

Introduction by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. One agent writes, "I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 89 orders." I will pay $25 towards Dr. Talmage's new church, in the name of the agent, for every new agent hired from this advertisement, who sells 50 copies of the "Legacy." Usual profits to the agent. Address, W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address.
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

P. D. & S. Pens

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.!
Send 10 cents for Sample Card with 12 Pens. A. S. BARNES & CO., New York.

SHORTHAND. Private instruction by practical verbatim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

Ready May 1st, 1890.

WINNOWN SONGS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS,

By IRA D. SANKEY.

One of the largest and most useful collections of NEW and SELECTED songs for SUNDAY SCHOOLS ever published in a single volume.

224 pages. 85 cents per copy in any quantity; single copies for examination, by mail, on receipt of price.

BIGLOW & MAIN,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,
74 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati.
19 East 16th Street, New York.

THE J. P. BUSH Mfg. Co.
BOVININE

BUSH'S FLUID FOOD

BOVININE

PURE BLOOD AND PERFECT NUTRITION are necessary for good health. BOVININE, a preparation of the juices of lean raw meat carefully selected, contains all the elements for making New and Pure Blood and giving perfect nutrition to all the organs of the body. For this reason weary brain and hand workers derive the greatest benefit from BOVININE, which furnishes in abundance the nourishment so eagerly absorbed by the starving nerve centers.

The Dingee & Conard Co's ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS.

Largest Rose Growers in America.

65 Large Rose Houses.

OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., elegantly illustrated, is sent FREE to ALL who write for it. It describes and tells HOW TO GROW over TWO THOUSAND FINEST varieties of ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, BULBS and SEEDS. NEW ROSES, NEW SHRUBBERY, NEW CLEMATIS and Climbing Vines, NEW SUMMER FLOWERING BULBS, JAPAN LILIES, GLADIOLUS, TUBEROSES, CARNATIONS, New JAPAN CHRYSANTHEMUMS, New MOON FLOWERS, and the choicest

NEW and RARE FLOWER AND VEGETABLE SEEDS

Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. Safe arrival guaranteed. If you wish Roses, Plants, or Seeds of any kind, it will pay you to see our New Guide before buying. Send for it—free. Address

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., ROSE GROWERS and West Grove, Pa.

The Great Church LIGHT.
FRINK'S Patent Reflectors give the Most Powerful, the Softest, Cheapest and the Best Light known for Churches, Stores, Show Windows, Parlors, Banks, Offices, Picture Galleries, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches and the trade.
I. P. FRINK, 661 Pearl Street, N. Y.

For Gas

BAILEY'S
COMPOUND light-spreading SILVER-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 118 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

For Oil

BAILEY'S
COMPOUND light-spreading SILVER-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 118 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

METAL CEILINGS.
BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores, and Residences. ARTISTIC
H. S. NORTHPROP, 18 Rose Street, New York.

PEWS SEATINGS and FURNISHINGS for Churches, Halls, Sunday Schools, &c. Send for Catalogues, mentioning this paper. FORSYTHE & CO., 135 Degraw St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Parturition Without Pain.
A Code of Directions for avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Childbearing. By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D. Price by mail, $1.00.
"A work whose excellence surpasses our power to commend."—New York Evening Mail. 1000 Lady agents wanted. M. L. HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Comparably Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Absorbs all impurities from the blood. Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Cures Biliaryness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhoea, Malaria, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, &c.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.

Holman's Liver and Stomach Pad
Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Smallpox, Yellow Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers.

Write for pamphlet, containing full instructions.
HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO., 81 John St., N. Y., Box 2112.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

EGGLESTON'S

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.
EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

RUPTURE CURED
with our Improved Elastic Truss worn with ease night and day, retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St., New York.

OUR SUFFICIENCY.

MRS. H. W. BROWN.

"Our Sufficiency is of God."

Yea, all of Him! He is my strength in weakness,
My Covert from the storm of wind and rain;
My Portion, and my Place of Habitation;
My Changeless Friend, when trust in man is vain.

He makes my path, and gently leads me in it;
Removes the mountains that would bar my way;
Turns darkness into light, and grief to gladness,
He is my Joy—my soul's Perpetual Day.

There is no care I cannot lay upon Him;
I have no want that He will not supply;
He gives me grapes of Eshcol in the desert;
When I'm in doubt He guides me with His eye.

And in His word He shows me things so wondrous,
Such depths of Wisdom and such heights of Love,
That all my soul is filled with adoration,
Such as not even angels know above.

I have no future! it is in His keeping,
Nor do I seek to know what it may hold!
He is my Confidence—I trust Him wholly!
Nor fear I death, for Christ hath made me bold.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

That extreme tired feeling and all affections caused or promoted by impure blood and low state of the system are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Give it a trial. Sold by all druggists.

National Needs and Remedies.

The discussions of the Evangelical Alliance's recent General Conference at Boston.

8vo. PAPER, $1.00. CLOTH, $1.50.

Addresses by PHILLIPS BROOKS, JOSIAH STRONG, BISHOP HUNTINGTON, RICHARD T. ELY, HOWARD CROSBY, JOSEPH COOK, and many others.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price, by
THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., PUBLISHERS,
740 and 742 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY
ESTAB. 1850. INCOR. 1877
They Lead the World!
Sent for trial in your own home.
ABSOLUTELY PERFECT
Guaranteed Six Years
DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!
Cat. Free.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 E. 21st St., N.Y.
$35 to $500

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea, A TRIAL ORDER of 3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P.O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sundry Targets, by image $2.50. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75. 192,000 sold. 5000 Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N.Y.

GIVEN AWAY WITH DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC CORSET

To introduce Dr. Scott's beautiful new Electric High Hip, Dress Form and Summer Corsets to the readers of this paper, The Pall Mall Electric Association of London and New York will, until further notice, make the following inducements: If you cannot get these Corsets at your nearest store, remit at once for one of our High Hip Corsets at $1.25, or a Dress Form or Summer Corset at $1.50, accompanied by 15c. postage, mentioning this paper, and we will send you FREE with the Corset, postpaid, a Set of our Patent Gored Belt Hose Supporters retailing at 50c., and a copy of that eminently interesting work, "The Doctor's Story," price 25c., or a choice of Dr. Scott's 50c. Electric Hair Curler or two of Dr. Scott's Electric Plasters instead of the Supporters. This special offer to run for limited period only, so that all feeling inclined to accept it should do so at once and not delay. Address DR. SCOTT, 842 Broadway, N.Y.

DRESS FORM CORSET $1.50.

18 to 30 in. white and dove.

This Dress Form Corset is made with shoulder straps, detachable in sizes from 18 to 30 inches, dove and white. It is fitted with our patent combination spinal supporting back, invaluable to all Ladies. A beautiful silver-plated compass accompanies each corset, with which to test its power. Price, $1.50, and 15c. for postage, with free premium.

If you cannot obtain them at your Dry Goods or Fancy Stores, or Druggists, we will mail any Corset including either premium, paid on receipt of price with 15c. for postage added. You thus obtain $2.25 value for $1.65 only. Agents Wanted. Remit by post-office money or draft check currency or stamps in registered letter payable to GEORGE A. SCOTT, 842 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Mention this paper.

HIGH HIP CORSET, $1.25.

It is made of fine Alexandria cloth, dove and white, in size 18 to 30 inches; it is unusually strong and durable; a perfect fit; it possesses strong Electro-Magnetic curative qualities, and as such is cheap at $5.00. It has our patent combination spinal supporting back, invaluable to all ladies. Price, $1.25, with 15c. for postage, and the premium free.

THESE HOSE SUPPORTERS FREE to every Lady remitting price of either of these three new and beautiful Electric Corsets, with 15 cents extra for postage.

These Supporters are the most convenient and useful kind made and sell at 50c.

State whether Lady's or Children's is wanted, and size of waist.

Any person not desiring Hose Supporters can select Dr. SCOTT'S Electric Hair CURLER, or two of Dr. Scott's Electric PLASTERS instead, value of each, 50c. We want a good agent in every town. Send for terms. FREE catalogue illustrating all our goods.

SUMMER CORSET, $1.50.

This is a beautiful Electric Summer Corset, of extra strong and fine quality Nottingham fabric of double thickness. It has a girdle-shaped band which firmly secures the material preventing stretching and getting out of shape. It is made white only, 18 to 30 inches. Has our patent back invaluable to ladies. Price, $1.50, and 15c. postage with free premium.

DR. JAEGER'S Sanitary Woolen System Company,
827 & 829 Broadway, New York.

HERMANN SCHARFFER, President; ERNEST BENOIR, Vice-President.

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT THIS TRADE MARK.

WARRANTED PURE WOOL

SPRING AND SUMMER UNDERWEAR.

The genuine sanitary goods are manufactured under the supervision of Dr. Jaeger, and sold by the above-named Company and their authorized agents only. Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail. Garments made to order, a Specialty. Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,
827 and 829 Broadway, New York.

YOU CAN LAY BY $500 TO $1500 a year by working for us. You can't do it in any surer or simpler way no matter how you try. We furnish capital and pay liberally those who work either whole or part time. Stamp not required for answer. JNO. C. WINSTON & CO. Pubs., Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City.

LADY WANTED SALARY $65 to $50 AND EXPENSES. (LADIES $1.50 SPECIALTY FREE.) For our business in each locality. Intelligence and honesty, but no experience, necessary. Also good MAN for section; Salary $100. GAY BROS. & CO. (Incorporated) Capital $800,000—credit High, 84 Reade St., N.Y.

SALESMEN WANTED. Limited number of go-ahead men wanted in soliciting department, and to train others. $100 per month and over. Liberal allowance for expenses. Permanent position to active men. Established 15 years—largest trade. Address, SAFFORD ADAMS & CO. 41 Great Jones St., N.Y. Mention CHRISTIAN HERALD.

BIXBY'S PRIZE PUZZLE

The Puzzle is to discover in the picture, by receding consecutively from right to left, sixteen visible objects, the final letters of which spell an article of every-day use manufactured by S. M. Bixby & Co.

WE OFFER TO PRESENT, FREE, the game "A SWARM OF BEES," to EACH ONE sending us a CORRECT ANSWER during the year 1896. PROVIDED—a two-cent stamp is enclosed, and the answer to the puzzle (consisting of the sixteen words distinctly written) is accompanied by a label taken from the top of the lid of a box of the large or "B" size of BIXBY'S "THREE BEE" BLACKING, With Patent Handle, FOR MEN'S SHOES, or a label from a bottle of BIXBY'S "ROYAL POLISH," FOR LADIES' SHOES.

The labels may be readily removed after submerging the lid or bottle in water over night. Answers must be accompanied, also, with the NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE MERCHANT from whom the Blacking or Polish was purchased. The game we offer is one of the most amusing and yet scientific games ever invented—simple enough to give entertainment to the young—deep and ingenious enough to entertain a congress of chess experts. It is played on a handsomely constructed board, furnished complete with counters, etc.

ON THE CONDITIONS PREVIOUSLY WE WILL ALSO PRESENT A FIVE DOLLAR GOLD PIECE to the sender of the Greatest Number of the "B" size of "Three Bee" Blacking Labels, received by us EACH MONTH, during the same year. All those sending three or more of the labels will receive the game whether their answers are correct or not. Extra copies of the Puzzle will be mailed, or additional information given, upon receipt of a two-cent stamp. Presents will be forwarded at the end of each month—postage prepaid. If you fail to receive one, cause your answer is not correct, or you are not complied with all the requirements. COMPETITORS for our presents will understand object is to secure a more thorough introduction of our "Three Bee" Blacking and "Royal" among consumers. Do not credit disparaging remarks about the goods, but test them when they are not readily found at a Retail Dealer will Procure a Supply if a legitimate demand is made for them. Address, S. M. BIXBY & CO., Advertising Department 194 and 196 Hester St., New York.

PURE SONGS SUNDAY SCHOOLS PRAYER AND PRAISE 35c EACH 360 DOZ. 75c EACH 750 DOZ. TWO BEST BOOKS OF THE DAY 75c EACH. BY J. W. BURKE & CO. MACON, GA.

OLIOGRAPH AGENTS WANTED.—$5 to $10 per day collecting small pictures for us to copy and enlarge. Satisfaction guaranteed and a $4 outfit free. Address A. DUNNE & CO., 56 Reade St., N.Y. Name Christian Herald.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

A LIGHT EQUAL TO GAS. Everlasting Wick. Nothing but the oil burn wick is "Mineral Wool" cannot burn, and no smoke or soot to disfigure chimney, &c. Gives a brilliant light. Agents everywhere with it. Retail price each. We will send 3 samples for 10c. Small wicks, 20c. a doz., $2.25 a gross. 25c. per doz., $2.75 a gross. Large, 30c. a doz. gross. 1 Gross, assorted sizes, $2.75. All paid. Address, F. O. WEHOSKEY, Providence, R.I.

25c PRINTING OUTFIT. A WHOLE PRINTING OUTFIT, COMPLETE AND JUST as shown out. 2 Alphabets of new type. Bottle of Linotype. Tweezers, in neat case with catalogue and directions "HOW TO PRINT." Set up any name, print cards, paper, envelopes, linen, work 50c. The best gift for young people. Postpaid only 25c for $1. Agents wanted. Ingersoll & Bros., 45 Cortlandt St., N.Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

N. XIII., No. 18. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

TRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. GEORGE H. STUART, President of the Christian Commission in the War.
 VOICES OF NATURE. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
 BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER: Attractions for Immigrants—Pathetic Death of a Convict, Etc.
 SECOND ADVENT. By Bishop Bickersteth.
 DING THE MULTITUDE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
 TRAIT OF THE LATE MR. JACOB ESTEY.

BELIEVERS AND THEIR HELPERS. A New Sermon by Rev. O. H. Spurgeon.
 GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS: A Clergyman's Delicate Reproof—Circles in Heaven, Etc.
 PICTURE OF EGYPTIAN RELICS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.
 A SCHOOLBOY'S PHILOSOPHY.
 PICTURE OF GERMAN IMPERIAL FAMILY.
 WILL IT LIFT? A Serial Story. By Rev. J. Jackson Wray. (Continued.)

Late Mr. George H. Stuart, President of the Christian Commission—Incidents in the Work of the Commission.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON. THE VOICES OF NATURE.

"The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary." Isa. 60:13.

Lebanon in its Present Glory—The Tree of Calvary Subduing the Evil from the Tree of Eden—The Elements to be Moderated—The Contributions of the Natural World to the Kingdom of God—Testimony to the Truth of the Bible—Infidels Converted in the Holy Land—Illustrations of Divine Truth—All the Writers Drawing on Nature—Furnishing Personal Defence to the Christian—How a Famous Hymn was Written.

ON our way from Damascus we saw the mountains of Lebanon white with snow, and the places from which the cedars were hewn, and then drawn by ox-teams down to the Mediterranean Sea, and then floated in great rafts to Joppa, and then again drawn by ox-teams up to Jerusalem to build Solomon's temple. Those mighty trees in my text are called the "glory of Lebanon." Inanimate nature felt the effects of the first transgression. When Eve touched the forbidden tree, it seems as if the sinful contact had smitten not only that tree, but as if the air caught the pollution from the leaves, and as if the sap had carried the virus down into the very soil until the entire earth reeked with the leprosy. Under that sinful touch nature withered. The inanimate creation, as if aware of the damage done it, sent up the thorn and brier and nettle to wound, and fiercely oppose, the human race. Now as the physical earth felt the effects of the first transgression, so it shall also feel the effect of the Saviour's mission. As from that one tree in Paradise a blight went forth through the entire earth, so from one tree on Calvary another force shall speed out to interpenetrate and check, subdue and override, the evil. In the end it shall be found that the tree of Calvary has more potency than the tree of Paradise. As the nations are evangelized, I think a corresponding change will be effected in the natural world. I verily believe that the trees, and the birds, and the rivers, and the skies will have their millennium. If man's sin affected the ground, and the vegetation, and the atmosphere, shall Christ's work be less powerful or less extensive?

The Earth Reclaimed.

Doubtless God will take the irregularity and fierceness from the elements so as to make them congenial to the race, which will then be symmetrical and evangelized. The ground shall not be so lavish of weeds and so grudging of grain. Soils which now have peculiar proclivities toward certain forms of evil production will be delivered from their besetting sins. Steep mountains, ploughed down into more gradual ascent, shall be girdled with flocks of sheep and shocks of corn. The wet marsh shall become the deep-grassed meadow. Cattle shall eat unharmed by caverns once haunted of wild beasts. Children will build play-houses in what was once a cave of serpents; and, as the Scripture saith, "The weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den."

Universal Eden.

Oh what harvests shall be reaped when neither drouth, nor excessive rain, nor mildew, nor infesting insects shall arrest the growth, and the utmost capacity of the fields for production shall be tested by an intelligent and athletic yeomanry. Thrift and competency characterizing the world's inhabitants, their dwelling-places shall be graceful and healthy and adorned. Tree and arbor and grove around about will look as if Adam and Eve had got back to Paradise. Great cities, now neglected and unwashed, shall be orderly, adorned with architectural symmetry and connected with far distant seaports by present modes of transportation carried to their greatest perfection, or by new inventions yet to spring up out of the water or drop from the air at the beck of a Morse or a Robert Fulton belonging to future generations. Isaiah in my text seems to look forward to the future condition of the physical earth as a condition of great beauty and excellence; and then prophesies that as the strongest and most ornamental timber in Lebanon was brought down to Jerusalem and constructed into the ancient temple, so all that is beautiful and excellent in the physical earth shall yet contribute to the Church now being built in the world. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee; the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary."

Much of this prophecy has already been fulfilled, and I proceed to some practical remarks upon the contributions which the natural world is making to the kingdom of God, and then draw some inferences. The first contribution that Nature gives to the Church is her testimony in behalf of the truth of Christianity. This is an age of profound research. Nature cannot evade men's inquiries as once. In chemist's laboratory she is put to torture and compelled to give up her mysteries. Hidden laws have come out of their hiding-place. The earth and the heavens, since they have been ransacked by geologist and botanist and astronomer, appear so different from what they once were that they may be called "the new heavens and the new earth."

Science No Enemy.

This research and discovery will have powerful effect upon the religious world. They must either advance or arrest Christianity, make men better or make them worse, be the Church's honor or the Church's overthrow. Christians, aware of this in the early ages of discovery, were nervous and fearful as to the progress of science. They feared that some natural law, before unknown, would suddenly spring into harsh collision with Christianity. Gunpowder and the gleam of swords would not so much have been feared by religionists as electric batteries, voltaic piles, and astronomical apparatus. It was feared that Moses and the prophets would be run over by sceptical chemists and philosophers. Some of the followers of Aristotle, after the invention of the telescope, refused to look through that instrument, lest what they saw would overthrow the teachings of that great philosopher. But the Christian religion has no such apprehension now. Bring on your telescopes and microscopes, and spectroscopes—and the more the better. The God of nature is the God of the Bible, and in all the universe, and in all the eternities, He has never once contradicted Himself. Christian merchants endow universities, and in them Christian professors instruct the children of Christian communities. The warmest and most enthusiastic are bravest and most enthusiastic friends of science. The Church rejoices as much over every discovery as the world rejoices. Good men have found that there is no war between science and religion. That which at first has seemed to be the weapon of the infidel has turned out to be the weapon of the Christian.

Friends of Christ

Scientific discussions may be divided into those which are concluded, and those which are still in progress, depending for decision upon future investigation. Those which are concluded have invariably rendered their verdict for Christianity, and we have faith to believe that those which are still in prosecution will come to as favorable a conclusion. The great systems of error are falling before these discoveries, which have only demonstrated the truth of the Bible, and so reinforced Christianity. Mohammedanism and paganism in their ten thousand forms have been proved false, and by great natural laws shown to be impositions. Buried cities have been exhumed, and the truth of God found written on their coffin-lids. Bartlett, Robinson, and Layard have been not more the apostles of science than the apostles of religion. The dumb lips of the pyramids have opened to preach the gospel. Expeditions have been fitted out for Palestine, and explorers have come back to say that they have found among mountains, and among ruins, and on the shore of waters, living and undying evidences of our glorious Christianity.

Men who have gone to Palestine infidels have come back Christians. They who were blind and deaf to the truth at home have seemed to see Christ again preaching upon Olivet, and have beheld in vivid imagination the Son of God again walking the hills about Jerusalem. Caviglia once rejected the truth, but afterward said, "I came to Egypt, and the Scriptures and

The Pyramids Converted Me."

When I was in Beyrout, Syria, last December, our beloved American missionary, Rev. Doctor Jessup, told me of his friend who met a sceptic at Joppa, the seaport of Jerusalem, and the unbeliever said to his friend: "I am going into the Holy Land to show up the folly of the Christian religion. I am going to visit all the so-called 'sacred places,' and write them up, and show the world that the New Testament is an imposition upon the world's credulity." Months after, Doctor Jessup's friend met the sceptic at Beyrout, after he had completed his journey through the Holy Land. "Well, how is it?" said the aforesaid gentleman to the sceptic.

The answer was: "I have seen it all, and I tell you the Bible is true! Yes, it is all true!" The man who went to destroy came back to defend. A what I myself saw during my recent absence, I conclude that anyone who can go through the Holy Land and remain an unbeliever, is either a man or an imbecile. God employed men to write the Bible, but He took many of the same truths which they recorded, and with His own almighty hand He gouged them into the rocks, and drew them down into dismal depths, and, as documents are put in the corner-stone of a temple, so in the very foundation of the earth He folded up and placed the records of heavenly truth. The earthen corner-stone was laid, like that of other sacred edifices, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The Author of revelation standing among the great strata, looked upon Moses, and said, "Let us record for future ages the world's history; you write it there on paper, I will write it here on the boulders."

Nature in the Bible.

Again, nature offers an invaluable contribution to Christianity by the illustration she makes of divine truth. The inspired writers seized upon the advantages offered by the natural world. Trees, rivers and clouds and rocks broke forth into eloquent and enthusiastic utterances. Would Christ forth the strength of faith, He points to the sycamore, whose roots spread out, and strike down, clinch themselves amid great depths of earth. He said that faith was strong enough to tear up by the roots.

At Hawarden, England, Mr. Gladstone, when showing me his trees during a prolonged visit through his magnificent park, pointed out a sycamore, and with a wave of the hand said, "In your visit to the Holy Land did you see any sycamore more impressive than that?" I confessed that I had not. Its branches were not more remarkable than its roots. It was to such a tree as that that Jesus pointed when He would illustrate the power of faith. "Ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root and be thou cast into the sea, and it would obey you." One reason why Christ has fascinated the world as no other teacher, is because instead of using severe argument He was always telling how something in the spiritual world was like unto something in the natural world. These wonderful "likes" of our Lord! Like a grain of mustard seed. Like a treasure hid in a field. Like a merchant seeking goodly pearls. Like a net that was cast into the sea. Like unto a holder.

Christ's Lessons from Nature.

Would Christ teach the precision with which He looks after you, He says He counts the hairs of your head. Well, that is a long and tedious count if the head have the average endowment. It has been found that if the hairs of the head be black there are about 120,000, or if they be fair there are about 140,000. But God knows the number: "The hairs of your head are all numbered." Would Christ impress us with the divine watchfulness and care, He speaks of the sparrows which were a nuisance in those times. They were caught by the thousands in the net. They were thin and scrawny, and had comparatively no meat on their bones. They seemed almost valueless, whether living or dead. Now, argues Christ, if my Father takes care of them will He not take care of you? Christ would have the Christian despondent of his slowness of religious development go to the corn-field for a lesson. He watches first the green shoot pressing up through the clods, gradually strengthening into a stalk, and last of all the swelling out with the pressure of the corn: "The blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

Would David set forth the freshness and beauty of genuine Christian character—he sees an eagle starting from its nest just after the moulting season. Its old feathers shed, and its wings and body decked with new down and plumes, its body finely feathered as that of her young ones just beginning to try the speed of their wings. Thus rejuvenated and replumed is the Christian's faith and hope, by every season of communion with Christ. "Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's." Would Solomon represent the annoyance of a contentious woman's tongue, he points to a leakage in the roof of his house or tent, where, throughout the rainy day, the water comes through, falling upon the floor—drip! drip! drip! And he says, "A contentious woman dripping in a very rainy day and a contentious an are alike." Would Christ set forth the character of those who make great profession of piety, it have no fruit. He compares them to barren fig-trees, which have very large and showy leaves, and nothing but leaves. Would Job illustrate deceitful friendships, he speaks of brooks in those climes, at wind about in different directions, and dry up when you want to drink out of them: "My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as the team of brooks they pass away." David when he could impress us with the despondency into which he had sunk, compares it to a quagmire of those regions, through which he had doubtless sometimes tried to walk, but sunk in up to his neck, and he cried, "I sink in deep mire where there is no standing." Would Habakkuk set forth the capacity which God gives the good man to walk safely amid the deadliest perils, he points to the wild animal called the leopard walking over slippery rocks, and leaping from old crag to wild crag, by the peculiar make of its paws able calmly to sustain itself in the most dangerous places: "The Lord God is my strength, and he will make my feet like hind's feet."

Job's Poetic Imagery.

Job makes all natural objects pay tribute to the royalty of his book. As you go through some chapters of Job you feel as if it were a bright spring morning, and, as you see the glittering drops from the grass under your feet, you say with that patriarch, "Who hath begotten the drops of the dew?" And now, as you read on, you seem in the silent midnight to behold the waving of a great light on your path, and you look up to find it the aurora borealis, which Job described so long ago "the bright light in the clouds and the splendor that cometh out of the north." As you read on, there is darkness hurtling in the heavens, and the showers break loose till the birds fly for hiding-place and the mountain torrents in red fury foam over the rocky shelving; and with the same poet, you exclaim, "Who can number the clouds in wisdom, or who can stay the bottles of heaven?" As you read on, you feel yourself coming in frosty mists, and, in fancy, wading through the snow, you say, with that same inspired writer, "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?" And while the sharp sleet drives in your face, and the ice stings your cheek, you quote him again: "Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail?" In the Psalmist's writings I hear the voices of the sea: "Deep calleth unto deep;" and the roar of forests: "The Lord shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh;" and the loud peal of the black tempest: "The God of glory undereth;" and the rustle of the long silk on the mill-filled husks: "The valleys are covered with snow;" and the cry of wild beasts: "The young lions roar after their prey;" the hum of palm-trees and cedars: "The righteous shall flourish like a cedar-tree, he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon;" the sigh of wings and the swirl of fins: "Dominion over the fowl of the air and the fish of the sea."

Emblems of Truth.

The truths of the gospel might have been presented in technical terms, and by the means of dry definitions, but under these the world would not have listened or felt. How could the safety of trusting upon Christ have been presented, were it not the figure of a rock? How could the gladdening effect of the gospel have been set forth, had not the Pharisees thought of the dawn of the morning, exclaiming, "The day-spring from on high hath visited us to give light to them that sit in darkness." How could the soul's intense longing for Christ have been presented so well as by the emblem of natural hunger and natural thirst? As the lake thirsts into its bosom the shadow of hills around, and the gleam of stars above, so, in these great depths of divine truth, all objects in nature are grandly reflected. We walk forth in the spring-time, and everything breathes of the Resurrection. Bright blossoms and springing grass speak to us of the coming up of those whom we have loved, when in the white robes of their joy and coronation they shall appear. And when in the autumn of the year Nature preaches thousands of funeral sermons from the text, "We all do fade as a leaf," and scatters her elegies in our path, we cannot help but think of sickness and the tomb. Even winter, "being dead, it speaketh." The world will not be argued into the right. It will be tenderly illustrated into the right. Tell them what religion is like. When the other tried to tell her dying child what heaven was, she compared it to light. "But that hurts my eyes," said the dying girl. Then the mother compared heaven to music. "But any sound hurts me;

I am so weak," said the dying child. Then she was told that heaven was like mother's arms. "Oh, take me there!" she said. "If it is like mother's arms, take me there!" The appropriate simile had been found at last.

Another contribution which the natural world is making to the kingdom of Christ, is the defence and aid which the elements are compelled to give to the Christian personally. There is no law in nature but is Sworn for the Christian's Defence.

In Job this thought is presented as a bargain made between the inanimate creation and the righteous man: "Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field." What a grand thought that the lightnings, and the tempests, and the hail, and the frosts, which are the enemies of unrighteousness, are all marshalled as the Christian's body-guard. They fight for him. They strike with an arm of fire, or clutch with their fingers of ice. Everlasting peace is declared between the fiercest elements of nature and the good man. They may in their fury seem to be indiscriminate, smiting down the righteous with the wicked, yet they cannot damage the Christian's soul, although they may shrivel his body. The wintry blast that howls about your dwelling, you may call your brother, and the south wind coming up on a June day by way of a flower-garden, you may call your sister. Though so mighty in circumference and diameter, the sun and the moon have a special charge concerning you. "The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night." Elements and forces hidden in the earth are now harnessed and at work in producing for you food and clothing. Some grain-field that you never saw presented you this day with your morning meal. The great earth and at work for you; and shooting light, and silvery stream, and sharp lightning are only woven threads in the great loom, with God's foot on the shuttle. The same Spirit that converted your soul has also converted the elements from enmity toward you into inviolable friendship, and furthest star and deepest cavern, regions of everlasting cold as well as climes of eternal summer, all have a mission of good, direct or indirect, for your spirit.

The Heavens are the Busy Loom

Now I infer from this that the study of natural objects will increase our religious knowledge. If David and Job and John and Paul could not afford to let go without observation one passing cloud, or rift of snow, or spring blossom, you cannot afford to let them go without study. Men and women of God most eminent in all ages for faith and zeal, indulged in such observations—Payson and Baxter and Doddridge and Hannah More. That man is not worthy the name of Christian who saunters listlessly among these magnificent disclosures of divine power around, beneath, and above us, stupid and uninstructed. They are not worthy to live in a desert, for that has its fountains and palm-trees; nor in regions of everlasting ice, for even there the stars kindle their lights, and auroras flash, and huge icebergs shiver in the morning light, and God's power sits upon them as upon a great white throne. Yet there are Christians in the Church who look upon all such tendencies of mind and heart as soft sentimentalities, and because they believe this printed Revelation of God are content to be infidels in regard to all that has been written in this great Book of the universe, written in in paragraphs of constellations, and illustrated with sunset and thunder-cloud and spring morning.

Letters of Stars,

I infer, also, the transcendent importance of Christ's religion. Nothing is so far down, and nothing is so high up, and nothing so far out, but God makes it pay tax to the Christian religion. If snow and tempest and dragon are expected to praise God, suppose you He expects no homage from your soul? When God has written His truth upon everything around you, suppose you He did not mean you to open your eyes and read it?

Finally, I learn from this subject what an honorable position the Christian occupies when nothing is so great and glorious in nature but it is made to edify, defend, and instruct him. Hold up your heads, sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, that I may see how you bear your honors. Though now you may think yourself unbefriended, this spring's soft wind, and next summer's harvest of barley, and next autumn's glowing fruits, and next winter's storms, all seasons, all elements, zephyr and euroclydon, rose's breath and thundercloud, gleaming light and thick darkness, are sworn to defend you, and cohorts of angels would fly to deliver you from peril, and the great God would unsheathe His sword and arm the universe in your cause rather than that harm should touch you with one of its lightest fingers. "As the mountains around about Jerusalem, so the Lord is around about His people from this time forth for evermore."

Oh for more sympathy with the natural world, and then we should always have a Bible open before us, and we could take a lesson from the most fleeting circumstances, as when a storm came down upon England Charles Wesley sat in a room watching it through an open window, and frightened by the lightning and the thunder a little bird flew in, and nestled in the bosom of the sacred poet, and as he gently stroked it and felt the wild beating of its heart, he turned to his desk and wrote that hymn which will be sung while the world lasts:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the billows near me roll
While the tempest still is high:
Hide me, O my Saviour, hide,
Till the storm of life be past,
Safe into the haven guide,
O receive my soul at last.

A WRONG-DOER PROMOTED.

OUR readers will remember the narrative published in these columns some time ago of a shameful miscarriage of justice which took place in India. A girl named Luchminia was purchased from her mother for vicious purposes by an old native libertine. She fled for protection to a lady missionary, who kept her until her purchaser commenced legal proceedings for her recovery. The English magistrate, a man named Quinn, ordered the missionary to give the girl up to her mother. The order was obeyed, and the girl was promptly handed over by the mother to her purchaser. An appeal was made to the British Parliament, and the magistrate was suspended from his office. The case caused great excitement at the time, but it has subsided now. The Indian Witness, just received, states that Quinn has now returned, invested with higher powers than before, and with his salary raised. The Witness, commenting on the fact, says: "The magistrate is rewarded for blundering, while the unhappy victim of the blunder—poor Luchminia—is suffering the horrible consequences of official ignorance. Justice will be done in this sad case yet. God's time can wait. But it will come, and one day the unspeakable wrong done poor Luchminia will be righted by that strong arm that exacted vengeance on officialdom for the wrongs of Naboth."

STONING A PREACHER IN CHINA.

ONE of the China Inland Mission preachers, Mr. McNair, thus describes a recent experience during a tour in an outlying district in China: "An hour's sailing brought us in sight of Tsin-shih, when we went ashore with an armful each of Gospels and tracts, in the hope of being able to scatter them in the outskirts, but we were only partially successful. We entered the town itself a little before noon, and at once began to declare our message. The people were rude, and cursed us on every side. Crowds gathered round us of such as had nothing much to do, and before we had gone very far we could see that it would not take much to get us a beating. Toward evening the crowds got very rough; we tried not to lose sight of one another, but found that sometimes difficult. At last I lost sight of Mr. James, and soon discovered that I had fallen near to his mob together with my own. I tried to humor the crowd as best I could, but they seemed bent on mischief. Occasional pieces of broken tile were thrown, and my cue got a pull or two. I felt sure that Mr. James was not on the street, and began to think how I could get back to our boat. I knew it would not do to run, so I walked steadily toward the river-side among showers of missiles, without sustaining the slightest injury. The Lord preserved my head from being once struck, although I was struck on the back several times. On sighting the boat I saw Mr. James looking out for me. I descended the steep embankment without a single stone being thrown, but no sooner was I on the boat than a regular storm of missiles came battering against it. The boatmen put out from the shore as speedily as possible, and soon we were lost among the hundreds of boats that line the river-side. The fast-falling darkness helped us considerably to cover our retreat. We passed a quiet night at the river-side some distance down."

THE LATE MR. GEORGE H. STUART.

His Claims to National Honor—Birth in Ireland in 1816—Emigrates to America in 1831—Business Pursuits—His Church Work—Twenty-five Years Sunday-School Superintendent—His Help in Foreign Missions—Association with Dr. Duff—Organization of the Christian Commission—His Own Story of the Work—Raising Funds—Instances of Self-Denial—Typical Instance of a Conversion on a Battle-field—Record of the Work of the Commission—An Interview with President Lincoln—After the War—Illness and Death.

EDITORIAL mention was made in this journal last week of the death of the eminent Christian philanthropist whose services in the cause of the sick and suffering during the war made his name famous throughout the land. Such services are too soon forgotten when the occasion which has rendered them valuable has passed by; but it is not to our honor as a people that it should be so. The name of a public benefactor, especially of a man who has given, not only money, but active labor, to the public good, should never be forgotten. Our children and children's children should be taught to hold it in reverence, and treasure the memory of his good deeds as a national possession, honorable to us as a people, to our religion, and to humanity. As we honor the successful soldier, let us not forget the man through whose labors many sick and wounded of both parties in the strife were succored, cheered, comforted, and directed in the hour of national darkness. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is sure that it will have the hearty approval of its readers, in the South as well as in the North, in doing honor this week to the life and labors of our departed fellow-countryman. Mr. Stuart had many and reverence from his country, especially to the respect of the followers of Christ. We are apt to forget, through our association with the world, and our use of its maxims, who are the men whom we should hold in the highest esteem. We are ready to honor great preachers, great writers, great inventors, and men who in one way or another contribute to our amusement, our comfort, or our profit, but in the day of final award a different standard will be set up. Christ told us what it would be: "I was naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and in prison, and ye visited me. Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." How this applies to Mr. Stuart's record is shown by this tribute of a secular journal on the day after his death: "It was literally true of George H. Stuart that he never seemed to take notice of his own strength or health or interest when there was within his reach or in his sight a good service he thought he could do his fellow man."

Claims to Honor

George H. Stuart was an Irishman by birth. He was born in Rosehall, County Down, Ireland, on the 2d of April, 1816, his parents being members of the Associate Presbyterian Church, of which the Rev. George Hay was pastor, and after whom their son was named. He received his preliminary education in his native land, and came to America at the age of fifteen years, arriving at Philadelphia on the 1st of September, 1831. His first connection with business enterprise was with the mercantile firm composed of his brothers, John, Joseph, David, and James, which was established in Philadelphia in 1827. George H. Stuart was admitted as a member of the firm in 1837, and retained his active connection with it until its liquidation in the fall of 1879. The house did a very large business, and had branches in New York, Manchester, and Liverpool. Mr. Stuart also filled several responsible offices in connection with financial institutions.

His Church Work,

as summarized by the Public Ledger, to which we are indebted for the above facts, shows a very remarkable degree of activity. Soon after he settled in Philadelphia Mr. Stuart connected himself with the First Reformed Presbyterian Church, of which the Rev. Dr. S. B. Wylie was pastor, and in 1835 made the formal profession of his faith. He soon became not only one of the most prominent members of his church, but also one of the most active Christian workers in the country. He was ordained a Ruling Elder on the 7th of August, 1842, and held that office up to the hour of his death; and he was for twenty-five years the Superintendent of the Sunday-schools of his church. It is related of him that during that entire period he was never late at a single session. He was deeply interested in the work of his church, and to his liberal and untiring efforts much of its success was due.

Mr. Stuart was also an early and ardent supporter of foreign mission work; he acted for many years as Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and of the Theological Seminary of the same Church; and the Missionary Refuge at Landour was his contribution to the Saharanpur Mission in India. He was also for many years Vice-President of the American Sunday-school Union, of the American Bible Society, of the American Tract Society, National Temperance Society, of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, and President of the Philadelphia Branch of the Alliance, as well as of the Home Mission Society. The Rev. Dr. Duff, the famous missionary, visited America by his invitation, and the extensive tour he made, and the large amount of money he received for the college in Calcutta, were in a great measure the result of Mr. Stuart's arrangements.

Beside all these activities Mr. Stuart made time to give active and personal support to the Young Men's Christian Association. He was the first President of the Philadelphia Association, and was elected President of the National Conventions held at Troy, in 1859, and Chicago in 1863.

Although so earnest a Presbyterian, Mr. Stuart was very liberal in his views and practice, and among his warmest friends were Bishop McIlvaine, of the Episcopal Church in Ohio, and Bishop Matthew Simpson, of the Methodist denomination. The delegation of the Irish Presbyterian Church sent to this country during the years of famine in that land owed to his counsel, co-operation, and contributions much of its success. Other deputations from the churches in Scotland and Ireland received an hospitable welcome from him, with material aid and valuable counsel in the conduct of the business on which they came. It was through Mr. Stuart's broad sympathies that the painful experience of his church life came. His joining in communion with other evangelical denominations, and the use of their hymns, was made the basis of a complaint against him to the general Synod. Mr. Stuart was incapacitated by sickness from defending himself before that body, and judgment against him was given in default, though probably had he been present he could not have won a verdict, as his offence was admitted, and he was too sure of being right to be penitent. He was suspended from membership, but his church and pastor stood by him, and ultimately, when the prospect of a reversal of judgment was abandoned, they affiliated with the general Presbyterian Church.

The Christian Commission

was, however, the work which made Mr. Stuart's name best known throughout the land. His pastor, Dr. Wylie, in a sketch of Mr. Stuart's labors in connection with the Commission, said: "In this grand movement, the object of which was to aid in promoting the spiritual and temporal welfare of the officers, soldiers, and sailors of the army and navy of the United States, the like of which was before unknown to the world, Mr. Stuart was the great leading spirit from beginning to end. At its first meeting he was chosen Chairman of the Commission, and so remained till its close. Embracing men of all the leading evangelical denominations, and embodying a large amount of the best character and talent of the nation, inspired with the noble cause of liberty and self-government, it did a glorious work."

Mr. Stuart's work in this cause often took him to the front, and he was brought into personal contact with all the great statesmen and military leaders of the time. He had many exciting adventures while in this service. It is said the Commission raised about $6,000,000 for the purpose of supplying the men at the front with comforts not provided by the Government, and that there were at one time about 6,000 representatives of the Commission in the field.

The pictures on the first page show the character of their work. They supplied articles of clothing to the soldiers, visited the wounded in the hospitals, read and prayed with the patients, wrote letters for them, cheered and comforted the dying, and in a thousand ways showed themselves the followers of Christ in works of Christian love.

His Own Story

of this work has happily been written, and will be published in a few days by Messrs. J. M. Stoddard & Co., the eminent publishers of Philadelphia. It is entitled The Life of George H. Stuart. Written by Himself, and has a preface from the pen of the Rev. Robert Ellis Thompson, D. D., of the University of Pennsylvania. Through the courtesy of the publishers we are enabled to give here from advance sheets some specimen passages from this work which cannot fail to be deeply interesting. Mr. Stuart says: "After the battle of Gettysburg, where I found that our treasury was largely overdrawn while over twenty thousand wounded soldiers of both armies had been left on the battle-field, to whom we speedily sent three hundred and fifty-six delegates, with nearly a hundred thousand dollars worth of stores. Before starting for the field myself, I drew up a long dispatch, to be sent to the leading cities, stating the facts and asking for the privilege of drawing for different amounts. Boston I asked for ten thousand dollars; and the response came back the same day, 'Draw for sixty thousand

Days of Self-Denial.

"No language of mine can express the readiness and the liberality of the response made to our appeals on the part of the entire Northern population including the children, as well as the women and men. Did space permit, I might fill a volume with special instances of personal sacrifice made in behalf of the noble men who were fighting the battle of our country. Let me give a few instances, which might be multiplied tenfold. At the close of a public meeting in Michigan, after a collection was taken up, and the baskets laid in front of the pulpit, young lady was seen to leave her seat and approach the basket two or three times, and finally she pulled from her finger the engagement-ring given her by her lover, who was a soldier in the army, and threw it into the basket. In an Episcopal church in Philadelphia a diamond ring was found in the collection-box, which I sold for five hundred dollars."

"After I had made a speech in a leading Episcopal church in Brooklyn, a handsome pair of gold bracelets were found in the collection-box. In a collection taken in Dr. Shaw's church in Rochester we found a pair of gold-bowed spectacles. A very old woman, on her death-bed, in the northern part of New York State, bequeathed to us a necklace which she had worn for nearly all her life, and which was a somewhat remarkable one. I purchased the gift at its full value, and hold it still, as one of my many mementos of the war."

A Conversion on the Battle-field

is described by Mr. Stuart as an illustration of the blessed results of the Commission's work, innumerable instances of which might be given. This one is worthy of notice, because the man was preserved to do much valuable work in the cause of the Master. Mr. Stuart says: "John F. Chase, of Augusta, Me., who was a rugged farmer-boy about eighteen years of age, was the fifth man in his State to enlist. He became soon after a cannonier in the Fifth Maine Battery. After he had passed through several engagements unharmed, on the field of Gettysburg, on the night of July 2, while charging his gun to resist an attack, a Southern shell exploded at his side, carrying away his right arm, destroying his left eye, and inflicting several other wounds, chiefly in his breast. Carried to the rear as dead, he was laid on the spot where, the night before, as an unconverted and wicked man, he had for the first time (all alone) knelt on the bare ground praying to God for the pardon of his sins, and giving his heart to Christ. He lay there unconscious until the 4th of July, when he was picked up and put into the dead-cart, with others, to be buried. On his way to the grave he gave a groan, which attracted the driver's attention, when he was taken out of the cart and laid alongside of a barn on the roadside. He here lay another day without assistance, when the surgeons, after attending other cases, came and bound up his wounds, and had him removed to the Cemetery Hospital. There he fell under the care of the Rev. I. O. Sloan, of our Commission, who nursed him tenderly. Soon after he was taken out of the hospital, suffering from erysipelas. Mr. Sloan, still clinging to him, had tent built over him, and nursed him to convalescence. After three months he was brought by Mr. Sloan to West Philadelphia Hospital. While in the tent and being nursed, he was baptized by Mr. Sloan. He is now a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Most of his time is used in lecturing on temperance and kindred subjects."

"The United States Christian Commission was organized November 15, 1861, and closed its labors on January 1, 1866, although many appeals were made to maintain the organization for similar work in times of peace. In February of that year it held its final meeting at Washington, in the hall of the House of Representatives, where its annual meetings had been held in 1863, 1864, and 1865."

"A few days before this the friends of the Commission, who had assembled in Washington for the anniversary, called upon President Lincoln by appointment at the White House, and were received in the Green Room. I introduced him in a general way to the assembly, and spoke briefly of the work we were doing, and of the feelings of those engaged in it. While I was speaking he stood with his head slightly bowed, and an abstracted air. But when he raised himself to reply his face kindled into a genial smile, and a characteristic light shone in his eyes. He disclaimed thanks for anything he had done to further the work of the Commission. 'Nor,' he proceeded, 'do I know that I owe you any thanks for what you have done. We have all been laboring for a common end, the preservation of our country and the welfare of its defenders has been our motive and joy and reward.'

"At the final business meeting of the Commission the officers reported that they had spent or distributed in money and goods, on behalf of the soldiers and sailors, $6,291,107 in all. To this must be added the unpaid services of most of the 4,859 agents and delegates, besides nearly two hundred Christian women, who had been sent to the front to the hospitals, as only a very few of them had received any compensation, those few being chiefly permanent agents in charge of divisions of the army. The Commission distributed 1,466,748 Bibles or parts of the Scriptures, 8,603,434 books and pamphlets, 18,189,863 newspapers and magazines, chiefly religious, and 30,368,998 pages of religious tracts.

"But the greatest results are those which cannot be put into figures and statistics. No one counted the dying men whose thoughts had been turned to the Saviour, or the men whom life in the army might have ruined but for the Christian influences and teachings which the Commission brought to the front, or the men who had paid no heed to the offers of mercy at home, but accepted them when they were presented by the faithful preaching of the Gospel at the front, where the realities of life and death became so vivid. Nor can anyone number the men whose lives were saved by the loving ministrations of our delegates on the battle-field and in the hospital. Wherever I go since the war I am meeting former soldiers of the Union and the Southern armies who hold the Christian Commission in grateful remembrance for the saving of life and limb. Since I began writing these pages I had occasion to thank an unknown man for help in getting up a slope rather too steep for me in these years. 'Oh, no thanks, sir,' said he, 'I was a soldier in the army, and I owe my life to your Christian Commission.'"

After the War

Mr. Stuart's work was not forgotten. General Grant, who had good opportunities during the struggle of seeing the character of the man, appointed him one of the members of the Board of Commissioners to exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of appropriations to the Indians. He served until June, 1874, when, with several others of the Commissioners, he resigned. Although there had been considerable friction with the Interior Department the Commissioners accomplished much toward the reform of the administration of Indian affairs. It is said that President Grant twice offered Mr. Stuart Cabinet position, but he declined on both occasions. He was several times consulted by the President upon matters in the public service.

His Death.

On April 2, this year, Mr. Stuart celebrated his twenty-fourth birthday. Although he had been a sufferer from asthma for over half a century, he retained his strength and activity until within about a year ago, when failing health necessitated his retirement from the Presidency of the Merchants' Bank. After that time he failed steadily, and, although afflicted by his old malady, his death was the more especially to a general breaking up of his vital forces. A large part of his time during the last few months was spent at Clifton Springs, N. Y., at his condition becoming so alarming, he was taken to Philadelphia in a special train, on March 1, and taken to his son's residence, at Chestnut Hill. There he rallied somewhat, but the improvement was but temporary, for he died on April 12, passing away gently in his sleep, and without pain. Mr. Stuart was married the 11th of May, 1837, to Martha K. Denison, of Philadelphia. They had five children, of whom five are still living.

EGYPTIAN RELICS UNDER ELECTRIC LIGHT.

(See illustration on page 284.)

MANY strange thoughts are suggested by a visit to the relics of ancient Egypt collected in the British Museum. With the exception of the Museum at Boulak, which is now enriched by the mummies of the Pharaoh of the Exodus and other recently discovered royal remains, there is no museum in the world that contains so many relics of the departed grandeur of Egypt as does the British Museum. Mammoth statues, sculptures, hieroglyphs, mummies, ancient tools, ornaments, and records are there in abundance. The trustees have recently introduced the electric lights into the gallery, and its effects are very impressive. Under its glare the colossal head of Sesostrius, the Memnon head, and the other enormous sculptures are brought out in strong relief, and their wonderful beauty is perceived. It is a striking commentary on the transitory nature of human greatness. Here is a nation, whose very beginning dates many centuries after these statues were made and placed in position in the Egyptian palaces, digging them out of the sand and carrying them away for the edification of its people. Even the bodies of the sculptors and the monarchs who employed them are exhumed and exposed to the gaze of the multitude, and now a light which would have been strange and mysterious to those men of learning, sheds its beams on their corpses and the works of their hands.

THE GERMAN IMPERIAL FAMILY.

(See illustration on page 285.)

AUGUSTA VICTORIA, Princess of Schleswig-Holstein, eldest daughter of Duke Frederic of Schleswig-Holstein and wife of Emperor William II. of Germany, whose portrait, with that of her five sons, appears on page 285, is an "elect lady" in the Church of Christ as well as in the German Empire. A European journal gives many interesting details of her early life, and of her devotion to acts of charity and mercy. She was born in 1858, and is therefore thirty-two years old. Her childhood and youth were spent in the simplicity and seclusion of private life at Dolzig, and later at Prinzenau, country residences of her father. The Duke himself gave great attention to the education of his children, and the natural kindness of the children was fostered and grew until it won for them the hearts of all the inhabitants of the little neighboring town. They early formed the habit of caring personally for the poor, and it was always a great delight for them when, on Christmas Eve, the fifty poorest people of the place were invited to the castle of the Duke to receive their presents. But this was not enough; the princesses also went to the huts of the poor to visit them.

When she was married, on February 27, 1881, to the Crown Prince of Prussia, she continued to take warm interest in all works of practical benevolence, and found an early opportunity of visiting personally all the institutions of charity. Everybody felt that she did not do it merely as a duty, but that it was the impulse of her heart. Her special interest was drawn toward the City Mission, as an agency to meet the great spiritual need of the German metropolis. It was this which created the first difficulties in her way, and where she learnt that it is not always easy to confess the Lord before men. Nevertheless she continued her devotion to religious work in spite of the Rationalistic spirit around her. Her private life is singularly consecrated for a lady at the head of a brilliant court, and her children are carefully trained by their mother in Bible knowledge. Whenever it is possible—and it is the rule, rather than the exception—the Empress spends an hour with her children just previous to their retiring to rest, and joins them in their devotions.

Whenever a church, a hospital, or other building for religious purposes is opened, the Empress is sure to be present. She is interested in the erection of more churches for the capital. When the new building for the Young Men's Christian Association was opened in November last, she was present. She had visited the Association once before on the occasion of a lecture by the late Professor Christlieb, for whose work she felt great sympathy. She also takes great interest in deaconesses' work, which she would like to see extended.

Volume XII., of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1889, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, 1887, and 1888 are also for sale. None are on hand prior to 1884.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.

An Effort to Secure Settlers in Canada was urged last week on the Hon. John Carling, the Canadian Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, by some delegates from the Northwest. They submitted several suggestions for attracting immigration to that section. Among others, they proposed that the Government should send farmer representatives of the different nationalities settled in the Northwest to their respective native countries to post their friends and countrymen upon the resources and adaptability of Canada, and their own success in their new homes. There can be no doubt that such plans would have the desired effect. Men are always impressed by the testimony of their friends who have enjoyed blessings offered to themselves. They find it difficult to exercise faith in mere statements of those who cannot speak from actual experience. In spiritual matters there is the same difficulty, but there faith is indispensable, both as to the blessing and the curse. We may speak of the blessings enjoyed on the road to the better country, and point to the evils of the opposite course, but of the destination no one can speak from experience. The rich man in the parable, who was anxious on the matter, was assured that in such a case even personal testimony would be worthless. If sinners would not believe Moses and the prophets, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. (Luke 16:31.)

The Pathetic Death of a Released Convict in New York was reported last week. For some two or three years the Governor of New York has been besought by a sad-faced woman to pardon her son, who was sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years in 1884 for theft. The mother pleaded that her son had sincerely repented; that he had been the victim of bad companions more astute and wily than himself, and that there was evidence in the young man's conduct that if he were pardoned he would lead a good life. The Governor was deaf to her entreaties until a few weeks ago, when she appeared before him in the garb of a widow, and begged that her son might be released to comfort her in her loneliness and bereavement, and to support her. She said, too, that her deceased husband had left his property to the children of a former wife, and had made no provision for her or her son, and she needed her son's help to contest the will. Thereupon the Governor yielded, and signed the convict's pardon. The mother was overjoyed, and took her son to her home in New York. Proceedings were commenced to get some part of the property, but before the case came to trial the young man fell ill, and last week he died. It must have been a dreadful disappointment to him, on beginning to enjoy the sweets of liberty after a six years' incarceration, with the prospect of an inheritance, to have to die. If, however, he was truly converted, as his mother said, he has entered upon a better inheritance, assured to him in his heavenly Father's testament, compared with which the estate he was hoping for was trivial. (Mat 25:34.)

A Chinaman was Placed in an Embarrassing position at Niagara Falls on April 17. He and two fellow-countrymen crossed the Suspension Bridge from the Canadian side on that day. The United States Customs officer met them and asked for their certificates. Both the man's companions produced them, and, being in due form, they were allowed to pass, but he had no certificate. He was refused admission and was ordered to return to Canada. He went back, grievously disappointed. But his trouble was enormously increased when he reached the Canadian line. He was met there by an officer of the Dominion, who demanded the legal tax of fifty dollars. The Chinaman, having only ten dollars, was refused readmission to the Dominion. He was, in consequence a prisoner on the bridge, his egress being barred at both ends. A reporter found him looking wistfully at the Whirlpool Rapids, and learned that he had been there several hours, not knowing what to do. The Canadian officer was at length induced to telegraph a statement of the case to Ottawa, and the Chinaman had no alternative but to wait on the bridge until the answer came, and hope that at least one of the two Governments would admit him. No man is ever placed in an analogous spiritual situation. While in this life, as "on a narrow neck of land," between two eternal worlds, invitations come to him from both. At one, Satan tempts him (1 Pet. 5:8), and from the other the assurance reaches him, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." (John 6:37.)

THE SECOND ADVENT.

By Bishop Bickersteth.

The Burden—Warning of Coming Tribulation—The Morning Cometh—The Son of Man Will Return—Where is the Sign of His Coming?—Promise Must be Fulfilled—Study the Signs—Spread of the Gospel—Increase of Knowledge—Men Are Running to and Fro—Prophecy of Daniel—Papal Apostasy—What of the Night?—Inquire of God's Word.

"THE burden of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come." (Isa. 21:12.) The purport, or, in prophetic language, the "burden," of Dumah was the message to this earth which has been delivered and heralded down from the earliest times. Again and again it has been reiterated; even our blessed Lord Himself, though the Messenger of mercy, declared the wrath which must overtake those rejecting the offer of the Gospel. In the meantime, however, the question is asked, "Watchman, what of the night?" There are many who affect altogether to disbelieve the warnings of Coming Tribulation.

They ask "What of the night?" What of this tribulation so often spoken of, these coming judgments by which you so often try to persuade men? We see, as yet, no indications of the approaching consummation. The sun still shines in the heavens; the moon and stars still cross the vault of the mighty sky; where is the sign, then of this coming tribulation? Where is the evidence that these judgments will overtake a slumbering world? Here is the reply, "The morning cometh." What is the morning? The Advent of the Son of man in His glory—the coming of the once crucified Saviour, now the glorified Emmanuel—the Coming of the same Jesus who once trod this earth; who was rejected, crucified, and slain by ungodly men. He will appear in His glory, and will reign over

A Regenerated World.

"The morning cometh;" but the scoffer replies, "Where are the signs of His coming? All things continue as they were from the foundation of the world." But do all things continue as they were? Does not science itself—the chosen vantage-ground from which the unbeliever hurls his fiery darts against Christianity—does not science teach that changes have occurred, and are, up to this very day, in progress, which refute the idea that all things continue as they were at the creation of the world? As by the Word of the Lord the old earth perished by the overflowing of the waters—and no one dare dispute that at least one world has perished by the deluge—so even by the same Word is the present earth now kept in store, reserved unto the fire and the judgment of the great day.

"Watchman, what of the night?" may, however, be asked not only by the scoffer and the sceptic, but by the true believer in Christ. It is now

The World's Long Night.

The personal presence of Him who is the Light of man and the Sun of Righteousness is withdrawn. The ark of the Church is tossed to and fro by the storms of the sea. The waves of infidelity and heresy dash against her sides in all their fury. As yet we cannot hear the sound of Christ's chariot wheels. Is the Lord slack concerning His promise? Will yon heavens ever open and disclose the Son of man returning in His glory—the Messiah, who once came as the world's Redeemer? Yes, "the morning cometh." The promise will be fulfilled. Wait, for it will come. "Surely, I come quickly."

There are prophecies which render it essential that the Redeemer should return in His glory. In many prophecies the sufferings and triumphs of the Messiah are linked together, and as the sufferings have been literally fulfilled, is it not necessary that the triumphs should be accomplished also? And the anxious inquirer asks of the watchman:

Is the Night Far Spent?

Is the day soon about to dawn? Is there any streak of light in the sky which indicates that the day is about to break, and that the Sun of Righteousness shall be revealed in His majesty? The Word of God states that it will break on the world suddenly, as a thief in the night. When all things are going on in their accustomed order, when men are pursuing their accustomed avocations—the senator occupied with legislation, the merchant busy in commerce, and the tradesman engaged in the affairs of trade—then suddenly the sound will be heard of the archangel's trump and the Son of man will appear in the heavens, and Jesus will return in His glory. There are signs given by our blessed Lord Himself, from the appearance of which His believing people may gather when the end is near. And surely these signs would not have been given if it were not intended that we should carefully mark and look for their occurrence. It is our duty to study these signs, so let us look at some of them to which our Lord has pointed attention.

1. When our Lord was speaking of the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem, the apostles asked Him what should be the Signs of His Coming.

and of the End of the present Age or Dispensation. One of our Lord's replies was "that the Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations, and then shall the End come." Our Lord did not say that the gospel must first everywhere prevail, so as to cover the whole earth with a knowledge of the Lord, but only that the gospel shall be everywhere preached for a witness. And how does it stand with respect to this at the present day? No period since the time of the apostles has been more remarkable than the present century for the extension of the Redeemer's cause. For a long time previously the Church was culpably indifferent to the great duty of striving to evangelize the world, but with the commencement of the present century she seems to have roused from her slumbers, and marvellously put forth, and more marvellously succeeded in, her efforts to preach the gospel throughout the globe. There is hardly a kingdom on the earth where the message of the everlasting gospel has not been proclaimed, and there is hardly a language on the face of the globe into which the Word of God has not been translated. Through the labors of one society alone the Word of God has been translated into nearly two hundred different spoken dialects; and is not this something like hastening the fulfilment of this sign, "that the gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness"? (Matt. 24:14.)

2. Again, in the book of Daniel we are told that many shall run to and fro, and that knowledge shall be increased "at the time of the end." Is not one a remarkable facility for running to and fro, as evidenced by the extraordinary powers for locomotion? We have girdled the earth with our iron highways, and if there is one marvel more than another, it is the way in which multitudes from the very ends of the earth are availing themselves of this rapid locomotion. Then, knowledge must be increased; and is not this also a characteristic of our own time? What prodigious strides have been made in the march of science! Nature seems to have unfolded her secrets to the research and diligence of those who have applied their energies to scientific knowledge. Science has pierced the planetary world, has cast a measured line around the circumference of the earth, taught men to paint with the sunbeam, and to use the lightning of heaven as the means of conveying messages with the speed of thought. Surely the characteristics of the present age are a running to and fro, and an increase of knowledge.

Characteristic of the Present Age

3. Another sign of the time of the end is predicted in Dan. 12:1, to be such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and in Luke 21:25, 26, "Distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear; and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." And what is passing at the present day? Public commotion and tumult, perplexity and distress, men's hearts failing them for fear. Some men say that we are on the eve of a great crisis, that we are approaching some great consummation; and Scripture informs us that this great consummation is the coming of Christ in His triumph and glory.

A Time of Trouble

4. The Apostle Paul, when writing his first epistle to the Thessalonian Christians, insisted at length (in every chapter) on the Lord's Second Coming. The prominence thus given to this doctrine led to a mistake and misapprehension. The Thessalonians thought that Christ was then about to reappear. To correct this mistake, the apostle wrote his second epistle, and in the second chapter he gave a remarkable prophecy of which had already begun, but which he declared must be fully developed ere the Son of man would return in His glory. In the meantime God is accomplishing the number of His elect from distant parts, and soon the day will come when the Son of man shall re-appear—"Behold the morning cometh." The numbers who have thus been awakened in recent mission services may be taken as an indication of the gathering together of God's elect which is to be the harbinger of the return of the Saviour in His glory, majesty, and power.

The Great Mystery of Iniquity

Let the anxious believer therefore take courage "The morning cometh," and He "whom, not having seen, we love," will ere long return in His majesty; "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear then shall we also appear with Him in glory."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Clergyman's Delicate Reproof.*

SOMETIMES the interview between Dr. Muhlenberg and one whom he had desired to see for the purpose of reproof would be so interesting and pleasant that none but agreeable emotions were excited while in his presence. Afterward, and revolving what had passed, as few would find themselves able to avoid doing after such a conversation, the other party would see plainly that he had been helped to sift himself thoroughly, and was unmistakably rebuked. One instance in point occurred on the day when the news of the arrest of the arch-peculator Tweed, at Vigo, was cabled to New York. While seated at tea with the sisters, one of the family entered, and told the others of the capture. A ripple of laughter went around the table, and was followed by more of talk about certain malfeasances than was at all common in the company. Dr. Muhlenberg looked uneasy, and, hurrying to the conclusion of the meal, added emphatically, after the usual thanks for the repast: "Amay the Lord deliver us from evil." Not another word was said, but every sister present understood and heeded the reproof.

Again, one of the young men employed in the hospital, asking permission of Dr. Muhlenberg to go to Booth's Theatre, received rather a stern refusal. Some time later, probably after informing himself what the performance of the evening was to be, Dr. Muhlenberg said to him, "You can go and see Booth to-night, but say nothing about it in the house." "Returning toward midnight," says the young man, "the Doctor himself opened the door to me. He had waited up two hours beyond his usual hour of retiring, that the circumstance might not be known, and this so impressed me that I never again wished for the theatre."

Circles in Heaven.

An old friend and much respected brother-clergyman, whose exclusive Church views had in past times been the subject of many a friendly brush between the two, after visiting a parishioner in the hospital, stopped to say good-bye to Dr. Muhlenberg. The latter, with a cordial grasp of the hand referring to a conversation some time back, said "Doctor—, what is your idea now of our Church place in the great gathering above?" "Why," replied the exclusive brother, "I believe it will be the way: Episcopalians in the first circle around the throne, Presbyterians next, and so on." "Then," said Dr. Muhlenberg, "you do expect other Christians to be there too, only not in so much honor?" "Yes." "Well, then, since after all there's a possibility of so much closeness in heaven, wouldn't it be well to become a little acquainted on earth?"

Dinners Given Away.

One day Dr. Muhlenberg called the boys together and read to them from the newspapers a statement of destitution and distress among some German immigrants recently landed in New York. He then asked them whether they would like to give something in relief. In an instant there were loud and vociferous offers. One said, "I'll give two dollars another, 'I'll give one;'" another three. All were ready to give something, and thus a large sum was at once subscribed. But the boys, by a standing rule of the Institute, were not allowed spending money, except to a very limited extent; and there was not money enough in the pockets of all of them put together to pay more than a small portion of the sum they wanted to give. The Doctor then said to them that he had no doubt that their pa-

* From The Life and Work of William Augustus Muhlenberg, D. D. By Anne Ayres. The biography of a most Christ-like and saintly man, eminent alike for his personal piety, his qualities as a preacher and pastor, and his untiring labors as philanthropist. The story of his life is told in the book by one in thorough sympathy with it, and her enthusiasm kindles admiration, and let us hope, will kindle the emulation, of her readers. Pp. 524. Price $2.00. Published by Thomas Whitaker, 2 Bible House, New York.

ts would be gratified to pay the several sums med, if made an item of charge in their school ls; but what he at present wanted to know was, at they would give themselves, without calling on their parents—that is, he wanted them to give their own alms. And so he asked them, "Are you ling to give these poor creatures your dinner?" ere was a general response of assent; but it was vociferous, like the other. It was subdued, yet nest and sincere. Then the question was, "How ll it be done?" And it was decided to select two the most expensive week-day dinners, and make ir own meal on plain bread and molasses on se two days, and to give, through Dr. Muhlen- g, the difference in cost to the needy immi- nts. The difference in so large a family amount- to a goodly sum, which was thus the result of : self-denial of the boys and others. The inci- nt illustrates the principle taught by the Doctor, it self-denial, for the purpose of giving, is a part acceptable giving at all times. There is no such ng as giving of that which costs us nothing.

FEEDING THE MULTITUDE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for May 11, Luke 9: 10-17; Golden Text, John 6: 35.

e Interval Between the Calling and the Commission—The Endowment of the Missionaries—Their Sub- sequent Testimony—A Period of Retirement—The Interruption—Repulsion the Work of Self, Not of Christ—The Disciples Would Send the Multitude Away—Their Estimate of Their Resources—Jesus Forgotten—The Possibilities Enlarged When Christ's Present—The Remainder Greater Than the Provision—God's Supplies Always Abundant.

AFTER Jesus had chosen His twelve disciples, ne time elapsed before He sent them forth to ach in His name. It does not follow that, be- use God has given us a special vocation, we ould therefore rush forward before we are quite e of the steps which we must take. God is eternal, l lives in the atmosphere of eternity. He has nty of time, and we can trust Him to choose the e for us to do the "good works which God hath ore prepared, that we should walk in them." h. 2: 10.) Jesus Himself preached and healed l cast out devils before He sent His disciples to the same. "Then He called His twelve disciples ther, and gave them power and authority over evils, and to cure diseases;" such was their en- wment. "And He sent them to preach the king- om of God, and to heal the sick;" such was their ation. "And He said unto them, take nothing your journey, neither staves nor scrip, neither ad, neither money; neither have two coats ee;" such was their outfit, sent out, as they re, by Jehovah-Jireh, "the Lord will provide." en. 22: 14, margin.) When, before He suffered, e Master raised the question, "When I sent you hout purse and scrip and shoes, ny said, Nothing." (Luke 22: 35.) They simply eparted, and went through the towns, preaching e gospel, and healing everywhere," experiencing y moment the faithfulness of Him at whose arge they went forth. How long this journey ed, or how it came to pass that all the twelve urned, whether by previous appointment or not, cannot tell; but "they told Him all that they had ne." It is a safer thing to tell Jesus of devils cast t, of souls saved and bodies healed, than to pub- l it abroad among men.

Lacked Ye Anything?

But, after this time of blessing, Jesus "took them, d went aside privately into a desert place, and e people, when they knew it, followed Him." It med as though the plan of Jesus had not suc- eeded, to provide rest and retirement for His dis- ciples. What should He do? Should He send back e multitude? Jesus saw His Father's hand in all ich was permitted to happen, and He knew how tilize all things for the good of His disciples. ey were not to have His special teaching for selves alone at that time, He would trust that s Father would provide teaching another way. Instead of sending away the people, "He received em, . . . and healed them that had need of healing."

It is Self Which Repulses.

Christ in us has always the "Come" of Jesus for e needy. The day began to wear away, and then e twelve came to Jesus, "and said unto Him, nd the multitude away, that they may go into the ns and country round about, and lodge, and get uals, for we are here in a desert place." "Lacked anything," that ye would send the multitude ay from Him who has provided everything for you? Shall those who have proved Him think that the loving heart and tender care of the Good Shep- herd is for them alone, and not for the multitude? "As every one hath received the gift, even so min- ister the same one to another." (1 Pet. 4: 10.) God gives us nothing for ourselves alone, every gift of God is a stewardship, every conquered temptation, every answered prayer, is ours for the whole Church, or for the lost world. "None of us liveth to him- self, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14: 7.) "Send the multitude away" to shift for themselves? Shall they only hear blessed words of instruction, and, just when a real need arises, be driven away by disciples from Him who has promised to supply all our need "according to the riches in glory by Christ Jesus"? (Phil. 4: 19.) Yes; disciples can do thus, Jesus never. "He said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they said, We have no more but five loaves and two fishes." No more, and yet they had Jesus! Did they count Him as nothing? When they had toiled all the night, and had taken nothing, and yet at His word let down the net, He had not failed them; why should they now fall back upon their own poor resources, and count up their little store of five loaves and two fishes? Could a faithful Shepherd have given the command, "Give ye them to eat," without making it possible for them to obey? Oh, how little they understood, how little they had learned of Him in all the faithful care He had had for them during their journey on which they lacked nothing.

"Give Ye Them to Eat."

Children of God who are united to their Master have always something to give to those who know Him not; something to satisfy the hungry craving of an unsaved soul; something to comfort the sor- row of one who has no earthly consolation; some- thing to relieve the perplexity of the most troubled. Jesus is the resource for everything. Whatever He has been for us He can be also for them. It is a dishonor to Jesus if anyone in need does not find some succor in His children who have proved Him true. "We have no more than five loaves and two fishes"—We have no love, no wisdom, no sympathy, etc. What does it matter? We have Jesus, the very Gift of God to a lost world; Jesus, "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. 2: 3)—"except we should go and buy meat for all this people." Oh, the long-suffering of our God! The Son of God was there, the Maker of all things; and the only witnesses He had on earth at that time, who had been marvellously sustained by Him, had seen Him work miracle after miracle, the winds and the waves obeying Him, the devils cast out, the very dead raised—with Jesus at hand, with- in touch, and talking with them—pass Him by in their calculations, and talk of spending their last few coins in buying meat to feed the multitude! Their eyes wandered from the five thousand men to the miserable provision, and then to the little money in their purses, but Jesus they regarded not.

But, in His deep love, He rescued them from their dilemma, and told them something which they could do. "Make them sit down by fifties in a company." Teach the needy ones to be Ready to Receive;

tell them Jesus will not leave them without help. The place of the disciple is to prepare the way of the Lord; to go into every city and village whither He Himself will go, to teach men to expect all from Him. He does not call upon us to do what only He Himself can do. "They did so, and made them all sit down." Then, when the disciples had come to an end of themselves, and of all hope from themselves, "He took the five loaves and the two fishes; and looking up to heav- en, He blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude." What can- not five loaves and two fishes accomplish in the hand of Jesus? Have we before us some task which is utterly beyond our powers, in which we see nothing but failure before us, because of our nothing- ness? Let us sit down while the loaves and fishes of our littleness pass into the hands which made the world, and He can make them all which is needed for the task. When He calls us to do any- thing, the question as to whether it is possible or not possible is a question for Him, and not for us; He is responsible to make all His commands possi- ble, and joyous obedience finds them so. In many a Christian family circle, in many a Christian work, some crisis comes in which all human resources fail; nothing is left but to trust such circumstances out of our hands into His. Many a child of God has felt that it was impossible to speak in such and such a meeting, impossible to face such and such a congregation, to teach such and such a class; the loaves and fishes which they had to give would never suffice. Then let us sit down "in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. 2: 6); far above our nothing- ness is His fullness for the present need. He has all things under His feet. Only let Him have our loaves and fishes fully in His hand, and He will do the rest. When He blessed the provision, that changed everything; when He brake and distrib- uted, it was with the Master hand which "uphold- eth all things." (Heb. 1: 3.)

The distribution began; every portion passed through the hands of the disciples before it reached the multitude. They must know, who had seen the littleness of the provision, the great things which He did. The five loaves and two fishes would hardly have sufficed as many persons. But row after row and group after group of fifty ob- tained their portions—plenteous, abundant por- tions. "They did all eat

And were Filled."

Oh how different is the Lord's provision from that of man! Man, with his miserably limited resources, seeks to do the best he can according to his powers. "Five loaves and two fishes" for five thousand men, besides women and children! How can there be enough for every one of them to take even a little? But when the creative hand of God is at work, then those for whom He cares receive a plenitude of blessing in proportion to their capac- ity to receive.

He who fed the multitude thus feeds His Church with Himself. "I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that be- lieveth on me shall never thirst." If He makes use of His disciples to feed His Church, it is always in the same way as He fed the multitude, taking their insufficiency into His sufficient hands. "Give ye them to eat." What shall feed our immortal souls, quickened into life by the very life of Christ, ex- cept it be Himself? "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abun- dantly." (John 10: 10.) Disciples cannot provide the very life of God to nourish His Church, and oh, how many there are who would send God's chil- dren hungry away into towns and villages to lodge and to seek provision at their own cost! But every child of God, who lives in true communion with Him, can give something to eat to a hungry broth- er or sister; not by his own knowledge of God, but by putting his little store in the Master's hand, to multiply and to dispense as He wills. It is only as we reach our brethren and sisters through Christ that we can be a blessing to them, but when we receive of Him for them, then they can eat and be filled, and we can only adore in silent wonder at the rich provision which He lets pass through our hands. "And there was taken up of

The Fragments that Remained

to them twelve baskets full;" far more at the end than at the beginning! So it is with the gifts of God: they may reach us through some very small instrumentality, but there is always more than we can contain or appreciate. Wherever God teaches us some precious truth, there is always some frag- ment broken off which we have not understood, and which is left for the disciples who come after. One basket would probably have easily contained the five loaves and two fishes, but after the Master had been at work, and five thousand had been fed, twelve baskets must be filled with the portions which the multitude were unable to contain. It is the disciples who stoop down low, after the multi- tude is gone, who pick up the precious fragments, "that nothing be lost" (John 6: 12), those who patiently go over the place of the Master's footsteps again in His Word, and find treasures which others have not perceived. Oh that we may learn how to prize these precious fragments!

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for April:

The Last Day on April 11, 1901.

Second Advent Conference in London, on March 5, 1890.

Period of Israel's Return to Palestine.—The Ten Virgins.

Bishop Bickersteth on the Second Advent.

The Jew in the 19th Century.

Socialism and the German Labor Conference.

Jerusalem's Great Progress.

Rapture of the 144,000 Living Christians to Heaven.

The Outlook in Germany.

What the Jewish Papers are Saying.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be made payable at Station D, New York.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we state that no change has been made in our terms to agents. They are allowed, on all ordinary subscriptions, the same commission as in former years.

WEARINESS.

THE world is full of tired people—merchants tired of business, farmers tired of raising crops, housekeepers tired of preparing food, operatives tired of the rushing wheels. Pass along the road or street, and see how very tired three-fourths of the people look. How shall they get rested? Some say, "By fewer hours of work." But some of them have no work at all. Others might prescribe easy sofas, and more arm-chairs and soft-beds. But some of the people who have the weariest look have plenty of good furniture and luxurious upholstery. Now we offer a pillow not curtained with Gobelin tapestry, nor stuffed with the down of angel's wings, but a man who puts his head on it gets rids of his cares and aches and anxieties. It is a pillow stuffed with the promises, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and He will sustain thee." We have friends who, because they cannot sleep well, put under their head at night a pillow of hops; but they never have tried the better pillow filled with the myrrh and frankincense from the Lord's garden. Men and women tired out with the world, try it!

WHAT TO AVOID.

It is as much an art not to read as to read. With what pains and thumps and whacks at school we first learned the way to put words together! We did not mind so much being whipped by the schoolmaster for not knowing how to read our lesson, but to have to go out ourselves and cut the hickory switch with which the chastisement was to be inflicted seemed to us then, as it does now, a great injustice. Notwithstanding all our hard work in learning to read, we find it quite as hard now to learn how not to read. There are innumerable books and newspapers from which one had better abstain. There are not very many newspapers which it is safe to read all through. In this day readers need, as never before, to carry a sieve. It requires some heroism to say you have not read such and such a book. Your friend gives you a stare, which implies your literary inferiority. Do not, in order to answer the question affirmatively, wade through indiscriminate slush. We have to say that three-fourths of the novels of the day are a mental depletion to those who read them. The man who makes wholesale denunciation of fiction pitches overboard Pilgrim's Progress and the parables of our Lord; but the fact is that some of the publishing houses, that once were cautious about the moral tone of their books, have become reckless about everything but the number of copies sold. It is all the same to them whether the package they send out be corn-starch, jujube paste, or hellebore. They wrap up fifty copies and mark them C. O. D. But if the expressman, according to that mark, should collect on delivery all the curses that shall come on the head of the publishing house which printed them, he would break down his wagon and kill his horse with the load. Let parents and guardians be especially watchful. Have a quarantine at your front door for all books and newspapers. Let the health doctor go abroad and see whether there is any sickness there before you let it come to wharfage.

MORE BIRDS NEEDED.

WE have read that years ago a ship left England for New Zealand with one hundred starlings, goldfinches, and thrushes, one hundred hedge sparrows, one hundred and seventy yellow-hammers, and a great multitude of bright plumes and sweet voices. The farmers of New Zealand proposed to let them loose and thus clear their land of noxious insects. Heavy penalties were enacted for the protection of these foreign birds. We have not heard the result, but what a grand thing it would be if we could all have an importation of birds, not only into our land, but also in our dispositions! We want more music and plumes. We have too large an importation of crows and owls. Give us a touch of goldfinches. We have enough who know how to croak; let us have more of those who know how to sing. Let it be against the law for anyone to hunt down the innocent merriments of life. Let the song-birds loose in our homes and schools and churches. Be not frightened if some great eagle of a hallelujah flies through the religious assemblies. If the earth is ever to be a type of heaven, it must become a more cheerful place. Blessed the man or woman or child who kindles a smile, or plants a flower, or lets loose a robin. The winged joys of life will eat up cold creeping sorrows as partridges devour grasshoppers, and linnets kill the caterpillars. From the four winds of heaven let there be brigantines of good cheer bearing down upon us with a rich cargo of starlings and sparrows.

GREETING TO FARMERS.

WE rise to give out the hymn. It is the two hundred and seventy-sixth of "Shovel and Hoe Harmony."

"Whistle and hoe,
Sing as you go,
Shorten the row
By the songs you know."

The agriculturists will all join in, while some Lancaster farmer gives the key-note with his pitchfork, and we are favored with drill and threshing-machine accompaniment. The outdoor life of our country friends has begun. We hope that they will plough up more health and good cheer than ever before. Standing and walking so much in the sunshine, they ought to be bright and glad. The breath of the fields and woods ought to make them healthy. Their hard work ought to sharpen their appetite three times a day, and afford them eight or nine hours of sound sleep. We pray for their freedom from flood and drought, weevil, and curculio; that there may be no long storms after they get the grain down, no ringboned or spavined horses at the time when they want all the teams, no hollow-horn to depress the cows, no gaps for the rising generation of chickens, no incursion of neighbor's cattle into the bean-patch. We shall have a prosperous agricultural year. "How do you know?" cry out the rural population. "What sign in sky or ground or atmosphere do you judge by?" Our reason for thinking so is, that it is almost always so. The good Lord has a way of abundantly blessing the fields. When one crop fails, others make it up, as blind eyes almost always insure superexcellent ears. In the last six thousand years we do not believe that there have been twenty years that might be called dead failures. We are certain that this year, with not more than one or two exceptions of crop, we shall have luxuriant corn, golden wheat, sound potatoes, rich grass, a great affluence of turnips, celery, cabbage, and squash. While you are guessing by the moon, the squirrel's storage of nuts, or the state of the mountain stream, or the almanac, as to what coming to pass, we refer to the first agricultural journal ever written, and find in it: "While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease."

PREMONITIONS.

HARDLY a week passes but we see in our public journals some account of forewarning which people had of their demise. The sitting of thirteen persons at a table, or the howling of a neighbor's dog at midnight, or the flying of a bat into the window, or an apparition, gave notice that something would happen, and it did happen, in the very way and at the very time expected. Yea, without accident or disease, there is no doubt some people expire as a result of some all-absorbing anticipation. And here is a practical, every-day subject on which we all need enlightenment. Does God sometimes forewarn through token and sign? Are these things, and other phenomena of that type, to be relegated to the realm of superstition and phantasy? When others are discussing these questions, I call your attention to a fact that is clearly demonstrated in many of these cases. They prove to me that the soul is master of the body, and that the physical frame is an insignificant part of us. The mind commanded the body to let the soul loose, and it obeyed the mandate. You say that in such cases of decease it was the power of imagination. Yes, imagination is only one finger of the soul, but the stroke of that finger broke the cord that bound body and spirit together. While death, consequent upon forebodings, proves the soul's supremacy one way, I have seen that supremacy demonstrated again and again in the opposite direction. Men have lived on through sheer determination ten years after, by all the laws of health and the decision of doctors, they ought to have died. How do you account for this? The soul refused to be ejected.

ENTERTAINMENT OF MINISTERS.

WHAT is more delicious for a minister than to accept an invitation to a parishioner's house, and sit an hour or two in the evening at the table with a collection of pleasant people? But that is what kills ministers. Hot waffles, fresh biscuit, oysters, and cold tongue at 7 o'clock in the evening have given many a "man of God" dyspepsia, a duodenal brain, poor sermons, short pastorate, and an early decease. Rich and late suppers are doing a bad work for some of our clergymen. We know of ministerial clubs where the members assemble Saturday afternoon to discuss religious topics, tarrying until evening, when a sumptuous table is provided for them. As a consequence, they do not sleep well on Saturday night, and the congregations on Sabbath see what they suppose is a heavily pallor on their pastor's cheek, when his wife knows it was hot biscuit at tea the evening before that did the business. If you invite your minister out to eat, better have him at noon or thereabouts, or, if calling him to tea, then let it be in the early part of the week, giving him time to get over his gustatory indulgences. The most of ministers have a powerful appetite for good food, and capacity to resist temptation in that direction is not one of their strong points.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Frequent Words of Congratulation From Mr. Parnell. Mr. Parnell was addressed to the delegates of the Pan-American Conference at their final meeting. Mr. Parnell spoke with authority, and his remarks expressed the feelings of the whole nation. He said in the course of his address: "If in this closing hour of the conference had but one deed to celebrate, we would dare call the world's attention to the dedication, confident, solemn dedication of two great nations to peace and to the prosperity which peace, for its foundation. We hold up this new Charter, which abolishes war and substitutes arbitration between the American republics, as the grand fruit of the International American Conference. That noblest of Americans, the aged and philanthropist, Whittier, is the first to give his salutation, and his benediction, declaring: 'If in the spirit of peace the American Conference agrees upon a rule of arbitration which makes war in this hemisphere wellnigh impossible, its session will prove one of the most important events in the history of the world.'"

Measure which Contains the Promise of a Crimonious Discussion in Congress and the was reported last Thursday by Senator from the Privileges and Elections Committee, known as the Federal Election Bill, and providing for national supervision of elections. Its object must revive all the old contentions of State rights, and will severely antagonize the bill. It provides, briefly, that, whenever in any congressional district not in such city, 100 or more voters shall petition the chief supervisor, stating that there is danger that unless the election is held it will not be fair and free, the chief supervisor shall forthwith forward the petition to the United States Circuit Judge for the district. Upon it shall be the duty of the judge to open for the purpose of transacting all business relating to registration or election matters, and to hold it in session until the second day after the meeting. Some idea of the radical character of the bill is gained from the fact that the supervisors are required to verify by proper inquiry, all names on the registration list that the chief supervisor requires to be verified. The Democratic members of the Committee were opposed to a favorable report on the bill, on the ground that it destroys the principle of Congressional elections by the States, and is therefore subversive of the principles of self-government.

Inquiry into the Operation of the Contract Law appears likely to be fatal to the law or to lead to important modifications of it. It having the effect contemplated. Its object is to prevent the importation of men who, after expiration of the contract, might become a burden, and also to prevent employers from driving wages by bringing over alien labor. It is from the evidence given to the Committee that the law is evaded through the clause permitting private persons to pay the passage of their men. It is easy for employers to find people willing to pose as the friends of the workmen they employ. It also appears on the face of it improbable that a man whose services were of sufficient value to be worth an employer's interest to pay his passage, would become a public burden. He is likely to become a valuable citizen, adding to the nation's wealth by his productions. The law keeps out undesirable immigrants, and it keeps out men whom it was never intended to keep out. The practical suggestion is made that the term of one year from the time of landing, in immigrants could be returned, ought to be reduced to two years. This would have a better effect than the present law.

Pressing News From Louisiana Caused concern throughout the country last week. The whole Southern section of the State is profligate from the overflow of the Mississippi by the great Levee, the key of the Pointe Coupee, the plantations being below the high-water line. The Marganza is one of the best and strongest on the river. It cost a quarter of a million dollars, and was believed to be indestructible. In the last three months it has been subjected to terrific strain. The water rose so high that the levee was blown over the embankment. On the 22d the danger was increased by a gale from the northeast. The levee, being at the bend of the river, was assailed by the angry waters with irresistible force. It held for a time, but at last a thin stream poured through, which in a short time made a fissure four hundred feet wide and fifteen feet deep. Then the Pointe Coupee yielded at several places. The people had feared this calamity, and were prepared for flight. In some villages there was no time to save property before the flood came. Some families were caught and took refuge in the upper stories of their houses, and in high trees, from which they were rescued in skiffs. Many of these people are very poor, and are insufficiently provided for a long siege. It will be necessary to assist them until the flood subsides. The appropriation of $150,000 made by Congress is a timely measure which will afford relief while the public subscriptions are coming in. It is thought that some districts, such as those below Red River, will be under water for a month to come. No such severe inundation has occurred since 1882.

Reports of Severe Suffering from Lack of Food come from the new Territory of Oklahoma. Many of the settlers were so eager to secure land that they rushed into the Territory without making proper provision for the period that must elapse before they could harvest their crops. They are now in utter destitution, and need immediate aid to carry them over the next four months. "More than 300 families," says one correspondent, "are now without food, and without money to purchase it. Rumors from the interior are to the effect that there are others there in the same condition. The cities and towns in Oklahoma cannot render assistance, as the people there have been living upon each other until they are in nearly as bad a condition, although business apparently thrives. To add to the distress, hundreds of poor people are arriving there almost daily, most of whom are negroes from the South. On one claim, only six miles from Guthrie, are seven people—father, mother, and five children. For two weeks they have had nothing to eat but cornmeal and such greens as they could find. The result has been sickness, nearly fatal, in four cases. A neighbor, learning of their destitute condition, divided his rent with them and came North to seek immediate aid. There are very many instances nearly as bad." As the need is only temporary, pending the harvesting of the crops, it is hoped that either by loan or public subscription prompt help will be rendered.

The Proposed Demonstration of Workingmen on May Day appears now to be causing more alarm in Austria than in Germany. The leaders of the radicals in the former country are chiefly Polish and Czech refugees from Germany, who are in many cases unscrupulous men. The danger is increased by the fact of the very large numbers of workingmen who are on strike. One correspondent states that in one district, which is the centre of a section producing half of the total output of coal in the Empire, there are 40,000 strikers encamped in an open stretch of fields flanked by thick woods, whence raiding parties go out in force to pillage the surrounding country, bringing in cattle and supplies, quite often after encounters with the military. The whole district is being filled with troops to protect the mines and factories, and there have already been fatal collisions in half a dozen different villages. The Emperor of Germany is now believed to have decided not to interfere with the demonstration in any way. He thinks it wise to let it take place, and let the outcome be the guide to action in the future. No special measure will be taken to preserve order, nor will the troops be confined to their barracks. In Berlin, however, where 20,000 men can be brought together by beat of drum at any time in an hour, extraordinary measures are scarcely necessary.

The Scheme of the British Government to Relieve Irish tenants and enable them to purchase their farms is not acceptable to the Irish members of Parliament. On April 21, Mr. Parnell definitely moved its rejection. He said that while accepting the Government's recognition of the principle of the land for the people, he could not admit that the bill was a satisfactory solution of the land question. The initial question was, how far the British taxpayer would go in lending credit to the Irish landlord. The experience gained by the discussion of Mr. Gladstone's land bill in 1886 showed that the taxpayers would not go far enough to finally settle the land difficulty. The present bill was meant simply to enable one-ninth of the owners of land in Ireland—these being the larger absentee landlords—to sell out at exorbitant prices, leaving their poorer resident brethren in the lurch. Mr. Parnell objected to the bill on the ground that it did not provide for carrying out what it proposed, while it exhausted the only Irish credit available. The Government deem Mr. Parnell ungrateful. Whether he is so or not, it seems ridiculous to expend so large a sum as that proposed if Ireland's recognized leader warns them that the question cannot be settled in that way.

The King of Portugal in Opening the Cortes last week had the pleasure of informing it that the dispute between Portugal and England concerning territory in southeast Africa was the subject of the negotiations now pending, which promised to result in a settlement of the question which would be honorable to both countries. Portugal's relations with all other nations are good, and several of them are showing her marks of the most friendly consideration and sympathy. During the recess of Parliament, he said, the Government had taken special and urgent measures for strengthening the national defences and for the preservation of public order.

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost has arranged to proceed to India in the autumn, to conduct evangelistic meetings.

The Feast of the Passover was observed the world over with more enthusiasm than usual this year, which the Jews declare is a proof that there is no decay of Judaism.

Dr. Pierson is expected to be in Edinburgh at the time of the Synod and Assembly meetings, and he has been invited to address each of the ecclesiastical courts on "Missions."

The Rev. David J. Waller, Secretary of the English Wesleyan Conference, has arrived in this country to attend the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in St. Louis.

Saloon passengers who were on board the City of Paris feel so grateful for their escape that they have contributed $3,000 to endow a bed in a hospital in Liverpool, to be called the "City of Paris" bed."

The convention of delegates of the Reformed Presbyterian and United Presbyterian Churches having under consideration the union of the two, which was held recently at Pittsburg, adopted resolutions favoring organic union.

The Rev. F. E. Clark, D. D., President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, is now attending a series of conventions in the Western States. At Omaha, Neb., the meeting was held in the opera-house, which was crowded, and over a thousand people were unable to gain admittance.

The first meeting of the Lake Mohonk Negro Conference will be held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, June 4, 5, and 6 next. The object of the Conference is to consider the possibility of elevating the negro race by religious and educational means. Ex-President Hayes will preside.

Dr. Edward Judson, who is doing an excellent work among the poor on the east side of New York, has accepted the offer of Mrs. George E. Crowell, of Brattleboro, Vt., to occupy her cottage on the banks of the Connecticut this summer. He proposes to fill it with a weekly contingent of people from the poor districts of the city, giving preference to mothers and children in need of fresh air.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on February 26 is now holding services in Newark, N. J. Nearly all the churches of the city of various denominations have united in the work. Meetings are held in the forenoon, afternoon and evening. The central service is held in the First Presbyterian church, and overflow meetings in the other churches, conducted by the pastors of the city.

Messrs. Hunter and Crossley have been holding services at Brantford, Canada, in the Wellington Street Methodist Church. Among the workers in the services were Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Baptists, all cordially uniting with their Methodist brethren in leading souls to Christ. Rev. John Kay, the pastor of the church, writes enthusiastically of the results of the services. The Evangelists are now at Oshawa.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is holding meetings in Natick, Mass. The Congregationalist, Baptist, and Methodist churches are joining in the movement. It has been found necessary to hold the Sunday services in the concert hall, as no church in the town will accommodate the numbers who go to hear the famous evangelist. Dr. Munhall is pursuing his usual plan of holding special services for young people, and already there have been really remarkable results.

Mr. D. L. Moody concludes his meetings in New York this week, and goes to Northfield to rest before the opening of the college conference. Last week's meetings in lower New York were very successful. On one night between forty and fifty rose for prayers in the Fourteenth Street Presbyterian Church, and nearly as many in the Emmanuel Chapel in Sixth Street. Mr. Sankey assisted in the singing. One marked feature of all the meetings has been the effect on professing Christians, who have been moved to an earnest seeking for more power and consecration of life.

BELIEVERS AND THEIR HELPERS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace." Acts 18:27.

The Meagre Notice of Apollos—Unnoticed Workers Content with Divine Approval—The Useful Work of Watering a Church—I. Believers Through Grace—Grace Gives the Gospel—Produces Belief in It—Guarantees Perpetuity—II. Believers Needing Help—In Instruction—In Consolation—Direction—By Defence—Great Hearts in the Lord's Service—A Personally Conducted Tour—III. A Worthy Work—Help Expected from All who have been Helped—A Story of a Glass Globe—Jews and Christians in Error.

APOLLOS is not Paul, and Paul is not Apollos. To blend the two in one would be to spoil each one of the two, without producing a good third. It is a great mercy that we have Paul and Apollos and Cephas, and other varieties of preachers; for not only is variety charming, but it is necessary. It is not everybody that can be profited by Paul; for it requires a great deal of fixed attention to follow him, and many hearers cannot concentrate their thoughts for long. It is not everybody that can be profited by Apollos, for fine speech is thrown away on simple souls. It is written, "Then shall the lambs feed after their manner;" and assuredly each one of them has a peculiar manner of feeding. Some of God's people are edified by one minister, and some by another; it is not mere whim, but it arises out of conformation of character, and habit of mind. Let Paul be Paul, and edify the Pauline class; and let Apollos be Apollos, and instruct those of his own sort. I am not going to compare them with each other; but I would commend each one, and thank God, by whose grace he is what he is.

A Typical Worker.

You see that the Holy Spirit has been pleased, by the pen of Luke, to give to Paul's travels and labors a very large proportion of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles; this passage from the twenty-fourth to the twenty-eighth verse is an episode—a corner marked off to be a record of Apollos. What Apollos did afterward we do not know. He may have been a very great evangelist; he certainly was an exceedingly useful brother. If you and I should work for Christ, and never be mentioned in the records of earth at all, let us not be sorry: there is most peace to those who are least talked about. Our record is on high. If the chronicles of earth be faulty, the registers of heaven are perfect. Many a man who has been forgotten here shall be remembered there; and I wot that in heaven it will give no saint the least trouble that he was not honored among men. What if no monument was set up, yet all true work is immortal. The diligent workman will be perfectly contented when his Master says to him, "Well done, good and faithful servant." The echo of those words shall be heaven to him.

I. First, then, those who have truly believed have believed through grace. I suppose Luke felt it necessary to insert those words,

"Through Grace."

Nobody in his day doubted the fact that salvation is wrought in men by the grace of God; but the Holy Spirit foresaw that many, in after days, would conceal or obscure this truth, and therefore He moved the evangelist to notify it very plainly. We have it under hand and seal from the Holy Ghost that those who believed in the Lord Jesus believed through grace. Surely, grace is to the front in all good things. And here let me say, it is grace that gives us the gospel which we believe. Grace wrote the first letter of the gospel: grace will write the last letter of it. Salvation is all of grace from first to last. I would to God that all preachers and hearers knew the meaning of that word "grace," and did not confuse it and mix it up with human endeavors and creature merits: for, indeed, "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." If it be of grace, it is no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace; and if it be of works, it is not of grace, otherwise work is no more work. "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God."

I say, then, that while grace gives us the gospel to believe, grace also gives us to believe the gospel. We are personally to believe the gospel, and so only can we be saved. But if I came before you to-night, and had nothing further to say than "Believe the gospel, and you shall be saved," the message would add to your solemn responsibility, and yet it would not save you; for you would not believe, but would continue in your sins. Man left to himself is an unbeliever, and an unbeliever he will remain. To meet the deep depravity of our nature, and its settled unbelief, He who gave the gospel to be believed also gives the faith that believes the gospel. This is a wonder of grace; but then in the realm of grace everything is wonderful. Furthermore, I wish to add that such believing is a sure evidence of grace. If thou believest in the Lord Jesus Christ with all thine heart, thou hast the grace of God in thee. There is no surer proof of it than this. Where there is faith, there is grace; the one is the inseparable fruit of the other. "He that believeth on Him hath everlasting life." "He that believeth on Him is not condemned."

And what is more, if thou believest through grace, that grace which made thee believe is the best guarantee that thou shalt keep on believing. Faith which is born of self will die of self; but that which is the child of grace will live forever. If thou hast begun to believe of thyself thou wilt leave off of thyself; but if God's grace began thy believing, God's grace will continue thy believing, and thou wilt abide in this faith wherein thou standest even to the end.

II. Now for the second consideration.

Such Believers Need Help.

I know they do, because we are told in the text that Apollos "helped them much which had believed through grace;" and his work was not a superfluous one, or it would not have been mentioned here with commendation. In what respects do those who have grace need help? In what ways can true believers be helped?

Many believers need help in further instruction. Young Christians cannot be supposed to know much when they first come to Christ; but they come to be disciples, that is to say, learners. They know the three R's—Ruin, Redemption, and Regeneration; and that is by no means a small part of spiritual education. But they do not know even these elementary truths so fully as they might know them, and even about these things they will be the better for more teaching. Oftentimes they need somebody to open up passages of Scripture, to expound to them the analogy of faith, and to help them to compare spiritual things with spiritual. Beloved, you may be a great help to new converts if you will teach "the way of God more perfectly."

Many who have believed through grace also need help by way of consolation. You would be astonished if you knew the large number of believers in Christ who are tempted to doubt, despondency, and distress of mind. In the present congregation there are a number of who can hardly look up, who will judge, when I am speaking, that I am referring to them; and I must confess that I am thinking of them, and do very often think about them, and long to see them come forth from their present gloom. It is a great joy to me if I can help them at all by describing my own experience of down-casting and up-lifting.

Persons Depressed in Spirit,

Apollos helped them much, also, by defending them against opponents. We find that "he mightily convinced the Jews;" and in doing this he screened believing Gentiles from many a rude assault. He disputed with all his might, and with great fervor of spirit, against those who tried to subvert the faith of the Christians. Nowadays the Christian had need go fully armored, for arrows fly thick as sleet in a storm. Objections are always being raised; doubts are always being insinuated. It is hard for a man to keep his feet amidst the present torrents of unbelief that sweep down our streets. You that can stand fast should help those who cannot. Ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak in the matter of doubt.

And we can also help those who have believed through grace by giving them a word of direction. They frequently do not know what to do. They come to the end of their wits and their knowledge; and then the Christian, who, by reason of use, has had his senses exercised, may be of great service to the bewildered. We are commissioned by the Lord to be eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, and guides to wanderers. It is the lot of some of us to be employed by the King to conduct trains of pilgrims to the celestial city; and full often we have to put ourselves in front of the women and the children to fight with Giant Grim or Giant Despair. For their sakes we enter the lists with lions, dragons, and other monsters. The journey of the weaker ones to heaven is a personally conducted tour, and the Lord of the way employs us to be their guardians.

Do you not think that there is a tendency among many to despise the weak and leave them to themselves? How are they to grow wiser and more instructed if they have no better society than I own? Do I hear an older one say, "Oh, young lad, what does he know? What can he do towards my edification?" This is a very serious question; let it not be heard among you. "I got much out of the church," said one to me; he was somewhat surprised when I replied, never joined the church to get anything out of it. "What did you join it for?" "Why, to do could for all who are in it." This wretched seeking poisons everything it touches.

III. So I come to the third observation, which this: it is in which to engage. Helping those who have believed through grace is a work worthy of the best talent and the greatest experience. I was impressed upon many of my instructed brethren sisters that they should engage in it at once, keep at it continually. We are going to have a great number of converts in this place. We been praying for them, and we are sure to them, for the Lord hears prayer, and blesses own truth. I want you to get ready to receive new converts and nurse them for Christ.

A Worthy Work

First, because you have been helped, I claim Apollos became a helper because he had himself been helped. He began to preach, and he preached all that he knew; but his knowledge was very diverse. What he said was good—very good; but it was not fully the gospel; for he had only learned of the Baptist, and had not yet been taught the trine of Jesus. Aquila and Priscilla ask him their tent warehouse, and they say to him, "Friend, you went just so far, but you should go a little farther. You spoke about the Father of God, but you did not tell them that Jesus the Lamb of God, and that He had died to away sin." Apollos replied, "I pray you, tell all about it." And when

They Informed Him

of the death, and the resurrection, and the ascension of the Lord Jesus, and of the coming of the Ghost, Apollos said, "Thank you. Thank you. Now I have grand truths to preach, and my sage will be more full and gracious than it has been. I shall go forth to the synagogue to-morrow to tell them about the Messiah who has truly come, shall speak with greater freedom concerning Him. Apollos had been helped, and therefore Apollos bound to help other people.

Do you not think, you Christian people, that you owe something to the Church of God as well as the Christ of God? You were converted; not by a pastor's preaching, or by a teacher's instruction in the school, or by a book that had been written by a Christian man? Will you not owe the Church of God that which you owe to the instrumentality? I do not think that I ever felt much at home in any work as when I am trying to encourage a heart which is on the verge of despair. I have been in that plight myself. It is a honor to nurse our Lord's wounded children. a great gift to have learned by experience how to sympathize. "Ah!" I say to them, "I have where you are!" They look at me, and their say, "No, surely, you never felt as we do." It fore go further, and say, "If you feel worse than I did, I pity you, indeed; for I could say with 'My soul chooseth strangling rather than life could readily enough have laid violent hands myself to escape from my misery of spirit.'" In going to those who are in that wretched condition I find myself at home. He who has been in a dungeon knows the way to the bread and the water.

I speak to some here who have a measure of natural ability for this work. May be, you resemble Apollos, because Apollos was an eloquent man. "Ah!" says one, "I am not eloquent." I do know that. There may be a difference of opinion as to what eloquence is. Eloquence is speaking out from the heart. There is in the Vatican

The Group of the Laocoon:

I stood one day looking at it. You remember the father and his sons are twisted about with enormous snakes, and they are writhing in agony as the deadly folds enclose them. As I stood looking at the priceless group a gentleman said to me, "Mr. Spurgeon, look at that eloquent group! Well, yes, I had looked at that great-toe. It looks like a live thing, though only marble. I had called it 'eloquent' till he gave me the word ly it was eloquent, though silent. It spake with and deadly pain. When a man speaks best he is eloquent, even though he may be speechless. His whole nature is stirred as he with sinners for the Lord Jesus; and this him eloquent. Oh my brothers, you know that you can do till you get at it with your souls.

Have a measure of natural ability, be it great or small, let us use it; but if we have not that ability may acquire one form of capacity in which it abounded. He was mighty in the Scriptures. Now, we can all study our Bibles. If we in Jesus in our hearts, we ought to have the tips of our fingers' ends; and, if so, we shall help by our instructive talk. The good Bible studies like a spring well. When the Word dwells in a man richly his speech drops fat. Those who speak Scripture sow seed; and it grows and growing seed—seed whose harvest is in.

Dear friends, in addition to this, you will not be unless you are, like Apollos, fervent in the Word. Notice that twenty-fifth verse—"fervent in the Word." He was a burning man:

A Man on Fire.

He was not content to calmly and coolly, but he threw his soul into preaching. That is half the battle. I do not know whether it is not three-quarters of it, but in the spirit. If you are full of fire, and life, and full of heart, you will be a blessing to all. "How can I get warmth of heart?" Live in the presence of God. I cannot give you any other prescription. Let the Lord work in you as the Sun of Righteousness, and you will be fervent; all other methods are mere trifles, and will fail.

A famous naturalist, Buffon, had once a large number of the wise men of the Academy of France around him. They were all philosophers; and Buffon was what a philosopher is. If you do not know what you should meet one; and I do not think that the appreciation of the sect will be increased. There were all philosophers, great men; in a great man's gardens—all great thoughts. In the grounds there was a glass globe, and one of these profound philosophers took this glass globe on the shady side, he said that it was very, very warm, while on the side exposed to the sun it was comparatively cold. Herein was a marvellous thing. He called his philosophers around him, and I picture to myself they gave out their various theories why the glass globe was hotter on the side away from the sun than on the side which was bearing the full noonday. One had a theory of reflection, another of refraction, another of absorption: I cannot give you all their words, for they were wonderful, and wonderful theories, and they discussed and discussed, and discussed, till Buffon was satisfied with the

Philosophical Conclusions

They had reached, called the gardener, and the gardener, can you tell me why this side of the globe, away from the sun, is hotter than the side upon which the sun is shining?" "Yes," said the gardener; "just now I turned the globe, because it was getting too hot on one side. This did not uphold the new philosophical theory, but it maintained an old-fashioned doctrine—namely, that the sun gives heat. You may suppose upon it that the only answer to the question is that the sun is fervent in spirit, is that he keeps his face to the Lord. You need not enter upon philosophical disquisitions as to how to maintain fervor and enthusiasm, and all that. That is the fervent heart which enjoys most of the presence of God; and there is the end of the whole matter—you live in the light of God's countenance, and you are fervent; and if you turn away from Him, you grow cool. God give us to be fervent in the Word."

Now notice one thing more. Apollos greatly loved these people because he preached Christ to them. "For he mightily convinced the Jews, and publicly, shewing by the Scriptures that Jesus was Christ." If we are going to help those who have believed in Christ, our conversation with them must be full of Christ. Nothing will really feed the soul but Jesus. Reading yesterday, in Israel my Father, a book by Mr. Wilkinson, who is the author of the Jewish mission at Mildmay, I saw a picture there which was quite new to me. He was at the Jewish passover at the present day. Now, you know what the passover was according to the law of Moses—how a lamb was killed, and the blood was sprinkled on the lintel and the two side-posts, while the flesh was roasted and eaten. The Jews at this day observe the passover; but they observe it in a way which is according to the Rabbis, and not according to Moses. On the table there are passover cakes, lettuce, chervil, and parsley, as the bitter herbs. What is there at the Jewish passover at the present time instead of the lamb? A shank-bone! A shank-bone, mark you—with no meat upon it! Only a shank-bone! The blood is gone, and in place of it is an egg. The lamb is gone, and instead thereof is

A Shank-Bone.

"Ah, me! How can they thus make void the law of God?" This I said involuntarily; but very soon I remembered that I could not blame the Jews, for they are only imitating the Christians. Go and hear many who pretend to preach the gospel. Where is the Lamb, the Sacrifice, to be fed upon? Where is the sprinkled blood? Why, they are ashamed to speak of "the blood." They think the very word is vulgar. But what do they give us? A bone! A bone! A bone that no dog would care for—a bone of modern thought put in the place of the Lamb, who ought to be fed upon by all the living Israel of God. I thank Mr. Wilkinson for such a simile.

I smile to think of my Israelitish friends sitting down to the table with their shank-bone, and calling it the passover; but they are quite as near the mark as my Christian friends sitting down to their divinity, out of which the great doctrine of the atonement has been taken, and calling it the Christian faith. There is no food for bodies in the shank-bone, nor any food for souls in the modern theology; but in Christ there is every help that a soul can want.

I need not say more; but I would press upon my dear friends who know the Lord to go "help them much that have believed through grace." As for those who have not yet believed in Jesus, may they now come and trust Him. The moment that you trust Him you are saved. "Look unto Me," saith He, "and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." Look at once! Look and live!

"There is life in a look at the Crucified One."

The Lord, by His grace, constrain and enable you to give that look, and to Him be glory for ever and ever! Amen.

PRECIOUS STREET-REFUSE.

How much could be done for the future of America by a few wealthy men is suggested by one of Dr. T. J. Barnardo's recent stories. With a few thousand dollars a home might be built in a great city, and put in charge of some earnest, energetic Christian man, who could soon fill it with boys and girls capable of becoming intelligent, worthy citizens, but who, let alone, are in training for a place in our penitentiaries. One such waif was Tom Matthews, a lad who lived on and by the streets, following the familiar but overcrowded employments of selling matches, or sometimes flowers, but more often cigar-lights and evening papers. He had had a hard life of it ever since his mother deserted him, two years before, and left him, poor youngster, alone in the world. And yet it was not much material help that she had ever devoted to his upbringing, for not very long prior to his desertion they were both in the almshouse. She took her discharge, and for a while continued to hawk odds and ends about the country, but eventually took up with some tramp, and the pair thereupon turned the boy adrift as a profitless encumbrance. Tom turned his face toward the nearest city, and stoutly tramped thither to begin a street life which lasted for a little over two years.

He formed the acquaintance of a woman who sold flowers, and who conceived quite a motherly affection for the homeless and friendless lad. Yet she herself was merely the inmate of a common lodging-house. She did her little best for Tom, however. Occasionally she gave him pence and scraps of food, in return for which he carried her basket for her to and from the market in the early morning, or he would make himself useful at other times and in other ways.

But one day he had what he would describe as a turn of ill-luck. Running after a stage to sell lights to the passengers on the roof, he missed his footing, slipped, and fell on the roadway, and, before he could recover himself, his hand and arm were run over by a light trap. The bones of the hand were injured. He went to the hospital, but was discharged.

Where could he go to? his wage-earning power for the time being almost nil, and yet his only home was the lodging-house, and his only friend the poor flower-seller. Yet she did not desert him. But for her kindness the boy must have starved. As it was, he found it a matter of very great difficulty to pick up a living upon the streets.

"At last," says Dr. Barnardo, "he accosted me one day as I passed through a crowded thoroughfare, and my attention was attracted by his wounded hand. In conversation, his pathetic little history came out. Though he looked half-starved, his face was by no means unattractive. His clothes were in rags.

"We walked down the street together, and I found that the boy was as much a heathen as if he had been born and lived in Africa, far away from the sound of the Gospel. He knew absolutely nothing of the most elementary facts of Christianity. During the short time he and his mother had been in the almshouse he had for the first time heard something about religion, but he certainly had not understood what he heard there, and he now retained his knowledge only in a confused, distorted condition. He did not know his alphabet. I examined poor Tom's hand, and was glad to find that the injury he had received would doubtless result in a good recovery, and that no permanent loss of power to the hand would ensue."

Tom is now in the home studying with strange zest the world of literature that was unknown to him before, and has developed such powers of work as to astonish his teacher. No one could have imagined that so much intelligence lay dormant in the boy, waiting for the magic touch to quicken it into life.

A WIDOW'S SURPRISE.

MANY Christian men who read the promises of God's Word, and are perfectly familiar with them, never think of putting them to use in their own difficulties. They appear to think God does not mean what He says. If they really believed that the promises would be fulfilled, they would lose no time in applying for help. An illustration from a recent report will show the folly of bearing burdens unnecessarily.

A young carpenter in a Western city was concerned for the welfare of his widowed mother, whom he had left behind in Ireland. She depended on him for support, the little land she had being inadequate to maintain her. He had an opportunity of emigrating, and he promised when he left that he would send her money so soon as he began to earn it. The poor woman received three letters from him, saying that he had found work and was doing well, but there was no money in them. The old lady wondered, and at last grew disheartened, believing that her son had ceased to care for her. Her debts grew; her rent was in arrear; and, finally, a man came to sell off her few sticks of furniture for debt. "Does not your son in America send you money?" he asked, when the woman wept and bewailed her impending loss of home. "Ne'er a bit," she answered. "Where is he? I'll write to him for you, and tell him how bad you need it," said the kindly officer of the law. "Thank ye, sor; ye'll find his address in his letters. There's three of 'em on the shelf." The man reached them down and opened them. "Why, look here!" he said, as a post-office order dropped from the letter; "and here again!" as another was disclosed in the second letter; "here's plenty of money!" "That ain't money; what do you mean?" said the astonished woman. "Come with me," was the reply; "I'll show you." He took her to the post-office, and, to the surprise of the woman, the postmaster handed out the gold. "I did not understand," she said, "I might have saved myself all the worry if I had known."

DORMANT FAITH IN BLOSSOM.

AN incident reported by Nundo Lall Doss, a native preacher of Calcutta illustrates the power of grace to grow under the most unpropitious circumstances, and eventually assert its power over the life. He says: "You will be glad to learn of a case of baptism that we recently had in our midst. It is the case of a man who received his first impressions of truth while a student in our Institution twenty-three years ago. He read the Scriptures with me and others, and believed. His uncle, seeing his inclination to become a Christian, removed him from the school, and took him to work in an office. Nothing of this came to our knowledge then. His faith lay dormant in his heart all these years, and he found no peace. He came forward in April last, and openly professed his faith in Christ, and was baptized in our native church by the present pastor. He is now living with his Hindu wife and children in his own house at Ballygunge. He attends service on Sundays. His wife tolerates his becoming a Christian, but says she would see more of the Christian religion before she accepts it herself. This is the first instance of the kind in our neighborhood of a person being allowed to live in his own house after becoming a Christian. His Hindu neighbors and relations tried at first to keep him by force confined in his house, and gave out that he had not been baptized, but he publicly declared before all the fact of his baptism. The people—his neighbors and relatives—tried to lay violent hands on Mr. Ashton and the pastor when they went to see him in his house shortly after his baptism. He is now allowed to live in peace. He is a fruit of mission-school work.

The Late Mr. Jacob Estey.

Egyptian Relics Under the Electric Light. (See page 277.)

"This case is illustrative of the difficulties in the way of a profession of Christianity on the part of Hindus, especially if they belong to respectable classes of society. Such an instance—and it is not an isolated one, excepting in the length of the delay—is abundantly suggestive. It reveals how much may be going on, as the result of missionary effort, beyond and beneath what the eye sees and reports tabulate."

THE LATE MR. ESTEY.

THE famous citizen of Vermont whose portrait appears on this page was a typical American. His State was proud of him, of his enterprise, his energy, and his public spirit; and she mourns his death. Some fifty years ago Jacob Estey, then a young man of twenty-six years, started in business at Brattleboro, Vt., as an organ-builder, with a capital of $200. He was a man of integrity, a pious, God-fearing man, diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Success is apt to come to such men, and it came to him. Step by step his business increased, his operations extended, and his influence grew. Humble as was his beginning, he lived to see a little town grow up through his enterprise, peopled by his five hundred employees and their families, and named "Esteyville" in his honor. His large interests, however, did not, as too often happens, choke the religious spirit which filled him when he was poor. He continued to take a prominent part in the Baptist church, of which he was a member, and to aid with money and sage counsel feeble churches in other parts of the State. He was a man who could bear prosperity, which is a more difficult thing to bear than poor men realize. At his funeral, the number of genuine mourners present showed how well he had discharged his responsibilities, and how little of envy his marvellous success had aroused. Both his church and his State will miss him, for in all matters tending to the welfare of either, Jacob Estey was a man to be counted upon, either for money or work, and frequently for both.

A SCHOOLBOY'S PHILOSOPHY.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text: "I am the Bread of Life; he that cometh unto me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." John 6: 35.

HALF a dozen boys sat in various attitudes chatting together about subjects of common interest. It was the end of the school term, and in two more days they would be scattered in all directions, and the friendships and associations of three years past would be broken up.

"Well," said Harding, a big boy who was balancing his chair on the two rear legs, and maintaining the centre of gravity by keeping the back of his head against the wall, "it's heigho for work of another sort now. I'm glad of it. I'm tired of the Latin and Greek and mathematics, and I don't believe they're going to help me much in business. Wonder why we've had to spend so much time on them."

"I asked my father the same thing," said Hughes, who sat opposite him engaged in repairing the reel of a fishing-rod as he talked and listened. "He said it was for training. Fitted a man to take advantage of opportunities when they came along, and gave him a standing in society."

"Depends on what a boy is going to be, a good deal, I think," put in another of the group.

"A boy in America does not often know what he is going to be," said another boy, whom his friends called "the Philosopher." He looked from one to another, and added, "Not one of us knows, for sure. We know what we're going to start with, but twenty years may find us in some very different occupation."

"What's the best object in life, anyway?" asked the youngest and smallest of the group.

The answers were many and various. Everyone regarded wealth as essential in some degree. You could do nothing without it worth doing. You had to be a servant in some way all through; you had no independence. Only one, however, considered the making of a great fortune, way up in the millions, as a fit object in life. One said there was nothing like politics here, where any boy might hope to be President. Another thought literature was the best field. In these reading days a man like Hawthorne or Irving or Howells was known and admired all over the world, and would be remembered long after the most famous President was forgotten. Another thought travel and exploration furnished the best sphere. See what a name Stanley has made for himself!

The Philosopher did not answer anything until after these and other suggestions had been made. Then he said, sententiously, "You seem to think, then, that the best use of life lies either in money, power, or fame. Well, I don't believe it; I see it in uselessness."

"Can't we be useful in our ways?" was the question. "Maybe," said the Philosopher, "but only incidentally. You talked of your objects as though primary object was to do well for yourselves. It is your principle, and I say it's wrong. A man is a failure, as a man, no matter how successful he may be in his pursuit."

"Oh, you are always arguing about motive. You'll never be a man of action. You'll be running in the street some day while you are philosophizing about which stone you ought to tread upon."

There was a general laugh against the Philosopher, and in the midst of it the loud ringing bell summoned the boys to prayers, and the discussion was at an end. It was only a boys' discussion, but the scene and the words were not forgotten by any of them. With that strange tenacity of memory which so often surprises us as we grow older, this discussion recurred to several of the group when, in after years, successes or failures, exultations or disappointment, came to them.

One day, nearly a quarter of a century after the talk in the boys' room, two gentlemen were sitting in the grounds surrounding a splendid mansion. There had been a great political convention in the neighboring city that day to nominate a candidate for the Presidency, and one of the gentlemen had been prominent in it as a party leader. He could now look much like the boy who was mending his fishing-rod in the boys' room that day of old, but he was the same, though now he was Senator Hughes, and a great man in the country. He was his old schoolmate Harding, now a prosperous man, reputed a millionaire, and still as hard worker as any of the hundreds of men in his employ. They had not seen each other before those years, and their talk turned naturally to old school days.

"No politics, if you please," the Senator had said. "I have had a surfeit this week, though I shall be in the midst of the fray again to-morrow. I could not keep out of it now. How is your business doing? You must have a pretty large fortune by this time."

"A truce to business, if you please," said Harding, laughingly. "I am as tired of the subject as you are of politics, though I am like you, too—I gravitate to it with irresistible attraction. It is a relief to forget it once in a while."

"Why do we go on with these things as we were slaves? I often ask myself that. There is real satisfaction in them; I sometimes think of the boy we used to call 'the Philosopher'; I wonder he had the true secret, after all. Have you heard what became of him?"

"Oh, yes, Landor was his name. He is a great man now, has a little church in the city among the slums. He works like a horse, but he seems to enjoy it. He has boys' classes, lectures for men, etings, and a host of things. I hear of him. Some of my men worship him. What if we get come in this evening? I'll send him, if you like." "All means. I should like to im." "An hour later the clergyman was with his old schoolmates under on the lawn, enjoying the quiet he summer night. "Are you prospering in your Landor?" Mr. Harding asked; "I hear of you." "Andly!" was the answer; "I would look in on us some- Those men are noble fellows; only needed to be put on the rack, and God has enabled me that for them. I will tell you are going to do next." And the clergyman gave a description of object for a new building, that be a centre of wholesome in- in one of the worst parts of the now enthusiastic you are, Lan- said Senator Hughes. "You have found a sphere of life suits you. Harding and I were abusing our lives before you in, and taboos both pursuits some subjects of talk. Yet, I e, we are both more prosperous an you are. I begin to think re the success, and we the i." "Now some men," said Mr. Hard- who call him a crank still, but if at, he is a crank that works to al purpose, and, what is still urprising to me, he is so happy What's your secret, Landor? "There is no secret in it," the nan answered, quietly; "it's filment of a promise. The oth of you gentlemen are seeking is always I you; I have mine in possession, and enjoy on't think even the Presidency would con- friend the Senator here. As Alexander ecause there were no more worlds to conquer, ld be miserable because there would be no position for him to reach." And as to you, arding, you would not be content with one i if more could be had for the getting. I have o Christ for all my joy in life, and He gives o niggard hand. You know what He said: at cometh to me shall never hunger, and he elieveth on me shall never thirst." That is omise; I can testify that it is kept."

WILL IT LIFT?

THE STORY OF A FOG.

By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,

of "Simon Holmes," "Nestleton Magna," "Mat- thew Mellowden," etc., etc.

(Continued from page 283.)

H an object Gilbert one evening paid a visit immie's cottage. As he neared the door he e old shepherd approaching it in the other on. But Jimmie, instead of coming on to him, turned into a side path, and crossed a into the fields. Gilbert Craske could not be at he had been seen and recognized, and if d, he could not tell whether Jimmie's effort id him proceeded from a guilty conscience, an an overstrained sense of honor prompting o avoid the appearance of imposing on good-bert quickly followed him, and said, as he over- im: "Well, Jimmie, old friend, what's come i? I haven't seen you for days and days. here, I want you to come and sit with me an o-night. Will you come?" "If you please, ' if it's all the same to you, I'd rather not. ee, it makes me late for bed, an' I can't stand ours like I used to. I'd rather not." "hy, dear me, you've never talked like that!" exclaimed Gilbert. "You can come as early I like, and you can go away when you like— ere! of course if you don't want to come you ay away; but, let me tell you, you are grieving d friend and a true.

ere was a tremor in Gilbert's voice, for there al feeling at his heart. Jimmie read the fact, ould stand out no longer. "Nay, sir," said he, "if you put it that way, I'll come as much as you like, an' as oft as you like; but to tell you the truth, sir, you are so main good to me that I'm downright shamed to put myself so often in your way."

The German Imperial Family. (See page 277.)

The very thing that the grocer had told him. It was Jimmie's unwillingness to seem to sponge on his kindness that had kept him away; nothing else. "No fear about that, Jimmie," he said. "Then I'll expect you; and, look here, you had better come to tea."

So saying, Gilbert turned on his homeward way, and as he passed the landlord at the door of Hill-drop Inn, he said, casually, "Jimmie Sladd is coming to tea with me; send up tea for two." The landlord muttered something under his breath about inviting paupers, but Gilbert turned so sharply upon him, and asked him what he said, that he did not repeat it.

True to his promise, Jimmie Sladd made his appearance at Hilldrop Inn near upon the time that the evening meal was set upon the table in Gilbert Craske's apartments; and that odd but genial personage was waiting, somewhat anxiously, for his expected guest. Jimmie tapped at the door, and received a hearty summons to enter. "Come in, Jimmie; come in. I was beginning to fear that you weren't coming," said Gilbert, in a most genial tone, "and yet if you only knew how welcome you are, I don't think you would be so ready to stop away."

"Nay, I'se glad enough to come, only for one thing," said Jimmie, "and that bothers me a good bit." "Bothers you, Jimmie? Why, what's that?"

"Why, I reckon I'd better tell you, or mebbe you'll misunderstand me, an' I'd rather do owt than that. When I was here last time, I mean the time when you lent me your great-coat, an' helped me to put it on, I didn't know what else you did till I got back to the cottage. When I was pulling my smock off to go to bed, out rolled a golden guinea on to the floor. I could scarcely believe my own eyes. When I felt in my pockets I found two more in the corner, and I felt that I ought not to come so often if you treated me like that. It 'ud be imposing on good-nature. I thought you would get the idea that I was coming for what I could get, an' afore you should ha' that opinion o' me, excuse me, sir, I would rayther not come at all.

I'm only a poor broken-down shepherd, but I should like to keep my self-respect, an' the respect of others as well."

"Oh, never mind that," said Gilbert, mentally storing the information for future use, and for the present content to let the old man follow his own judgment anent the gold. "There's plenty more where that came from. But come, here's the tea; let us see what is the quality of Mrs. Higginbottom's buttered toast and tea-cake. Then we can have a pipe and a crack o' talk."

During tea-time Gilbert kept his companion in conversation, mainly on the subject of his purchase of the Hill-drop estate; and the warm way in which Jimmie expressed his satisfaction that the purchase had been made, and that this would in all probability keep the new proprietor in the neighborhood, went far to dissipate any remaining doubts he might have of the old shepherd's honesty and good faith.

"Now, then," he continued, after the old man had done justice to the bountiful meal which had been spread for him, "draw your chair to the fire. And now, seeing you've mentioned it yourself, I hope the money I gave you has been a comfort to you."

"Thank you, an' God bless you, sir. You mustn't hinder me from saying that. I changed one of 'em at the grocer's at Faringham, and a good part on it's left yet. T'other two I put into the little tea-caddy, an' there they are this minute. It'll be a good while before I have to spend such a lot. I don't need to spend much."

Gilbert fully understood the delicate intimation that he was 'not, at any rate for the present, to offer him any more, and dismissed the last vestige of doubt concerning Jimmie's truth. "By-the-way," said he, in a quiet tone, "I found this handkerchief behind that chest there. I was a bit puzzled as to how it managed to get there. It looks like the one you were using just now at tea. Is it yours, Jimmie?"

There was just a smack of the magisterial in his voice as he promptly put the question, and he looked steadily in Jimmie's face as he held it out to him. Jimmie took it curiously. He carefully looked at each corner of it until his eye fell on a large J. S. which had been traced with strong thread, and then replied: "Yes, it's mine: there's the mark; but how in the world it got there fairly caps me. Old Dinah Levitt, she does my bit o' washing, and she said I had lost one. Where did you find it?"

"Behind that chest, Jimmie," said Gilbert, pointing with his finger, "close to the wall; and when I took it up a guinea dropt to the floor; so the handkerchief and the guinea must have belonged to the same party, eh?"

Then Jimmie Sladd rose to his feet; his face reddened, his lips visibly quivered, and lifting appealing hands to Gilbert, he said, "Oh, Mr. Allanson, I'm sorry! Don't, don't!" and dropping into his chair, the simple-hearted soul was a very picture of grief. Gilbert Craske felt queer, very queer. Was it true, after all? Had the fact that he had been discovered dawned at last on Jimmie's dull brain? and was he now casting himself on the mercy of the man he had so greatly wronged? He did not know what to do; did not know what to say.

Again Jimmie said, "Don't, sir, please!"

"Don't what?" said Gilbert. "What do you mean?"

Jimmie rose to his feet. There was a natural dignity about his attitude that the smock frock seemed to add to rather than diminish. "I'll tell you, sir," he said. "The guinea ain't mine, sir, and I don't know anything about it. I think it's your kind way of helping me, but I don't need it; indeed I don't. I thank you, sir, all the same, but if I can't come without you thinkin' 'at I shall want summat for comin', then I shall come no more. God bless you for all your kindness. Indeed I ain't ungrateful! I ain't, I'm sure. That owd han'kercher's mine, tho' hoo it com' there goodness only knows. But that guinea isn't mine, sir, an' I won't have it."

To all this what could the astonished Gilbert say? If a convenient rat hole had been at hand, he felt small enough to creep into it. To think of suspecting this man of a base, ungrateful crime! A man to whom charity, except in so far as to supply his positive necessities, was evidently undesired and most unwelcome. He felt he had blundered indeed. He stood up before the old shepherd, who was making for the door, and said, "Old friend, forgive me. I am sorry and ashamed. I was thoughtless, but not unkind. I will not distress you any more." Poor Jimmie was glad enough to do that, and again expressed his gratitude, and so the matter ended; and to the day he died Jimmie Sladd never knew of the dark suspicion which through circumstances had for a little while gathered around his name.

It was necessary, in the interests of his own private affairs, that Gilbert Craske should pay a visit again to the great city. Now that he and his friend Jimmie Sladd were thoroughly one again—for of course the last vestige of suspicion had left his mind concerning the old shepherd, and the mind of that aged worthy was set at rest as to those strange freaks of charity—honest, good-hearted Gilbert was so immensely relieved that he felt as though the pressure of his loss, heavy as it was, was more than half gone. He greatly esteemed the old man, and his possible fall from virtue by reason of the temptation he had stupidly exposed him to, had been to him a source of deep and bitter grief. Knowing from his own admission that there was more than enough in the "tea-caddy" to meet the old man's wants for some time to come, Gilbert set off to London with a comparatively light heart.

On his way thither he gave himself up to strong suspicion as to the actual purloiner of the box and its precious contents. Putting this and that together, he had come to a just conclusion, and had decided upon a line of conduct which, as he thought, would bring the truth to light. He never ceased to upbraid himself for leaving his keys in such a foolish place, and with characteristic egotism constantly reiterated that he was an egregious donkey; and with characteristic kindness of heart was capable of finding excuses for the sinner who had done the deed. Had it remained with him to decide, it may well be doubted whether justice would ever have reached the guilty one.

On arriving in town he elected to take up his quarters at the hotel near the Marble Arch, to which he had drifted on the never-to-be-forgotten night of November fog. After having attended to the special business that took him to London, he found himself compelled to try to trace his erratic course on that occasion, and make another effort to discover "No 59." On three or four different occasions he thought he had found it, and had boldly made inquiries at as many different houses, but always with the same result. It was clear that in this case the fog would not lift, and Gilbert began to despair of ever seeing the silver-haired widow any more.

The cabman's name and number he had retained, and to him he repaired in the forlorn hope that the promised "fiver" might have produced some more satisfactory result. But alas! Jarvie himself was missing now. He had left the profession, as it seemed. At any rate, the name was off the books, and the number was now owned by a cabbie who "knew not Joseph," or rather Gilbert, and was as much a stranger to that gentleman as the Khan of Tartary or Prester John. Nevertheless, and most unexpectedly, Gilbert was to have another ray of light.

One day, as he was sauntering down the Strand, looking at the wares displayed in the various windows, he came upon a picture-dealer's premises, in whose window he saw a drawing that made him start with strong surprise. He suddenly exclaimed, "Well, this is a go! If that isn't a picture of Hildrop Farm, I'm a Dutchman! It's as like as two peas!" Into the shop went Gilbert with some what unbusinesslike eagerness. It was a small shop. The stock-in-trade consisted chiefly of ancient prints, crayon sketches, and artistic odds and ends of every kind. Behind the counter stood none other than our old friend, the little foreigner, to whom Mercy Graythorpe had been indebted for much kindness.

The dealer looked at his visitor, whose sudden entrance had quite startled him, and then taking off his spectacles, and rubbing them as if in preparation for further business, uttered his usual and familiar formula, "Vell, sir, an' vat you vant to buy?"

"Buy!" said Gilbert, in reply to the picture dealer's question, "I want to buy that farmhouse picture there in the window. How much do you ask for it, Moonseer, money down?"

"Ha!" said the little man, striving to read the would-be purchaser by peering at him through his old-fashioned spectacles. "Dat is vat you call diamond, I means von jewel, von gem; aye, dat's vat it is. I vont mooth money for it." So saying he unloosed the "gem" from the hook to which it was suspended and held it up at arm's length, peering at it with such a look of appreciation, that if its value might have been appraised by that standard, it might well have been worth its weight in gold.

Now, however, Gilbert's customary shrewdness in all matters of business came to his aid, and he replied bluntly—"Nonsense, man! You can't call that much of a picture from a high art point of view. I'm too old to be taken in in that way. The fact is, I happen to know the place of which that is a pretty exact sketch, and if the price is anything in reason, I shall be glad to buy it for the sake of 'Auld lang syne.'"

"Dat is all very vell," said the little Dutchman. "But I tells you it is very goot picture. It is a peautiful drawing of dat farm—vat you call de place—Oatlanzine? Yes, dat is de name. De young Mees is cleffer; very cleffer. "She"

"What!" said the impetuous Gilbert; "was it done by a young lady?" and he jumped at once to the conclusion that it had something to do with the young lady with whom he had made such an odd acquaintance, and of whom he was in such earnest search. Once more the shrewd little picture dealer thought he saw an advantage, and he began to enlarge on the young lady's beauties with a view to make the picture a "gem" still more to be desired.

"Vat I tell you is true, ten thousand times. The Mees who make dat liddle peauty is de, vat you call, de, de pink of ardists; oh, loffy! and the again upraised hands, arched eyebrows, and indescribable movement of the features made the pair of gems such as, if both were on sale, only millionaires should bid for. "I sall vant five bound for dat picture, sir; and it is dirt sheap at de price."

"All right!" said Gilbert, who had been expecting a much larger figure to be named. "Here's the money, and, look here, if you can find me the young lady that painted it, I will give you five pounds more."

"I vas not able to tell you dat," said the little man, regretfully. "But the young Mees vill come again. She does mooth business with me. I sall haf call for her on Saturday ee'ning." And so it was arranged that Gilbert should call again.

Again, as if drawn by some power that he could not resist, he made his way over to Tottenham Court Road, intending to stroll through the streets he had so often haunted and find his way in due time to his hotel. His attention was arrested by the appearance of a tall, attractive-looking young woman, who was walking almost immediately in front of him. As he passed her, a lad in a blue blouse, with a butcher's tray on his shoulder, fulfilled the erratic mission of his kind by poking the handles in her face. Starting suddenly to one side, she bumped with considerable violence against Gilbert, extorting both from him and her an involuntary exclamation.

"I beg your pardon," said the lady, turning her face fully on him. He remembered it in a moment, though he had seen it only on a foggy night and by the aid of a lighted lamp. He saw in it, too, a strong likeness to Alice Leaming, as she had been called in the days before her marriage, and long before the days of her silver hair.

He stared at the young lady, who did not recognize him, and held out his hand with a smile. Poor Gilbert! On the very brink of the discovery he most desired, he destroyed his chances by that deed. Mercy Graythorpe, for it certainly was that young lady, always suspicious of the perils of London life, suddenly jumped to the conclusion that butcher's boy and tramp burly-looking countryman and sudden bump were all a planned design with mischief of some kind for its end. So she sped off as though she had wings.

The passers-by looked at Gilbert, as though it was their duty to protect the flight of injured innocence. Gilbert hadn't his wits about him, and though he made an effort to follow her, he was strangely interfered with by the growing crowd, and soon lost her in the distance. There was nothing for him but to make his way westward.

Gilbert Craske's one hope now lay in the little print-shop in the Strand, and the little Dutchman who kept it, who always saluted each incomer with the pertinent question—"Vell, vat you vant to buy?" With what success he prosecuted that hope must be narrated subsequently. Meanwhile I may say that as he walked slowly towards his hotel, he was sufficiently dispirited to ask himself—"Will it lift? Will it ever lift?" and his only answer was silence and a deep sigh.

(To be Continued.)

Henry Gaze & Son, the originators and first conductors of Oriental tours, of 940 Broadway, New York City, offer most attractive summer trips to Europe at $150 and upwards, including all expense; also two Fall trips to the Holy Land and Round the World.

200,000

Estey Organs have been sold in the last fifty years.

An enormous number! No other Organ has been so popular. No other Organ has had such a sale.

We want to secure the best conception of 200,000 Organs. We ask some reader of this paper to give us an illustration of the number 200,000 which will show how great it is.

Here is one specimen illustration.

"If the keys in those 200,000 Organs were scattered in a field, and a boy were hired to pick them up at one cent for ten, he would make $122,000 for this job."

This is a good illustration. Perhaps you can do better. Will you not try?

ESTEY ORGAN CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

Branch Offices: 159 Tremont Street, Boston. 831 Broadway, New York. 18 North 7th Street, Philadelphia. State and Jackson Streets, Chicago. 916 Olive Street, St. Louis. Marietta and Broad Sts., Atlanta, Ga.

An interesting Book of Facts (containing 24 pages with 46 illustrations) entitled, How Large is 200,000, will be mailed free; one copy to one address.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE OF AUTOGRAPH OF STEWART HARTSHORN AND GET THE GENUINE
SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address.
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

Winslow
$100 A MONTH and $2 Outfit Free!
Agents Wanted in every State to collect small pictures to copy and enlarge to a beautiful Oil Painting. The biggest thing out. Send for circulars, etc. Restorative Copying Co. Address, C. WINSLOW & CO., 274 Grand Street, New York.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often self destruction. Distress after eating, ache, heartburn, sour stomach, mentation, etc., are caused by this very common increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla stomach, creates an appetite, promotes digestion, relieves sick headache, calm, and cures the most obstinate dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia but little appetite, and what I did eat, or did me little good. In an hour I would experience a faintness or the feeling, as though I had not eaten. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense good. It gave me an appetite, and relished and satisfied the craving I had experienced. It relieved me of that all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, N. B. Be sure to get only

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Stop the CHRONIC COUGH

For if you do not it may become a permanent. For Consumption, General Debility and Wasting Disease there is nothing like

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil HYPOPHOSPHITES Of Lime and Soda

It is almost as palatable as milk, better than other so-called Emulsions. A wonderful flesh producer.

Scott's Emulsion

There are poor imitations. Get the

Holman's Liver and Stomach

Absorbs all impurities from the blood. Invigorates and vitalizes the whole system.

Holman's Liver and Stomach

Cures Biliousness, Indigestion, Jaundice, Diarrhea, Malaria, Sick Headache, Rheumatism, &c.

Holman's Liver and Stomach

Regulates the Stomach and Bowels, Improves the Appetite, corrects Assimilation, and beautifies the Complexion.

Holman's Liver and Stomach

Prevents Sea sickness, Cholera, Malaria, Yellow, Typhus, Typhoid and Bilious Fevers.

Write for pamphlet, containing full instructions.

HOLMAN LIVER PAD CO. Box 2112. 81 John

RUPTURE CUR

with our Improved Elastic Truss worn night and day, retains the rupture under exercise or severest strain. Send for pamphlet. IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS 822 & 824 Broadway, Cor. 12th St.,

UNION INVESTMENT CO.

Capital, -- $1,000,000 KANSAS CITY, MO.

7 per cent. investment in real estate

The direct obligation of the Company by business property and recommended by business men and bankers of Kansas. Send for circulars with full particulars.

W. P. RICE, Pres. } Union Investment Co. O. F. PAGE, Treas. }

25¢ PRINTING OUTFIT

A WHOLE PRINTING OUTFIT, COMPLETE. Just as shown in our 3 Alphabets of Font Type. Bottle of Tissues, in neat case with catalogue and directions. PRINTER. Sets up any name, prints cards, paper, etc. Usual. Worth 50¢. The best gift for young people. For more 6 for $1. Agents wanted. Ingersoll & Bro., 45 Cortlandt

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak liver. FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S HANGED BY THE BOOK.

 history of a recent convert from Mo-danism is given in a letter from Mr.
 Cooper, a missionary in India, who o that country last year depending on God for support, who works with hands for a living, while he preached to the heathen around him. He at a man named Hidayat Ulla Khan sized on the previous Sunday. He Cooper that he was born at Bateraia Panjaub, India, in 1862. His father, a farmer, died when he was about years of age, and his mother shortly rds. Four years ago he with some bought some clothes to trade with rabad. In this place he married and rds went away. Finding his wife to d character he left her, and moved to abad, and from there to Bombay,
 he became a private teacher of Urdu.
 ago he there bought a Bible in the character, and studied it regularly, e result that he became convinced of
 h. From Bombay he journeyed up , and alighted at Harda, where he d for the missionary, and was directe at school. The schoolmaster and conversed with him and prayed.
 t of the day he remained with the n brethren, and dined and talked with They found him intelligent, sincere,
 h a fair knowledge and understand-he way of salvation. The following desired baptism. No situation was him, and he was told that he must persecution. He replied that he did d so long he had the truth. Accord-he was immersed, and afterwards ublic confession. Some Mohammedound said he was utterly lost and ow go to hell. The next day we n good authority that the Mussuld arranged to give our new convert beating when they obtained the When informed of it he merely At the meeting that evening ohammedans listened outside to d immediately it was concluded d them to attend regularly and come it down. No disturbance followed.
 he Lord!

HILOSOPHER'S QUESTION.

re told that it is the fool who says in t that there is no God. A man can d reasoning and drawing inferences, e in the facts of daily life, in the ound him, and the heavens above andant reasons for inference, the ex-of God. It is said that there is around abundant reason for believing in the e of a spirit of evil, though now en are doubting the fact. A char-anecdote is told of an argument on sition between two philosophers, one merican and the other English.

Ralph Waldo Emerson visited Lon-was shown over the city by Thomas Emerson said that he did not bea personal devil, and of this they king as they walked along. As they through some of the black spots in , Carlyle turned to his companion in his direct Scotch manner, "Dae believe in a devil noo?" Passing scenes of degradation the question eated, as they walked round London the swelling tide of iniquity which inundated the city. To these direct as, Emerson could give no satisfacswer, though the evidence was overngly conclusive. It is matter for ret both the wise men agreed in the far erious matter of rejecting the only that has ever proved effectual for the y witnessed. It is true now as it was st's time, that these things are hidden he wise and prudent, and revealed
 bes. (Matt. 11:25.)

IDOLS CAST OUT.

claration of a change of religion is p in a house in China. Mr. Parry, s laboring at Tanlin-hien, reports recent conversions there that of a of farmers, of whom four generations ng a little girl, are all of one mind to om idols and serve the true God. The is the first to come—a fine, strong, iced man, who came to give up his and in doing so, according to the which the evange:st has made here,

first attended for several Sundays, and then came along with the whole basketful of idols, the clearance of their home; the idols, except two, were used to cook rice, and he came in and gave up his opium and showed an evidently sincere interest in the Gospel. He cannot read, but there seems no doubt as to the sincerity of his simple faith in Jesus as Saviour. When he went home to take away the idols, the whole family were of one mind; six persons all came together to give in their names as inquirers. I paid this family a visit in the substantial farm home, and saw for myself the evidences of the defeat which idol worship has met there;
 thank God, the sight is getting less and less rare, of family halls, where idols have reigned for generations, now cleared out. In this case the motto put up was, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." We had public preaching in their house, and it was most evident that, very simple as the knowledge which they have is, their testimony for God is open to all. How we should and do praise God for this first instance of a whole family coming out at once for Christ.

A SCOFFER'S CONVERSION.

ONE of the most remarkable evidences of the power of prayer was cited recently by Major Whittle. He said: "That while at work with Mr. Moody, in Chicago, in 1871, I found a Glasgow man at one of our Gospel meetings. He was the mate of a vessel staying there the whole winter. He was a very hard case, and had spent his life drinking, fighting, and gambling, and could hold his own among any kind of rough men.
 There had been a meeting in a great log building, erected after the fire for Mr.
 Moody, who had spoken from the text:
 'This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.' One of the workers came up to this man, Morrison was his name, and asked him to stay to the second meeting. 'No,' was the reply delivered with a mocking laugh. 'What did you come here for?' enquired the worker. 'For some fun,' and he laughed again. 'Do you remember the text?' He did not, but was told it, 'Well, John,' the worker said, 'We are going to have a second meeting, and we shall pray for you.' 'All right,' and John Morrison went off laughing most heartily. He reached home and lay down in his bed, then for the first time he began to think of his life from the time he had run away from home, and was becoming much moved. But he could not rid himself of his unwelcome thoughts; he remembered that the people at the meeting were holding him up before God in prayer.
 He resolved to attend the meeting next night, when with eighteen or twenty others he stayed to the after meeting, and gave himself to Christ. Since that time he has been a most energetic worker for Christ.
 He was saved in direct response to the meeting's appeal to God."

Good News for the Deaf.

At the convention of physicians held in Kansas City, the committee appointed from members of the different societies to investigate and report upon the most practical and reliable artificial means for relieving deafness, have reported unanimously upon the invisible device of H. A. Wales, of Bridgeport, Conn., known as the Sound Disc, which concentrates the wave sound.

WANTED, AGENTS to sell "THE CHRIST- IAN'S LEGACY."

Introduction by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. One agent writes, "I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 50 orders." I will pay $25 towards Dr.
 Talmage's new church, in the name of the agent, for every new agent hired from this advertisement, who sells 50 copies of the "Legacy." Usual profits to the agent. Address, W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

P. D. & S. Pens

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS. I Send 10 cents for Sample Card with 12 Pens. A. S. BARNES & Co., New York.

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address
 on a postal for free sample copy of Phenological Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "THAT BOY OF MINE, and What to do with Him."
 Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 771 Broadway, N. Y.

RIDLEY'S

Grand St., N. Y.

FINE MILLINERY

—AND—

STRAW GOODS

REDUCED.

FRENCH and DOMESTIC TRIMMED HATS, BONNETS, TOQUES and WALKING HATS in Chantilly and Van Dyke laces. Fine Milans, Fancy Lace Straw, in plain and unique combination, trimmed with new materials, latest designs, all colors.

3,000 TO SELECT FROM,

At $2.73, $2.93, $3.13, $3.43, $3.73 up.

LACES.

DRAPERY FISH NETS, 45 inches wide, in plain striped and figured, at 50c., 65c., 75c., 89c. and $1.00 up to $3.00 yard. Striped and figured Brussels Drapery, 45 inches wide, at 75c., 85c., $1.00, $1.25 yard and up.

Our Flouncing Stock is large and varied, and comprises Chantilly, Gulpure, Spanish and Valenciennes, from lowest to highest price.

Baby Carriages, parasol covers. Nottingham Applicque, Oriental, Escorial and Spanish from 21c.
 to $3.50 each.

Millinery Novelties in Nets, Laces, Silks, Velvets, Flowers, Feathers, Ornaments, &c.

DRESS TRIMMINGS.

Gilt and Silver Tinsel Trimmings, 20c., 25c., 29c., 35c. yard.

Gilt and Silver Cords, 2c., 4c., 5c., 7c. and 9c.
 yard.

Lot Colored Silk Gimps, 39c. yard; worth 75c.

Jet Beaded Headings, fine assortment, 12½c.,

18c., 25c., 30c., 40c. yard

Fine Jet Beaded Ornaments, 9 inch, 25c.; 10 inch, 30c.; 12 inch, 38c.

LADIES' AND MISSES'

Suits, Wraps, Capes

—AND—

LONG GARMENTS.

Ladies' tailor-made loose Front or Vest Jackets,

in Fine Whale Rib or Chevron Cloth, at $6.50

Ladies' Wraps in Silk, Lace and Gimp, at $9.75.

Ladies' Cloth Capes, plain and fancy, $1.95, $2.50,

and 3.50.

Ladies' All Wool Suits, tailor finish, puff sleeves, at $10; worth $15.

Misses' Cloth Jackets, Tan, Black, Navy and

Drab, at $2.90.

FASHION MAGAZINE

FOR SPRING & SUMMER.

This splendid double number contains 2,000 illustrations of the goods to be found in our 85 departments, with prices—the lowest to be found.

Send 15c. for Sample Copy, or, what is better still, 50c. for a year's subscription.

EDWARD RIDLEY & SONS,

309, 311, 311½ to 321 Grand Street.

56 to 68 ALLEN, 59 to 65 ORCHARD St.,
 NEW YORK.

Black Grenadines and Veilings.

We are exhibiting this week the largest and most complete assortment of All-silk and Silk-and-wool Brocaded and Striped Black Grenadines ever shown by this house, the prices ranging from $1 to $4 per yard.

Also a full line of Nun's Veilings, hem-stitched borders, from 75 cen to $1.75 per yard.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
 NEW YORK.

CARPETS.

AT EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS.

500 PIECES ROYAL WILTONS.
 PIECES WILTON VELVETS.
 PIECES BODY BRUSSELS.
 PIECES EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.

TO CLOSE OUT QUICKLY.

MATTINGS.

FINE JAPANESE AND CHINA STRAW MAT-TINGS. LARGEST STOCK IN THE CITY.

OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION.

White, Red Check and Fancy Patterns,

FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS.

ALSO FINE SEAMLESS JAPANESE MAT-TINGS AT $8 PER ROLL.

100 Pieces Warehouse Samples, Finest

Quality, not regularly numbered, at greatly reduced prices.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS

AND

LACE CURTAINS

IN GREAT VARIETY AT LOWEST PRICES.

FURNITURE,

Our own upholstery, at moderate prices. Agents for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.

We make a specialty of furnishing complete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.,

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK.

MAY FLOWERS—OF SONG

For Schools:

Children's School Songs. (35 cts.; $3.60 dozen.) 8 pages of simple explanations, and 138 new and selected songs for general singing. This little book is being received with much favor.

Kindergarten Chimes. ($1.25.) Kate Donglas Wiggan. Good manual, and fine collection.

Kindergarten and Primary School

Songs. (30 cts.; $3.00 doz.) Menard.

Songs and Games for Little Ones.

($2.00.) Walker and Jenks.

Gems for Little Singers. (30 cts.; $3.00 doz.) Emerson and Swayne.

Rhymes and Tunes. ($1.00.) Mrs. Osgood.

Motion Songs. (20 cts.; $1.80 doz.) Mrs.
 Boardman.

Get them all! They are most delightful books!

Also try the sweet little Cantatas:

Kingdom of Mother Goose. (25 cts.; $2.28 dozen.) Mrs. Boardman.

Rainbow Festival. (20 cts.; $1.80 doz.)
 Lewis.

Who Killed Cock Robin? (40 cts.; $3.60 doz.) Ford.

SONG MANUAL.

Book 1, Primary. 30c.; $3.00 doz. Book 2, Medium, 40c.; $4.20 doz. Book 3, High, 50c.; $4.80
 doz. By Emerson. These are the newest and best books for teaching note reading in schools.

Send for lists and descriptions.

Any book mailed for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.

C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, NEW YORK.

SHORTHAND

Writing thoroughly taught situations procured all pupils when competent end for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

I HAVE SHUT MY DOOR!

"Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door," * * * MATT., vi: 6.

Lord, I have shut my door;
Shut out life's busy cares, and fretting noise,
Here in the silence they intrude no more,
Speak Thou, and heavenly joy shall fill my heart,
With music sweet and clear:
A holy Psalm!

Yes, I have shut my door;
On earthly passions—all its yearning love,
Its tender friendships, all the priceless store of human ties.
Above all these my heart aspires;
O Heart Divine, stoop Thou to mine!

Lord, I have shut my door;
Come Thou and visit me, I am alone;
Come as when doors were shut Thou cam'st of yore,
And visitest Thine own;
My Lord, I kneel with reverent love and fear,
For Thou art here!

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

A good appetite usually indicates good health. Hood's Sarsaparilla creates and sharpens the appetite and tones the digestive organs. It cures dyspepsia and sick headache.

A MAN

UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Ry.

Including Lines East and West of the Missouri River. The Direct Route to and from CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, DAVENPORT, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, WATERTOWN, SIOUX FALLS, MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL, ST. JOSEPH, ATCHISON, LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS CITY, TOPEKA, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS and PUEBLO. Free Reclining Chair Cars to and from CHICAGO, CALDWELL, HUTCHINSON and DODGE CITY, and Palace Sleeping Cars between CHICAGO, WICHITA and HUTCHINSON. Daily Trains to and from KINGFISHER in the Indian Territory.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

of Through Coaches, Sleepers and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS and OMAHA, and Free Reclining Chair Cars between CHICAGO and DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS and PUEBLO, via St. Joseph, or Kansas City and Topeka. Excursions daily with Choice of Routes to and from Salt Lake, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The Direct Line to and from Pike's Peak, Manitou, Garden of the Gods, the Sanitariums, and Scenic Grandeur of Colorado.

Via The Albert Lea Route.

Solid Express Trains daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, with THROUGH Reclining Chair Cars (FREE) to and from those points and Kansas City. Through Chair Car and Sleeper between Peoria, Spirit Lake and Sioux Falls via Rock Island. The Favorite Line to Watertown, Sioux Falls, the Summer Resorts and Hunting and Fishing Grounds of the Northwest.

The Short Line via Seneca and Kankakee offers facilities to travel to and from Indianapolis Cincinnati, and other Southern points.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address,
E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN,
Gen'l Manager. Gen'l Tkt. & Pass Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 34 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P.O. Box 289, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

FOR ONLY 10 CENTS We will send the MAYFLOWER, 4 months on TRIAL, and a Packet of Mixed Flower Seeds containing 50 of the newest and rarest kinds. Sow this Spring, they will give you all Summer's bed of rare flowers such as you never dreamed of. THE MAYFLOWER is a 12-page illustrated monthly journal devoted entirely to flowers and gardening in all its branches. It is the finest publication of the kind in the country. Edited by JOHN LEWIS CHILDS assisted by MR. A. BLANC and C. L. ALLEN, and a score of other well-known writers and cultivators. REGULAR SUBSCRIPTION PRICE 50 cents per year. This offer to send it four months and the packet of rare new seeds FOR ONLY 10 CENTS is made expressly to get every lover of flowers in the land to become acquainted with the merits of our paper. It is so good they will always want it. GET 4 OF YOUR FRIENDS TO ACCEPT THIS OFFER WITH THE WONDROUS WEATHER PLANT FREE. YOU AND WE WILL SEND YOU THE WONDROUS WEATHER PLANT FREE. Get 10 to send with you and we will send you postpaid 5 of the most beautiful and rare plants you ever saw, such as will astonish you with their beauty. Send at once. This offer will not appear again.

Address THE MAYFLOWER, FLORAL PARK, N. Y.

Ready May 1st, 1890.

WINNOWER SONGS

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS,

By IRA D. SANKEY.

One of the largest and most useful collections of NEW and SELECTED songs for SUNDAY SCHOOLS ever published in a single volume.

224 pages. 35 cents per copy in any quantity; single copies for examination, by mail, on receipt of price.

BIGLOW & MAIN,

76 East Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.,

74 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati.
19 East 16th Street, New York.

THE ADDER

It will add two columns of figures at a time with absolute accuracy. It gives instantaneous results, and makes no mistakes. It saves an immense amount of time. It prevents brain exhaustion.

The following is one of many high indorsements:
BRIDGEPORT, Conn., April 9, 1890.
Gentlemen—I enclose $7.00 to pay for the Adder, after using it for making summaries for the N. Y. Conference. I never in my life paid for anything more cheerfully. Surely it is all you claim for it.

Yours very truly, Rev. THOMAS E. GILBERT.
Any man or woman who has much to do with figures cannot afford to be without one. "The Adder" saves both time and money.

Price $7.00. Sent by mail (at customer's risk) on receipt of price and 15 cents postage; or by express (at customer's charge). Send for a circular, with full-size cut, description and testimonials from users in all parts of the country.

WEBB'S ADDER CO., 58 Cedar St., New York.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

METAL CEILINGS.

BEST for Churches, old or new;
for Schools, Stores, and Residences. ARTISTIC

H. S. NORTROP,

18 Rose Street, New York.

MEN WANTED.

Great inducements. Outfit free. Address, J. AUSTIN SHAW, Nurseryman, Brooklyn, New York.

SHORTHAND. Private instruction by practical verbatim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

Is a most remarkable invention.

PIANOS
$150 to $1500

PRICE $180
to families. No Middle-men.

Sold Direct
to families. No Middle-men.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.

235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

UNIVERSITY

ESTAB. 1859. INCOR. 1877

They Lead the World!

Sent for trial in your own home.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT
Guaranteed 32 years.

DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!
Cat. Free.

ORGANS

$35 to $500

EIGHT PER CENT. NET GUARANTEED FOR FIVE YEARS. at Sheffield, Ala., on Lots purchased at public sale May 7, S. & 9, if improved within six months. Sheffield is on the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the East Tenn., Va. & Ga. R. R., and the Birmingham, Sheffield and Tennessee River R. R., and at head of navigation on the Tennessee River. Thirty-eight manufacturing, including blast iron furnace, employing 1500 men. Other enterprises, including extensive Railroad Shops, now under construction, will employ 1,000 additional. AT-TEND SALE. Reduced Railroad and Steamboat fare from all points. Descriptive matter furnished on application to SHEPHERD LAND, IRON & COAL COMPANY.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

CONTENTS

CO-OPERATIVE HOME WINN

—Some Practical Results of Building and Loan Associations. W. A. FINN. 16 Illustrations.

BARBIZON AND MILLET. Paris Superbly Illustrated.

THE RIGHTS OF THE CITIZEN SERIES II.—As a User of Public Streets. By FRANCIS LYNN STETSON.

THE THEATRES OF JAPAN. T. J. NAKAGAWA. Illustrated Japanese Artists.

CORINNE. By EUGENE SCHUYLER.
GLIMPSSES OF NAPOLEON. CLARENCE DEMING.

SHORT STORIES, and the Story "In the Valley." Illustrated H. PYLE.

THE POINT OF VIEW (Department). Poems by JOHN H. FRANK DEMPSTER SHERMAN and A. LAMPMAN, etc., etc.

PRICE 25 CENT

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System

827 and 829 Broadway, New

HERMANN SCHAEFFER, President; LEONARD B. VINTAGE

Note our Trade Mark Closely!

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment

SUMMER UNDERWEAR

And Especially to our exquisite

All-Wool GAUZE

Underwear for the hot, summer season

Send for explanatory, descriptive and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Special Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System

827 and 829 Broadway, New

BRANCH HOUSES:

119 NASSAU ST., Temple Court Building
504 FULTON ST., next to Y.M.C.A. Bldg., Brooklyn

100,000 DRESSMAKERS

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting

We know the advertiser to be thoroughly reliable, and machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

YOU CAN LAY BY $500 TO $1000

a year by working for us. You can in any surer or simpler way than how you try. We furnish capital and pay those who work either whole or part time not required for answer. JNO. C. WISSEMAN Pubs., Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City.

AGENTS

Proof $100 month made our new Talmage Book Mother, Home and Health. F. I. CUYLER, $2.75, 10,000 Currier's Bible, $2. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 19. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE CENTRAL UNION MISSION OF WASHINGTON, D. C.—PICTURES OF THE BUILDING AND THE NEW GOSPEL WAGON.

BROW ESCAPES. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

REVELATION OF "THE TIMES."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS: Weak Yet Strong, Etc. THE TRANSFIGURATION. By Mrs. M. Baxter. PORTRAIT OF MR. H. M. STANLEY. PICTURE OF THE LABOR PARADE IN NEW YORK ON MAY-DAY. PORTRAITS OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS—A LIFE TRANSFIGURED.

A TEST AND A DECLARATION. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER. WILL IT LIFT? By Rev. J. Jackson Wray. A Modern Isaac—A Lady's Visit to a Chinese Home—Gospel Trophies in Japan—A Momentous Marriage-Service—A Corean's Work.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

NARROW ESCAPES.

"I am escaped with the skin of my teeth." Job. 19: 20. Job's Miseries—The Soul's Narrow Escapes—Paul's Expressive Figure—People of Religious Temperament—The Hard Cases—Difficulties in the Way of Their Salvation—Sceptical Notions—Pointed Questions—Prejudiced by Inconsistent Professors—The Bible the Test—The Difficulty of Natural Appetites—A Handkerchief Signal from a Capsized Vessel—The Obstacle of Business Perplexities—A Finger Snap on a Tombstone—A Crisis on Shipboard.

JOB had it hard. What with boils and bereavements and bankruptcy, and a fool of a wife, he wished he was dead; and I do not blame him. His flesh was gone, and his bones were dry. His teeth wasted away until nothing but the enamel seemed left. He cries out, "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth." There has been some difference of opinion about this passage. St. Jerome and Schultens, and Doctors Good and Poole and Barnes, have all tried their forceps on Job's teeth. You deny my interpretation, and say, "What did Job know about the enamel of the teeth?" He knew everything about it. Dental surgery is almost as old as the earth. The mummies of Egypt, thousands of years old, are found to-day with gold-filling in their teeth. Ovid and Horace and Solomon and Moses wrote about these important factors of the body. To other provoking complaints, Job, I think, has added an exasperating toothache, and putting his hand against the inflamed face, he says, "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth."

A very narrow escape, you say, for Job's body and soul; but there are thousands of men who make just as narrow escape for their soul. There was a time when the partition between them and ruin was no thicker than a tooth's enamel; but as Job finally escaped, so have they. Thank God! thank God!

Paul expresses the same idea by a different figure when he says that some people are

"Saved as by Fire."

A vessel out at sea is in flames. You go to the stern of the vessel. The boats have shoved off. The flames advance; you can endure the heat no longer on your face. You slide down on the side of the vessel, and hold on with your fingers, until the forked tongue of the fire begins to lick the back of your hand, and you feel that you must fall, when one of the lifeboats comes back, and the passengers say they think they have room for one more. The boat swings under you—you drop into it—you are saved. So some men are pursued by temptation until they are partially consumed, but, after all, get off—"saved as by fire." But I like the figure of Job a little better than that of Paul, because the pulpit has not worn it out; and I want to show you, if God will help, that some men make narrow escape for their souls, and are saved as "with the skin of their teeth."

It is as easy for some people to look to the Cross as for you to look to this pulpit. Mild, gentle, tractable, loving, you expect them to become Christians. You go over to the store and say, "Grandon joined the church yesterday." Your business comrades say, "That is just what might have been expected; he always was of that turn of mind." In youth, this person whom I describe was always good. He never broke things. He never laughed when it was improper to laugh. At seven, he could sit an hour in church, perfectly quiet, looking neither to the right hand nor to the left, but straight into the eyes of the minister, as though he understood the whole discussion about the eternal decrees. He never upset things nor lost them. He floated into the kingdom of God so gradually that it is uncertain when the matter was decided.

Hard Cases.

Here is another one, who started in life with an uncontrollable spirit. He kept the nursery in an uproar. His mother found him walking on the edge of the house-roof to see if he could balance himself. There was no horse that he dared not ride—no tree he could not climb. His boyhood was a long series of predicaments; his manhood was reckless; his mid-life very wayward. But now he is converted, and you go over to the store and say, "Arkwright joined the church yesterday." Your friends say, "It is not possible! You must be joking." You say: "No; I tell you the truth. He joined the Church." Then they reply, "There is hope for any of us if old Arkwright has become a Christian!" In other words, we will admit that it is more difficult for some men to accept the Gospel than for others.

I may be preaching to some who have cut loose from churches and Bibles and Sundays, and who have come in here with no intention of becoming Christians themselves, but just to see what is going on; and yet you may find yourself escaping, before you leave this house, as "with the skin of your teeth." I do not expect to waste this hour. I have seen boats go off from Cape May or Long Branch, and drop their nets, and after awhile come ashore, pulling in the nets, without having caught a single fish. It was not a good day, or they had not the right kind of a net. But we expect no such excursion to-day. The water is full of fish, the wind is in the right direction, the Gospel net is strong. Oh thou who didst help Simon and Andrew to fish, show us to-day how to cast the net on the right side of the ship!

Sceptical Barriers.

Some of you, in coming to God, will have to run against sceptical notions. It is useless for people to say sharp and cutting things to those who reject the Christian religion. I cannot say such things. By what process of temptation or trial or betrayal you have come to your present state, I know not. There are two gates to your nature: the gate of the head, and the gate of the heart. The gate of your head is locked with bolts and bars that an archangel could not break, but the gate of your heart swings easily on its hinges. If I assaulted your body with weapons, you would meet me with weapons, and it would be sword-stroke for sword-stroke, and wound for wound, and blood for blood; but if I come and knock at the door of your house, you open it, and give me the best seat in your parlor. If I should come at you now with an argument, you would answer me with an argument; if with sarcasm, you would answer me with sarcasm; blow for blow, stroke for stroke; but when I come and knock at the door of your heart, you open it and say, "Come in, my brother, and tell me all you know about Christ and heaven."

Listen to two or three questions: Are you as happy as you used to be when you believed in the truth of the Christian religion? Would you like to have your children travel on in the road in which you are now travelling? You had a relative who professed to be a Christian, and was thoroughly consistent, living and dying in the faith of the Gospel. Would you not like to live the same quiet life, and die the same peaceful death? I have a letter, sent me by one who has rejected the Christian religion. It says: "I am old enough to know that the joys and pleasures of life are evanescent, and to realize the fact that it must be comfortable in old age to believe in something relative to the future, and to have a faith in some system that proposes to save. I am free to confess that I would be happier if I could exercise the simple and beautiful faith that is possessed by many whom I know. I am not willingly out of the church or out of the faith. My state of uncertainty is one of unrest. Sometimes I doubt my immortality, and look upon the death-bed as the closing scene, after which there is nothing. What shall I do that I have not done?" Ah! scepticism is

A Dark and Doleful Land.

Let me say that this Bible is either true or false. If it be false, we are as well off as you; if it be true, then which of us is safer?

Let me also ask whether your trouble has not been that you confounded Christianity with the inconsistent character of some who profess it? You are a lawyer. In your profession there are mean and dishonest men. Is that anything against the law? You are a doctor. There are unskilled and contemptible men in your profession. Is that anything against medicine? You are a merchant. There are thieves and defrauders in your business. Is that anything against merchandise? Behold, then, the unfairness of charging upon Christianity the wickedness of its disciples. We admit some of the charges against those who profess religion. Some of the most gigantic swindles of the present day have been carried on by members of the church. There are men standing in the front rank in the churches who would not be trusted for five dollars without good collateral security. They leave their business dishonesties in the vestibule of the church as they go in and sit at the communion. Having concluded the sacrament, they get up, wipe the wine from their lips, go out, and take up their sins where they left off. To serve the devil is their regular work; to serve God, a sort of play-spell. With a Sunday sponge they expect to wipe off from their business slate all the past week's inconsistencies.

You have no more right to take such a man's as a specimen of religion than you have to take twisted irons and split timbers that lie on the beach at Coney Island as a specimen of an American ship. It is time that we draw a line between religion and the frailties of those who profess it.

Do you not feel that the Bible, take it all in is about the best book that the world has ever seen? Do you know any book that has as much in it? Do you not think, upon the whole, that its influence has been beneficent? I come to you with hands extended toward you. In one hand I hold the Bible, and in the other I have nothing. The Bible in one hand I will surrender for ever just soon as in my other hand you can put a book that is better. To-day I invite you back into the good old-fashioned religion of your fathers—to the religion which they worshipped, to the Bible they read, the promises on which they leaned, to the cross which they hung their eternal expectations. You have not been happy a day since you swung your arms away from the Bible until you swung them back to their old places.

Held by Their Appetites.

Again: There may be some of you who, in attempt after a Christian life, will have to fight against powerful passions and appetites. Perhaps it is a disposition to anger that you have to combat against; and perhaps, while in a very serious mood, you hear of something that makes you feel you must swear or die. I know a Christian who was once so exasperated that he said to a restaurant customer, "I cannot swear at you myself, for I am a member of the church; but if you will go down stairs my partner in business will swear at you." Your good resolutions heretofore have been torn to tatters by explosion of temper. Now there is harm in getting mad if you only get mad at yourself. You need to bridle and saddle those hot-breathed passions, and with them ride down injustice and wrong. There are a thousand things in the world that we ought to be mad at. There is no harm in getting red-hot if you only bring to the forge which needs hammering. A man who has power of righteous indignation is an imbecile. Be sure it is a righteous indignation, and not petulance that blurs and unravels and depletes the soul.

There is a large class of persons in mid-life who have still in them appetites that were aroused in early manhood, at a time when they prided themselves on being a "little fast," "high liver," "and easy," "hail-fellows well met." They are paying, in compound interest, for troubles they neglected twenty years ago. Some of you are trying to escape, and you will—yet very narrowly, "as with the skin of your teeth." God and your own conscience only know what the struggle is. Omnipotent God has pulled out many a soul that was deeper in mire than you are.

They Line the Beach of Heaven

—the multitude whom God has rescued from the thrall of suicidal habits. If you this day turn your back on the wrong and start anew, God will help you. Oh the weakness of human help! Men sympathize for a while, and then turn you off, you ask for their pardon, they will give it, and they will try you again; but, falling away again under the power of temptation, they cast you off forever. But God forgives seventy times seventy, seven hundred times; yea, though this be ten-thousandth time, He is more earnest, more sympathetic, more helpful, this last time than when you took your first misstep.

If, with all the influences favorable for a new life, men make so many mistakes, how much harder it is when, for instance, some appetite thrusts its iron grapple into the roots of the tongue, and pulls a man down with hands of destruction! If, under such circumstances, he break away, there will be no sport in the undertaking, no holiday enjoyment, but a struggle in which the wrestlers move from side to side, and bend and twist, and watch for an opportunity to get in a heavier stroke, until with final effort, in which the muscles are distended, the veins stand out, and the blood starts, the swarthy habit falls under the knee of the victor, escaped at last as "with the skin of his teeth."

The ship Emma, bound from Gottenburg to Fowich, was sailing on, when the man on the lookout saw something that he pronounced a vessel bottom-up. There was something on it that looked like a sea-gull, but was afterward found to be a waving handkerchief. In the small boat the capsized vessel, and found that it was a capsized vessel, and that three men had been

g their way out through the bottom of the ship. When the vessel capsized they had no means of escape. The captain took his penknife and dug through the planks until his knife broke. In an old nail was found, with which they attempted to scrape

Their Way Out of the Darkness, one working until his hand was wellnigh paralyzed, and he sank back faint and sick. After tedious work, the light broke through the bottom of the ship. A handkerchief was hoisted. It came. They were taken on board the vessel saved. Did ever men come so near a watery grave without dropping into it? How narrowly escaped!—escaped only “with the skin of their teeth.”

There are men who have been capsized of evil winds, and capsized mid-ocean, and they are a hundred miles away from any shore of help. They for years been trying to dig their way out. They have been digging away, and digging away, but they can never be delivered unless they will wait some signal of distress. However weak and feeble it may be, Christ will see it, and bear down upon the helpless craft, and take them on board; it will be known in earth and in heaven how powerfully they escaped—“escaped as with the skin of their teeth.”

There are others who in attempting to come to land must run between a great Many Business Perplexities.

A man go over to business at ten o'clock in the morning, and comes away at three o'clock in the afternoon, he has some time for religion; but how shall you find time for religious contemplation when you are driven from sunrise to sunset, and have been for five years going behind business, and are frequently dunned by creditors if you cannot pay, and when, from Monday morning until Saturday night, you are dodging what you cannot meet? You walk day by day under certainties that have kept your brain on fire for past three years. Some with less business troubles than you have gone crazy. The clerk has a noise in the back counting-room, and gone and found the chief man of the firm a raving mad; or the wife has heard the bang of a pistol in the back parlor, and gone in, stumbling over the body of her husband—a suicide. There are a score of house-to-day three hundred men pursued, seduced, trodden down, and scalped, of business perplexities, and which way to turn next they do not know. Now God will not be hard on you. He knows what obstacles are in the way of your being a Christian, and your first effort in the right direction He will crown with success. Do not let your business, with cotton bales and kegs and hogsheads and counters and stocks of unsalable goods block your way to heaven. Gather up all your energies. Loosen the girdle about your loins. Take an upward look into the face of God, and then say, “I go on one grand effort for life eternal!” and be bound away for heaven, escaping as “with the skin of your teeth.”

Business Heroes.
The last day it will be found that Hugh Latimer and John Knox and Huss and Ridley were the greatest martyrs, but Christian men who are up incorrupt from the contaminations and perplexities of Wall Street, Water Street, Pearl Street, Broad Street, State Street, and Third Street. On earth they were called brokers, or jobbers, or retailers, or importers; but in heaven, Christian heroes. No fagots were heaped upon their feet; no inquisition demanded from recantation; no soldier aimed a pike at their backs; but they had mental tortures, compared with all physical consuming is as the breath of morning.

There is in the community a large class of men who have been so cheated, so lied about, so outrageously wronged, that they have lost their faith in anything. In a world where everything seems to be a surmise, they do not see how there can be any truth. They are confounded and frenzied and skeptical. Elaborate arguments to prove to them the truth of Christianity, or the truth of anything, touch them nowhere. Hear me, all ye men. I preach to you no rounded periods, no sentimental discourse; but put my hand on your forehead, and invite you into the peace of the Gospel. There is a rock on which you may stand firm, amidst the waves dash against it harder than the sea, pitching its surf clear above Eddystone lighthouse. Do not charge upon God all these troubles of the world. As long as the world stuck to God, God stuck to the world; but the earth seceded from His government, and hence all these outrages, and all these woes. God is good. For many hundreds of years He has been coaxing the world to come back to Him; but the more He has coaxed, the more violent have men been in their resistance, and they have stepped back and stepped back until they have dropped into ruin.

Try this God, ye who have had

The Blood-Hounds After You, and ye who may have thought that God had forgotten you. Try Him, and see if He will not help. Try Him, and see if He will not pardon. Try Him, and see if He will not save. The flowers of spring have no bloom so sweet as the flowering of Christ's affections. The sun hath no warmth compared with the glow of His heart. The waters have no refreshment like the fountain that will slake the thirst of thy soul. At the moment the reindeer stands with his lip and nostril thrust in the cool mountain torrent the hunter may be coming through the thicket. Without crackling a stick under his foot, he comes close by the stag, aims his gun, draws the trigger, and the poor thing rears in its death-agony and falls backward, its antlers crashing on the rocks; but the panting hart that drinks from the water-brooks of God's promise shall never be fatally wounded, and shall never die.

This world is a poor portion for your soul, oh business man! An Eastern king had graven on his tomb two fingers, represented as sounding upon each other with a snap, and under them the motto, “All is not worth that.” Apicius Caelius hanged himself because his steward informed him that he had only eighty thousand pounds sterling left. All of this world's riches make but a small inheritance for a soul. Robespierre attempted to win the applause of the world; but when he was dying, a woman came rushing through the crowd, crying to him, “Murderer of my kindred, descend to hell, covered with the curses of every mother in France!” Many who have expected the plaudits of the world have died under its Anathema Maranatha.

Oh, find your peace in God. Make one strong pull for heaven. No half-way work will do it. There sometimes comes a time on shipboard when everything must be Sacrificed to Save the Passengers.

The cargo is nothing, the rigging nothing. The captain puts the trumpet to his lip and shouts, “Cut away the mast!” Some of you have been tossed and driven, and you have, in your effort to keep the world, wellnigh lost your soul. Until you have decided this matter, let everything else go. Overboard with all those other anxieties and burdens! You will have to drop the sails of your pride, and cut away the mast. With one earnest cry for help, put your cause into the hand of Him who helped Paul out of the breakers of Melita, and who, above the shrill blast of the wrathiest tempest that ever blackened the sky or shook the ocean, can hear the faintest imploration for mercy.

I shall go home to-day feeling that some of you, who have considered your case as hopeless, will take heart again, and that, with a blood-red earnestness, such as you have never experienced before, you will start for the good land of the Gospel—at last to look back, saying, “What a great risk I ran! Almost lost, but saved! Just got through, and no more! Escaped by the skin of my teeth.”

A CREED FOR ALL DENOMINATIONS.

THE proposal which Dr. Talmage made in a recent sermon, to formulate a purely Scriptural creed on which all Christian denominations could agree, and base co-operative efforts for the evangelization of the world, has caused considerable discussion in the religious and secular press. A very incisive article on the subject has appeared in the Brooklyn Eagle, from which the following is an extract:

“In suggesting the general outlines of a creed which all denominations could embrace, the primary object of the pastor of the Tabernacle is to put aside every obstacle to the cordial fraternization of Christian sects. He regards most of these obstacles as belonging under the head of non-essentials. It is in his opinion of more consequence that mankind should be imbued with the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount than that any of the claims of purely dogmatic theology should survive. The fellowship of men in a common worship is chiefly retarded by ideas and institutions which are the outgrowth of Christianity, and not expressly enjoined by the language of Holy Writ. Each sect is inclosed within its own wall of dogma. Each has built about it a system of doctrines that had no existence among primitive Christians. Each worships within these self-appointed limits. Each feels as if it had some peculiar merit, as if it possessed some advantage not possessed by the others. What the Doctor aims at is a general relaxation of this spirit of exclusiveness, and a universal recognition of the fact that the salvation of souls is the duty of the hour, not the salvation of creeds.

“He encounters the full force of the argument against his plan in Archbp. Ireland's contention that those who are most earnest in eliminating dogmas from the Christian religion contradict themselves. The distinguished prelate maintains that the whole scheme of Christianity is necessarily based on dogma. He declares that the Doctor himself proclaims a dogma when he asserts that it is not obligatory to believe in the ‘eternal generation of the Son.’ This, in his opinion, is a dogma as to the humanity of Christ that has the practical effect of ending the Christian religion. We cannot rationally interpret the sayings of Christ without formulating dogmas, and conspicuously is this true in respect of His relations to the Father and the Holy Spirit. To say, as the Doctor does, that it is not necessary to believe in eternal punishment, is also an instance of dogmatic statement, and the Archbishop wonders, if such be the truth, what Christ could have meant by threatening punishment for unbelief. And so the argument moves round in a circle, finally bringing up at the point from which it started: the Doctor holding that dogmas are unimportant in the work of saving souls, and the Archbishop maintaining that the Doctor dogmatizes when he says so.

“Nevertheless, is there not an evident tendency on the part of Christian denominations to establish a more familiar intercourse than that which they have hitherto observed, and is not the Doctor's proposal an additional symptom of it? He is progressive and aggressive, and in both respects a representative man. He would rally the whole army of Christ under one standard if he could. The spirit of the age is a spirit of combination and co-operation. It has attained a very marked development in the departments of commerce and industry. Its throbbings are plainly felt in the religious world. If there is profit and strength in the union of material force, why should there not be profit and strength in the union of moral forces? When sectarians reach the point where they can agree to disagree, touching merely denominational distinctions, they will have triumphed over the greatest obstacle to the organization of that mighty Christian Trust which Dr. Talmage contemplates. They have not reached that point yet, and it is impossible to say when they will, but the influences tending to expedite their progress are in constant and powerful operation. Before those influences all minor and subordinate considerations are bound ultimately to give way.”

A MODERN ISAAC.

A LITTLE boy's heroism was tested not long ago through a mistake. The editor of a contemporary relates that a gentleman in a New England town proposed to drive with his wife to the beautiful cemetery beside the river, beyond the town. Calling to his son, a bright little boy some four years old, he told him to get ready to accompany them. The child's countenance fell, and the father said, “Don't you want to go, Willie?” The little lip quivered, but the child answered, trustfully, “Yes, papa, if you wish.” The child was strangely silent during the drive, and when the carriage drove under the wide archway he clung to his mother's side and looked up in her face with pathetic wistfulness. The party alighted and walked among the graves and along the tree-shadowed avenues, looking at the inscriptions on the last resting-place of the dwellers in the beautiful city of the dead. After an hour so spent, they returned to the carriage and the father lifted his little son to his seat. The child looked surprised, and drew a breath of relief and asked, “Why, am I going back with you?” “Of course you are; why not?” “I thought when they took little boys to the cemetery they left them there,” said the child. Many a man does not show the heroism in the face of death that the child evinced in what to him had evidently been a summons to leave the world. He who can look up to his Heavenly Father when the call comes, and say from his heart, “Thy will be done,” has received the kingdom of heaven as a little child, (Luke 18:17.)

CENTRAL UNION MISSION OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

Its Origin, Work, Success and Hopes.

No American citizen need be ashamed to point out Washington as the capital of the nation. It is a beautiful city, and grows more beautiful every year. No European capital can compare with it in all its features. A city to be proud of, with its magnificent public buildings and elegant private residences, with its superb system of broad avenues and cleanly streets, many of them paved and lined with every species of foliage-covered trees, with its grassy parks adorned with statuary, and monuments commemorative of all that is stimulative to patriotism; with its colleges and schools; with its churches, their spires rising high in many directions; with a faithful ministry, second in ability and devotion to none other; with a pure gospel not only preached from the various pulpits, but exemplified in thousands of lives, and kept bright and burning at the family altar of hundreds of Christian homes. Yet Washington, with so much that is good and lovely and holy, is nevertheless a place which, from its peculiar position as the centre of political life, abounds in sin, and temptations to sin.

The city with a population of 200,000 possesses church accommodations for only 60,000, while the average attendance is fixed at but 40,000. Flourishing like Upas-trees are 1,500 places where intoxicating liquor is sold; pool and billiard rooms are on every hand; gambling resorts abound, and one of the most notorious, a superbly decorated edifice, ruins its votaries by hundreds. Beside these, are numerous club-rooms, where the young man away from home, finds wine and cards to allure him, many cheap theatres pandering to the lowest human propensities, and over three hundred houses of ill-fame. What terrible and fatal work all these agencies are doing is well known. The scandals reported by the daily press, the Police Court records, which show 20,000 arrests annually, the jail records, registering the passage through the prison of 5,000 prisoners every year—twenty men at one time confined there on the charge of murder—and the registers of male and female workhouses, hospitals, and almshouses, all tell the heart-rending story. These are the witnesses to the fatal effects of Washington's opportunities and temptations to sin. The victims are there now; many have gone to a dishonored grave; many more are coming who are now graduating in the institutions of vice. And yet with such crying need for Christian help no aggressive mission work was undertaken in the city until about six years ago.

The Origin of the Mission.

To-day Washington claims to have in the Central Union Mission one of the most successful mission enterprises in the country, and its claim is conceded by numbers of zealous Christian laborers of other sections who have gone to Washington to study its principle and methods. As the mission is not a plan but a development, and as it is, as the Secretary of the Christian Workers' Convention said, "a model for other cities," THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this week gives a description of it, with pictures on the first page of the exterior and interior of its chief hall, and of the gospel wagon, which is now so important a feature in the work.

Like many other valuable and successful enterprises, its beginning was small, and it was with the lowest of the social strata. Five years ago a few men resolved to make an effort to reach with gospel influence the criminal classes—the vagrants, tramps, gamblers, and drunkards. They hired a small room on Pennsylvania Avenue, and held meetings. Their success was greater than their hope; ninety persons professed conversion the first nine months. The little room was outgrown, and a large building was rented.

The Cardinal Idea

of the workers was to go out after the people. Men were stationed at the door to give out invitations. The parks, hotels, and other places of resort were visited with invitation leaflets. Emboldened by success, the workers stood on the streets and sang gospel hymns, read the Scriptures, exhorted, prayed, and invited the people to the mission. Of course they came. The people like a live gospel. They admire pluck and activity. The abandonment of stiff conventionality pleased the multitude, and they followed the workers.

This Christian activity made itself felt throughout the city. The work has been steadily expanding for five years. Converts became evangelists, and cottage-meetings began to thrive. Then cottage-meetings grew into tents, and tents finally became permanent branches. Seven such branches are now running in different parts of the city, some of them almost as flourishing as the central hall. Every section of the city has a branch.

Following out the idea of going after the people,

Song Services

were frequently held in front of the hall before the indoor services began. Halls are good, but the people must be brought in. To make the music go farther, a cornet was employed in addition to the organ. Several hundred people will frequently gather to this song service. After the song service the people are invited inside. As the workers became a little used to it, there seemed nothing strange about such methods. People soon felt, as fruit was gathered in, that this was the right way to work. Even the timid and conservative yielded approval when they saw the success.

The Organization

of this great enterprise is very simple. A Board of ten directors has the oversight. They are men selected for their suitability for the work and their interest in it, but in fact they are also representatives of the leading denominations of the city. Without making any special effort about it, the consecrated Christians in the churches of all denominations were drawn to the work by the opportunity it offered for activity in genuine gospel labor. It requires no tact to make the workers harmonious, for all had the grand basis of love for souls and belief in the efficacy of the Gospel. A little honesty was all that was needed.

The mission aims directly at conversion. It is not meddling with creeds, but with salvation. It works to save men. The churches have perfect confidence in it and give it united support. All the converts are urged to unite with the churches of their choice. No argument is ever used to persuade them away from the church which, by birth, education, or taste, they prefer. All denominations have received accessions through this work.

How the Services are Conducted.

About forty meetings a week are held in different parts of the city. They are very simple. After the song service in front of the hall, the exercises inside begin. A short Scripture lesson is read and explained by the leader. Prayer is offered and then follow the testimonies of the saved, and short exhortations, interspersed by prayer and song. The leader asks the unsaved, who are anxious, either to raise the hand, to stand up, or to come forward to the front bench, according to circumstances. There is seldom a meeting without some response.

To provide for so many meetings a week is no small undertaking. Some one person is made responsible for each meeting. He must either lead it, or provide a leader. It is his meeting and he knows he must look after it. At the main hall each meeting is in charge of a member of the Board. Some member of the Board has a general supervision over each branch, but each meeting at the branches has some person in immediate charge.

The executive committee, consisting of 150 to 200 members, is selected out of the churches. Those who become actively identified with the work are elected members. A part of these members are collectors. It is their business to collect the individual monthly pledges which have been made by members of their respective churches, by which the mission is supported. Over $4,000 were collected and expended last year.

Unpaid Workers.

A feature of the work is its volunteer character. A missionary in charge of the main hall night and day, a lady visiting-missionary, and a missionary among the colored people, each receives a small compensation; but all the other workers serve without pay. In almost every branch some one person becomes superintendent, and attends every meeting without thought of compensation. This office of superintendent is an illustration of the natural development of the work. The superintendents are persons who have shown aptness for looking after details, seeing that no meeting is neglected, sometimes helping to preserve order, always making a record of the attendance and conversions. They are invaluable, and yet in most cases they occupy their places by natural selection rather than by election.

The Converts.

Over 2,000 people have professed conversion in five years. These converts range all the way from the tramp to the man of wealth. The list includes single men who were living irresponsible, worthless lives; heads of families, in some cases entire families; young men and young women out of the congregations of the churches, prominent business men, politicians, women of ill-repute—in fact, representatives of all classes of society. Are all the converts faithful? Many of them are now active workers in leading churches. Some of them are officers in the churches. Many of them are tried workers who sustain branches. The convert of the mission are the most active and aggressive Christian workers in the city. Born in an atmosphere of activity, they become zealous and efficient helpers. Of course, not all are faithful. Some are long in other cities, and lost sight of. Some fall into sin in the face of those who helped to rescue them. Some have only the form of godliness without the power. But after making a large allowance for failures, there remains an army of saved men and women who have become a blessing to themselves, to the community, and to the church.

The statistics for the last year disclose the magnitude of the work. Number of services held, 2,139; number in attendance, 194,741; number of seekers, 3,849; number of professed conversions, 536; number of personal visits made, 7,848; number of tracts distributed, 3,385; number of Bulletins distributed, 174,000; expense of the work, $4,120.25. This is the record for last year.

The mission publishes a weekly paper, the Bulletin, which has a circulation of about 4,000. It devoted almost exclusively to furnishing news of the work, and is regarded as an important aid to it.

The Gospel Wagon

is the most unique and successful agency devised for the Mission. Like other features it is an outgrowth of experience. A few zealous workers ventured into the streets for brief services, and to invite the people to come into the Mission. These services, timidly begun, grew to large proportions. Men commenced to speak of having been first awakened at the street-meetings. So numerous did these become that they attracted attention and brought the out-door meetings into prominence. Finally an omnibus was hired to transport the workers, carry the organ, and constitute a platform for the speakers. The first summer's experience demonstrated the utility of this agency. In one section alone about a hundred people were known to have been brought to Christ through the wagon service. The next year the wagon, a picture of which appears on the first page, was built for the purpose costing nearly $800. The body is 20 feet long and 7 feet wide. The seats run lengthwise of the wagon and are reversible, so that the occupants may always face the audience at the sides. A section of the body at the middle of the wagon opens outward, and when open constitutes a platform 10 feet by 4 feet. From this the speaking is done. Three services are held on Sabbath afternoons, the audiences varying in size from 400 to 2,000. One of the services is always held at Market Space, corner of Seventh Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. Here an immense audience gathers every Sabbath evening at 6 o'clock, and listens attentively about an hour and a half to the songs, sermons, and testimonies. The audience is composed, in part, of the throngs always passing to and fro on the avenue, and, in part, of people who come from other sections of the city to attend the service. It is probably the most remarkable audience which is assembled anywhere in the city. The tramp and the Senator, the house-breaker and the judge, stand side by side, equally interested in the simple, plain Gospel service. The wagon goes to conspicuous places, where the throngs pass, and it goes to remote byways, where the poor and the vicious huddle together. It is a marvellous agent of good, known to every citizen, and loved by thousands who have received a new inspiration from its meetings. The most prominent pastors of the city have addressed vast audiences from its platform, and the church without exception approve of this means of disseminating the Gospel.

The Characteristic Feature of the mission work is the conviction that the people must be sought—there must not be any sitting down, waiting for them to come, but going forth "into the highways and hedges, and compelling them to come in." (Luke 14:23.) The street houses are visited every Sunday; women visit hospitals, others go to the homes, others carry invitation cards to the cheap lodging houses early in the evening, where they hold a song and prayer service, and invite the inmates to the evening meetings. At the balcony song service held be-the indoor meeting begins, frequently hundreds of people stop and listen. Scores are brought into the meetings in this way.

The Mission Building

It is of late become entirely inadequate for the work. Hundreds are turned away from the hall every week, unable to gain admission. A movement is on foot to purchase a property on Pennsylvania Avenue, and erect a suitable building. The cost of the land on which to erect it will probably be from $50,000 to $75,000. But the mission is unwilling to leave the avenue. Location is everything for such a work as this. A building committee of responsible and well-known business-men has been organized, and the incipient stages of the movement have been passed. The greatness of the undertaking does not stagger the faith of those engaged in the enterprise, because they believe the blessing of the Lord and the hearts of the people with them. They do not propose to erect an elegant or extravagant building, but one adapted in its design to the purposes of the mission.

If further information about the work is desired, address the Board of Directors, Central Union Mission, 930 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C. Pray for the work! The responsibility of those engaged in it is immense. They ask for your prayers. God has so blessed it that every step to extend it should be taken under His direct guidance.

THE LABOR DEMONSTRATION IN NEW YORK.

(See Illustration on page 301.)

THE accompanying illustration of the great meeting in New York on Thursday last, reproduced from sketch by our special artist, will interest our readers. Early in the evening the labor unions began mustering in the streets east and west of Broadway near Twenty-fifth Street. It showed a great deal of courage and enthusiasm on the part of the men on hand, for the rain which had been threatening all day began about 7 o'clock to descend in baking torrent. Nevertheless, the men held their ground, though probably twice as many would have been in the procession had the weather been fine. It was, fully five thousand men were in line at 8 o'clock when the procession entered Union Square, and took up its place before the platform erected in front of the cottage (as seen in the illustration). Foreigners who looked on the scene must have been impressed with the liberty that is enjoyed under the Stars and Stripes. Though the Government shows how to deal with Anarchists when they proceed from words to acts, as was proved in the case of the cowardly miscreants who threw dynamite in Chicago, and were executed for it in November, yet the largest liberty of speech is permitted. The red flags of the Anarchists were conspicuous in the procession, and some of the transparencies which the men carried bore ominous mottoes. Among them, beside those referring to the eight-hour principle, were: "We do not beg; we demand," "All we produce must be ours," "Toilers, arise! social revolution is approaching." There was considerable plain speaking, too, from the platform, especially from the one where German was spoken. But the crowd was orderly and good-natured in spite of the rain. No military, no extra police were needed, and the thousands of toilers departed early, and returned to their homes in peace. In Chicago, where the procession was four miles long, in St. Louis and other large cities, the same order was maintained, and the dreaded May-pasts passed peacefully.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.

Bride Made a Startling Confession After Marriage at Saratoga, N. Y., a few days ago. A press dispatch from that town says that at a wedding in the house of a well-known citizen a wedding took place which has but small promise of future happiness. There was plenty of merriment and gaiety, and the wedding ceremony went on to its conclusion without any sign of unpleasantness. But no sooner had the momentous words been spoken which united two lives, than the bride became painfully agitated, burst into tears, and cried out that she "had married the wrong man." Being pressed to explain, she said that she ought to have married the young man who had supported the bridegroom on the occasion. It was known by her friends that he had been a suitor for her hand, but in a fit of pique she had accepted his rival, and that he had not the courage to back out. When it was too late to remedy it she realized what she had done, and was so overpowered by her sense of the guilt and wickedness of her act that she could not restrain the tell-tale words. Eventually she was calmed, and set out on the wedding-tour with her husband. A similar confession has been made by many people who have been under conviction of sin, and strongly inclined to accept Christ, but have gone back to the world. Too often the mistake has not been fully realized until the approach of death has revealed to the wrong-doer all the awful consequences of rejecting Christ and accepting the offer of the world, when there is neither time nor power to remedy the mistake. (II Pet. 2:20.)

The Granting of a Divorce Without Evidence is mentioned by an Indiana journal among the reminiscences of a certain judge. The applicant for relief was the wife of a man of temperate habits. As soon as the counsel had stated the case and was about to call witnesses, the judge interrupted him by inquiring if the respondent was the man of that name who had served in Company K of a certain Indiana regiment during the war. It was found that the man was the same. "You need go no further," said the judge, "the divorce is granted;" and judgment to that effect was accordingly entered. After court adjourned, the judge was reminded that no evidence had been given, and was asked why he had so summarily dealt with the case. "Why," said his Honor, "I know that fellow; he was in my company in the war, and I would never compel any woman to live with him who asked me for relief. There was no need of witnesses. I know him better than any witness does that could be brought here." What defence the respondent intended to make was not disclosed; but whatever it might have been, it would evidently not have availed with the judge's personal knowledge against him. In the last judgment all defence will be similarly futile, for He that will judge the world, "needeth not that any should testify of man, for He knew what was in man." (John 2:24, 25.)

The Strange Discovery of a Missing Will is reported in the Chicago Herald of April 22. It appears that a well-known citizen, who died in 1867, was supposed to have left no will. It occasioned considerable surprise, as he was worth nearly a million dollars, and would not have been satisfied with the distribution of his estate which the law prescribes for persons dying intestate. As the careful search that was made for the will failed to discover it, an administrator was appointed, who disposed of the estate according to law. The person who was most concerned in the search was the favorite niece of the deceased, who had often been told by her uncle that he had remembered her in his will. She was grievously disappointed by his apparent failure to keep his promise, and the more so as, since his death financial reverses have plunged her in extreme poverty. A short time ago a dilapidated sofa, which had once belonged to the deceased millionaire, was sent to the upholsterer to be repaired. In stripping the covering from it a yellow paper was found between the seat and the back, which proved to be the missing will. It had evidently been laid on the seat temporarily and had fallen accidentally into the hiding-place and remained there for more than twenty years. The niece now finds that all the hard thoughts she has had about her uncle since his death were unjust, and that he faithfully fulfilled his promise of providing for her in his will. The time is coming when Christians who now sometimes think God has not fulfilled His promises to them will discover that there has been no failure with Him, and that the temporary withholding of fulfilment has been a blessing in itself. (Hab. 2:3.)

How Mr. H. M. Stanley Saved a Man's Life after condemning him to death was described a few days ago in a lecture delivered in New York by an intimate friend of the illustrious explorer. He said that Stanley on one occasion being in urgent need of more porters than were at liberty in Zanzibar, consented to hire some men who were lying in the city prison. He did so on the solicitation of a Zanzibari chief, whom he held responsible for their good behavior. When they were far on their journey, and among hostile tribes, one of the men was caught selling rifles and ammunition to the enemy. Stanley determined to make an example of the man as a warning to the others, and ordered him to be put to death the following morning at daybreak. But the deed, necessary as it appeared to be, lay heavily on his mind, and he lay awake all night thinking if there was no way of saving the doomed man. Finally, before dawn, he sent for the sheikh who was responsible for him. When the sheikh came, Stanley showed him that the safety of the whole company would be imperilled if arms were treacherously sold by the porters; but still he could not bear the thought of killing the offender. The sheikh said he should be glad if Stanley could think of some way of sparing him. Stanley said there was but one way: the sheikh must plead publicly for his life, and all his people must plead, and pledge themselves afresh to faithfulness, and undertake for the offender also. The next morning the whole company assembled at the place of execution, and the criminal was brought in, bound, with the rope around his neck. Stanley raised his hand to give the fatal signal, when the sheikh ran forward, and kneeling at Stanley's feet, begged for his life. Immediately the other porters came and joined in the plea, and the culprit wept and besought mercy. Stanley hesitated a moment, and then said: "Good; for your sakes I give his life." There was a shout of joy through the camp, and during the whole journey there was no more treachery. The semi-savages teach a lesson to Christians. If mercy to the offender secured their faithful service, what ought our lives to be, who have been saved from eternal death by the sacrifice of Christ! (Gal. 3:1.)

A Picture Which Cost a Life is in the Exhibition of the Society of American Artists which was opened in New York last week. It is called Surf and Fog, and the critics pronounce it a masterpiece. An eminent authority says that there is no other such accurate portrayal of the waves in existence. "Two breakers are curling in the middle distance; the foreground is a flat sweep of water and foam, the wreck of a past wave swirling away again; and over all spreads the mantle of fog, making of the sun a pale, red-bordered ball. The movement and quality of the water, the palpitating dampness of the air, the diffused light and single gleam of direct, silvery sunshine, and the exquisite, opalescent color, are rendered as never before." But the frame of the picture is covered with crape. To produce that masterpiece the artist set up his easel by the seashore, and the damp air, and the cutting breath of the sea killed him. He died before the public exhibition of his picture drew forth the encomiums which are being lavished upon it. Probably he did not realize, until too late, at what a fearful cost his triumph would be achieved, or he might not have been willing to give it. The fame which does not reach his ears is but poor compensation for the life he sacrificed to win it. Infinitely higher is the reward promised to missionaries and Christian workers, who "count not their lives dear" unto them if they win souls to Christ. (Acts 20:24.) They follow in His steps "who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross." (Heb. 12:2.)

The Strange Romance of an Umbrella is Reported from Saratoga, N. Y. A wealthy gentleman of that town some time ago purchased an umbrella. After carrying it for a week or two he was one day detained in a storm for some time. He congratulated himself on having his new umbrella with him. Looking up into it to see how it stood the heavy downpour, his eye caught a name and an address which he had not noticed before. It was the name of a lady in Sheffield, England, who had been employed in the manufacture of the umbrella. In a joking mood he wrote to the lady, congratulating her on her workmanship, and she sent a modest letter of thanks. To this the gentleman replied, expressing the hope that if the lady ever visited America she would call upon him. Recently she did come to this country, but did not go to Saratoga. She was visiting some friends in the Adirondacks, where the purchaser of the umbrella happened to meet her, and on being introduced to her he recognized the name as that of his correspondent. The acquaintance thus formed developed so rapidly that on April 22 they were married, and the umbrella she had assisted in making in England protected her and her husband from the rain as they walked from the church to their carriage. It may be hoped that the incident which led to their acquaintance may be typical of their married life, and as the husband first knew of his wife through being sheltered in a storm by her handiwork, so, now that he has won her love, he may find in her affection a refuge and a shelter in the storms of life. There are many Christians whose daily communion with God has been their joy and delight for many years and in all circumstances, who were first led to know Him as their Father when, in some storm of trouble, and needing help, they looked upward. (Psa. 18:6, 17.)

THE REVELATION OF THE TIMES.*

A Reply Misunderstood—Applied to Circumstances then Existing—No Discouragement of Study Intended—Concealment of Clues Until the Last Times—Light Given to the Generation Concerned—The Diligent Student Alone Enlightened—The Double Fulfilment—The Predicted Interest in Israel's Welfare.

"WHEN they therefore were come together, they asked of Him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And He said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power." (Acts 1: 6, 7.)

This answer certainly could not have been intended, as many have imagined, to discourage all investigation into the period when Jehovah will accomplish those glorious promises of prosperity to His Church and happiness to the world, upon which, in every age, He has caused His people to hope.

For whilst that particular knowledge which the disciples sought might have been altogether unsuitable to their peculiar circumstances, it by no means followed that it would be unsuitable to the circumstances of the Church, in some future and more developed age; or that some data, by which it may be known when would not be vouchsafed unto it. And if such data be afforded, it must be obvious that, so far from its being sinful and presumptuous to endeavor to investigate them, it is the bounden duty, of those whom God has set as "watchmen upon her walls," and whom He has endowed with "understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do;" that they may from time to time declare to the Church her peculiar position. And if, as is now the case with many, they have ground for concluding that the time of her Lord's advent is at hand, to sound the alarm, that that day may not overtake her members "as a thief," but may find them prepared to be caught up to meet Him.

The Period is at Hand

That the "times and seasons" should be involved in even considerable obscurity, upon reflection can excite no surprise. Many wise and holy ends are plainly answered by it. The very difficulty of ascertaining them, and the degree of labor it has required to arrive at certainty, with respect to has tended to keep up a most important interest in the events to be accomplished. It has, especially, tended to keep the Church in that waiting, hoping, expectant posture which the Scripture enjoins.

The Prophetic Periods,

God therefore wisely concealed "the times and seasons," under dates which could not be immediately understood, and symbols which could not at once be apprehended; and He so concealed them that He might reserve to Himself the power of communicating the light which is essential to understand them, in such proportions and at such particular times as the circumstances of the Church and the world might render necessary.

Yet sometimes good people who should be deeply interested in the national restoration of Israel to their own land, in the coming of the Messiah, and the blessings consequent upon it, are found treating with a feeling bordering on scorn the labors of those devoted men who have

"Searched Diligently"

into the period of their accomplishment, and are frowning upon all investigations of the subject. Yet, where is the science whose principles have been immediately apprehended? Where is the science upon which, in the first instance, laborious investigation has not been bestowed apparently in vain? And yet the principles of that science have at length been discovered, and something like certainty and consistency arrived at, which could never have been the case had the failures of some men to ascertain them been deemed a sufficient reason why no further investigation of them should have taken place.

An acquaintance with the Prophetic periods does not belong to that kind of knowledge which is intended to be immediately understood, or which has an immediate bearing upon the every-day actions and experience of the Christian life, as is the case with a large portion of Scripture truth; it forms part of that wisdom which may be properly termed "hidden," and which must be consequently sought for as for silver, and searched for as for hid treasure. Holiness of heart is to understand them. This is plain: "None of the wicked shall understand." (Dan. 12: 10.) So that,

An Essential Qualification

* An extract from Israel's Return, published in 1840.

however acute may be the natural understanding of the ungodly, and however versed in human learning, they will be "in darkness," as to the prophetic periods, and "that day will overtake them as a thief." Heavenly illumination, in addition to holiness of heart, is another essential requisition in understanding the symbolical dates of Scripture. This is plain, not only from the declaration of the angel, "The wise shall understand," but from the declaration of the apostle, "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six." (Rev. 13: 18.) And sure I am, that notwithstanding not a few have failed to apprehend the prophetic dates, yet a period will come when, to some individual or individuals "beloved of God," the wisdom which is essential to find them out will be communicated, that, like Daniel, they may "understand by books" that the time of the captivity of Israel is about to close, and may devoutly prepare the Christian Church for the eventful era, and when "the Redeemer shall come to Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob," many, like Simeon and Anna in the temple, will be "waiting for the consolation of Israel;" for "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets." (Amos 3: 7.)

With regard to the period of Israel's return,

The Dates in Daniel,

of 2,300, 1,260, 1,290, and 1,335 days, have been the ground upon which many, if not most, of these calculations have rested, these days having been usually regarded as symbolical of years; and to this mode of counting them there can, I think, be no solid objection, provided it be not intended to confine them to such a signification, or to exclude their literal accomplishment in days at some subsequent period; since I cannot but consider that the predictions connected with them are yet to be accomplished in the exact amount of days mentioned in them; and, also, that every prophetic date will, at some future time, be precisely verified; in which case "days" will be found to be days, "weeks" weeks, "months" months, and "years" years.

But as, in their literal signification, the prophetic dates would occupy in their longest course but a very limited space of time indeed, it is plain that, without a mystical or symbolical interpretation of them, they could be of no real guide or service to the Church in

The Intermediate Period;

and that under such circumstances she would be wholly in the dark, and must so continue, as to how far the night of her captivity is advanced, and how near the day of her redemption is at hand. And to suppose that whilst "the day and the hour" may be concealed to excite to continual watchfulness, yet that Jehovah would leave His people altogether in the dark, upon a point of such immense importance to them, is to suppose that He would do that which does not at all accord with the analogy of His earlier procedure towards them. For surely He who revealed the duration of Israel's captivity in Egypt, and that of their subsequent captivity in Babylon, would also reveal the duration of that long and great captivity under which they are now suffering; and yet, unless we interpret "days" as years, I am not aware that there is any such revelation to be found. But that we may so interpret them, we seem to have the authority of God Himself: "And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years—until your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness. After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years." (Num. 14: 33, 34.) To Ezekiel it was said, in reference to a period of forty days: "I have appointed thee each day for a year" (ch. 4: 4-6). In addition to the above authority for considering "days" to be symbolical of years, the "seventy weeks" (Dan. 9: 24), have, by many able and learned commentators, been regarded as weeks of years; so that from the edict given in the reign of Artaxerxes, King of Persia, to the death of Christ, when Messiah, the Prince, was cut off, sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, were accomplished.

If, then, we are justified in counting "days" for years we shall be able to form at least of the duration of Israel's present captivity. For when "another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto thousand and three hundred days; then shall sanctuary be cleansed." (Dan. 8: 13, 14.) Now the epoch at which these 2,300 years, as we exclude them to be, had their commencement, Habershon has supposed, either B. C. 457, w Artaxerxes' commission was given to Ezra, or B. C. 445, when it was given to Nehemiah then the 2, years will end either in 1844 or in 1856, as the year when "the cleansing of the sanctuary" will begin.

A Probable Calculation

Without presuming to assert that the end of period of 2,300 years above stated will be that Israel's return to Palestine, or the termination of their captivity, it is deserving of very attentive consideration in connection with the fact that the people, which for so many ages have been "scattered and peeled, meted out and trodden down, while land rivers have spoiled," are, together with the country, exciting peculiar interest; and, after centuries of cruelty and injustice, are "lifting up their heads," in joyful anticipation of their speedy deliverance from captivity, and return again to Zion.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Weak Yet Strong.*

He stood in the shadow of worlds unseen,
And his brow and cheek were pale
With the power of temptation that raged within;
'Gainst the high resolve broke the waves of sin,
With a fury that must prevail.

He had torn his heart with an iron will,
As a vulture his prey might tear;
He had said to the tumult of evil, "Be still;"
But the rising billows had mocked him, till
He wrestled with grim despair.

He had cast the witching demon aside,
And trampled with scorn its power;
Then slept in the strength of his manhood's pride,
And awakened, to hear his foes deride,
Fast bound in the tempter's bower.

He stood to-night with his strength o'erpast,
A bruised and helpless thing.
The "body of death" to his soul bound fast:
One star of hope risen, singly and last,
Through the blackness o'ershadowing.

And the torrent of prayer in his heart arose
And broke on his lips with a moan;
And he saw, where the slow-curdling mists unclosed,
A fountain smitten, whence healing flowing flows
And the power of the tempter was gone.

Suffering.

Suffering, suffering!
Wilt thou repine?
'Tis the hammer that breaks thee,
The chisel that shapes thee
Into the image divine.
Wouldst thou retain the excrescence?
Wouldst thou forego the pure essence
Of divinity mingling with thine
Own spirit, to sweeten, refine?
Nay, though ye writhe in an anguish unspoken,
Let the misshapen rock be broken and broken.
Suffering one, know ye not by this token,
Ye shall rise to a heritage holy and grand,
Where none but the perfected ever shall stand,
Souls shaped to the image of God by His hand?

Suffering, suffering!
How can ye know
What beauty and brightness,
What marvellous whiteness,
The finished work will show?
Into what soul-elevation,
Into what sacred elation
Ye may expand and expand,
Upborne by His fashioning hand:
Held nearer and nearer to the heart of His love,
While dearer and dearer His sympathies prove,
And, for joy in the sweet ministration,
For love of divine consolation,
For hope in His fair, new creation,
Ye pray not that pain be diminished,

* From Ziona, the Bride of the King, and Miscellaneous Poems. By Harriet Warner Re Qua. Our readers who seen the earlier volume from the pen of this gifted lady, and Stones for the Temple, will be glad to learn that she has deduced this new volume. All the sweetness and beauty of former volume appear again here, with a still deeper spirit and tenderness. Mrs. Re Qua has reached in her experience the hardships and trials of missionary life, a higher level, not of literary merit but of finer and clearer perception of the connection between the life of the Christian on earth and hidden life beyond the veil. We are informed that the profit of the sale of this work will all be devoted to the support of mission which Mrs. Re Qua and her husband are carrying among the Indians. It is a volume of 226 pages, beautifully bound, and may be had, by sending $1.25 to Mrs. H. W. Re Qua, McAlester, Ind.

ut only that His work be finished; while the 'finer shall smile on the power of His grace, the heart of the creature reflecting His face, and the fire of the furnace shall change for the flood of glory and praise in the presence of God.

"These Light Afflictions."

These light afflictions," but long ago They seemed so heavy, and oppressed with pain, like an overfreighted barque, that, settling slow, Engulfs the brine and seeks no shore again; My soul sank; and the waters cold and dim, praised their slimy arms to take me in.

There was one refuge, and I lifted up My hand in the moist darkness, till I gained the golden cord love infinite did drop Through the unlighted distance, and, enchained by its bright circlet, yet divinely free, I rose and followed where He called for me.

Now are they "light afflictions," for His hand Beneath the life-consuming load He laid; I only feel the touch divine, and stand Even in the tempest nevermore afraid: The King's crown a burden? Does the gem dishonor Him that decks His diadem?

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for May 18, Luke 9:28-36; Golden Luke 9:35.

's Avowal of Faith—What it Indicated—Fitness Receive a Revelation—Salvation Purchased for n by Suffering—The Way of the Cross Trying to man Nature—A Problem Propounded—The King- p of Christ Declared—The Prayer on the Mountain the glory of God Reflected—The Two Represent- res of Law and Prophecy—The Subject of the Con- nance—Peter's Suggestion—Selfish Forgetfulness of ost World—Why the Disciples were Powerless to al the Epileptic.

AYER was the standing occupation of the , to which He returned habitually when free other occupations. It is our wondrous priv- to, to live in an atmosphere of prayer, to re "as seeing Him who is invisible." (Heb. 11:27) It came to pass as He was alone, praying (i. e., nly one of the company thus occupied), His les were with Him, and He asked them, say-Whom say the people that I am? They, an- ang, said, John the Baptist; but some say, Elias; others say, that one of the old prophets is risen He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter, answering, said, The Christ of God," anointed. There was at least one heart g the disciples who had seen His wondrous s, which understood Him in a measure; and, as Peter's faith was, and followed as it was ich inconsistency, it was nevertheless dear to and He said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar- for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto but my Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 16:17) But this knowledge the disciples must secret until the Son of man should be risen the dead. And now, for the first time, now one of His own followers had recognized in the Lord's Anointed, He spake to them of His g sufferings.

"The Son of Man Must Suffer" things, and be rejected of the elders and priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised iird day." There was no response; the disci- heology did not admit of a suffering Saviour; rds of life found no entrance, but lay buried r memories until the facts they foretold came s, and on the resurrection morning they were ded by the angels in the empty sepulchre. the Master's path is always the disciple's in easure, and He who was but now acknowl- as the Christ of God said to them all, "If any ill come after me, let him deny himself, and p his cross daily, and follow me. For whoso- ill save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will s life for my sake, the same shall save it." The f man took His life in order to lay it down; es us His life, that we may have the privilege ng down our own for His sake. But the way cross is an unwelcome way to the natural of man. Every instinct of the natural heart to self-preservation, self-exaltation, self-con- ness, anything but the denial, or ignoring, of Every man strives for mastery, for superiority, e has learned in the school of Christ that he ing, and can do nothing; and then the life ist within him seeks to get rid of the death, e learns to lose his life, take up his cross, and Jesus in a path of self-renouncement. Then ad to be nothing; like his Master, he learns to "suffer many things," and to "be rejected;" he can be poor in spirit under great provocation, be- cause the life of Jesus within makes it easy to him.

And the Lord asks the question, "What is a man advantaged, if he

Gain the Whole World,

and lose himself or be cast away?" Let a man pos- sess the whole world, and then sit down and weep, as Alexander did, that there are no more kingdoms to conquer, and, at the age of thirty, leave behind him the conquered world, and go bankrupt into a lost eternity—what does he gain? He is immortal, he must face the fact; he has gained applause for a few short hours, and lost his soul forever!

"The Christ of God," however, is a King, and a king must have a kingdom. If Jesus was to suffer and be slain, how could He reign? He spake of coming "in His own glory, and His Father's, and of the holy angels," but the indifferent disciples do not so much as make an inquiry about it; and then He declared to them, "I tell you, of a truth, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God." The disciples had no idea of anything but an earthly kingdom. How should He make them understand that His kingdom is not of this world? Eight days passed by, and no record is given of those days. The deepest interests of the Master had awakened no response in the hearts of the disciples. Those days are lost days in which we fail to understand our Lord. Eight days after "He took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray." Misunderstood, even by His own disciples, He was at large in the presence of His Father. "And as He prayed, the fashion of His countenance was al- tered, and His raiment was white and glistening."

"As He Prayed,"

as He was face to face with His Father, His back turned toward the things of time and sense, light from heaven and heavenly glory came upon Him. Men who pray much are easily recognized; they re- flect the glory which they behold as in a glass, and they are "changed into the same image, from glory to glory." (II Cor. 3:18.) "And, behold, there talked with Him two men, which were Moses and Elias, who appeared in glory." Here was the King in His kingdom, a kingdom of resurrection men. There was Moses, whom God buried, and Elijah, who had been taken to heaven without dying; death had no power over either, and the subject of their converse was the death of Jesus "which He should accomplish at Jerusalem." This subject, so incom- prehensible, so distasteful, to the disciples was the one thing which occupied these holy men in this short visit to the earth to do glory to God's anoint- ed. They knew now that from that death of Christ alone could eternal life proceed for the salvation of a ruined world: Moses, by whom the law came, was learning of God's grace now, and Elijah was witness to something more than fire from heaven, for he saw in Christ Him "which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." (John 6:33.) They could see what the disciples could not see, that His kingdom was "an everlasting king- dom" (Dan. 7:27), a kingdom within, which "is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 14:17), and Moses and Elijah would well understand that "if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." (Gal. 3:21.) But in the holy light of God they had seen the absolute failure of man to keep the law of a holy God, and their interests, like their Lord's, were in man's re- demption through the blood of Christ, the one offering for a guilty world.

"But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep." The atmosphere of heaven in which they so suddenly found themselves was too much for their human life. They had not the Holy Ghost dwelling in them to show them the things of Christ. "The natural man" failed them, and while the most intense interests of humanity were the theme, they slept. It was the same in Gethsemane. It is only when we take our place as "crucified with Christ," and "alive unto God through" Him alone, that the blessed Spirit can wake us from our sleep and show us heavenly things. But there was a moment of awaking, and then the self-life which Jesus only eight days before had been teach- ing them to deny, came to the front again, and Peter, seeing the glory, said: "Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias." The very man who was repulsed by hear- ing of the coming sufferings of Christ, and who had said, "Pity thyself, Lord, this shall not be unto thee" (Matt. 16:22, margin), is quite ready to ap- preciate the glory. But Peter had yet to learn that only if "we suffer with Him, we shall be also glori- fied together." (Rom. 8:17.) Now are many ready for glory if only they may escape suffering, but this is not God's way. He leads through the cross to the crown, through death to life, through humili- ation to glory. "It is good for us." When Jesus chose His twelve disciples, it was that they might minister to others. But Peter's self-love would abide on the mount in the glory, and leave the lost world unsaved.

While Peter spoke, God covered the disciples with a cloud, "and they feared as they entered into the cloud;" the heavenly visitors were hidden, there remained "no man save Jesus only." (Matt. 17:8.) "And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son, hear Him." It was just what they had failed to do; they had not heard Him, nor could they take in the words of life He gave until He had breathed upon them and they had received the Holy Ghost; "then opened He their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures." (John 20:22; Luke 24:45.)

"It Is Good for Us

to be here." Jesus did not say so; there were sinners to be saved, sick to be healed, and devils to be cast out, down in the plain, and the same anointed Jesus whose glory they had seen in the mount, was going down with them. It is as good for the worker as for the souls he wins, that he should go down into the toil and struggle and heavy atmosphere, where sin and sorrow, sickness and death, are to be found. A time upon the mount is good now and then, when God leads to it. But shall we stay up there and leave Jesus alone to go down amid the sorrow and trouble and strife? "If any man serve me, let him follow me, and where I am, there shall also my servant be." (John. 12:26.) "As He is, so are we in this world." (I John 4:17.) So long as Jesus comes down with us we have nothing to fear, and any attempt to prolong blessing on the mountain when Jesus calls to the plain will be utterly useless.

It was a strange revulsion of feeling which must have taken possession of them when, their eyes hardly recovered from the glory they had looked upon, the first object which met their sight was a poor epileptic young man surrounded by a crowd. As soon as they saw Jesus, they made their way to Him. "And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son, for he is mine only child; and lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it tear- eth him that he foameth again; and bruising him, hardly departeth from him." There was here every symptom of epilepsy, that terrible scourge which is so common, and which so often results from secret sin. But the father's story is not all told, "And I brought him to thy disciples to cast him out, and they could not." Once Jesus was powerless, "He could there do no mighty works, . . . and He mar- velled because of their unbelief." (Mark 6:5, 6.) But in this case it was

The Disciples' Unbelief

(Matt. 17:19, 20), and probably the dispute among them, by the way, as to who should be the greatest, had much to do with their unbelief. In measure as we see ourselves large and we want to be prominent, we are weak in our faith toward God; it is the lowly and the little who most understand Him. "Jesus, answering, said, Oh faithless and per- verse generation! How long shall I be with you, how long shall I suffer you?" Oh how often the heart of Jesus must have bled, that He was so little trusted! and yet His patience held out. "Bring thy son hither"—from disciples to the Saviour—then there will be deliverance.

Oh how the enemy raged when one who was bound was brought face to face with Jesus! "As he was yet a-coming, the demon threw him down and tare him." Fear not, when you need some great deliverance, if every power of hell seems to be spread on your soul, perhaps on your body too, it is a sign of coming freedom. "Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him to his father. And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God" But Jesus took occasion again to remind His disciples of His coming suffer- ings, by virtue of which He had healed the child, "But they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them that they perceived it not; and they feared to ask Him of that saying." Their hearts were otherwise occupied "reasoning . . . which of them should be the greatest."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be made payable at Station D, New York.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we state that no change has been made in our terms to agents. They are allowed, on all ordinary subscriptions, the same commission as in former years.

THE CHILDREN OF THE STREET.

It has come to be a question of stupendous import, What is to be done with the destitute children of our country, or the ragamuffins, as society contemptuously calls them? We must act upon them, or they will act upon us. We must Christianize them, or they will heathenize us. All over this land, what multitudes of the homeless, and the houseless, and the godless! Could you gather them all together, what a scene of rags and filth and hunger and desolation! If you could see those little feet on the broad way to death, which through Christian charity, ought to be pressing the narrow path of life; if you could hear the words of cursing blistering those lips which ought to be singing the praises of God; if you could see those hearts which, at that age, ought not to have been soiled by one vile thought, already become the sewers of iniquity through which floats the most disgusting depravity; if you could see these suffering little ones sacrificed on the altar of every iniquitous passion, and scalded with a baptism of fire from the very lava of the pit, your soul would recoil from the scene crying, "Begone, thou dream of hell!" The Spartans who threw their sickly children to the wild beasts, were merciful compared with that stolid indifference which, in this age, would give up the destitute youth of our country to be eaten up of their own depravity.

These so-called ragamuffins are coming up to be the men and women. That spark of iniquity which you might put out with one drop of the water of life, will flame into a conflagration of every green thing that God planted in the soul; and that which was intended to be a temple of the Holy Ghost, will be a scarred and blasted ruin, every light quenched, and every altar in the dust. That petty thief who slipped into your store, and took a yard of cloth from your counter, will be the highwayman of the forest, or the burglar at midnight, picking the lock of your money-safe, and blowing up your store to hide the villainy. A great army, with staggering step, and blood-shot eye, and drunken hoot, they will come on, gathering recruits from every grog-shop and den of infamy, to take the ballot-box, and hurrah at the elections. The great, hard-knotted fist of ruffianism will have more power than the gentle hand of sobriety and intelligence. Men bloated, and with the signature of crime burned in from the top of their forehead to the bottom of their chin, will look honest men out of countenance. Moral corpses, which ought to be buried a hundred feet deep to keep them from poisoning the air, will rot in the face of the sun at mid-day. Industry, in her plain frock, with her hand at the spindle, will be unappreciated, while multitudes of able-bodied men will wander about in utter idleness, with their hands on their hips, saying, "The world owes us a living." Oh, what a terrible force there is in iniquity, when uneducated, unrestrained, and unblanched, it goes on concentrating, and deepening, and widening, and gathering momentum, until it swings ahead with a very triumph of desolation, drowning like surges, scorching like flame, crushing like rocks! Cold indifference meets these destitute ones, and says, "What a pity! but it can't be helped." The law meets them, and says, "Blackwell's Island and Sing Sing are the places for you." Fashionable fastidiousness meets them, and gathering up its robes, says, "They are so dirty, I cannot bear to have them touch me." But genuine Christian charity stretches forth its arms and says, "Come in your rags and desolation."

Some have said, "Let the Church, through its regular services, do this work." We reply, there are a great multitude of the destitute who do not come under the ministrations of the pulpit. "Oh," said a poor boy to a good man, who reproved him for wickedness, "it is very easy for you, mister, to be good, but, I tell you, we poor chaps hain't got no chance. My father died when I was very small. I have to pick rags for a living, and when I can't get the rags I has to steal. You see we poor chaps hain't got no chance." When they got up from their hands and knees to walk, their first step was on the road to ruin, and every day since they have been plunging down to lower depths, and wilder despair, and deeper darkness. And we who have been ordained to preach the gospel may stand in our pulpit till the blast of the Archangel's trumpet, and we will not reach them. There are many about us in boyhood and girlhood in comfortable circles that are going to be something very good or very bad—very bright or very ignorant—and they will yet make their parents glad with an infinite gladness, or pain them with an infinite sorrow. They go bounding through the hall; they shout in the yard; they sing in the school. This activity that now strikes the ball, and runs the race, and rolls the hoop, and flies the kite, will soon be ready for the higher game of life, where fortunes are to be made, and reputations achieved, and temptations combatted, and immortal souls jeopardized, and kingdoms of glory won. Call up that child; push back his hair. Shall this face be ever brightening up with benevolence, or scarred, and pinched, and blasted with low excesses? Shall those eyes become more and more intelligent, or shall they acquire the dishonest glance and the servile downcast? Put your hand on that child's heart. Shall it always beat with noble impulses, or will it be a thief's heart, a coward's heart, a traitor's heart? Every day we are walking unconsciously among Enochs, and Augustines, and Clarksons, and Mofats, and Robert Halls. There they are! on the back seat of the mission-school. There they are! Playing marbles in the low alley; their knees out, their elbows out, their toes out, their hats rimless, and their souls Christless; and in double columns there is printed on their countenance a tragedy of unutterable pain. But they shall be gathered in. Sabbath-schools will do their work. Tract and Bible societies will do their work. A Christian printing-press will do its work. And they who are now scoffed at as ragamuffins will pass on to be the men of might and the men of God in future years. Stand back and let them pass on! The long procession of Christians, and philanthropists, and heroes, and reformers, and statesmen! And let our prayers go with them, and all Christian influences attend them, long after we have unbuckled the sword of the conflict and gone home to rest.

HEALTH.

In taking diagnoses of the diseases of the soul you must take the diagnoses of the diseases of the body. As if to recognize this, one whole book the New Testament was written by a physician. Luke was a doctor, and he discourses much of physical effects, and he tells of the good Samaritan medication of the wounds by pouring in oil and wine, and recognizes hunger as a hindrance to hearing the gospel, so that the 5,000 were fed; and records the sparse diet of the prodigal away from home, and the extinguished eyesight of the beggar by the wayside, and lets us know of the hemorrhage of the wounds of the dying Christ and a miraculous post-mortem resuscitation. And an estimate of the spiritual condition that does not include also an estimate of the physical condition is incomplete.

Let Christian people avoid the mistake that there are all wrong with God because they suffer from depression of spirits. Many a consecrated man has found his spiritual sky befogged, and his hope of heaven blotted out, and himself plunged chin-deep in the Slough of Despond, and has said: "My heart is not right with God, and I think I must have made a mistake, and instead of being a child of light I am a child of darkness. No one can feel gloomy as I feel and be a Christian." And he has gone to his minister for consolation, and he has collected Flavel's books, and Cecil's books, and Baxter's books, and read and read and read, and prayed and prayed and prayed, and wept and wept, and groaned and groaned and groaned. My brother, your trouble is not with the heart, it is a gastric disorder. You need a physician more than you do a clergyman. It is not sin that blots out your hope of heaven, but bile. It not only yellows your eyeball, and furs your tongue, and makes your head ache, but swoops upon your sin in dejections and forebodings. The devil is at you. He has failed to despoil your character, and he does the next best thing for him—he ruffles your peace of mind. You are just as sure of heaven though you were there already. But Satan, finding that he cannot keep you out of the promised land of Canaan, has determined that the spies shall not bring you any of the Eshcol grapes beforehand and that you shall have nothing but prickly-pears and crab-apple. You are just as good now under the cloud as you were when you were accustomed to rise in the morning at 5 o'clock to pray and sing "Hallelujah, 'tis done!"

ALL JOIN.

ONE characteristic of a live church is the fact that all the people participate in the exercises. A stranger can tell by the way the first tune starts whether there is any life there. A church that does not sing is a dead church. It is awful to find a cold drizzle of music coming down from the organ loft while all the people beneath sit in silence. When a tune wanders around lonely and unbefriended and is finally lost amid the arches because the people do not join in it, there is not much melody made unto the Lord. In heaven they all sing though some there cannot sing half so well as others. The Methodist Church has sung all around the world, and gone from conquest to conquest among other things, because it is a singing church and any Christian church organization that with enthusiasm performs this part of its duty will go from triumph to triumph. A church of God that can sing can do anything that ought to be done. We go forth into this holy war with the Bible in one hand and a hymn-book in the other. Oh ye who used to sing the praises of the Lord, and have fallen out of the habit, take your harps from the willow

CURRENT EVENTS.

Scene that Deserves to Live in History was witnessed in the State Department, in Washington, April 28. Representatives of nine of the American republics met there on that day and signed the final treaty of arbitration. They were the Ministers of the United States, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Ecuador, Honduras, Bolivia, Ecuador, Hayti and the United States of Brazil. It is expected that more signatures and seals will be added soon, it is hoped that the signatures of all the Powers be secured in the course of the summer and autumn. Several of the delegates remained over, at the inconvenience, to complete their adhesion to the treaty. Great enthusiasm is felt at the State Department over the rapid progress of so important a measure. It was explained that the International Conference could only recommend, and that it was regularly accredited ministers plenipotentiary whose signatures were necessary to remit the treaty confirmation to their respective governments. There is still some doubt as to the ratification of the treaty by the Senate, as it precludes the Government from interfering by force for the protection of United States citizens who may be unjustly treated in the countries concerned.

Severe Blow to Prohibition was Dealt by the United States Supreme Court on April 28. The decision submitted to the court was, whether liquor labels and sealed cases might be sent from another State into Iowa and sold there in spite of the Prohibition amendment to the State Constitution. The contention of the liquor men was, that the State has no power under the Constitution of the United States to regulate inter-state commerce. The majority of the court decided that the liquor so imported from another State might be sold in the original packages, and any law prohibiting such was unconstitutional. A minority of the court, comprising Justices Gray, Harlan, and Brewer, dissented. They held that the sale, under the conditions named, rendered the Prohibition law inoperative, and that Congress never intended the Interstate-Commerce law to apply to such a case. The prohibitionists will now have to apply to Congress for remedy, and the first step in that direction has already been taken. A bill is now before the Senate, reported favorably from the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquor into Prohibition States, contrary to their laws.

Authoritative Statement on the Indian Question was made recently in Boston by General James J. Morgan, the new Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Speaking at a meeting of the societies which have labored persistently on behalf of the Indians, he declared that there were no insuperable obstacles to the complete assimilation of all the Indian tribes with the whites. There are but 250,000 Indians, and they could, he believed, be absorbed into our national life as easily and by the same methods as we have absorbed millions of Irish, Germans, and other nationalities. The three great remedial factors in the problem were public opinion, legislative and administrative land-law, and education. The appropriation for Indian education had been very considerably increased if we would only have an elevation of the moral of the Indian service. A practical proof of the capacity of the Indian for development was given at the same meeting by address by Charles E. Eastman, a young Sioux, graduate of Dartmouth College, who is now pursuing a theological course in this city with the intention of returning to his tribe as a missionary.

New York at Last has a Prospect of Honest Elections. After passing several ballot-reform bills having them vetoed by the Governor, the Legislature has passed a compromise measure, which passed on Friday last. It is cumbersome in some details, and there are provisions in it which cause confusion and the loss of some votes, but it is a great improvement on the present system. It is a modified form of the Australian system, which has been adopted by several States, and has been found to work satisfactorily. The chief difference between the New York system is, that instead of having candidates' names printed on one sheet of paper, as the Australian system requires, the ticket for each party is printed on a separate slip, and provisions are made for pasting where the voter desires a composite ticket. He is to receive from the election inspectors a full set of ballots, and these are to be put into a compartment where he cannot be seen. There he selects the ticket which he wishes to vote and hands it, so folded that its contents cannot be detected, to the inspector and it is put into the ballot-box. He must also produce the ballots he does not use and these are put into another receptacle. The plan prevents any attempt at intimidation and renders bribery an uncertain business, as there can be no proof that the man who takes a bribe votes as he is paid to do.

It is Proposed to Adopt in the Senate the New rule which Speaker Reed has enforced in the House. Mr. Sherman has formally introduced a motion authorizing the Vice-president, whenever the question arises of a quorum being present, to count as present Senators who are actually in the Senate Chamber, but do not vote. He thought that every Senator present should vote unless he had paired; but if he chose not to put himself on record on any question his presence ought to be noted when the Vice-president was called upon to decide if a quorum was present. Mr. Sherman incidentally declared his conviction that the Speaker of the House was justified under the Constitution in acting on the new rule which has caused so much debate.

The Pope is Making an Effort to Solve the Labor problem. His plan is outlined in a letter to the Archbishop of Cologne, published April 30. He thinks that all efforts should be directed to inducing people to correct their habits, and habituate themselves to conform their public and private life to the doctrine and example of Christ. "It would," he says, "be well if, in the questions agitating the various classes, the precepts of justice and charity are not violated, and that the differences, which by chance arise, might be settled by the paternal and authoritative intervention of the holy priests. They should endeavor to render the discomforts of their present life more tolerable to the poor, and the Church should not serve as a foment of cupidity or extravagance, but urge them to acquire treasures more precious in heaven." The difficulty which the priests will be likely to meet in getting the attention of the workmen to the Pope's advice will lie in the fact that the warning against cupidity and extravagance is directed to the poor, while the poor believe that it is the rich who are in need of that warning.

The British Government's Scheme for Settling the Irish Land question was tentatively adopted by the House of Commons on May 1. It passed its second reading by a majority of eighty, and has now to go through the ordeal of debate on details in Committee. A significant feature of the debate was Mr. Chamberlain's admission that he does not approve of the bill. He had no principle in common with the Conservatives, with whom he has been acting, except their Irish policy, and it is therefore singular that he should disagree with them on this also. He said that he was in favor of incorporating to some extent Mr. Parnell's proposals in the Government's bill. He admitted the strength of the objection to hypothecating Irish local resources without the consent of the Irish people, and agreed that the Government's assuming the position of landlord would pave the way to friction and possibly to danger. It is expected that before the bill is finally passed Mr. Chamberlain will propose important amendments.

Prince Jerome Napoleon Has Addressed a vituperative letter to the President of the French Republic. It is ostensibly a complaint of a visit to M. Carnot recently paid to the birthplace of Napoleon I., but its main object is evidently to remind the French people that he represents the Napoleonic tradition. He asks in the course of his letter: "What is there in common between the First Consul, who in the space of a few months made a new France, and your government, with its work of daily disorganization? What is there in common between the Emperor, who fell a victim to the very grandeur of his system, and your parliamentary régime, which is dying of its own impotency? How can you, who, proscribing me, his heir, dare to pay hypocritical homage to the cradle of that great man? Confine yourself to being the head of a party government which is ruining and degrading France. Enjoy your salaries and places, occupied rather than filled, but leave us our souvenirs and our misfortunes, and do not insult me in my exile by an act of bravado."

The Labor Demonstrations in the European capitals on May 1, did not justify the apprehensions entertained before the event. For the greater part the processions and meetings were orderly, and the speakers emphatically declaimed against violation of law. They were unanimous in declaring for an eight-hour day, which was the main feature of the demonstration. The anarchists and socialists had little encouragement anywhere to take the lead in the movement. In Vienna there was no disturbance whatever, though sixty mass-meetings were held and sixty thousand workmen were on the Prater. In Paris the streets were crowded, but few arrests were made and good order prevailed. In London, large meetings were held in Hyde Park at which incendiary speeches were made, but there was no disturbance. In Berlin the demonstration was small and most of the workmen remained at work and took no part in it. Only in one town—that of Turcoing in the north of France, was there a serious riot. There a large number of strikers, estimated at forty thousand, were reinforced by other strikers from the neighboring town of Roubaix, and some excesses were committed. A force of military was sent from Paris to assist in quelling the disorder.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Temperance Congress, announced to be held in the Broadway Tabernacle, has been postponed to June 11-12.

The Baptist year book, just issued, shows that the number of Baptists in the United States is 3,070,047. During 1889 144,575 new members were baptized.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, son of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, and for years a pastor in Australia, is to undertake evangelistic work in New Zealand next June, under the auspices of the Baptist Union.

Dr. Pentecost's work at Saltcoats, Scotland, which lasted two weeks, has borne the richest fruit among the young, as was evident at the thanksgiving service held the night after he left, and attended by 300 professed converts.

The Chicago Bible Society has just celebrated the end of the first half century of its existence. The total circulation of copies of the Scriptures by this society in fifty years, by gift or sale, aggregates $41,912. The aggregate receipts from sales and donations amount to $228,331.

The arrangements for the ninth International Convention of Christian Endeavor societies, to be held in St. Louis, June 12-15, are progressing in a most satisfactory manner. A reduced rate of one fare for the round trip has been granted by nearly all the principal railroads throughout the country.

Rev. George C. Needham has been holding union meetings at Augusta, Ga. Five churches joined in the services, and there was a rich blessing. His services at Macon, Ga., were also fruitful in many conversions. Mr. Needham has now gone to his home at Manchester, Mass., for a brief rest, before resuming work in the fall in the South.

The International Missionary Union will hold its seventh annual meeting at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 11-18. The papers and discussions will embrace themes of general interest to missionaries. Information about the meetings or the Union may be obtained from the Rev. J. F. Gracey, D. D., No. 183 Glenwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

The British and Foreign Bible Society reports that the sacred Scriptures were last year translated into six fresh languages. The number of tongues in which this society now publishes the Bible is thus increased to 300. Fifty years ago it was published in 150 tongues. The society distributed 4,206,000 volumes during the year.

Bishop William Taylor has returned to this country from Africa, on a visit. He is full of hope, and brings cheering reports of the progress of the work in the Dark Continent. He expects to remain about four months, and will speak and preach on behalf of the mission in many of our large cities. On Sunday, April 27, he gave an address in Jane Street Church, New York.

The Sixth International Sunday School Convention of the United States and British North American Provinces, will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., June 24-27. The sessions will be held in the Mechanical Hall of the Exposition Building, on Duquesne Way. Three sessions will be held daily. Full particulars as to reduction on railroad fares may be obtained from Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

Mr. S. H. Hadley, of the Jerry McAuley Mission, in Water Street, New York, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 2, desires to thank several readers of the paper for gifts received since the article on the Mission appeared, but whom he was not able to thank personally because they did not send their names. They are from towns in New York State, Wisconsin, Florida, and several other States, and some from Canada. Mr. Hadley assures them that their gifts were extremely welcome, and are being used in the work of clothing and feeding the poor who come to the Mission needing material as well as spiritual help.

A religious newspaper printed in China has the following: At Peking there is a pious lady, the wife of a foreign merchant, who spends her time in doing good. One day she went on a visit to the home of a Manchu lady of high rank. She took copies of the Holy Scriptures. A young lady was present who took great interest in the conversation. She heard the old story of the Gospel of Jesus, who died for a world of sinners. The young lady bent forward to catch every word, and when the Christian visitor had concluded, she said: "I am glad you have come to tell me this. Some day I will have a place built where people can meet to worship this God and hear this Gospel preached." This young lady is now the Empress of China.

A TEST AND A DECLARATION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Unto you therefore which believe He is precious."

1 Pet. 2:7.

A Sure Test of Faith—Men who are Less Respected the More They are Known—I. What Christ is to His People—How They Show Him to be Precious—By Trusting Everything to Him—Can Never Speak Well Enough of Him—Nor Do Enough for Him—Three Essentials to Preciousness—Rarity, Intrinsic Value, Usefulness—II. Faith Makes Christ Precious—It Perceives His Value—Appropriates Him—To Doubting Men He is not Precious—III. What Believers Receive from Him—Honor—Association—Glory With Him at His Coming.

HERE we have no far-fetched statement; it belongs to every-day life. Those now present who believe can verify it on the spot: as believers, they can tell us whether the Lord Jesus is precious to them or not. We are not now about to consider an abstruse doctrine, or lose ourselves in a profound mystery of the faith; but we have before us an assertion which even a babe in Christ may put to the test. Yes, you who but last week confessed your faith in the Lord Jesus Christ can tell in your own souls whether He is precious to you or not.

Dear friends, if we can verify this statement, it is not only satisfactory to ourselves, but it is glorifying to our Lord. Certain men are best respected where they are least known. Many a character needs distance to lend enchantment to the view; but our Lord is most precious to those who are best acquainted with Him. Those who are actually trusting Him, and thus are those who have highest opinion of Him. If you would have the best estimate of the Lord Jesus, we refer you to those who have had transactions with Him on the largest scale, to those who cast all their care upon Him for time and eternity. Their proof of Him is so satisfactory that He is more and more esteemed every day. He is far more precious to them than when they first heard of Him, and every thought of Him makes Him dearer to their hearts.

Putting Him to the Test,

What a glorious friend is He who is most precious to those who receive most from Him! Usually men feel sadness at an increase of obligation; but in this case, the more we are His debtors the more we rejoice to be so. Thousands here this morning can say, "I believe in Him, and He is precious to me beyond all compare." Oh my unbelieving hearer, is there no weight in this testimony? If those that believe in Christ uniformly declare that He becomes more and more delightful to them, should it not persuade you to trust Him? If large numbers of Christians were met with who turned round, after a few years, and confessed that they had been deceived, and that, when the novelty was worn off, there was really nothing precious about the Lord Jesus, then unbelievers would be justified in their unbelief. But if it be not so, but the reverse, what shall I say to you who will not consider His claims?

I. First, consider

What Christ is to His People.

We read in our own version, "Unto you, therefore, which believe He is precious;" yet the word is not an adjective, but a noun. Hence the Revised Version reads the text, "For you therefore which believe is the preciousness." His very self is preciousness itself. He is the essence, the substance, the sum, of all preciousness. Every believer will subscribe to this; many things are more or less precious; but the Lord is preciousness itself, outsoaring all degrees of comparison.

How do believers show that Christ is thus precious to them? They do so by trusting everything to Him. Every believer stays his hope solely upon the work of Jesus. With regard to the past, the present, and the future, he finds rest in Christ. The Lord Jesus is the casket into which we have put all our treasures, and we prize Him accordingly. All our affection flows toward Him as all our hope flows from Him. Within His sacred name and person all our expectation is contained. He is all our salvation and all our desire. Despite the homely proverb, we have put all our eggs into this one basket: all our stores are in this one ship. We have no reserve; we have deposited with our Lord everything which concerns us, and we have no secondary trust wherewith to supplement His power or love.

To believers the Lord Jesus is evidently very precious, because they would give up all that they have sooner than lose Him. Martyrs and confessors have actually given up all for Jesus times without number; history bears this witness abundantly. Tens of thousands have renounced property, liberty, and life sooner than deny Christ. To this day we have among us those who dare to go forth into the fever country for His name's sake, not counting their lives dear unto them, that they might spread abroad His gospel. I hope that we also could part with everything sooner than separate from our Lord. Believer, you would far sooner take up your cross, and go with Jesus, than take up your crown, and go away from Him. Is it not so?

Beyond Words.

So precious is Jesus to believers that they cannot speak well enough of Him. Could you, at your very best, exalt the Lord Jesus so gloriously as to satisfy yourself? I make free confession, that I never preached a sermon about my Lord which came anywhere near my ideal of His merits. I am always dissatisfied when I have done my very best. I have often wished that I could rush back to the pulpit, and try to preach Him better; but I am kept back from such an attempt by the fear that probably I might fail even more conspicuously. He is so glorious as to be glory itself. Who can describe the sun? He is so sweet in our apprehension that we cannot convey that apprehension to another by such feeble expressions as words. Our thoughts of the Lord Jesus Christ are far, far below His worth; but even those thoughts we cannot communicate to another, for they break the backs of words. Language staggers under the weight of holy emotion which comes upon us in connection with the Lord Jesus. We can never say enough of God's unspeakable gift.

Saints show that in their estimation Christ is precious, for they can never do enough for Him. It is not all talk: they are glad also to labor for Him who died for them. Though they grow weary in His work, they never grow weary of it. If they could have their utmost wish as to His glory, and lay down all at His feet, even then they would be dissatisfied, and feel themselves to be infinite debtors to their loving Lord. Oh, that we could crown Him with infinite glory! Oh, that we could set Him on a glorious high throne among men, where every soul could see Him, love Him, and adore Him! What great things saints have tried to do for Christ! yet never one of them has expressed any satisfaction with what he has done; but all have mourned over their shortcomings, and wished that they could devise a tribute equal to His deserts.

A Love Token.

If you are not satisfied with these proofs that Christ is precious to believers, I would invite you, my dear brother and sister, to add another yourself. Let every one of us do something fresh by which to prove the believer's love to Christ. Let us not be satisfied with proof already given. Let us invent a new love-token. Let us sing unto the Lord a new song. Let not this cold world dare to doubt that unto believers Christ is precious: let us force the scoffers to believe that we are in earnest.

In thinking Christ to be precious, the saints are forming a just estimate of Him. "He is precious." For a thing to be rightly called precious, it should have three qualities: it should be rare, it should have an intrinsic value of its own, and it should possess useful and important properties. All these three things meet in our adorable Lord, and make Him precious to discerning minds. As for rarity: talk not of the rarity of gold or of gems—He is the only one: He is absolutely unique. Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid. He is the one sacrifice for sin. It is also most clear that He is intrinsically valuable—who shall estimate His worth? I should darken counsel by words without knowledge if I were to attempt in detail to tell you what He is. Only dwell on the simple fact that while He is God over all, and has thus the fullness of the Godhead, He is also man, true man of the substance of His mother, and so has all the adaptation of perfect manhood. As for where else shall we find such a variety of uses in one place? He is eyes to the blind, ears to the deaf, feet to the lame, healing to the sick, freedom to the slave, joy to the mourner, and life to the dead. Think of His life, and how it gives life to the believer. Think of His death, and how it redeems from hell all those who trust in Him! Think of His resurrection, and how it justifies believers; and of His second coming, and how it delights our hearts! Think of our Lord in all His offices, as Prophet, Priest, and King! All good things meet in Him, and meet in Him in profusion, even to superabundance; wherefore, He is precious indeed!

Useful Qualities,

The saints form their estimate of Him upon Scriptural principles. They are not so fanatical to be carried away by mere passion; they can be brought to book, and they can give a reason for their estimate. The text puts it, "Unto you therefore which believe He is precious." We have "therefore" for our valuation of Christ: we have reckoned and calculated, and have reason on our side, though we count Him to be the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. We can justify our highest estimate of our dear Lord.

Observe the run of the context. Our Lord Jesus is very precious to us as "a living stone." As foundation He is firm as a stone; but in addition He has life, and this life He communicates, so that we also become living stones, and are joined to Him in living, loving, lasting union. A stone alive, imparting life to other stones which are built upon it, is indeed a precious thing in a spiritual house which is to be inhabited of God. This gives a character to the whole structure. Our Lord is, in fact, the source of all the life which fits the church to a temple for the living God.

Dearest When Scorned.

I may add that our Lord is all the more precious to us because He was "disallowed indeed of men." Never is Christ dearer to the believer than when he sees Him to be despised and rejected of men. We do not follow the fashion; we know not the broad road and its crowds; and hence the Lord Jesus immeasurably glorious to us when we see that the world knew Him not. Did they charge Him with drunkenness, madness, and with being a friend to publicans and sinners? We bow at His feet with all the lowlier reverence and love. Did they spit upon Him? Did they scourge Him? Did they blindfold Him, and then mock Him? Ah! the He is to our souls all the worthier of adoration. Precious is our Lord Christ as we see Him going to the tree, bearing our sins in His own body. Precious is He when forsaken of God, and discharging all our debt by His dread sacrifice. Unto you that believe He is all the more precious because He is still disallowed of men.

Thus have I shown you that we run on good lines when Christ is precious to us. We are not here acting upon our own independent judgment, nor following a freak of fancy. If Christ be precious to us, we have God Himself at the back of our judgment, and we are sure we do not err. Besides, we have this witness of the Spirit, that since we are pleased with Jesus, the Father is pleased with us. The Father is not only well pleased with Christ, but well pleased in Christ, and therefore He is well pleased with all who are in Him. He is so sweet that He sweetens all who come to God by His Precious Christ! Precious Christ!

Faith the Cause.

II. Secondly, consider what it is in the man which makes them prize Christ at this rate. It is their faith. "Unto you therefore which believe He is precious." To carnal sense and reason Jesus is far from precious. To human wisdom Christ is not precious; see how men tug and labor to get rid of His Deity, and to trample on His precious blood. What labored learning is brought forth to drain inspiration out of His book, and steal satisfaction out of His blood! but "Unto you therefore which believe He is precious." Faith calls Him precious, when others esteem Him "root out of a dry ground."

For, dear brethren, it is by faith that the value of Christ is perceived. You cannot see Christ by mere reason, for the natural man is blind to the things of the Spirit. You may study the evangelists themselves, but you will never get to see the real Christ, who is precious to believers, except by personal act of faith in Him. The Holy Spirit has removed the scales from the eyes of the man that believeth. If thou trustest the Saviour as a sinner must trust Him, thou knowest more of Him by the act of faith than all the schools could teach.

By faith, again, the Lord Jesus is appropriated. In possession lies much of preciousness. Is thine Koh-i-Noor a precious thing to me? Well, it is precious in itself; but I cannot say that it is precious to me; for I do not even know where it is, nor do I give it more thought than if it were a bit of glass. When a thing belongs to you, it has a value to you and you make a full estimate of it. Now, no man possesses Christ except he believes in Him. Oh unbeliever, thou hast nothing to do with Jesus; thou wilt not trust in Him! Though He be a priceless boon, He is nothing to thee if thou dost not rest in Him! What hast thou to do to speak about Him? Thou art without Christ if thou art out faith. Faith is the hand that grasps Him, mouth that feeds upon Him, and therefore by He is precious.

ist becomes growingly precious to us as our grows. If you have faith in Christ, but do exercise it every day, He will not be very pre- to you. But if your faith keeps her eye fixed im, she will more and more clearly perceive auties. If your soul is driven to Jesus again gain, if your faith anchors in Him continually, He will be indeed more and more precious to Everything depends upon faith. If thou est Christ, He has gone down fifty per cent. ne esteem.

Every Doubt is a Christ Crucifier.

commend you to keep the door of your mind e chain in these days; for those tramps and nts called doubts are prowling about in every er, and they may knock at your door with vile

Do not suffer your faith to diminish even least degree. Believe in Christ heartily and pectingly! If you have a doubt as to whether e a saint, you can have no question that you sinner: come to Christ as a sinner, and put rust in Him as your Saviour. It is wonder- ow a renewed confidence in Christ's saving ill bring back all your joy and delight in and sometimes do it at once. To you that , to you that mistrust, to you that suspect, to at live in the land of hesitation, He is with- orm or comeliness; but to you that believe at stint, He is precious beyond all price.

Now I come to the last point. Consider

What Believers Receive

Him. Take the exact translation—"Unto hat believe He is honor." Honor! Can ever belong to a sinner like me? Listen! e thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast onorable, and I have loved thee, therefore give men for thee, and people for thy life." an had been a harlot, but she believed in and she was so honorable that she was al- to wash His feet with tears, and wipe them e hairs of her head. Thus was she a hand- in the courts of our God. A man had been a but he believed while dying, and lo, he was it person that Jesus received when He came is kingdom—he was so honorable. The changes the rank when He forgives the sin. rt dishonorable no longer if thou believest is. Thou art honorable before God now e has become thy salvation.

her, let me notice that it is a high honor to ociated with the Lord Jesus. When a valiant as achieved a great victory, everybody likes to some connection with him. The few per- ill alive who were at the battle of Waterloo ud of the fact. And no wonder! Though drummer-boy at the time, the old man is o tell that he was there when his country- oke the tyrant's power. Men even carry to reme of folly any slight connection with the ike the man who boasted that the king had to him, when it turned out that all his r said was, "Get out of the way!" We al honor in being associated with our Lord in any capacity. It is an honor to have the feet of His servants, or to have given a cold water to one of His disciples. Simple and grateful service make old. Did men laugh at you for Christ's That honors you with Him. Did you suf- oach for Christ's truth? It is well: thus are and up in the bundle of life with Him whom e. The day shall come when it shall be to be the highest honor that ever was, to en denounced as a bigot, and cast out as a , for the sake of Christ and His gospel.

A Link More Precious

1, it is a great honor to be built on him as a ndation. If you read the passage in Isaiah ill see that those who made lies their ere trodden down, but not those who rested sure foundation; for of them it is written, at believeth shall not make haste." Be- e had built upon Christ, the builder enjoyed orable rest. I do not know how I should had had to think out a way of salvation for but I find it happy work to accept what s clearly revealed in His Word. A minister id to me, "It must be very easy for you to I said, "Do you think so? I do not it as a light affair." "Yes," he said; "it because you hold a fixed and definite set of upon which you dwell from year to year."

I did not see how this made it easy to preach, but I did see how it made my heart easy, and I said, "Yes, that is true. I keep to one fixed line of truth." "That is not my case," said he; "I revise my creed from week to week. It is with me constant change and progress." I did not say much, but I thought the more. If the foundation is constantly being altered, the building will be shaky.

It is an honor to do as Christ bade us in His pre- cepts. Holiness is the truest royalty. It is never a disgrace to any man to be baptized into His name, or to come to His table, and break bread in remembrance of Him. The virgin's advice is sound—"Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." Obedience to Jesus is no discredit to any man. It is an honor to "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." Take this as a sure word—sin is disgrace, but holiness is honor.

At Christ's Coming.

It will be our great honor to see our Lord glorified. That one hundred and eighteenth Psalm depicts the exultation of the saints in the day when Christ shall appear in His glory. See how it runs. "I will praise thee: for thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation. The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice, and be glad in it." In that day, to you that believe, He will be an honor. You shall be His honored attendants when He mounts the throne. Surely, the angels will set great store by every one of you that believed in Christ in the day of His scorning; they will carry you as trophies through the golden streets. Here is a man that believed in Jesus when the world despised Him. Though He was poor and obscure, he dared to own his Lord, and stand up for His truth. Happy man to have been able to give such a proof of loyalty. He was a common soldier in the barracks, and he was the butt of many a coarse joke; but he believed in Jesus! Honor to him! She was a humble work- woman, and all the girls in the warehouse ridiculed her for being a Christian. Honor to her! Honor to all who bore dishonor for Christ.

Before you go away I would beg you to consider how you stand in this matter. Do you believe in Jesus? If you do believe, be afraid of nothing. Come forward, and confess that sacred name. Own that you are a follower of the Lamb; and then, in the day when He distributes crowns and thrones, He will have a crown and a throne for you. You at the Resurrection shall wake up in Him to glory and immortality.

A LADY'S VISIT TO A CHINESE HOME.

ONE of the China Inland missionaries, Mr. John A. Stooke, thus describes a visit which his wife paid recently to some women at a village six li (two miles) distant from their home at Che-foo: It was a beautiful Sabbath afternoon when we started; it was the Chinese New Year. Very little traffic was going on, either on the streets in the busy native quarter, or along the mule-tracks leading to the village of Hsiang Kuan, whither we were going. Once inside the village, however, matters were different, for we were soon surrounded with an eager crowd of Celestials, mostly young and middle-aged; all wondering, I have no doubt, why we were come to disturb them at such a season. My wife, having found out the residence of her sewing Amah, became at once the observed of all observers, and the narrow entrance soon became crowded with women eager to see the foreigner. I had in the meantime made my departure in order to do a good round of tract distribution, for it is not respectable for a gentleman to visit the Chinese women even in company with his wife.

Very few of the women were able to get right inside the one solitary room occupied by the Amah, her husband, and four or five children, but those who could not gain entrance stood at the door. After the ordinary salutations, questions, answers, &c., my wife thought it well to get to higher and better things, especially since she was well understood, and they themselves had spoken very clearly; but directly the precious name of Jesus was brought forward, and a few simple sentences uttered about the gospel, two or three of the most respectable immediately said, "O-men puh-ming-keh" ("We don't understand"). Again the truth was simply stated, but the reply came hurriedly, as before, "We don't understand your tao-li," or doctrine. "Not so," replied my wife, "it is not that you don't understand, but you don't wish to understand. Shall I sing to you something?" she added. "Yes, oh yes," said they; so my wife chose the simple Chinese version, "Jesu ai-o" ("Jesus loves me"). This over, she again tried to fix the truth upon them, but the visitors, evidently uneasy, beat a retreat, with "O-men puh-ming-keh."

To many this may seem very disappointing, but is it really very different from the answers received in Christian lands? I think not. Therefore, earnestly pray for China; for, as a nation, they reject the gospel, and will not tolerate the preaching of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Happily it is not the same all over China—in many homes they are truly interested—but it is stern work as a rule, to fight for every inch of ground against Satan for Christ Jesus in this immense empire. But, though many of these fields are hard and millions are dead to every sense of guilt, we labor on in the name of the Triune God, delighted at being privileged to speak for Him in China, in order to help in gathering out a people to His name.

GOSPEL TROPHIES IN JAPAN.

AN interesting ordination service has just taken place in the mountain districts of Japan. In the course of his description of it in the Missionary Herald, Dr. Gordon, of Kyoto, gives the following details of the origin of the church, the pastor of which was ordained:

"About ten years ago a young student in our Doshisha School (now a well-known pastor) became a Christian, and in his vacation he told to his friends in Tamba what he had found in Christianity. Of all who heard him, only one man showed then more than a passing interest. This man, however, proved to be not only the good ground into which the first seed fell; he became also a fruit-bearing seed. At his invitation students and teachers from our school have gone there from time to time, and spoken here and there in private houses and shibai-goya (theatre-barns), and helped in various ways; but he is the one man who has been there through it all, and doing more than any one else. This Mr. Murakami has really stood for Christianity there in all these years, so that, as one of the Christians has said, to avow to a stranger that you are a Christian is to call forth the inquiry, 'Are you Murakami?'

"The work here, though gradual in its development, has not been without its specially interesting personal points. Thus the man I have spoken of was at first connected with a saké brewery, and I recall two others who have given up the same business. I recall also a well-known drunkard who has for years led a sober life; a notorious gambler who, to the joy of his family, has given up his games; one young man is now a member of the Imperial Guard; and more than one young man is now in our school preparing to preach Christ. The church numbers 156, of whom eighty-three are males. They are largely farmers and merchants; but school-teachers, physicians, etc., are well represented. The principal of one grammar school, two teachers in another, and an earnest inquirer in a third indicate the class of people reached. The State's attorney for the district is an earnest inquirer; his wife and daughters are Christians."

A MOMENTOUS MARRIAGE SERVICE.

AN illustration of a very pointed and forcible character was recently used by a popular preacher, with very marked effect. Many persons present who were seeking Christ, yet kept back by doubts and difficulties, were brought to decision by the illustration, and as it may serve as a help to some of the many preachers who are readers of this journal, it is here given in full:

"As a minister, I have sometimes to marry people. There stand the man and woman. The clergyman does not say to the man, 'Are you in a great state about this woman?' But simply, 'Are you willing to take her?' The man, without any excitement, calmly and quietly answers, 'Yes.' The minister does not ask the woman if she is dying for sheer love of the man, but if she is willing to have him. It is to be hoped, of course, that they are warmly attached: but all that is asked is the quiet, clear, emphatic utterance of the mind through the tongue, and afterward by the signature of the pen. (The preacher created some merriment here by remarking, as the result of his observation, that the woman usually said 'Yes' before the question was finished; but he restored the equilibrium of the audience by his pathetic peroration.) You see

The King of Belgium.

The Queen of Belgium.

Mr. H. M. Stanley.

where we stand. I would like to join you to the Lord in an everlasting covenant that shall never be broken. I place before you Jesus Christ, the Lover of your soul, who has come far to woo and win His Bride. Novelists and poets tell about high lords who stoop down to marry village maidens of low estate. Poor girls! maybe they have a good deal the worst of the bargain. But here is a Lover who has stooped indeed, and I say to Him, 'Lord Jesus, art thou willing to take this man, this woman, into eternal union with thyself?' He bends down and He says, 'Willing! Let my incarnation; let my earthly life; let my agony on the cross; yea, let my glory testify. Yes, I am willing!' Sinner, art thou willing to take this Christ, to have and to hold, from this day forward, in sickness and in health, in death, to be thine—thine in life, and through all eternity? Look Him straight in the face, and will you dare to say 'Nay,' or to preserve a dumb silence, which is louder in its rejection than a thousand 'Noes'? Yield to Christ. Hang upon His arm. Give Him thy whole being, and He will hand Himself over to thee in a covenant that shall never be broken."

A TRANSFIGURED LIFE.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text: "This is my beloved Son, hear Him." Luke 9: 35.

"I do not know what to do with Philip," said Mr. Urquhart, as he and his wife sat talking together after their children were gone to bed. "What can one do with a deformed lad? He is not fit for any business, and will be simply a burden on my hands as long as I live. I believe it is pure waste of money to spend any more on his education."

"Oh, don't say that, John," said his wife; "poor boy! it is not his fault. We must do all we can for him."

"I would not mind so much if he were not so irritable and discontented. His tongue is like a knife. He lacerates his brothers, and even me at times, by his cutting sarcasms; and he is not respectful to you. If he were not a cripple, I should give him a sound thrashing very often."

"Ah! he suffers so much, he cannot be good-tempered. It is very trying to have to stay at home when his brothers are going to the woods, and to see all the other boys at their games, and be unable to join them. He frets and grieves, and, of course, he gets cross. We must make allowances for him. Herbert Winter is coming home from school next week, and we will get him to talk to Philip. He will do him good; Philip always liked Herbert."

There was no doubt that Philip was a cross on the Urquhart household. He was gloomy and morose, resentful of pity, and had an abnormal ingenuity in devising means of vexing all about him. His taunts and gibes and sneers goaded his brothers almost to madness, and if they punished him, something was sure to happen to some of their treasured possessions soon afterward, which they rightly believed to be Philip's doing. As his eldest brother said, there seemed something almost demoniacal in his disposition. At school and at home he was disliked and avoided, and he grew more morose every day. Mrs. Urquhart's hope of good from Herbert Winter was not, however, without foundation. Herbert was a Christian boy, whom every one liked, and his first interview with Philip after his return was the beginning of a change in the poor, deformed boy's life.

"Oh, there is no reason for being so low-spirited," he said, when, not without difficulty, he had extracted from Philip the story of his troubles and his vexations. "You may be a most useful man yet, and may have everybody's love and good-will. I can tell you how your life may be a happy one."

"Can you?" Philip asked, with a new brightness in his face, though there was some incredulity, too. "No one loves me now, not even my mother. If you have any secret spell that will work a change you cannot do a kinder thing than to give it to me."

"It is no secret spell, dear old boy," Herbert said; "it is a word that once came out of a cloud, and every one who hears and obeys it finds all clouds lifted from his life. It was the voice that said, 'This is my beloved Son; hear Him.' There is your secret, my friend. Listen to Jesus and your whole life will be changed. You will be changed yourself."

"I don't see how," Philip said.

"No, that is likely; but you will. Take the Sermon on the Mount, which contains the rudiments of Christ's philosophy. Notice who are the blessed in His opinion: The poor in spirit, they that mourn, the meek, they that hunger after righteousness, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, and they that are persecuted. There is not one above your reach. Believe me, your secret lies there. Live Christ's ideal life and you will find He was right; you will be blessed."

"I'll try," said Philip. "Will you pray for me, Herbert?"

"Yes; here, and now, and always." He knelt down with the poor boy and prayed that God would give him the moral and spiritual strength he needed, and to keep him true to his resolve to take Christ as his Teacher.

"What's come to Philip?" Mr. Urquhart asked his wife some weeks afterward. "I never saw such a change in anyone in my life. I positively love the boy. He never quarrels, never repines, and he seems as happy as the day is long. All the old perversity seems to be gone out of him."

"Yes, thank God," said the mother; "It must be His work."

THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS.

THE return of Mr. H. M. Stanley from his expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha, and the new plans which that distinguished explorer is said to have formulated for the consolidation and extension of the Congo Free State, give increased prominence to the King whose sagacity and enterprise led to the establishment of that State. We therefore publish, this week, his portrait and that of his accomplished wife. Leopold II. is the son of King Leopold I, who died in 1865. He was born at Brussels, April 9, 1835, and is therefore fifty-five years of age. He was remarkable as a Prince before he succeeded to the throne of Belgium. While most young princes of his position were spending their youth in idleness and pleasure, he was taking a prominent part in the debates of the Senate, and devising measures for improving the condition of his country. Some of them, notably that for organizing a marine service between Belgium and the Levant, have served to develop the trade of the country, and have added largely to its wealth. On August 20, 1853, he married the Arch-duchess Maria of Austria, whose portrait is also given here, and two years later the royal pair set out on a long tour through Europe, Egypt, and Asia Minor. They saw with their own eyes the condition of other countries, came back with knowledge and conception of the duties of the exalted position they were to occupy. The King's policy since he came to the throne has been marked by sagacity and true statesmanship. He is popular with his people, who recognize his enterprises are directed to the advancement and development of the country rather than to his own personal interests.

MR. H. M. STANLEY.

THE peoples of Europe have shown their appreciation of the daring and heroism of Mr. Stanley by the enthusiasm with which they welcomed his return. His reception in Italy, where he landed at Brindisi, overpowered him, and he would have been still more imposing had he not shrunk from it, and unmistakably intimated the kindest thing the public officials could do for him was to let him have rest and quiet. In London, with his friends, the King and Queen, he yielded to the general wish to do him honor by accepting a public reception, and by taking part in the festivities which they had arranged. Preparations had been made to give him a warm welcome in England, and on Friday last the first entertainment in his honor was held. The Prince of Wales presided, and gave him a hearty greeting in the name of the English people.

As Mr. Stanley's life has already been sketched in this journal, it is necessary here to give only a brief summary of its chief events. He was born in 1840, near Denbigh, in Wales, in poor circumstances. He emigrated to America when a mere boy, and was adopted as a son by a distinguished American citizen; served in the Confederate service; subsequently, after being a prisoner of war, entered the Union army; took part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Fort Henry, and Vicksburg Landing; became a war correspondent of the New York Herald, and after the war continued his services on that journal. In October, 1869, he was sent to the interior of Africa to find stone, the Christian missionary-explorer, had been so long lost to the ken of the civil world that he was believed to be dead. Stumped across Africa searching for him, and ally found him, relieved his pressing needs, in news of the civilized world, and carried his home from him. Stanley afterward to the work of exploration which Livingstone finished, and, aided by the King of the Beland established the Free State of the Congo. the news came that Emin was surrounded and treacherous enemies, and was in need, Stanley was in New York enjoying a brief, but he promptly responded to the call the Emin Relief Association invited him to the expedition, and on January 21, 1887, he for Africa on his mission, from which he has turned in triumph.

The Labor Demonstration in Union Square, New York, Last Thursday.

WILL IT LIFT?
THE STORY OF A FOG.
By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray,
(Continued from page 286.)

that Mr. Allanson, or Gilbert Craske, as w him, was fairly out of the way, Jared Higginbotham resolved to put himself and his ill-gotten in a securer place. He had come to the sion that London was the place to hide in, at if that did not seem to furnish him with nness of shelter that he desired, he would hence make his way across the sea. re said that only on one previous occasion e innkeeper departed seriously from the of honesty; but that one had been followed sequences which might well have restrained om touching that sort of pitch again. His s only son, a fine young fellow in his later ad come to know of the dishonest deed— v the fact, but not the circumstances; and v youth of principle and spirit too, he had dated with his father in language more : than filial, and had declared that if his fa- ould not right the wrong he had done, he eave the parental roof and seek his fortune y. high-spirited lad promptly carried out his and joining a party of emigrants, almost in- set sail for Australia. From his home at ipodes he wrote occasionally to his mother, grief for his absence was the sorrow of her d reported always that he was with kind em- and was doing well. He never flinched ne resolve, though his fond mother had han once endeavored to shake his purpose, at was, that he should not return to England he was first assured that his father had repaired the wrong he had been guilty of, and done his best to redeem their name from disgrace. In his communications to his mother, he always signed himself "Frank Higginbotham;" but in the land of his adoption he had taken another name, with the resolve never to resume his own until his father should remove the stain from it.

The name he assumed was the very name which Gilbert Craske took when he appeared at Hilldrop, and indeed it was his association with Frank Higginbotham that suggested it, for the kind employers of whom Frank wrote to his mother were no other than Gilbert Craske and his son. Frank adopted the name from the moment of his landing in Australia. It was really the name of one of the cabin passengers on the ship, who was going to Australia to buy land, and farm it, in the hope, not so much to make a fortune, as to recover his health. This was the true Richard Allanson. He conceived a liking for Frank at the beginning of the voyage, and learning that he was going out to work engaged him as his help. But on the voyage his health grew worse, and Frank nursed him with the tenderness and constancy of a woman. But nothing could save him. He died at sea, and in gratitude to Frank he gave him a thousand dollars to start him in the new country. Frank was much affected by his kindness, and it was in sincere respect and affection for his benefactor that he took his name, having, for the reasons mentioned, abjured his own.

Dick Allanson, therefore, was the name by which Frank Higginbotham was known. Feeling himself to be too young in years, and far too lacking in experience to invest his money in land, and to dare any colonial venture on his own account, he took time to look about him. Eventually he came across the path of Gilbert Craske, whose herds were sprinkled over many a valley, and whose flocks whitened the slopes of many a hill. That good man soon took accurate measure of the youth, took him into his employ, and gave him counsel and aid in the investment of his money.

When our good friend, Gilbert Craske, made his first appearance at the "Hilldrop" Inn, the idea of remaining incognito, and of assuming a name that would help him to do so, came to him suddenly and without previous thought, and equally suddenly and without thought the name of his young assistant-stockman came to his mind, and so, to Jared Higginbotham and Faringham in general, he came to be "Richard Allanson, of New South Wales."

While the son in Australia was thus grieving over the father's depravity, that father was in perplexity about his future course, now that so large a sum of money was in his possession. His chief perplexity was about his wife. Jared Higginbotham was not and never had been a man of a very affectionate disposition, but the idea of making off with the gold and leaving her permanently behind was repulsive to him; it seemed a cowardly desertion, and besides, it involved the loss of a life-long companionship, which he really did not want to lose.

No man is wholly bad; and bad as Jared was, and basely as he had acted, he had his good qualities. The great and fatal weakness in his character was the love of money as money, not because of what it would fetch so much as the dear delight of seeing it, handling it, having it, calling it mine. In this respect there was that in Jared which would most certainly have made him a miser in the superlative degree.

More than once or twice Jared had gone to the old abbey ruins with the resolve to restore the precious box to its place in Mr. Allanson's room; but in each case, when he had come near enough to be within the charmed circle of its presence, his resolution failed. On the other hand, when he was away from its influence, the fear and peril of discovery gat hold upon him, and he found trouble and sorrow inconceivable in showing to himself the many ways in which discovery might come upon him as an armed man.

At length the dishonest and unhappy innkeeper hit upon a scheme which appeared to have in it all the elements of success. He would acknowledge to his wife that he had hoarded gold to the extent of a few hundred pounds. This she might be led to believe, for she knew of his weakness in that direction; knew that he had formerly done so, knew also of that first fall from honesty which had sent poor Frank to a foreign land. He would then plead his health, which certainly had failed lately, as a reason for wishing to give up "Hilldrop Inn;" and then, as the crowning point of policy, he would suggest that they should go out and join Frank in Australia, and from thence Frank and he could put right that wrong which had darkened Mrs. Higginbotham's life with its discredit and the weary absence of her only son. Strange to say, circumstances came directly to the aid of Jared's well-laid plot. A distant relative of Mrs. Higginbotham, one with whom she had had but little intercourse, died and left her a legacy. She had listened with complacency when her husband broached the scheme, and, indeed, with much secret delight; but like a prudent woman had not been quite clear as to sufficiency of funds for so important a step as this. Then came the legacy, and the day was won.

It became necessary, alike in connection with his contemplated voyage to Australia and the legacy, that Jared Higginbotham should take a journey to London; and, as Jared quickly perceived, it would be very easy to produce reasons when he arrived there for a prolonged stay in the metropolis. So the guilty landlord took heart of grace, and though his conscience made sad work within him occasionally, his fears as to discovery and its consequences were considerably lightened. He could even afford to be, or appear to be, jocose, and said kinder and cheerier things to his wife than he had troubled himself to say for many a long year. For the last few weeks he had been so glum, so absent-minded, so ill-tempered, that poor Mrs. Higginbotham welcomed the change with joy, and felt more than ever sure that they were going to be a happy and united family again at last.

It was not until the end of the month of March that the innkeeper was able to carry out his design and pay his desired visit to the great metropolis. Strange to say, he found that it was a far more serious affair than he could have imagined to get his precious booty away from its temporary resting-place among the bramble-covered ruins of St. Hildred's Abbey. There were moonlight nights to be avoided, and all his eager haste could not make the light that rules the night accelerate its pace one jot. There was such a number of belated people passing to and fro, and they passed so slowly and lingered so long that Jared began to half suspect a conspiracy of watchers, resolved to see what he was about to do.

Then, when the way did seem clear and the night was obligingly dark, Jared heard such odd noises in the abbey, and above the abbey, noises startling, strange, uncanny; noises that guilty fear is apt to hear even in the stillest night, that he beat a hasty retreat and spent much time and patience and watching all in vain. For the manufacture of real downright ghostly noises commend me to a guilty conscience; mediums, spirit-rapping, and sleeping or trying to sleep in a haunted room after a Christmas Eve of ghost-story telling, are quite unable to compete with it.

At last, however, Jared managed to succeed so far as to hear the coin rattle in the box, by reason of a stone having rolled against it as he parted the brambles and briars where it lay. After that, I think, nothing short of a constable's hand upon his shoulder, and scarcely even that, would have hindered him from grasping it and holding it as for dear life. He held it, wrapped it in a remnant of an old horse-cloth beneath his arm, and then stole away rapidly, silently, as a thief may well do, and entered the silent inn by the back door which he had carefully left a little ajar. Lighting a candle, he ascended the stairs in his stocking feet and entered a tenantless room. His portmanteau was laid open, partially packed, upon the bed. Hastily placing the box, covering and all, underneath a change of clothes and in a vacant place carefully prepared beforehand, he tremblingly completed the packing, locked it, strapped it, and put the key in his pocket.

Hark! what's that? A dull, groaning sound from the direction of the stairs falls upon his ear, and the old case clock standing on the landing, wheezily and rustily "gives warning;" and immediately after, for it plays the eccentric pranks peculiar to old age, proceeds to strike the hour of twelve. Strange to say, Jared does not care to go out on to the landing until the sound ceases, afraid, perhaps, that the clock will suspend its strokes until it has charged him with the theft. What a while it takes! It must be striking twenty. At last it ceases. At that moment a bat, or something still more ominous, beats against the window, and in a perfect sweat of fear and apprehension, Jared hastens from the room, and heaves a sigh of relief as he stands by the bedside of his wife, though she, good soul, is fast asleep, dreaming, maybe, of meeting with her lad in the land of the sunny south! Jared Higginbotham, your covenant with the devil for the possession of that box is the dearest bargain you have ever made in all your life! Wretched Jared!

He did not feel really safe, however, until the next day, when with a sense of relief that cannot be expressed in words he and his portmanteau, with "the box" safely locked and buckled up inside, were fairly hoisted on the coach which was to bear him to a distant town from whence he was to take the train to London. When at last he found himself on the arrival platform of the London terminus—an unknown unit among an excited crowd of travellers and of friends who had come to meet them, and of cabmen, porters, and businessless spectators—he congratulated himself upon his safety, and felt that "finding a needle in a bottle of hay" would be of less difficulty than finding him, whoever might undertake the search.

His intention was to make his way to the "Bedford Arms," an hotel which had been recommended to him by a commercial traveller who had been accustomed to put up at his own humble inn at the foot of Hildrop Rise. It was not until he was about to call a cab to carry him to his destination that the thought struck him that it would not do. He must not for safety's sake go there. Suppose inquiry should be made; suppose—it was not likely—but suppose somebody should come in pursuit—why, it might be known that the "Bedford Arms" had been recommended to him, and the link would be at once established.

He had time, too, even there as he stood on the edge of the pavement, guarding his portmanteau, to think how great a fool he was. He might have been able to go where he liked, and do things as openly as he liked, and to look anybody straight in the face without being troubled if they gave a second look at him. He might have—but there—he couldn't! He was a thief, and all the street was full of arresting voices, and every passer-by had eyes that made him restless until they passed. Oh, wrongdoers are fools, carrying with them everywhere a stain upon the palm, and a crime upon the heart, and a fluttering fear that makes life itself a burden hard to bear!

"Here y'are, sir, take you all the way for tuppence and portmanteau for nothin'; Totnam Cot Road, Hoxford Street—where d'ye want to go, sir?" It was a stage driver who thus accosted him. The stage had driven close up to the kerbstone, and the driver with his whip in his uplifted hand looked down and waited for an answer. It was a cheery honest face that met Jared's inquiring eye, and almost without a thought, except that "Hoxford Street" was the direction in which he thought to go, he handed up his portmanteau and climbed into the seat next the driver.

"Ad a pleasant journey up to town, I hope, sir, though I expects you found it a bit dusty on the road? What a pity them steam-kettles can't carry a water-cart along with 'em," said the talkative knight of the whip, and in a very few moments Jared felt at his ease and entered into conversation with his companion on the wide wide subject of London.

"Best place in the world to get lost in, London is," said the driver, waving his whip as though to hint in a general fashion the limitless dimensions of the place. "The desert of Sarah's a fool to it; an' when a fog settles down on it—a fog as is a fog, you know, w' no nonsense about it—a regular sarcumstantial, peas-soupy business that just comes blob down 'Gyptian fashion, why then you can't be lost exactly, because the're you are, you know, and you know it, an' that's about all you do know, till the blamad thing lifts again. I once had a fare, when I was a 'cabbie' and drove a 'growler'—and hereupon our old friend Jarvie, who had gone out of the cab line on the ground that it wasn't "sociable" enough, regaled the amused and listening Jared with the narrative of his adventure with Gilbert Craske in that famous and never-to-be-forgotten November fog.

During the narrative Jarvie had to mention now and again the "Bedford Arms," and Jared asked him what kind of a place it was for a provincial come to town on business to put up at.

"Oh, it's a reg'lar tip topper in the way of a hotel, you know; but the shiners [money] hev a knack o' meltin' pretty fast in them sort o' places. Of course, if shiners is plenty, why, that's a different thing." So saying, he looked Jared Higginbotham well over, as if to settle satisfactorily in his own mind his "fare's" ability in that direction.

Jared had plenty of "shiners," more's the pity, but he had no idea of parting with more of them than he could help, and finally decided that he should take up his quarters somewhere else. He therefore asked his new acquaintance, "Can you recommend me, now, to a snug, homely inn, tolerably cheap and comfortable, and not too far away from Oxford Street?"

"Law, bless yo', yes, sir, dozens on 'em. There's a snug place o' that sort not far away from the Marble Arch—the 'Wellington,' in Crozier Street. That's the place the gentleman took to that I've been telling you about, and that's the place for you: quiet, respectable, and reasonable; an' I'll tell you what," said Jarvie, with the knowing wink which was intended to extract a fee for the information out of Jared's pocket. "London's a ticklish sort of a place, an' there's many a ticklish sort of an inn that takes you in, an' its worth while to know one or two that's 'on the square.'" So Jared understood it, and the shilling was forthcoming.

"Thank you, sir, an' good luck go with you," said Jarvie, spitting on the coin that good luck might go with it. "Now, you had better change here. There's a yellow stage. You get into that; it'll put you down at the end of Crozier Street, an' the 'Wellington's' is twenty yards down on the right. Good-day, sir, an' good luck."

Whether Jared Higginbotham would have thought himself in luck's way, if he had known that he was deliberately going to take up his quarters in the very inn in which at that very moment Gilbert Craske was quartered may be doubted; but neither Jared nor anybody else can understand the secret workings of an overruling Providence, or trace the subtle links and threads by which He works out His wonderful and always righteous designs.

(To be Continued.)

Henry Gaze & Son, the originators and first conductors of Oriental tours, of 940 Broadway, New York City, offer most attractive summer trips to Europe at $150 and upwards, including all expenses; also two Fall trips to the Holy Land and Round the World.

DO YOU WRITE?

The Nette Bly Fountain Pen retails at fifty cents. A perfect pen—as good as the best, except that no gold pen is used. Useful to office men, collectors, salesmen, housekeepers, teachers and pupils. Sample sent to any address on receipt of price. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal discounts.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
301 Broadway, New York.

MAY FLOWERS—OF SONG

For Schools:

Children's School Songs. (35 cts.; $3.60 dozen.) 8 pages of simple explanations, and 138 new and selected songs for general singing. This little book is being received with much favor.

Kindergarten Chimes. ($1.25.) Kate Douglas Wiggin. Good manual, and fine collection.

Kindergarten and Primary School Songs. (30 cts.; $3.00 doz.) Menard.

Songs and Games for Little Ones. ($2.00.) Walker and Jenks.

Gems for Little Singers. (30 cts.; $3.00 doz.) Emerson and Swayne.

Rhymes and Tunes. ($1.00.) Mrs. Osgood.

Motion Songs. (20 cts.; $1.80 doz.) Mrs. Boardman.

Get them all! They are most delightful books! Also try the sweet little Cantatas:

Kingdom of Mother Goose. (25 cts.; $2.28 dozen.) Mrs. Boardman.

Rainbow Festival. (20 cts.; $1.80 doz.) Lewis.

Who Killed Cock Robin? (40 cts.; $3.60 doz.) Ford.

SONG MANUAL.

Book 1, Primary, 30c.; $3.00 doz. Book 2, Medium, 40c.; $4.20 doz. Book 3, High, 50c.; $4.80 doz. By Emerson. These are the newest and best books for teaching note reading in schools.

Send for lists and descriptions.

Any book mailed for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 367 Broadway, New York.

TRUITT'S VEGETABLE LOZENGE.

The Great Cure for Indigestion. You can eat anything you wish and at the same time be cured. 50c. a box. Druggists or by mail, J. F. TRUITT, Manager, Bridgeport, N. J.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, lodging in the glands of the neck, produces lumps or swellings; which cause running sores on the arms, legs, or face; develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose; causing blindness or deafness; which is the cause of pimples, cancerous growths, or manifestations usually ascribed to "It is a more formidable enemy than cancer or cancer alone, for scrofula combines possible features of both. Being the most common of all diseases, it is the most general of all diseases, and for very few persons are entirely free of it."

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has effected, often when other medicines have failed, proven itself to be a potent and peculiar for this disease. For all affections of Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and cures it has effected are really wonderful, suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Some Child Grow Too

become listless, fretful, without energy, thin and weak. But you can cure them and build them up, use of

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES Of Lime and Soda

They will take it readily, for it is most as palatable as milk. A should be remembered that AS A PREVENTIVE OR CURE OF COUGHS OR IN BOTH THE OLD AND YOUNG, UNEQUALLED. Avoid substitutions.

LADIES

Use Only

BROWN'S FRENCH DRESSING

Awarded highest hon

Phila., 1876; Frankfurt, 1877; Amsterdam, 1878; New Orleans, 1878; Melbourne, 1880; Paris, 1889.

and wherever exhibited

Paris Medal on every

Beware of Imitations

NEW BOOK. WOMAN AND HER

By M. AUGUSTA FAIRCHILD, M. D. For more agents wanted. Address HEALTHY, 537 Broadway, Quincy, Ill.

State where you saw this advertisement.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE

If you are thinking about a house you should send for my new book containing specifications for 25 houses from a rooms up, costing from $500 to $5000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house. I will suit you almost as well as I can for $5 for a book. Sent on receipt of 25 cents. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 ROSE ST., New York.

MEN WANTED

Great inducements. Outfit free. Address AUSTIN SHAW, Nurseryman, Brooklyn, N. Y.

SHORTHAND Private instruction by practical shorthand reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book is free. FRANK HARRISON, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

A COREAN'S WORK.
work of our native evangelist is quoted by Rev. John Ross, of Man- as an evidence of what could be done gelize that country, if sufficient funds tributed to carry on the work. He at some four years ago he had six men studying the Bible with him. were of the upper class, and had come t Mokdon, from the capital of Corea. as one of them who seemed so much an his fellows, that I resolved that d be the first native evangelist to With this end in view, I paid par- tention to his education, and when it him far enough advanced, I sent k to the town from which he had ear of his life, there to preach the The upper class of Coreans do not e Korean language, but study the hinese works, so with a number of s, in Chinese, he set out to work his own class. About a year after ture, I got a letter from him telling ere were thirteen men and women in e who wanted to be baptised, and e to come to them. But I was un- comply with their request, as it ve taken me a year to go and return. year there came word that seventy- wanted baptising, hut even then I le to go. The third year the coun- own open by treaties with the vari- ments, and we could send mission- re. This shows how inadequate mis- orce is for the work it is expected to If a mission be successful, it soon e strength of those who conduct ew workers are needed, but too of- are not forthcoming. If only those nt themselves go to the foreign ld, by their prayers and money, thers to do that noble work, Chris- ould make surprising progress, and of the Gospel would soon dispel the of heathenism."

HEN PRIEST'S DAUGHTER.
ptism of the daughter of a heathen eported by Rev. J. Bachus of Jaff- writes, "For about three years o her baptism she was a praying o being convinced of the truth at She begged for her father's per- o receive baptism. During the years she was severely reprov- aged. However, she went on at her father's stiff heart might be

He is a manager of a heathen d is the most influential man in t. The poor young woman had ong temptations and trials; but er hand she was endowed with grace to overcome them all with Proposals of heathen marriage r close relations were made by , and he often threatened to com- marry a heathen, and she was red to attend the heathen temple, her father was manager, and several vessels to and from the But she never yielded to any of ng ready to risk any punishment 's sake. The father, after all, at she was determined to be- ristian, gave his consent, and I ivilege of baptising her. She has tly been married to one of our erts, and is now leading a con- stian life, doing as much volun- as she could in teaching her and heathen neighbors. She is se whom I have appointed to read of God regularly to the illiterate in this village.

DISM ON TWO VESSELS.
ourse of an address at a mission ously, a speaker described a rare (noble self forgetfulness at sea, t of rescuers and rescued. The ord Gough was on its way to ia from Liverpool, when it shing schooner in distress. The blowing a gale, and the schooner, abled, and with three or four of ready washed into the ocean, was signal for help. Captain Hughes, mship, saw the fearful peril which ng party must encounter, but his lunteers was promptly answered e and a crew of brave men, and ns were made for the desperate trip. To the astonishment of all, while the boat was being lowered, the flag of distress on the schooner's mast was hauled down. Perplexed at this movement, the hardy rescuers hesitated; but it was finally decided that the boat should go. With great difficulty the schooner was reached, and on her deck were found twelve men utterly without hope except from outside aid. It was necessary to make two trips, and the sailors of the 'Lord Gough' took half the suffering men and toiled through the wild waters to their own ship, and returned as soon as possible for the others. When all were safe on the steamer, Captain Hughes asked the schooner's master, Captain George W. Pendleton, why he had lowered the distress flag. The reply was, "We saw that you were preparing to make an attempt to save us, but we saw, also, that it was a sea in which it was very doubtful whether a boat would live. I said then to my men, 'Shall we let those brave fellows risk their lives to save ours?' and they answered 'No!' Then I hauled down the flag, lest in trying to save us, your men might be lost.

AN ANTELOPE'S FATAL CURIOSITY.

In a letter to a contemporary from a mis- sionary on the Congo, the following inci- dent is related:

"One day when I was encamped by the Luvu River, I took up my rifle and started out in the hope of shooting an antelope, if possible. We had not gone far when we saw some on the hills; but the question with me, having had no experience with such game was, how to stalk them? My native companion, however, soon settled the diffi- culty for me. 'I will stand here,' said he, 'while you go down the valley. All the time you are going I will wave this white cloth. The antelopes will stare at it out of curiosity, and you will easily get up close and shoot.' I followed his advice, and was able to approach within fifty yards. When I fired, the animal was so engrossed with the object in the distance, that I was quite unnoticed. His curiosity was the means of his death. 'Ah,' I thought, 'Satan, too, holds up his dazzling objects in the view of many; and too often, by means of the most trivial devices, succeeds in de- stroying both body and soul!' And, indeed, we are all in danger of being ensnared by our curiosity."

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

WANTED, AGENTS to sell "THE CHRIST- IAN'S LEGACY."

Introduction by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. One agent writes, "I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 59 orders." I will pay $25 towards Dr. Talnage's new church, in the name of the agent, for every new agent hired from this advertisement, who sells 50 copies of the "Legacy." Usual profits to the agent. Address, W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

P. D. & S. Pens

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.!
Send 10 cents for Sample Card with 12 Pens. A. S. BARNES & Co., New York.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City.
SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address.
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

OILOGRAPH AGENTS WANTED.

per day collecting small pictures for us to copy and enlarge. Satis- faction guaranteed and a $4 outfit free. Address, A. DUNNE & Co., 56 Reade St., N.Y. Name Christ'n Herald

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

RIDLEY'S

Grand St., N. Y.

LOWEST PRICES

prevail for, Dress Goods, Dress Silks, Velvets, Laces, Trimmings, Trimmed and untrimmed Millinery, Straw Hats and Bonnets, together with all other requirements for either wear or house- hold.

LADIES' AND MISSES'

WRAPS, JACKETS, CAPES.

PARIS MADE SILK AND JET WRAPS, Deep Fringe, $7.50; cost to import $10.00.

TAILOR-MADE JACKETS, in wide-wale or diagonal Reefer Front, or tight fitting, extra good quality, at $4.90 and $6.50.

GUIPURE LACE SHOULDER CAPES, trimmed ribbon, at $3.90 and $5.50.

MISSES' OUTING COATS.

DOUBLE-BREADED, Navy blue, red, or tan, at $1.25, $1.56, and $2.00.

MISSES' SUITS

IN ALL - WOOL PLAID or PLAIN COLORS, full trimmed, puff sleeves, size, 4 to 12 years, $3.90; worth $6.00.

Ridley's Fashion Magazine

FOR SPRING & SUMMER.

This splendid double number contains 2,000 illustrations of the goods to be found in our 85 departments, with lowest New York prices.

15 Cents Sample Copy; subscription 50c. year.

EDWARD RIDLEY & SONS,

309, 311, 311½ to 321 Grand Street.

56 to 68 ALLEN, 59 to 65 ORCHARD St.,

PURE SONGS FOR CHORUS AND SOLOISTS
SUNDAY SCHOOLS 35¢ EACH
PRAYER AND PRAISE 35¢ EACH
GENERAL USE 75¢ EACH
TWO BEST BOOKS OF THE DAY 75¢ EACH
B. A. S. HAYGOOD & E. M. MCINTOSH, Publishers, 109 N. 3rd St., Philadelphia, Pa.
ADDER J. W. BURKE & CO. MACON, GA.

YOU CAN LAY BY $500 TO $1500 a year by working for us. You can't do it in any surer or simpler way no matter how you try. We furnish capital and pay liberally those who work either whole or part time. Stamp not required for answer. JNO. C. WINSTON & Co., Pubs., Philadelphia, Chicago, Kansas City.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & Co., 109 Main St., Richmond, Va.

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address on a postal for free sample copy of Phrenological Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "TEAT BOY OF MINE, and What to do with Him." Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 77 Broadway, N. Y.

CARPETS

AT EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS.

500 PIECES ROYAL WILTONS.
PIECES WILTON VELVETS.
PIECES BODY BRUSSELS.
PIECES EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.

TO CLOSE OUT QUICKLY.

MATTINGS.

FINE JAPANESE AND CHINA STRAW MAT- TINGS. LARGEST STOCK IN THE CITY.
OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION.

White, Red Check and Fancy Patterns, FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS. ALSO FINE SEAMLESS JAPANESE MAT- TINGS AT $8 PER ROLL.

100 Pieces Warehouse Samples, Finest Quality, not regularly numbered, at greatly reduced prices.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS

AND

LACE CURTAINS

IN GREAT VARIETY AT LOWEST PRICES.

FURNITURE,

Our own upholstering, at moderate prices. Agents for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.

We make a specialty of furnishing com- plete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Sum- mer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.,

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,

827 and 829 Broadway, New York,

HERMANN SCHARFFER, President; ERNEST BENDER, Vice-President.

NONE THIS GENUINE TRADE WITHOUT MARK.

Note our Trade Mark Closely!

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment of

SUMMER UNDERWEAR,

And Especially to our exquisite

All-Wool GAUZE

Underwear for the hot, summer season.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Specialty.

Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,

827 and 829 Broadway, New York.

BRANCH HOUSES:

119 NASSAU ST., Temple Court Building;

504 FULTON ST., next to Y.M.C.A. Bldg., Brooklyn, N.Y.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY. DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885, 1885-1886. No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An in- vention as Useful as the Sewing Ma- chine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO. 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED BY Peck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Com- fortable. Successful where all Remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOP, only, 668 B'dway, New York. Write for book of proofs FREE.

"WHOM HAVING NOT SEEN, YE LOVE."—1 PETER, 1: 8.

Saviour, my feet have never trod with Thine
The "solitary place,"
My eyes have never seen, in human form,
Thy manifested grace;
My hands have never touched Thy garment's hem
With faith's unuttered plea,
Nor has Thou tarried, when the day was spent,
And broken bread with me:—

But, Lord, my rescued feet are steadfast set Upon the King's Highway,
And though as yet I may not see Thy face,
I follow on each day;
My waiting eyes are unto Thee, dear Lord,
In whom I live and move,
Whose love, believed in, is the fullest joy
That earth or heaven can prove.

The needs-be of Thy ways may not be clear
To my imperfect sight;
Love trusts Thee wholly, where it cannot trace,
And knows that all is right.
It is enough for me by faith to stay
My hidden life on Thee,
And in the secret of Thy covenant
To rest implicitly.

I know that Thou art gone to beautify
A place in Heaven for me,
And when Thou comest to take Thy children home
I shall be like to Thee.
Then shall I wake, and see Thee eye to eye,
Whom now, unseen, I love;
Faith's darkly visioned glass exchanged at last
For rapturous sight above.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.
will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The tortures of dyspepsia and sick headache, the sufferings of scrofula, the agonizing itch and pain of salt rheum, the disagreeable symptoms of catarrh, are removed by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

WHY DO MOTHERS

put stiff corsets on their CROWLING CHILDREN?
We beg of you don't do it but
BE SURE TO BUY FERRIS'

GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS.

THOUSANDS NOW IN USE.

Best for Health, Economy and Beauty.

BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS.

Ring Buckle at hip

for Hose supporters.

Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off.

Cord-Edge Button

Holes—won't tear out

FIT ALL AGES—

Infants to Adults.

Sold by Leading

RETAILERS

everywhere.

Send for Circular,

FERRIS BROS.,

Manufacturers,

341 BROADWAY,

NEW YORK.

MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO,
WHOLESALE WESTERN AGENTS.

For Women Only.

The following letter, a fair sample of what we receive almost daily, fully explains our success:
58 ONTARIO ST., COHOES, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:

I have used your Family Buttonhole Attachment on my sewing machine for 5 months, and recommend it to all dressmakers and families. The buttonholes are perfect.

Respectfully, Mrs. W. H. JOHNSON.
Enclose stamp for sample of work and particulars, and be sure to mention this publication.

THE SMITH & EGGE MFG CO.,
17 East 16th St., New York.

3 MONTHS FOR 10c.

To secure at once for our popular magazine, NATIONAL HOUSEKEEPING, THE GREAT-EST OF ALL HOME JOURNALS, 25,000 new subscribers AT ONCE, we will send it three months for only 10c. Regular subscription, $1.00. NATIONAL HOUSEKEEPING is a full 36-page magazine, with a hand-colored cover each issue. It is complete on all home subjects, PRACTICAL COOKING RECIPIES, Kitchen and Dining Room, Home Decoration, Bric-a-brac, Needle Work, Short Stories of Travel and Serials by our best authors. Historical Notes, &c. Subscribe now, as you will never have such an offer again. Address, National Housekeeping, 72 Cortland Street, New York City.

Pastors and S. S. Sup'ts.

Send name and address on postal card, and receive free copies of Sunday School Supplies. Address, Rev. F. W. RAIDABAUGH, Cleveland, Ohio.

ENGLISH DECORATED

Dinner Set, No. 90, 112 Pieces.

Premium with an order of $20.00.

Or packed and delivered at depot for $9.00 Cash. We have hundreds of other Sets, plain and decorated.

THE LONDON TEA CO., 805 Washington Street, Boston.

WINNOWN SONGS

BY IRA D. SANKEY.

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

This New Book of 224 pages has been prepared especially for Sunday Schools. It contains 257 Hymns. Every piece a Gem. It is equal in size and number of hymns to books of its class sold at 50 cents, but in many essentials is very much superior.

Any number of Books sent by Express at 35 cents per copy, Charges Not Prepaid. If by mail, add 5 cents a copy for postage. Sample Copies for Examination sent, postage paid, on receipt of 35c. Specimen pages free. May be ordered through any Bookseller or Music Dealer.

BIGLOW & MAIN,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.
81 Randolph St., Chicago.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.
74 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati.
19 East 16th Street, New York.

There must be some reason for it

We never have compelled anyone to use Pearlina. We'd like to, but it isn't feasible. Besides, it isn't necessary. Millions use Pearlina, and have tested and proved it. It's too old to be unknown, if it were a fraud, but where is the thing as popular and yet so young? If you know Pearlina, you know the reason. In all washing and cleaning, there's nothing that saves as much labor and does as much work. It hurts nothing, saves wear on everything, costs no more than common soap and is more economical. Reasons enough for most women; think, are they not good enough for you?

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearlina." IT'S FALSE—Pearlina is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearlina, do the honest thing—send it back. 176 JAMES PYLE, New York.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S

ROSES AND SEEDS

ING VINES, New Hardy FLOWERING PLANTS, New Summer FLOWERING BULBS, ALL THE FINEST NEW ROSES, New CHRYSANTHEMUMS, GLADIOLUS, TUBEROSES, New MOON FLOWERS, New and Rare FLOWER & VEGETABLE SEEDS. New GRAPES. Satisfaction guaranteed. OUR NEW GUIDE, 116 pp., handsomely illustrated. Write for it FREE. It will pay you to see it before buying. Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Rose Growers and Seedsmen, West Grove, Pa.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF 34 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Once Tried, Always Used."

Ask your Grocer for it, take no other.

AGENTS Proof $100 month made selling our new Talmage Book, also Mother, Home and Heaven, by F. L. Cuyler, $2.75. 10,000 Curiosities of the Bible, $2. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York.

PEWES SEATINGS AND FURNISHINGS for Churches, Halls, Sunday Schools, &c. Send for Catalogues, mentioning this paper. FORSYTHE & CO., 135 Degraw St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WE ARE IMPORTERS of Tea and Coffee, China and Crockery, and do the largest Tea and Coffee business in Boston, direct with consumers. We also carry a large stock and sell at the lowest possible cash prices Dinner and Tea Sets, Silver-plated Ware, Lamps, etc. To those who take the time and trouble to get up Clubs for Tea, Coffee, Spices and Extracts, we offer premiums. In buying Tea and Coffee from us you get full value for the money invested, and get a premium, and you get goods that are direct from the IMPORTERS. If you buy Tea and Coffee from your grocer you pay three or four profits and pay for a premium, but do not get it. In an article published in one of the largest dailies in this country, it was claimed the tea bought from the retail grocer showed a profit of 100 per cent. The moral is plain—buy from first hands.

We have been doing business in Boston for 16 years, and the publishers of this paper will tell you of our undoubted reliability. We do a business of over $300,000 yearly, and our Cash sales of Dinner, Tea and Toilet Sets, Silver Ware, Lamps, etc. amounted to $41,000 in 1889, aside from our Tea and Coffee sales. (Rogers' Knives, $3.50 per dozen). Our Illustrated Price and Premium list tells the whole story. We like to mail it to all who write for it; it costs you nothing and will interest you. 120 pages.

THE LONDON TEA CO., 805 Washington Street, Boston.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED ANCIENT EDITION

A so-called "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary" is being offered to the public at a very low price. The body of the from A to Z, is a cheap reprint, page, of the edition of 1847, which its day, a valuable book, but in the gross of language for over FORTY YEARS has been completely superseded, now reproduced, broken type, errors all, by photo-lithograph process, is on cheap paper and flimsily bound, brief comparison, page by page, be the reprint and the latest and best edition, will show the great superiority of the latter. These reprints are of date as a last year's almanac. No honorable dealer will allow the buyer of to suppose that he is getting the Web and THE BEST,—every copy of bears our imprint as given below.

If persons who have been induced to purchase the "Ancient Edition" by misrepresentations will advise us of facts, we will undertake to see that the seller is punished as he deserves.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO.
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

PIANOS UNIVERSAL

$150 to $1500 ESTAB. 1859. INCORP.

PRICE They Lead the World
Sent for trial in your own home.
ABSOLUTELY PERFECT
Sold Direct to families. No Middle-men.
DON'T BUY A POOR PIANO!
Cat. Free.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO. 235 E. 21st St., N.Y. $35 to $150

W. P. RICE, Pres't. UNION O.F.Sec'y

INVESTMENT KANSAS CITY, MO.

Paid up Capital, $1,000,000

SPECIAL OFFER A Guaranteed Business Property centrally located in Kansas City with 50 per cent. of the net profits added.

Indorsed by Prominent Businessmen, Bankers and Capitalists: H. P. STIMSON, Pres. American National Bank; E. L. MARTIN, Pres. Mercantile Bank; HON. T. B. BULLENE, Ex-Mayor; B. T. WHIPPLE & CO., Real Estate & Insurance; HON. WILLIAM WARNER, Late Comptroller; Chief G. A. R. and Ex-Member of Congress; WALTON H. HOLMES, Pres. G. A. Cab; L. R. MOORE, Director Nat. Bank of Kansas; E. C. SATTLEY, Cashier Kansas City Savings Bank.

By permission we refer to any of the above gentlemen. Send for circulars containing description of property and full particulars.

THE NEW MODEL, OUR LATEST and BEST MOWER.

Endorsed by Leading Dentists.

NON-IRRITATING TO GUMS OR ENAMEL

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS

BAILEY'S COMPOUND

light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS. A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 118 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Great CHURCH LIGHT

Frank's Patent Reflectors for Gas, Oil or Electric, give the most powerful, softest, cheapest, and best light known for Churches, Stores, Banks, Theatres, Depots, etc. New and elegant designs. Send size of room. Get circular and estimate. A liberal discount to churches & the trade. Don't be deceived by cheap imitations. I. P. FRANK, 651 Pearl St., N.Y.

METAL CEILINGS. BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores, and Residences. H. S. NORTROP, 18 Rose Street, New York.

BERCHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BERCHAM'S PILLS.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.
 EDITOR.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

Vol. XIII., No. 20. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

TRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. STEPHEN MERRITT, and Pictures of Jane Street M. E. Church, New York, and Its Mission Chapels.
 ASCENSION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
 BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER: A Nun's Struggle with a Maniac, etc.
 SHUT DOOR. By Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D.
 FROM NEW BOOKS: Money Lent to the Lord—A Conflict with Satan, Etc.
 TRAIT OF THE MARQUIS TSENG.

FOR HUMBLE FOLKS. A New Sermon by H. Spurgeon.
 OPPORTUNITY. A Story of the S. S.
 A MISSED Golden Text.
 PICTURE OF A CHINESE LADY MISSIONARY AND A PICTURE OF A SCENE ON MR. H. M. STANLEY'S MARCH TO THE SEA.
 WILL IT LIFT? By Rev. J. Jackson Wray.
 A Crocodile's Prey—A Story Instead of Ravens—No Impediment Removed, Etc.
 Change in the Text—An Opportunity. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
 MISSION OF THE SEVEN

JANE STREET M. E. CHURCH, NEW YORK—REV. STEPHEN MERRITT.

1. Madison Street Mission—2. The Annex—3. Franklin Street Church—4. Jane Street Church—5. Assembly Hall—6. Roosevelt Street Rescue Mission.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

THE ASCENSION.

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in." Ps. 24: 7.

The First Sight of Mount Olivet—Climbing the Mountain—Its Historical Associations—The Lord's Good-bye—His Triumph Over Natural Law—Gravitation Powerless to Hold Him—Rising Above the World—His View of the Places of His Suffering—His Welcome in Heaven—Enters in Human Form—Will Be Seen as He Looked on Earth—A Surgeon Who Gave Sight to the Blind—Christ Breaking His Own Laws—The Prayer of Faith Saving the Sick—His Last Gesture—Benediction of the Nations.

IN olden times when a great conqueror returned from victorious war, the people in wild transport would take hold of the gates of the city and lift them from their hinges, as much as to say: "This city needs no more gates to defend it since this conqueror has got home. Off from the hinges with the gates!" David, who was the poet of poets, foretells in his own way the triumphal entrance of Christ into heaven, after His victory over sin and death and hell. It was as if the celestial inhabitants had said: "Here He comes! Make way for Him! Push back the bolts of diamond! Take hold of the doors of pearl and hoist them from their hinges of gold! Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of Glory shall come in."

Among the mountains of Palestine no one is more uplifting than Mount Olivet. It was the peroration of our Lord's ministry. On the roof of a house in Jerusalem I asked, "Which is Olivet?" and the first glance transfixed me. But how shall I describe my emotions, when, near the close of a journey, in which we had for two nights encamped amid the shattered masonry of old Jericho, and tasted of the acrid waters of the Dead Sea, that crystal sarcophagus of the buried cities of the plain, and waded down into the deep and swift Jordan to baptize a man, and visited the ruins of the house of Mary and Martha and Lazarus, we found ourselves in stirrups and on horse, lathered with the long and difficult way.

Ascending Mount Olivet!

Oh, that solemn and suggestive ridge! It is a limestone hill, a mile in length, and three hundred feet high, and twenty-seven hundred feet above the level of the sea. Over it King David fled with a broken heart. Over it Pompey led his devastating hosts. Here the famous Tenth Legion built their batteries in besiegement. The Garden of Gethsemane weeps at the foot of it. Along the base of this hill flashed the lanterns and torches of those who came to arrest Jesus. From the trees on this hill the boughs were torn off and thrown into the path of Christ's triumphal procession. Up and down that road Jesus had walked twice a day from Bethany to Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem to Bethany. There, again and again, He had taught His disciples. Half way up this mount He uttered His lamentation, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" From its heights Jesus took flight homeward when He had finished His earthly mission. There is nothing more for Him to do. A sacrifice was needed to make peace between the recreant earth and the outraged heaven, and He had offered it. Death needed to be conquered, and He had put His resurrection foot upon it. The thirty-three years of voluntary exile had ended. The grandest, tenderest, mightiest Good-bye ever heard was now to be uttered.

The Lord's Good-bye.

On Mount Olivet Jesus stands in a group of Galilee fishermen. They had been together in many scenes of sadness and persecution and had been the more endeared by that brotherhood of suffering. They had expected Him to stay until the day of coronation when He would take the earthly throne and wave a sceptre mightier, and rule a dominion wider, than any Pharaoh, than any David, than any Cæsar. But now all these anticipations collapse. Christ has given His last advice. He has offered His last sympathy. He has spoken His last word. His hands are spread apart as one is apt to do when he pronounces a benediction, when suddenly the strongest and most stupendous law of all worlds is shattered. It is the law which, since the worlds were created, holds them together. It is the law which holds everything to the earth or, temporarily hurled from earth, returns it; the law which keeps the planets whirling around our sun, and our solar system whirling around other systems, and all the systems whirling around the throne of God—the law of gravitation. That law is suspended, or relaxed, or broken, to let the body of Jesus go. That law had laid hold of him thirty-three years before, when He descended. It had relaxed its grip of Him but once, and that when it declined to sink Him from the top of the waves on Lake Galilee, on which He walked, to the bottom of the lake. That law of gravitation must now give way to Him who made the law. It may hold the other stars, but it cannot longer hold the Morning Star of the Redemption. It may hold the noonday sun, but it cannot hold the Sun of Righteousness. The fingers of that law are about to open to let go the most illustrious Being the world had ever seen, and whom it had worst maltreated. The strongest law of nature which philosophers ever weighed or measured must at last give way. It will break between the rock of Olivet and the heel of Christ's foot. Watch it, all ye disciples! Watch it, all the earth! Watch it, all the heavens!

Christ About to Leave

this planet. How? His friends will not consent to have Him go. His enemies catching Him would only attempt by another Calvary, to put Him into some other tomb. I will tell you how. The chain of the most tremendous natural law is unlinked. The sacred foot of our Lord and the limestone rock part, and part forever.

Leaning back, and with pallid cheek and uplifted eyes, the disciples see their Lord rising from the solid earth. Then, rushing forward they would grasp his feet to hold Him fast, but they are out of reach, and it is too late to detain Him. Higher than the tops of the fig-trees from which they had plucked the fruit. Higher than the olive-trees that shaded the mount. Higher, until He is within sight of the Bethlehem where He was born, and the Jordan where He was baptized, and the Golgotha where He was slain. Higher, until on stairs of fleecy cloud He steps. Higher, until, into a sky bluer than the lake that could not sink Him, He disappears into a sea of glory whose billowing splendors hide Him. The fishermen watch and watch, wondering if the law of nature will not reassert itself, and He shall in a few moments come back again, and they shall see Him descending; first His scarred feet coming in sight, then the scarred side, then the scarred brow, and they may take again His scarred hand. But the moments pass by, and the hours, and no reappearance. Gone out of sight of earth, but come within sight of heaven. And rising still, not welcomed by one angelic choir like those who one Christmas night escorted Him down, but back to His home, and the temples have especial anthem, and the palaces especial banquet, and the streets especial throngs; and all along the line to the foot of the throne, for years vacated but now again to be taken, there are arches lifted, and banners waved, and trumpets sounded, and doxologies chanted, and coronets cast down.

All Heaven Turns Out to Greet Him

The angels throng'd His chariot wheels,
And bore Him to His throne;
Then swept their golden harps and sung
"The glorious work is done."

It was the greatest day in heaven! As He goes up the steps of the throne that thirty-three years before He abdicated for our advantage, there rises from all the hosts of heaven a shout, saintly, cherubic, seraphic, archangelic, "Hallelujah! Amen!"

"O garden of olives, thou dear honored spot,
The fame of thy glory shall ne'er be forgot."

No wonder that for at least fourteen hundred years the churches have, forty days after Easter, kept Ascension-Day; for the lessons are most inspiring and glorious. It takes much of the uncertainty out of the idea of heaven, when from Olivet we see human nature ascending.

The Same Body

that rose from Joseph's tomb ascended from Mount Olivet. Our human nature is in heaven to-day. Just as they had seen Christ for forty days, He ascended, head, face, shoulders, hands, feet, and the entire human organism. Humanity ascended! Ah, how closely that keeps Christ in sympathy with those who are still in the struggle! Ascended scars, face scars, hand scars, feet scars, shoulder scars! That will keep Him in accord with all the suffering, with all the weary, with all the imposed-upon. No more is He a spirit now than a body, no more of heaven than earth. Those of the celestial inhabitants who never saw our world, now walk around Him and learn from His physical contour something of what our race will be when, in the resurrection, he will have uncounted bodies as well as uncounted spirits. On Ascension-Day He lifted Him through the atmosphere of Palestine until, at the immensities, He disappeared. He was the one being the world ever saw who could lift Him. Surely, if He could lift Himself, He can do lesser deed of lifting us.

"No star goes down but climbs another sky,
No sun sets here except to rise on high."

Christ leads us all the way: through the hour, for He was born in Bethlehem; through the hood, for He passed it in Nazareth; through the justices, for He endured the outrages of Pilate's court-room; through death, for He suffered in Calvary; through the sepulchre, for He lay three days within its darkened walls; through resurrection, for the solid masonry gave way on the Easter morning; through ascension, for Mount Olivet watched Him as He climbed the stairs through the shining gates, for He entered it amid magnificent acclaim. And here is a grand consideration that you never thought of: will see our Lord just as He looked on earth. He rose from the tomb He ascended from Mount Olivet. We shall see Him as He looked on road to Emmaus, as He appeared in the room in Jerusalem, as He was that day of victory on the ridge from which He swung into skies. How much

We Will Want to See Him!

I was reading of a man born blind. He was tried to one who took care of him all those years of darkness. A surgeon said to him, "I can remove that blindness," and so he did. His sight given him, a rose was handed to the man who never before had seen a rose and he was in admiration, and his family whom he had never seen before now appeared to him, and he was in tears of joy, when he suddenly cried out: "I ought first have asked to see the one who cured me; show me the doctor." When from our eyes the scales of earth shall fall, and we have our first vision of heaven, our first cry ought not to be, "Where are the loved ones?" Our first cry ought to be, "Who is Christ, who made all this possible? Show me the Doctor!" Glory be to God for ascended humanity. Could we realize it, and that it is all in sympathy for us, we would have as cool a courage in the midst of this life as had Charles the Twelfth who was dictating dispatches to his secretary, as a bombshell fell into the room, and the secretary dropped his pen and attempted flight. Christ said to him: "Go on with your writing! what the bombshell to do with the letter I am dictating. If the ascended Christ be on our side, not should disturb us.

"Our fellow-Sufferer yet retains
A fellow-feeling in our pains,
And still remembers, in the skies,
His tears, His agonies, and cries."

I am so glad that Christ broke the natural law of gravitation when He shook off from His feet the clutch of Mount Olivet. People talk as though the cold, iron, unsympathetic, natural law controlled everything. The reign of Law is a Majestic Thing,

but the God who made it has a right to break it, and again and again has broken it, and again will break it. A law is only God's way of doing things, and if He chooses to do them in another way, He has a right to do so. A law is strong enough to shackle the Almighty. Christ broke botanical law when, one Monday morning in March, on the way from Bethany to Jerusalem, a few words He turned a full-leaved fig-tree into a lifeless stick. He broke ichthyological law when, without any natural inducement, He swung a school of fish into a part of Lake Tiberias, where the fishermen had cast their nets for eight hours without the capture of a minnow; and making a fish help pay the tax by yielding from its mouth a Roman stater. Christ broke the law of storms by compelling, with a word, the angry winds to hush its frenzy, and the winds to quit their howling. He broke zoölogical law when He made the devils possess the swine of Gadara. He broke the law of economics when He made enough bread for five thousand people out of five biscuits, which would not ordinarily have been enough for the hungry. He broke intellectual law when, with a word, He silenced a maniac into placidity. He broke physiological law when, by a touch, he straightened a woman who, for eighteen years, had been bent almost double, and when he put a the foot of inhumated Lazarus, and when, ut medicine, He gave the dying girl back in to the Syro-Phœnician mother, and when ade the palatial home of the nobleman re-again with the laughter of his restored boy, then, without knife or battery, He set cata-eyes to seeing again, and the drum of deaf vibrating again, and the nerves of paralyzed o thrilling again, and then when in leaving th He defied all atmospheric law and physi-ol law, and that law which has in it withes and and girders enough to hold the universe, the gravitation.

Christ who proved Himself on so many oc-s, and especially the last, superior to law, es; and every day, in answer to prayer for od of the world,

He is Overriding the Law.

d be God that we are not the subjects of blind but of a sympathizing divinity. Have you seen a typhoid fever break, or a storm sud-quiet, or a ship a-beam's-end right itself, or ift, or a parched sky break in showers, or a city disentangled, or the inconsolable take or the wayward reform at the call of prayer?
seen it; multitudes have seen it. You have, have been willing to see it. Deride not the
are. Because impostors attempt it, is nothagainst good men whom God hath honored arvellous restorations. Pronounce nothing ible to prayer and trust. Because you and I ffect it, is no reason why others may not.
same argument I could prove that Raphael ainted a Madonna, and that Mendelssohn wrote an oratorio, and that Phidias never ed a statue. Because we cannot accomplish elves, we are not to conclude that others may There are in immensity great ranges of mists have proved, under closer telescopic scru-be the storehouse of worlds, and I do not ut from that passage in James, which, to f us is yet misty and dim, there may roll out heaven and a new earth, "The prayer of all save the sick." The faith-curists may, war against disease, be only skirmishing be-general engagement, in which all the malaearth shall be routed. Surely, allopathy and pathy and hydropathy and eclecticism need ement from somewhere. Why not from the id prayer of the consecrated? The mightool of medicine may yet be the school of I do not know but that diseases, now by ools pronounced incurable, may give way ospel bombardment. I do not know but e day may come when faith and prayer shall e dead. Strauss and Woolston and Spinoza me and Schleiermacher rejected the mira-he far past. I do not propose to be like nd reject the miracles of the far future.
now, the Christ of Ascension-Day is might-any natural laws, for on the day of which He trampled down the strongest of them is mighty, but He who made it is mightier.
at fatality from your theology, and give e throne.

ing to-day on the Ascension peak of Olivet I am also gladdened at

The Closing Gesture,

gesture that Christ ever made. "He His hands and blessed them," says the in-count of our Lord's departure. I am so lifted up His hands. Gestures are often gnificant than words, attitudes than argu-Christ had made a gesture of contempt ith His finger He wrote on the ground;
of repulsion when He said, "Get thee be-Satan;" gesture of condemnation when "Woe unto you, Pharisees and hypocrites."
last gesture, His Olivetic gesture, is a gesbenediction. He lifted up His hands and them. His arms are extended, and the His hands turned downward, and so He benediction upon Olivet, benediction upon e, benediction upon all the earth.

ruel world took Him in at the start on a f straw, and at last thrust Him out with the the spear; but benediction! Ascending until He saw on one side the Bethlehem where t Him among the cattle, and Calvary on er side, where they put Him among the
As far as the excited and intensified the group on Olivet could see Him, and was so far up they could no longer hear ds, they saw the gesture of the outspread he benediction. And that is His attitude to-day. His benediction upon the world's climates, and they are changing, and will keep on changing until the atmosphere shall be a commingling of October and June. Benediction upon the deserts till they whiten with lily, and blush with rose, and yellow with cowslip, and emerald with grass.

Benediction upon governments till they become more just and humane. Benediction upon nations till they kneel in prayer. Benediction upon the whole earth until every mountain is an Olivet of consecration, and every lake a Galilee on whose mosaic of crystal, and opal, and sapphire divine spendors shall walk. Oh, take the benediction of His pardon, sinners young, and sinners old, sinners moderate, and sinners abandoned. Take the benediction of His comfort, all ye broken-hearted under bereavement, and privation, and myriad woes.
Take His benediction, all ye sick-beds, whether under acute spasms of pain, or in long-protracted invalidism. For orphanage, and childlessness, and widowhood a benediction. For cradles and trundle-beds, and rocking-chairs of octogenarians, a benediction. For life and for death, for time and for eternity, for earth and for heaven, a benediction. Sublimest gesture ever made, the last gesture of our ascending Lord. "And He lifted up His hands, and blessed them."

Our Attitude.

Is our attitude the same? Is it the clenched fist or the open palm? Is it wrath or is it kindness?
Is it diabolism or Christism? God give us the grace of the open palm, open upward to get the benediction, open downward to pronounce a benediction. A lady was passing along a street and suddenly ran against a ragged boy, and she said:
"I beg your pardon, my boy, I did not mean to run against you; I am very sorry." And the boy took off the piece of a cap he had upon his head and said:
"You have my parding, lady, and you may run agin me and knock me clear down; I won't care."
And turning to a comrade he said: "That nearly took me off my feet. Nobody ever asked my par-ding before." Kindness! Kindness! Fill the world with it. There has always been too much of disregard of others. Illustrated in 1630, in England, when ninety-five thousand acres of marshes were drained for health and for crop-raising, and the sportsmen destroyed the drainage-works because they wanted to keep the marshes for hunting-ground, where they could shoot wild-ducks. The same selfishness in all ages. Oh, for kindness that would make our life a symphony suggestive of one of the ancient banquets where everything was set to music; the plates brought in and removed to the sound of music, the motions of the carvers keeping time with the music, the conversation lifting and dropping with the rising and falling of the music. But, instead of the music of an earthly orchestra, it would be the music of a heavenly charm, our words the music of kind thoughts, our steps the music of helpful deeds, our smile the music of encouraging looks, our youth and old age the first and last bars of music conducted by the pierced-hand that was opened in love and spread downward in benediction on Olivetic heights on Ascension-Day.

"By a new way none ever trod, Christ mounted to the throne of God."

AN INDIAN'S WORK AMONG INDIANS.

THE story of a tour among the Indians of Dakota is told in the American Missionary by Rev. James F. Cross, who is establishing schools and mission stations in the reservation. Among other places he visited was the station where Spotted Bear is at work for his brethren. "Spotted Bear," says Mr.
Cross, "who is the native teacher and preacher at Northfield Station, has gone to work with earnestness and enthusiasm. Here is a large community, perhaps fifty houses, heathen to the core. Beyond him few know anything of Christianity. Spotted Bear has an evening school of twenty or more young men. He teaches Dakota, and as much English as he can. A few can read. These he puts into a Bible class. The New Testament is the text-book. On Sunday he holds two or three services, and the house is always full. A larger room is needed at once. To build this will be my first spring work. The value of just such work as this cannot be overestimated. Spotted Bear himself got his education in just such a school.

"Here is a man, who by his life is denying what nine out of every ten men in the United States are saying: 'It is no use to work among the adult Indians.' He was twenty-five and over before he commenced study of any kind. He is now a citizen, church officer, teacher, preacher, all of which require a fair amount of intelligence and information. His work, too, is invaluable if the aim is to change the Indian to an American citizen. In this village this one room, only, is the opening to civilization. Some of the young men are tired of Indian ways. They think the dance is something that ought to be thrown away. These young men now have a place to spend their evenings, beyond the dance-house. These houses and native helpers break down more superstition and Indian life than any other influence on the reservation. In the matter of dress it is the same. Here is an Indian woman who is not ashamed to wear a dress like a white woman. The teachers in the day-schools complain that they cannot get the girls to wear the civilized dress when they leave school.

And Indian dresses mean Indian dirt and careles-ness. One Indian woman advocating 'dress reform' by example, will do more than any teacher on the reservation.'

A NIGHT MISSIONARY AMONG THIEVES.

THE story of an adventure among New York thieves is told in Dr. Gordon's Watchword by Mr.
H. B. Gibbud, the devoted missionary who for many years spent his nights in going about the streets of New York, rescuing the friendless and fallen. He says that one night, or, rather, in the small hours of the morning, he was in Pell Street, the Chinese quarter, and also the headquarters of the dreaded Whyo gang of toughs. "It is only one block long, and runs from the Bowery to Mott Street. On one side of the street are a number of tumble-down tenements inhabited by a colony of Chinese, who run gambling dens and "opium-joints." On the other side there are a number of stables, and several cheap lodging-houses, where, for seven cents, one can find shelter and a place in which to lie down. Half-way down the block a dark lane, with the local name of "Shin-bone
Alley," runs around into the Bowery."

He spoke to a poor, ragged boy, who was trying to get asleep on an ash-box. As he was trying to say a word for the Master, a rough voice from a wagon, which was left without its horses by the sidewalk for the night, summoned the boy by the name of "Dutchy." "It's de gang," Dutchy explained, by way of excusing himself, as he promptly responded to the call by running to the wagon.
Mr. Gibbud heard the voices of several men inside the vehicle. "Listening closely," he says, "I learned from several allusions that they were planning to rob me. I now began to realize that I had "fallen among thieves," and to debate what was the best course to pursue. My fears strongly suggested flight, but another voice from within kept saying, 'He that hath my word let him speak my word faithfully.'
And was not here a chance to speak the 'wonderful words of life' to some who, perhaps, had never heard of Jesus and the great salvation? So, praying for wisdom, I awaited further developments.
In a few minutes several of the roughs got out of the wagon and gathered around me. One said,
'Boss, give us seven cents till we git a pint er beer
ter wash der cobwebs ouden our t'roats.'

"I saw the time for action had come, so I said,
'See here, boys, I want to give you a bit of advice.
When you go to rob any one, never pick out a missionary, for they are always as poor as a church mouse, and never have anything worth stealing.
Now, I'm a missionary, so I can save you the trouble of going through my clothes.' As they stood speechless, I told them the story of the cross, and how Christ in the agonies of death stopped to save a dying thief, and took him as a companion to paradise, and that if there was salvation for a dying thief there was certainly a chance for living ones, if they would only come to the same Saviour. I urged them to quit their life of sin and to follow Christ. When I turned to go away I said, 'Boys, I want you to remember me. Will you do it?'

"Corkey spoke up and said, 'Wall now, young feller, I've ben round dese corners for de last seven year, an' you're the fust un I ever seed round here preachin' religion. Yer kin bet yer bottom dollar
I won't furgit yer phiz.'

"This first meeting led to many other quiet talks, and to much seed-sowing among this and other gangs of thieves; and I trust much good has been done. One of their number, to escape a detective, ran into the mission meeting, and, to use his own words, 'was caught by the Great Detective, and kept from stealing and everything else that is wicked.' Worthy the Lamb to receive all the glory!"

JANE STREET M. E. CHURCH, NEW YORK.

Its Missions and its Pastor.

The Power of Enthusiasm—The Beginning of the Work—A Dilapidated, Forsaken Church—The New Pastor—A Fire Kindled—A Great Revival—The Development—A Band of Zealous Workers Gathered—Looking for New Fields—The Annex Opened—The William Taylor Self-Supporting Missionary Society—The Franklin Street and Madison Street Churches—Their Peculiar Situation—The Assembly Hall—Work—Reaching Down to a Lower Depth—The New Project—Personal History of Mr. Merritt.

A DISTINGUISHED writer, who was one of the most brilliant of the pioneers of that movement which, in our day, has swept over and through the churches, shaking the dry bones of creeds, and arousing men to energetic Christian activity, insists that "the enthusiasm of humanity" is indispensable to the realization of Christ's ideal of His kingdom on earth. We have seen that enthusiasm in action, and we have glorified God as we have seen the results. An illustration, selected, not on account of any superiority in it to thousands of others, but because it is typical of thousands which could be found in this and other lands at the present time, we give here, with pictures on the first page of the buildings which it has taken into service, and a portrait of the man whose strong faith and energy have placed him at the head of it. The work is that of the Jane Street Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York, under the charge of the Rev. Stephen Merritt—a work that has grown beyond the church itself, and has scattered seed all around, which is growing up and flourishing with beneficent results, to thousands of precious souls in neglected fields.

The Beginning of the work dates no further back than 1888. At that time Jane Street Church was a forsaken enterprise, of which those who knew it best despaired. It was down-town; it was away from the homes of people who are devoted to real religious work; the building was in a most dilapidated condition; its services were so sparsely attended and so devoid of interest that it was decided to sell the church building. At the last moment some old friends of the cause stepped in, and invoked the power of the courts to restrain the sale. Mr. Merritt, who then had charge of the Franklin Street Church, was requested to look after it, and see if its old-time power could not be revived. For about a year he was responsible for both churches. He preached morning and evening at one or the other, and secured supplies for the services that he did not take himself. He held an evangelistic service in the Jane Street Church every night of the week, and at those meetings there were strange scenes.

"Break the coals small, and let us have a good fire," said a famous revival preacher once to a congregation of miners, who easily understood his metaphor. There was always a good fire, in that sense, at the week-night services in Jane Street when Stephen Merritt was there, as he generally was. A man who believes in the gospel with all his heart, and believes in its power to transform the worst lives, and to make the most depraved men good, happy, and useful; who believes that the Holy Spirit can regenerate the most hardened sinner, and that His power will be put in operation in answer to believing prayer, is not likely to neglect his opportunity if he has the love for souls which fills Stephen Merritt's heart. His very outside appearance is inspiring. He has the look of a happy man, of a man who has a good thing in his possession, knows its value, and is eager to tell his secret to others. Poor, miserable drunkards, with aching heads, ragged clothes, empty pockets, and wretched homes, could not look at such a man without thinking how much better a thing he was making of his life than they were. Sin brings misery, invariably. If the sinner does not suffer in his financial circumstances, he is ill at ease with his conscience, and suffers mentally and spiritually. He is conscious that he is not what he might be, and ought to be, and he is discontented. If he went into the Jane Street meeting—and if he happened to be in that neighborhood he was sure to be urged to go in—he would see a man whose face spoke of joy in this world, and a sure and certain hope of better things in store. He would perceive that there was no "half-fire and half-smoke" condition in the pastor, no uncertainty, no doubt, but full and strong conviction of the verities about which he talked, and a firm persuasion that they would be as effective with others as they were with himself. There, before him, was the evident presentment of happiness, a soul at peace with itself and with God, and as he listened he heard how such a desirable result had been produced, and was told that the spiritual revolution could take place in his own breast by the same means. What wonder that the slaves of appetite, sensual passion, and vice, looking at and hearing the pastor, took courage and besought Christ for deliverance?

The Development

of the work was rapid. Not only were sinners saved, and Satan's victims snatched from his grasp by the power of the Crucified One, but Christian men and women were stirred and aroused. Enthusiasm is contagious. Their theories, their notions of "the plan of salvation," which were dried up in some corner of their souls and periodically taken out and dusted, began to work like yeast, making themselves felt in their daily lives. They became alive in the warmth of the fire kindled in those week-night services in the dilapidated old Jane Street Church, and wielded a power over the life, not only in the church, but in the home, and the store, and the workshop. The members of the church wanted to work, too. The man in earnest had made them in earnest, and he wanted nothing better than to set them to work. There were only two hundred of them then, but their numbers were growing, and they knew, by what they had seen, what consecration and energy could do. Stephen Merritt was delighted with the prospect, and he gave more and more attention to the work, until at the close of the year it occupied all his spare time, and he was made pastor-in-charge of Jane Street. Then Thomas Harrison was invited, and there came such a revival of religion in that place as has not been seen anywhere of late years. The number of converts grew from hundreds to thousands. Many united with other churches, but so many wished to make the church in which they had been born again their church home, that the old church had to be enlarged. Adjoining ground was purchased and the accommodation of the building extended. It was filled to its utmost capacity, and its roll of membership had upon it nine hundred names.

The Annex

in the rear of the church, a picture of which fills one of the panels of the picture on the first page, was the first enterprise undertaken to accommodate the overflow. There the workers found a spiritual workshop. It is filled every night with numbers inquiring the way of life. Hundreds of such are living around our churches who never enter them. Their clothes are not good enough, as they think; they are tired with their work; they have no inclination for dry, doctrinal preaching; they have a host of excuses. But they will listen to men who talk kindly with them, listen to the story of their sorrows, give them advice and help, and show them the way to better things. This is done in the Annex, and it is surprising how quickly the response comes, and how readily the objections to religion vanish before a sincere and earnest effort in Christ's name. Scores have already been redeemed there from sin and uncleanness and have entered into the joy of salvation.

The William Taylor Mission,

the self-supporting missionary society—an incorporated body of active workers, about this time appointed Stephen Merritt their missionary for the lower part of the city, having at the same time had placed at its disposal by the Church Extension Society two churches—Franklin Street Church on the west side and Madison Street Church on the east side. (Pictures of both these edifices appear in the first-page illustration.) Stephen Merritt was not dismayed by this sudden extension of responsibility. He had a corps of workers ready for labor with abundant faith and energy. They took hold of the new work with vigor, and the Lord is sending them a rich harvest of souls. To these two churches is now added the Assembly Hall in McClees Building in Little Twelfth Street near West Street, where a mission had once been held. This work was also turned over to the Jane Street people and it is now in a wonderful state of revival. Noon-day meetings are held regularly, and evangelistic work every night. A few evenings ago ten young men were received into communion there, who had formerly been wandering in the ways of error and superstition.

The Franklin Street Church

is one of the most remarkable fields of labor in the city. It stands in the centre of a district almost destitute of homes. In the day it is a scene of busy life, for huge warehouses and factories stand on sites once occupied by families; but at night clerks and laborers leave it for their homes in Harlem, and other districts, and the place is almost deserted, save for loafers and homeless men, women who, when they can evade the vigilance of the policemen on the post, creep into the sheltered doorways for snatches of sleep. Besides this church and the churches connected with old Times City, there is only the Roman Catholic church in the First, Third, and Fifth wards, though all at the wharves there is opportunity for Christian work among the shipping, and there are janitors and others whose occupation makes them denizens of this once crowded district. Not only has Franklin Street Church been revived, but a mission has been opened at No. 30 Beach Street, under the charge of Mr. Bevere, the converted Roman Catholic priest who is doing a work there wonderfully unobtrusive and successful. The entire expenses of that mission are defrayed by a benevolent Christian gentleman of New York.

The Madison Street Church

is a very interesting field. It is a very small group of workers, but they form a garrison whose station attracts profound admiration and sympathy. All around them are Jews, Romanists, Atheists, Anarchists in embryo, and a population of many nationalities, generally careless about religion, eager to mend the social condition by violent measures. Among them stands this church with its brave band of workers preaching the true and remedying the sorrows and burdens and miseries of life. They believe in their remedy, and the full of hope that they will get their neighbors to adopt it, too. They have had much encouragement already, and they believe their prospects are bright. All these many agencies have their centre in Jane Street Church, and Stephen Merritt, its pastor, goes from one to the other with his cheerful and strong faith, and hearty, full-toned voice, giving encouragement and stimulus to the workers.

The Lowest Depth

in the many strata of New York Society has a matter of concern for some time past to the pastor and his people. In the rear cellars of the city are to be found, by any one who dares venture into them, men, and women, and even children who never venture into the streets by day. To a depth lower than the slums. The people there are barely enough rags to cover their forms; they are as if they had never been washed for years. Indescribable hangs about them, vermin infest their faces. Even the Jerry McAuley Mission in New York Street would be a place that they would not think of entering than they would a Fifth Avenue Church. They are low and vile beyond conception, but they have immortal souls,—souls for which Christ died. Stephen Merritt is endeavoring to reach these. His project, which is not yet completely perfected in all its details, is to establish a mission in Roosevelt Street; to have the building opened at 10 o'clock at night, and continue until 5 in the morning; to have it clean and comfortable, and to provide hot coffee and bread for all who will come; to invite gifts of clothing, distribute to such as are in need, and medical assistance for the sick. It is an enormous undertaking, requiring almost superhuman faith, courage, and patience. The pastor believes it can be accomplished, and that its success would be phenomenal. It certainly will be watched with intense interest and sympathy by all Christian men.

The Personal History

of Mr. Merritt, having been sketched in columns some five years ago, only a brief mention of its leading events is needed here. He was born in New York City, on March 6, 1833. His father was an undertaker, but he wished his son to acquire an independent handicraft, and when he completed his education he sent him to the Brooklyn Navy-yard to learn the art of sail-making. Four years the boy worked in the Navy-yard, and at the end of that time his apprenticeship was completed, and he was free to follow his own inclinations. He was able to earn his own livelihood, and he left the Navy-yard to enter upon his career in the world.

A short time before, while sitting in the Brooklyn Street Methodist Episcopal Church, the Holy Spirit had spoken to his soul, and he had yielded himself to Christ. He was anxious to enter into manual work, but very wisely resolved to gain more intellectual culture, that he might be-more effective laborer in Christ's service. He accordingly spent one year in the seminary at Amenia, N. Y., and at the end of that time returned to New York, eager for employment in the harvest-field of the Gospel. In 1858, Mr. Merritt, being then twenty-five years of age, received a lay-preacher's license in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his work of publishing the Gospel commenced. Six years later he received from Bishop Clarke ordination as deacon. He was not until 1871, however, that Mr. Merritt entered fully on the special work in which he has since been engaged in the praise of all the churches. That work was commenced in Bank Street, New York. A dingy room in that thoroughfare was twenty years ago identified by the name of a chapel, and in it a few poor people were gathered every Sunday to listen to the Gospel. Mr. Merritt became the pastor of the church and his genial manner, his warm heart, his ready sympathy with the poor and the struggling, were soon felt through the streets and in the homes of that neighborhood. The congregation grew; souls were saved, and the little church was enlarged. Before two years had passed a new church had to be built, and the commodious edifice on Perry Street was erected at a cost of $35,000, to the surprise of the people themselves the money was paid up, and no one ever knew, though many would have suspected, how much of that large sum came from the pastor's pocket.

In 1874 Mr. Merritt was stationed at Piermont on Hudson with the oversight of three other adjacent churches, but at the end of 1875 he was recalled home by family affairs. His father's growing years and infirmities made filial attention an imperative duty. Stephen Merritt therefore devoted himself to relieving his father of business cares, took charge of the undertaking business, but the evenings and on Sundays he was active in Christian work. He had not been at home much more than a year, when his old church in Perry Street was moving with a view to his resumption of his pastoral charge over them. He was ordained anew by Bishop Merrill, and was placed in Perry Street for another term of three years. Thence he moved to Franklin Street. His work there was described in our previous article, published in 1885, as also some accounts of his labors in the cause of temperance, and his beneficence in public and private philanthropic work.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.

Dying Man's Vision is Described by a Watcher who stood by his bedside. The Times of Hartford, Conn., states that a printer was dying in his city, and in his last hours was watched by a "practical," hard-headed man, and the dying man had been sinking. The watcher, growing more labored, became slower and fainter. The watcher thought the man was dead, when suddenly his eyes opened with a glad expression of wonder and joyful recognition: he threw up his arms as in an embrace, and his whole face was animated as he rapturously exclaimed, "Why, mother! The same instant he fell back dead. Nothing will ever convince me," said the watcher, "of the occurrence, 'that that man didn't fully see his mother then and there.'" Though an actual proof of the reunion of loved ones on the other side the grave, this incident, which is one of many of similar purport, affords strong ground for comfort to some who, when they are parted by death from beloved children or friends, lack the faith to say with David, "I shall go to my father." (II Kings 12: 23.)

Nuns' Terrible Struggle with Maniacs in a Building is one of many instances of herculean labor in connection with the destruction of the Longue Pointe Lunatic Asylum near Montreal on May 6. When the fire was discovered, the nuns were immediately set to work to get the female patients out of the wards. The more intelligent nuns were docile, and came out willingly; but the violent patients, who were confined in the upper wards, could not be made to comprehend their situation. They stubbornly refused to leave their rooms, and only those could be saved who were dragged out by main force. Both the nuns and the patients risked their lives in trying to get the deranged creatures away, but in many cases it was impossible. They laughed and yelled with delight at the flames, or screamed in abject terror; but they would not leave the building. One of the sisters, Maria McNicholls, fell a victim to their madness. Though a young girl of slight build, she successfully dragged out of the ward, and to safety, several of the resisting women. But one crowd of patients made a rush back to the burning ward, and the young sister followed through the flames to endeavor to rescue them, single-handed. The young girl was much beloved by the poor lunatics, and when they recognized her they crowded around her, clutching hold of her. When last seen, she was vainly endeavoring to free herself from the embraces of the excited women, who would not fly themselves nor let her go. Then a mass of flame and smoke hid the young heroine from sight, and all chance of escape was closed. She was not seen alive again. She might have been saved if those who loved her had not held her back. Their dementia relieves them of responsibility for their fatal act. But there are many who commit an analogous crime who have not their excuse. Many a young girl who has been very near the kingdom of God has been held back and drawn again into worldly pleasure by her family and friends who loved her with a fatal love. (II Peter 2: 18.)

The Ingratitude of Escaped Prisoners to Their Benefactor is mentioned in connection with the life of Colonel Hargous, who died three years ago in New York. In 1846, and for twenty years afterward, Colonel Hargous was the most prominent American citizen residing in Vera Cruz, Mexico. He carried on an extensive banking and shipping business, and accumulated a large fortune. When Colonel Hargous first settled in Vera Cruz there were a large number of Texas prisoners of war confined at the fortress of Perote, in Mexico. From time to time some of them escaped and reached Vera Cruz. They always found in Colonel Hargous a ready and generous friend, who aided them with his means, and with the facilities which his shipping interests afforded, for their escape to the United States. This he did at the risk of ruin to himself, and the risk was increased by the ungrateful carelessness of some of those whom he aided, who boasted of the help they had received from him to reporters of American newspapers. Notwithstanding this, Colonel Hargous continued the work, and through the help rendered by him many more prisoners were enabled to reach their homes. It is not of this form of "ungrateful carelessness" on the part of prisoners released from Satan's bondage that Christ has to complain. Too often their ingratitude is shown in silence, when they ought to declare everywhere what their Deliverer has done for them. (Luke 8: 39.)

A Girl Saved from Death by a Stranger's Blood was discharged from the New York Hospital on May 7. She was taken there from a house on Eighth Avenue where she lived with another girl, a seamstress, like herself. An escape of gas had filled the room in which they slept, and when it was discovered one of the girls was quite dead and the other unconscious. On the latter being received in the hospital, the usual remedies were applied without success. The attending physician said that nothing could save her from death but transfusion of blood. The case was published in the newspapers and was talked of among the convalescents in the hospital. When the doctor's statement was made known, a strong, healthy man, named Amos Lincoln, who was in the hospital under treatment for an injury, and was sufficiently recovered to be discharged, went to the physician and offered to give his blood for the benefit of the dying girl. His offer was accepted. A quantity of poisoned blood was taken from her arm, and a corresponding quantity of healthy blood was forced directly from the man's body into her veins. Immediately she recovered consciousness, her eyes opened, and in a short time her limbs, which had been completely paralyzed, recovered their normal power. Last week she was pronounced quite well, and left the hospital on Wednesday to return to her occupation. The man whose blood had saved her life suffered no ill effects beyond a temporary weakness. It was not so when sinners, through the blood of Christ, were saved from eternal death. He died that we, through His blood, might have everlasting life. (John 6: 54.)

The Mystery of a Child's Disappearance Was Solved on May 7. For three years the parents of a little girl, living near Wilkesbarre, Pa., have been searching for her and making inquiries far and near. On Decoration Day, 1887, she, with other children, was watching the parade of veterans, when she suddenly disappeared, and no trace of her could be found. Last week, however, the mystery of the missing child was solved. A man, while crossing the mountains at Upper Lehigh, found among the rocks the remains of a childish form, only the bleached bones and a few bits of clothing remaining to afford a clue to its identity. The news was carried to Freeland, where the parents of the missing child were living. They hastened to the spot, and the mother's quick eye and keen memory served to identify the remains of a pair of stockings and new shoes as those worn by the child. The remains were brought home, and received interment. The child is supposed to have wandered voluntarily from the town and to have died from exposure on the mountain-side. How often has that been the story of wanderers from God! They voluntarily leave Him and wander on the mountains of sin and unbelief, and, though the Good Shepherd seeks them, they die in their self-exile. (Isa. 53: 6.)

A Man Kept in Prison Through a Blunder was set at liberty in Brooklyn, N. Y., on May 8. Some time ago the man purchased a watch on the installment plan. He undertook to pay three dollars a week until the watch was paid for, but after paying about a third of the amount he lost his position, and was out of work a long time. The watch was used as collateral to raise money for the support of his family, and the payments on account of its purchase fell into arrears. At length the firm who sold the watch lost patience, and being unable to obtain either the money or the watch, had the man arrested. His wife, in her distress, went for advice to her clergyman, who kindly went around among his people, and raised the money to pay the debt. Having paid it over to the firm, he expected that the prisoner would be released at once; but, to his surprise, he learned a few days later that the man was still held in jail. He, therefore, employed a lawyer, who appealed to the courts. But the judge to whom he applied said he knew nothing of the case, and could not interfere. Other applications were met in the same way, and even the judge who had granted the order of arrest had no papers relating to the case in his hands. It was found that the constable who arrested the man had omitted to make a return. While the tedious forms of law were being complied with by great exertion, and with unavoidable delays, the man, whose debt had been satisfied, had to remain a prisoner, and not until last Thursday did the sheriff obtain authority to release him. No appeals were necessary to induce the man to quit the jail then; indeed, he considered it a grievous injustice that he should have been detained after the claim against him had been satisfied. It is a pity that men who are held in captivity by Satan are not similarly alive to their privileges; for Christ has satisfied the law, and has purchased their deliverance, but they do not avail themselves of it. (Gal. 3: 13.)

THE LATE MARQUIS TSENG.

(See Portrait on page 316.)

THIS eminent Chinese statesman and diplomatist, whose death at Peking has recently been announced, was long resident in Europe, as the able and successful Ambassador of the Chinese Empire. His personal name was Tseng Chitse, and he was born in 1848, son of Tseng Kwo-fan, a distinguished and influential Minister, who received the title of "Hou," which is regarded as equivalent to "Marquis." After studying in the Imperial College, and entering the official service, he accompanied his father, as private secretary, in the campaigns and administrative journeys that ensued on the Tai-ping rebellion, but it was not until 1877 that he obtained the rank of Tang Kwan, or expectant Secretary of State. In 1878 he received his first high office—that of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Courts of England and France. He was acting in that capacity when Chung How was sent to St. Petersburg to settle the Kuldja difficulty by negotiation. The Chinese repudiated the Treaty of Livadia, and the Marquis Tseng was instructed to proceed to St. Petersburg as special Ambassador to obtain a more honorable and suitable settlement of the difficulty. His diplomacy was crowned with success, for the Treaty of St. Petersburg in 1881 restored Kuldja to China, and harmony to her relations with the neighboring Empire of Russia. He showed equal ability in the long dispute with the French Government upon the Tonquin question. When the Marquis Tseng returned to China in 1886, after eight years' residence in Europe, he was made a Grand Secretary, and President of the new Board of Admiralty, and during the last three years he has been regarded as one of the most important men in China, after the Viceroy Li-Hung-Chang.

THE SHUT DOOR.

By Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of Boston, Mass. *

To whom, and to what time do the words of our Lord, "When once the Master of the house is risen up, and shut to the door" (Luke 13: 25), refer? This text has been made the hinge on which one of the most important questions of eschatology turns. If the words signify the closing of the gate of mercy upon all mankind, at the return of Christ, then the second advent ends the work of redemption, and there are no further triumphs for the gospel among the yet unsaved nations. But, according to the eschatological scheme now most widely accepted among scholars, the return of our Lord in glory, instead of ending the probation of the race, is to usher in the final and universal conquest of the gospel over the earth. Of course Christ's coming is in upon apostate Christendom; but the Scriptures seem to teach that following this judgment will be the conversion of Israel, and through redeemed Israel, the yet wider and universal triumph of the gospel among all nations. If so, the text which we are considering must have some other application than the one above suggested. May not the reference be two-fold—nearer, to the Jews, and, more remotely, to Christendom?

Mighty and Terrific Judgment

Turning to Godet's exposition of this passage, we find it set forth under the heading: "The rejection of Israel, and the admission of the Gentiles." We believe that this interpretation is not only the most harmonious with the general teaching of Scripture, but the most natural and obvious if we consider the words under discussion, by themselves.

1. Observe the description of

Those who are Excluded

by the shutting of the door. They are made to say: "We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets." Does not this picture the Jews of Christ's own day? True, the words may be used figuratively, but they describe so exactly the relation which the Master had held with those now addressed, that the presumption is strongly in favor of applying them to them. "This word," says Schleiermacher, "was spoken in Galilee where many thus heard, and ate and drank with him."

2. Observe the harmony of the parable, as thus interpreted, with the actual facts. The Jews were shut out of the kingdom of heaven on their rejection of their Messiah. "The kingdom of God is taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," said Jesus. (Matt. 21: 43.) Indeed, it should be noticed that, in the very same passage which we are considering, the solemn sentence of our Lord occurs: "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate; and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." (Luke 13: 35.) This passage teaches plainly that Israel was now rejected, and to remain so Until the Second Coming of Christ.

3. But can the representation, as a whole, be made to fit the Jewish people? Let us examine it in detail. Says Godet: "The Messianic Kingdom is here represented under the figure of a palace into which men do not enter, as might appear natural, by a magnificent portal, but by a narrow gate, low and scarcely visible—a mere postern. Those invited refuse to pass in thereby; then it is closed, and they in vain supplicate the Master of the house to reopen it; it remains closed, and they are, and continue, excluded. The strait gate represents attachment to the lowly Messiah; the magnificent gateway by which the Jews would have wished to enter, would represent, if it were mentioned, the appearance of the glorious Messiah whom they expected." This is the parabolic representation. But is the saying true of the Jews: "Many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able"? Mark the change of word—"Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." They seek, but do not strive; they would enter in, but not through the strait gate. The "many" Jews were doing just this at the time of Christ. They were not indifferent to the kingdom of God; they sought to enter it—but how? Not through the lowly and despised Nazarene, the narrow Door by whom men must press in, in order to be saved, but by their self-righteous deeds.

4. When is it that the Jews begin

To Stand Without, and to Knock at the door, saying "Lord, Lord, open unto us; and He shall answer and say unto them, I know you not whence you are"? It is, of course, from the moment when the Master rises up and shuts to the door, or, in other words, closes the kingdom of heaven to those who refused to enter by way of the lowly and despised Messiah. "What moment is this?" asks and answers Godet. "Is it the time of the Parousia, when the great Messianic festival shall open? No; for the Jews then living shall then be convinced, and received into the palace." True: and a great number of texts confirm Godet's answer. The representation seems to apply to the time immediately following the casting away of Israel upon their rejection of Immanuel. But we believe that the conclusion of Meyer and Tholuck is the true one, that the prediction had reference to the time in which the wrath of God should have come upon them to the uttermost (1 Thes. 2: 16), especially at the destruction of Jerusalem, when some of those now living would in their extremity recall His offer to gather the devoted city as a hen gathers her brood beneath her wings, and they would not. Read that whole description of too-late despair contained in Luke 19: 42-45, and, as the solemn closing words fall upon our ears—"Because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation"—find the completest commentary on the words which we are now considering.

* Part of his article in the Watchword.

5. When are the words fulfilled, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out"? We believe, during the whole period of beginning with the destruction of Jerusalem, and ending with their conversion at the second coming of Christ. Alford's paraphrase of the passage is: "Ye Jews, who neglect the earnest endeavor to enter now, shall weep and gnash your teeth when ye shall see all the saints, Jews and Gentiles, in the kingdom of God, and yourselves excluded." As though to give a grim literalness of fulfillment to this prediction, there has been enacted for centuries, just outside the walls of Jerusalem, the very scene here depicted. At the Jews' wailing-place the representatives of outcast Israel gather, week after week, weeping, moaning, gnashing their teeth, and filling the air with their lamentations over their rejected condition. It is

Israel's Tribulation,

A Typical Scene,

wondrously suggestive of our Lord's words in this parable: "And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God. And, behold, there are last which shall be first; and there are first which shall be last." (Luke 13: 29.)

Who are the first? Clearly the Jews, of whom it is written: "To the Jew first" (Rom. 1: 16), and to whom the apostles said: "It was necessary that the Word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." (Acts 13: 46.) And who are the last, but the Gentiles who, by the casting away of Israel, have come into their place? (Rom. 11: 19.) Here is plainly the casting away of Israel, and the bringing in of the Gentiles; the last possessing the covenant promises made through Abraham, and the first thrust out into the outer darkness of the divine rejection, which rejection is of age-long duration, to be terminated only at the second coming of Christ, when they shall look on Him whom they pierced, and mourn, in saving penitence.

This phrase, "shall sit down with Abraham in the kingdom of heaven," connects this whole discourse, we believe, with the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Indeed, we are persuaded that this mysterious parable covers precisely the same ground as that which we have been considering. For, aside from its literal significance as setting forth the condition of the lost in Hades, it has, we hold, a parabolic teaching. Trench, in his work on the parables, gives this very fully, and shows that it was maintained very early in the Church.

The Clue to the Parable is in the expression "Abraham's bosom." Strange that expositors should have searched through Rabbinical lore to find the meaning of this phrase when it is so obvious! The favored guest at the feast reclined in the bosom of the host. John is represented at the last supper as "leaning on Jesus' bosom." (John 13: 23.) Lazarus in Abraham's bosom means Lazarus enjoying fellowship and favor with Abraham at the feast. To "sit down in the kingdom of God" with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, is to recline at the feast with them, which is equivalent to lying in the bosom. "Therefore, Lazarus Abraham's bosom signifies, parabolically, the C tiles introduced into the kingdom of heaven; w the Jew, represented by the rich man, is thrust

The shutting of the gate refers then, primarily would seem, to the rejection of Israel. But s the history of the Church is the counterpart of of Israel, there is also, no doubt, another refer in the imagery of the closed door, viz., to the rejection of apostate Christendom at the second c ing of Christ; and this we have pictured in the able of the ten virgins in Matt. 25. This do application is according to the general law of we call prophetic perspective. "The shut do therefore, is imagery which should appeal most emnly to the Christian and to the Israelite alik

AN APPEAL FROM AN ENEMY.

AN interesting work is going forward among Greeks at Ordo, as reported by Dr. Constan who, when he went to that place, narrowly esc losing his life by the capsizing of his boat. He floating in the water half an hour before he rescued. Writing to the Missionary Herald, Constantine says that much good is being there, and the prospects are hopeful. Among o incidents he mentions is that of "a married who became interested, but his parents felt b to take him away. But when he went back t old habits, then the mother came, and begged the brethren should save her son, and the Lord pleased to accept him. A woman who was wat by her husband lest she should go to church found climbing the wall that she might jump by the roof of the house. Another woman bec almost out of her mind in her attempts to stop husband, but she failed. One father whose chil were already following in the gospel path brought in in a singular way. One night he h Turkish (Mohammedan) guest. While in conv tion with him the Turk said: 'I see all your dren go to the Protestant chapel; where do go?' 'Well,' he said in reply, 'I sometimes go way, and sometimes the other.' 'Oh,' said Turk, 'that never will do. You should stick to church or the other with all your heart.' This vice, the same he had often received before, st him with new force, coming from one standing tiredly outside. He resolved to join his child whatever obloquy it might call down on his b He is now fully at ease, enjoying the light of gospel, which beams on his unbroken family."

The dear brethren meet in a structure that used for cattle, and the smell is terrible, and three hundred or more crowd in and around to the gospel.

A BISHOP SAVED BY HIS HORSE'S TEET

IN a letter to the pupils of St. Mary's Hall, bault, Minn., from Bishop Whipple, whose por and life appeared in this journal on Decembe 1888, the good bishop describes some of the b ships he endured at the beginning of his episcopi He says: "These pioneer days were the happie my episcopate. The people were warm-hea generous, and hospitable, and there are man these homes whose inmates seem as my own dred. There is hardly a parish or mission in nesota which has not linked with it sweet m ries of brave lives in which there was interw some divine poetry. In those days they calle the boy bishop, for, up to my consecration bis had been usually chosen from the venerable fat of the Church. It seems a dream that men s of me as "venerable," and it sounds very u until I look and see the lines on my cheeks. I of those I loved so well have gone before me to other home.

"I can recall many and many a time when I lost in winter storm or blizzard, and now it s as if some good angel guided my old missio horse out of the peril into a place of safety. never lost heart. The moment we were lost small, pointed ears moved back and forward; i stopped, he pawed the snow, and at the first gl of deliverance would force his less sensible m go where he wanted to go, even putting his into his neck to force him. When we escaped looked up with such a glad look out of those eyes which seemed to say: 'Master, all's well ends well.'

"For a part of the winter, when sleighing good and the air clear, cold, and crisp, and in e summer, there was nothing more exhilarating t a drive over our prairies; but it was quite ano thing when wading through prairie mud, batt snow-drifts, or lost in a blizzard. I left Rosemont one winter morning, after an early breakfast and I doubt if horse or driver ever worked harder than my dear old Bashaw and I did that day;

just as night came on, I had reached the hostable inn of Mr. Amadon, at Farmington, only miles distant. Once I was far into the night from Le Sueur, with good Mr. Livermore, our faithful missionary, to St. Peter. The night was black as ink, and on one piece of dangerous road
the ferry I tramped through the mud in front of Bashaw, with a bundle of tracts in one hand, and I lighted to show us the way. Dear old Dr.
Lewney was with me, when we were an entire day from St. Peter to Henderson, sixteen miles, did not reach it after all; for, when night came we found shelter in a German home with one man, a father, mother and five children. Bashaw down in the sloughs, time after time, and I can see the old fellow now, as he looked into his massage, and would have said if he could, "It is a road to travel." And yet there was always a lining to the cloud. I baptized all these German children, and we sat up to the wee small hours, telling them the story of a Saviour's love."

THE MISSION OF THE SEVENTY.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lesson for May 25; Luke 10: 1-16; Golden Text Luke 10: 11.

proof to Sacerdotalism—Exclusiveness Inconsistent with a Prayer—The Lamb-like Spirit Required—Messengers of Peace—Instances of Rejection Foreseen—Their Return—A Joyful Report—The Master's utation—What He Deemed a Fit Cause for Rejoicing—The Childlike Spirit Blessed—The Privileges of a New Dispensation.

THE twelve apostles were not to have a monopoly in the ministry of the word, and in the work of healing. "The Lord appointed other seventy and sent them two and two before His face into every city and place, whither He Himself would go." There is no sacerdotalism or priestcraft in the heart of God or in His Word. He has made no over His heritage, but He calls those who are willing to be "ensamples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5: 3.)
The mission of the seventy was much the same as that of John the Baptist—to prepare the way of the Lord, to tell of Him who was coming after them.
In an evangelist or missionary goes to his field labor sure that the Master will not only follow, but with him, in him—and when he is more conscious of the presence of Christ in him than of himself—he is ready armed for all emergencies.

far from allowing His messengers to believe that they are a specially privileged people, the Master's joint command to them is that they shall

Pray for More

He sent: "the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send laborers into His harvest."

Just as soon as the spirit of exclusiveness possesses us, and we are tempted to think that God has given us a special call which is not open to others are in danger. In the heart of God, and in His service everywhere, "yet there is room." Jesus did not exclude His disciples even from the scene of His agony, when, if at any time in His life, it had have seemed that He must be alone. As His disciples, He would have us always work with a welcome in our hearts to others, and a prayer that God would send more into His vineyard, and all the time, as with Elijah and Elisha, they may take our place.

before giving them any charge, the Master taught the spirit in which they should go. "Behold,
I send you forth as

Lambs Among Wolves."

He is "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1: 29), or, "Lamb, as it has been slain." (Rev. 5: 6.) "He was oppressed, and He was afflicted, yet He openeth not His mouth;
He was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a lamb before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not His mouth." (Isa. 53: 7.) In such a spirit, the spirit of the lamb which resisteth not evil (Matt. 5: 39-42), which endures "grief, suffering wrongfully" (Matt. 2: 19), Christ sends His disciples into the world as examples of what they teach. If an evangelist or missionary knows the Bible by heart, and has a great gift for preaching, and yet is sensitive to what concerns himself, allows any bitterness in his heart, admits of the least spirit of retaliation if he has been offended, he is no longer a lamb which openeth not its mouth, he is no longer an example of the new order of things which Jesus came to establish, in a life dead to self, but "alive unto God through Jesus Christ."

These first evangelists were also to put to the proof the loving care of their heavenly Father, and to show, by their utter abandonment of themselves to Him, that His care for his people is something more than a name. Jesus had been teaching on the mountain, "Take no thought," or "Be not anxious," "saying, What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed?
For after all these things do the Gentiles seek; for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6: 31-33.) Now, they were to go out upon this word of God, and prove to themselves, and to those to whom they preached, that it was sure ground, "Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes." No money, nor purse to carry any, no food, nor scrip to carry any, no shoes to provide against weather, and "salute no man by the way," admit of no distraction, let all know that you are men of one purpose, one idea.

Their Message.

Their first message was to be Peace. Arriving in such a spirit, dead to self-interest, dumb and unresisting before persecutors, so abandoned to the Lord that they sought not their own in any way, these men were to be living examples of peace. We may well believe that when, in the name of their Master, they pronounced His message, "Peace be to this house," there must have entered with the word the very presence of the Master with His own peace.
Circumstances may alter, the letter of the word in this passage may not so easily be carried out, but the spirit. Would Jesus take back for a moment His unmistakable characteristic of His followers
"lambs among wolves"? Would He have His missionaries conscious about things temporal? Would He ever send them to bring another message to a house where they might lodge? Surely not. The same singleness of purpose must govern all the details of their life. "In the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give, for the laborer is worthy of his hire;" if he is in the spirit of his Master he will bring so heavenly an atmosphere into the house with him that it will more than repay all which is spent on him, and he has not to fear about his diet, "it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer" (1 Tim. 4: 5); if it is such as he is quite unaccustomed to, the Lord will take the responsibility. But where do we find such evangelists and missionaries in the present day? Thank God, there are such, but they are very few. Is it not time, as the coming of the Lord is so very near, for us to get as near to the Lord in our life and work as possible?

As with the house, so with the city: "Into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you; and heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Peace to the soul and healing to the body were the gifts with which they were laden, in announcing the advent of a kingdom and a King. They were to show how God makes us "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light," by delivering us from the power of darkness, and translating us into the kingdom of the Son of His love, "in whom we have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins." (Col. 1: 12-14.) They were to show that this kingdom, this new order of things, this reign of God in the hearts and lives of men, was come nigh unto them, that they must have to do with it, that they were responsible to accept or to reject the kingdom and the king; and He made provision, in the case they were not accepted in a city, that they should wipe off the very dust of their feet against that city with the testimony, "Notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is Come Nigh Unto You."

But let us be careful how we bring a burden of responsibility upon others. We have sometimes heard evangelists denouncing in very strong language those who remained hardened in spite of all their earnest exhortation, while, at the same time, we have been painfully aware that the hindrance lay more in the inconsistency and unchristlike spirit of the evangelist than in the hardness of the people.
When we lay upon them the burden that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto them, let them see, in those who teach, that kingdom of "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom.
14: 17.) We may greatly weaken God's words of warning by using them unadvisedly. Oh, how we need the guidance of the Holy Ghost in all we do and say!

But cities, as well as individuals, must be dealt with—cities as cities, and churches as churches, just as the Lord deals with nations as nations. At this time He opened His heart to the disciples, as before destroying Sodom He spoke to Abraham,
"But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for that city." But why? Because the Head of the Church so unites Himself with His people, and counts them so one in Him, that He says, "He that heareth you heareth me, and he that despiseth you despiseth me, and he that despiseth me despiseth Him that sent me." If this was so when Jesus was only with His disciples, how much more now that the mystery which was hid from ages and generations, but which is now made manifest to His saints, Christ in you the hope of glory (Col. 1: 27) is an accomplished fact to those who receive Him by faith!
How careful it ought to make those of us who teach, that we teach only that which we have received of the Lord; how careful those who hear, that they should listen, not to the teacher, but to Christ, who teaches by him.

The seventy went on their mission, and "returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name"—"us" first,
"Thy name" second. Already

They were in Danger.

But the patient Master warns them at once, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven;" success is no safety from a fall, if self takes a place above the name of Jesus. As long as there is any possibility of taking credit to ourselves for what God does by us, we are in danger—Satan fell from heaven itself.
"Behold, I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the powers of the enemy;
and nothing shall by any means hurt you." "Power over all the powers of the enemy"—it is no small gift; but few of us have dared to claim it, or to meet the enemy as a conquered foe; yet such he is by the Word of God. "Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you;
but rather rejoice that your names are written in heaven." Success is purely of grace, and no credit to the successful worker, but greater than all success is the glorious fact that our names "are written in heaven." If we want to have a name on earth, we have our reward; but it is down here.
Only those who are truly crucified with Christ, whose life here "is hid with Christ in God," have a name in heaven. There they are better known than here. Pure joy in successful work never enters into the question whether we ourselves have been the instruments. It is enough to know that Christ has conquered, that souls are saved; what matters it who has been the instrument?

"In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight." "Lambs and babes!"
Such is the character of his true followers—lambs in relation to the wolves of the world, babes in relation to our Heavenly Father, just as simple, just as guileless. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 3.) Human knowledge cannot assimilate what is divine. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God."
(1 Cor. 2: 14.) But those who are willing to come down, to know nothing and to be nothing, to them
God unfolds His heavenly treasure.

"All things are delivered to me of my Father," then neither lambs nor babes need be afraid, "and no man knoweth who the Son is but the Father, and who the Father is but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him." The knowledge of God cannot come by study, but by the revelation of the Holy Ghost. We must have to do with God that we may know Him. "And He turned to His disciples," the same disciples whom He had just re-proved and warned, and said privately, "Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see; for I tell you that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them." Let us value the privilege we have of living in these days; let us praise God that we are not under the Old Testament, not under law, but let us never forget that so wondrous a privilege entails the responsibility of walking worthy of God, who has called us to His kingdom and glory. (1 Thess. 2: 12.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be made payable at Station D, New York.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we state that no change has been made in our terms to agents. They are allowed, on all ordinary subscriptions, the same commission as in former years.

AWAY WITH HUMDRUM.

How to get out of the old rut without twisting off the wheel, or snapping the shafts, or breaking the horse's leg, is a question not more appropriate to every teamster than to every Christian worker. Having once got out of the old rut, the next thing is to keep out. There is nothing more killing than ecclesiastical humdrum. Some persons do not like the Episcopal Church, because they have the same prayers every Sabbath; but have we not, for the last ten years, been hearing the same prayers over and over again; the product of a self-manufactured liturgy that has not the thousandth part of the excellency of those petitions that we hear in the Episcopal Church? In many of our Churches sinners hear the same exhortations that they have been hearing for the last fifteen years, so that the impenitent man knows, the moment the exhorter clears his throat, just what is going to be said; and the hearer himself is able to recite the exhortation as we teach our children the multiplication table, forward or backward. We could not understand the doleful strain of a certain brother's prayer, till we found out that he composed it on a fast-day during the yellow fever in 1832, and has been using it ever since. There are laymen who do not like to hear a sermon preached the second time, who yet give their pastors the same prayer every week at the devotional meeting; that is, fifty-two times the year, with occasional slices of it between meals. If they made any spiritual advancement they would have new wants to express and new thanksgiving to offer. But they have been for a decade of years stuck fast in the mud, and they splash the same on you every week. We need a universal cleaning by which all canting and humdrum is rubbed out. If we would keep fresh let occasional excursions into other circles

Artists generally go with artists, farmers, mechanics with mechanics, gymnasts, Christian workers with gymnasts. But there is nothing that sooner gets in a new group, mind and thought and work run in a groove, put the minister out of the clergyman's line, and in our own line. Nothing but the best pages in the good than the Life of Saints, or some department of Natural History or Art, to which you may turn—a case of shells, or birds, or a season-ticket to some picture-gallery. If you do nothing but play on one string of the bass-viol you will wear it out and get no healthy tune. Better take the bow and sweep it clear across in one grand swirl, bringing all four strings and all eight stops into requisition. Let us go much into the presence of the natural world if we can get at it. Especially if we live in great thoroughfares let us make occasional flight to the woods and the mountains. Even the trees in town seem artificial. They dare not speak where there are so many to listen, and the hyacinth and geranium in flower-pots in the window seem to know they are on exhibition. If we would once in a while romp in the fields we would not have so many last year's rose-leaves in our sermons, but those just plucked, dewy and redolent. We cannot see the natural world through the books or the eyes of others. All this talk about "babbling brooks" is a stereotyped humbug. Brooks never "babble." To babble is to be unintelligent and imperfect of tongue. But when the brooks speak they utter lessons of beauty that the dumbest ear can understand. We have wandered from the Androscoggin in Maine, to the Tombigbee in Alabama, and we never found a brook that "babbled." The people babble who talk about them, not knowing what a brook is. We have heard about the nightingale and the morning lark till we tire of them. Catch for your next prayer-meeting talk, a chewink or a brown-thresher. It is high time that we hoist our church windows, especially those over the pulpit, and let in some fresh air from the fields and mountains.

CAN AFFORD TO WAIT.

SOMETIMES in life it is necessary to make a retort; sometimes it is necessary to resist, but there are crises when the most triumphant thing to do is to keep silence. The philosopher, confident in his newly discovered principle, waiting for the coming of more intelligent generations, willing that men should laugh at the lightning-rod and cotton-gin and steamboat—waiting long years through the scoffing of philosophical schools, in grand and magnificent silence. Galileo, condemned by mathematicians, and monks; caricatured everywhere, yet waiting and watching with his telescope to see the coming-out of stellar re-enforcements, when the stars in their courses would fight for the Copernican system; then sitting down in complete blindness and deafness to wait for the coming of the generations who would build his monument and bow at his grave. The reformer, execrated by his contemporaries, fastened in a pillory, the slow fires of public contempt burning under him—ground under the cylinders of the printing-press, yet calmly waiting for the day when purity of soul and heroism of character will get the sanction of earth, and the plaudits of heaven. Affliction, enduring without any complaint the sharpness of the pang, and the violence of the storm, and the heft of the chain, and the darkness of the night—waiting until a divine hand shall be put forth to soothe the pang, and hush the storm, and release the captive. A wife abused, persecuted, and a perpetual exile from every earthly comfort—waiting, waiting, until the Lord shall gather up His dear children in a heavenly home, and no poor Vashti will ever be thrust from the palace gate.

An Arctic explorer found a ship floating helplessly about among the icebergs, and going on board he found that the captain was frozen at his log-book, and the helmsman was frozen at the wheel, and the men on the outlook were frozen in their places. That was awful, but magnificent. All the Arctic blasts and all the icebergs could not drive them from their duty. Their silence was louder than thunder. And this old ship of a world has many at their posts in the awful chill of neglect and frozen of the world's scorn; and their silence shall be the eulogy of the skies, and be rewarded long after this weather-beaten craft of a planet shall have made its last voyage.

STAY WHAT YOU ARE.

WHAT a sickening thing it is to see a man copying the speech, the walk, the manner of a woman. The trouble is they do not imitate a sensible woman, but some female imbecile. And they limp and they go with mincing step, and lisp, and scream at nothing, and take on a languishing look, and bang their hair, and are the nauseation of honest folks of both sexes. O man, be a man! You belong to quite a respectable sex. The starting figure of the human race was a man. Do not try to cross over, and so become a hybrid, neither one or the other, but a failure half way between.

Alike repugnant are masculine women. They copy a man's stalking gait and go down the street with the stride of a walking-beam. They will they could smoke cigarettes, and some of them do. They talk boisterously, and try to sing bass. They do not laugh, they roar. They cannot quite manage the broad profanity of the sex they rival, but their conversation is often a half-swear; and if they said "O Lord" in earnest prayer as often as they say it in lightness they would be high up in sainthood. Withal there is an assumed rugosity of apparel, and they wear a man's hat, only changed by being in two or three places smashed in, and a d Canary clinging to the general wreck, and a man's coat tucked in here and there according to an unaccountable esthetics. O woman, stay a woman. You also belong to a very respectable sex. The second figure of the human race was a woman, a sometimes a second edition of a volume is the first edition improved and corrected. Do not try to cross over. If you do, you will be a failure as a woman, and only a nondescript of a man. You already have enough intellectual and moral handicaps in our sex without your coming over to make worse the deficits.

SHOW US HOW.

LAYMEN in this day, through increased intelligence, have formed their ideas as to how preaching ought to be done. They think they can beat the best of us who are ministers, and we have no doubt that some of them could. Let them come and let them prepare themselves for religious meetings, and show us how to be pointed and brief. We suppose that half-way between the way ministers do and the way laymen do it would be the right way. Ministers are too formal, and laymen are too loose in their religious addresses. But let us meet each other half-way. That will make us all both intelligent and warm-hearted talkers. The trouble with many laymen is that they think they can speak effectively for Christ without preparation. Although it took only a little while to adapt the ear for man's residence, God was getting together the material for this world during millions of years. Even the creation was not extemporized. It is right to make preparation for any important work that you have to do. In this age of concordance and Bible-dictionaries, and maps of Palestine, and succinct commentaries, there is no excuse for the prayer-meeting twaddle and balderdash with which many churches are afflicted. We who preach confess we do not know how; let the laymen show us

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Possibility of a National Deficit Instead of usual large surplus is presented in the report of Secretary of the Treasury to Congress. He mates the total receipts for the coming year at $5,000,000, and the expenditure at $341,430,477. This would leave a surplus of $43,569,523. But the use has already largely added to several items the expenditure side of the account, and the new bill, if its author's estimate is reliable, will reduce the revenue by $71,264,414. The House bills fifty-four and a half millions to the pension nine millions to the River and Harbor estimate, about twenty-five millions to the Public Build-outlay. It is plain that if all these changes are added out there will be, instead of the surplus of three millions as estimated by Mr. Windom, deficit of fully one hundred millions.

Another Decision on the Liquor Question by United States Supreme Court has caused a sensation throughout the country, and renders prompt congressional action necessary. The former decision, which was mentioned in these columns last week, denied the right of a Prohibition State to prevent the sale of liquor within its borders, if it imported from another State and sold in the original packages. This decision was based on the State Commerce law. The same law is the basis of the later decision which affects States not under Prohibition law. The Court holds that no State has a right to collect a tax on liquors imported from another State and sold in the original packages. The Court lays down the principle that State commerce is transportation from one State to another. If a State line is crossed distance material, and it matters not what may be the mode of transportation. It would thus be possible for men in any two States by making a mutual exchange of their commodity to avoid the payment of a tax in either State. It is only necessary to load a truck-load of bottles, containing single gallons of whiskey or other liquor, across a State line, and the liquor-dealer could supply his customers without paying any tax. As Congress is trusted to speedily amend the Inter-State Commerce law to prevent this arrangement, it may be expected it will not be dilatory in remedying the evil exposed by the former decision.

Two Distressing Disasters, alike in Character and detail, took place last week. On May 6 the Pointe Lunatic Asylum, near Montreal, burned, and on May 8 the Lunatic Asylum of Ontario County, New York, met the same fate. In both cases the disaster involved the loss of lives. The Canadian horror was by far the greater. The latest government report gives the number of inmates as 1,780, and of these over two hundred are missing. The fire started about noon, and a express was sent instantly to Montreal, ten miles away, begging for help. The engines arrived promptly, and were making progress in subduing the flames, when the supply of water was exhausted, and no further effort in that direction could be made. The firemen then devoted their efforts to assisting the nuns in rescuing the inmates. This was a work of difficulty, as the poor tormented creatures were fascinated by the flames, and could not be rescued. Five of the nuns lost their lives in the rescue work, and several others, the firemen, had narrow escapes. The New York Herald says the calamity occurred in the night. It started in the ward, and was not discovered until all the inmates had been saved. The violent patients were let loose, and immediately made for the woods. Many of those captured, but forty are still missing. The number of idiots burned was thirteen. Happily, the paupers in the building were saved.

Enormous Labor Demonstration Took Place in London on Sunday, May 4. This was an opposition to the part of the London Trades Council decision of the Continental Councils, which had voted May-Day for the demonstration. The demonstration was the size of the two processions of the London Council understood. It was a demonstration of its own people, who would prefer to spend the Lord's Day to losing a day's wages. There were fully a quarter of a million men in the demonstration. The leading secretaries of the trade councils, which included eight representing the leather trades, metal and iron workers, and the shipping, clothing, printer, and building trades. These bodies, in addition to numerous related trades, mustered in the districts of the metropolis early in the forenoon, and marched, headed by their leaders, and with bands and banners, toward the Thames Embankment, the central point, whence the marshalled array was ordered to start for the park. On their arrival there, resolutions demanding an eight-hour day were passed, and after short speeches from the various platforms, the vast assemblage dispersed in an orderly manner.

New York is to Have an Opportunity of Voting on the prohibition question. The two branches of the Legislature have passed a concurrent resolution to submit the question to the popular vote. The day fixed for the election is April 19, 1891. It is to be a special election so as to avoid complicating the subject with political issues. The Assembly, which passed the resolution on May 8, was divided on party lines. All the Republicans but one voted for the resolution, and all the Democrats but two, against it. This vote does not, however, imply Republican support at the polls. It merely indicates that the Republicans in the Legislature were in favor of submitting the decision to the people. There can be no question as to the result, but that should not deter Prohibitionists from recording their votes. The numbers will go on record, and it is well that other States should know how many Prohibitionists there are in New York State.

News of a Fresh Missionary Disaster Comes from Uganda. The young King Mwanga, the murderer of Bishop Hannington, has again been expelled from his kingdom. In his exile he needed the support of the missionaries, and promised in return for it to give them his protection after his restoration, and permit freedom of Christian teaching. They showed their magnanimity by helping him to return, and he appears to have kept his promise loyally. But his enemy, Kalema, has returned with an army of Arabs who support him because he is favorable to the slave trade. They have defeated Mwanga, and he and the missionaries have fled. The brief cable report of the revolution states that they occupy an impregnable position on Sesse Island.

The Antipathy to the Jews in Prussia has evidently lost none of its vigor since its more open manifestation subsided. In the Upper House of the Prussian Diet, on May 9, Count Pfeil moved that the Government take measures to remedy the evils arising from the large number of Jewish pupils in the superior schools. He declared that the existing conditions constituted a social danger. Herr von Gossler, Minister of Public Instruction, said it was impossible to exclude Jews from any educational establishment. Such an attempt would force the nation into a position leading to disruption, instead of union. The matter should be considered as a purely technical question of education, and not be the subject of a political demand. Notwithstanding the opposition of Herr von Gossler, the motion was adopted. This is a form of prejudice peculiarly illogical, and is simply an indication of the extent of the animosity existing in the upper classes against the Jews.

A Project for the Settlement of the Irish Question was suggested by Mr. Chamberlain in a public speech on May 7. He urged the Gladstonians, as a reasonable alternative for the admitted risks attending home rule, to assist the Unionists to pass the Land Purchase bill and relegate to the future the local government question, which could then be discussed upon its merits, unbiased by land difficulties. Otherwise it would be impossible to pass the Land bill this session, except by abandoning valuable clauses, or by the use of cloture. Why did not Lord Salisbury and Mr. Gladstone confer and arrive at an agreement on the land question, which otherwise would remain to plague the Liberals in their turn? He regretted the omission to intrust the county councils with the working of the bill, but he would do nothing to embarrass the government. He had no wish to rejoin a party that was "drifting toward the principles of the Chicago Convention."

The Emperor of Germany Made a Remarkable speech in opening the Reichstag, on May 6. He astonished every one by the small attention he gave to the usual topics of a speech from the throne, and the prominence he gave to the interests of labor. He said that he wanted, above all things, to effect further legislation for the protection of the workingmen. The strike movements during the past year had suggested an examination of the question whether the laws of the existing State organization adequately took into account those wishes of the workingmen which were justifiable and capable of realization. The questions claiming the foremost attention were those of Sunday rest and the restriction of women's and children's labor. The Federal Governments were convinced that the proposals of the last Reichstag might, in their essential points, become a law and be carried into practice without detriment to other interests. The legal provisions for the protection of workingmen against dangers threatening their lives, health, and morals were susceptible of amendment, as were also the laws relative to the issue of labor regulations. He also urged the enactment of a law for the better regulation and organization of industrial courts of arbitration, so that the courts may be appealed to for the settlement of disputes between the employers and the employed.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Swedish Missionary Society will shortly send out eleven new missionaries—seven to the Congo and four to China.

The receipts of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions for the first six months of the financial year show a total advance of nearly $83,000.

The McAll mission in France has now one hundred and twenty stations, in which more than a million and a quarter of French people—men, women, and children—listen to the gospel.

A great Romish missionary college is to be founded at Malta. According to the Standard, England is to have control over the missionaries sent by the college to the coasts and interior of Africa.

Mrs. Lucy Ryder Meyer, M. D., principal of the Chicago Deaconess Home and Training-School, gave an address on "Deaconess' Work," last Sunday in two of the Methodist Episcopal churches in New York.

Dr. Pentecost's mission opened very hopefully in Aberdeen. The evening meetings are held in the music-hall, which is well filled every night, and packed on Sabbaths. The afternoon meetings are in the Free West Church.

A Russian official in Siberia states in a recent letter that the high cost of living in that province and the inadequate pay given make it almost impossible to find an honest man there. "Everything which is good and honest is mercilessly persecuted, and baseness is triumphant."

The Union Theological Seminary and the University of the City of New York have each received $100,000 from Charles Butler, the president of the governing body of each institution. Mr. Butler is now in his eighty-ninth year, and presided last week at meetings of the two bodies.

Mr. E. P. Telford has been holding meetings every night during the past two weeks in Mr. Moody's church in Chicago. The Chicago Herald publishes an appreciative article on the evangelist, and remarks on the striking resemblance between his methods and those of Mr. Moody.

The Rev. Charles H. Yatman recently conducted a series of evangelistic meetings in Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, Pa., lasting two weeks. Great crowds attended the evening services from the beginning, and on Sabbaths hundreds were turned away, unable to find accommodation.

Mr. H. W. Brown has been holding very successful services at Mattoon, Ill. The Mattoon Journal says that over 800 people managed to crowd into the hall in which his services were held, and fully two hundred were turned away for lack of room. At one service no less than 200 made a profession of faith.

The German Empress is forming a "League for the Preservation of Good Habits" among Prussian ladies. The members bind themselves to discourage luxury in every form, both for themselves and their friends; to wear fewer, more simple, and cheaper dresses, and to practice rigid economy in their households.

The Ontario (Canada) government has introduced a license law which provides that no liquor shall be sold to boys or girls under eighteen years of age, and that no liquor shall be sold to a person under twenty-one years of age if a notice is received from the parents, guardian, or masters of such person forbidding such sale.

Mr. D. L. Moody says that, as some of the best fruits of his recent work in New York was gathered from the young men's meetings in Association Hall, Twenty-third Street, he is anxious to have the work continued every Sunday afternoon and evening. A chorus of male singers is being organized to render these meetings additionally attractive to young men.

A last will and testament, 5,000 years old, was found recently in Egypt. The testator, Sekiah, executed with his own hand in favor of his own brother, a priest of Osiris. The property disposed of in the will was to go to the brother's death to Sekiah's daughter, who, the internal evidence of the document shows, had the same legal right as a man to own and administer and dispose of property.

General O. O. Howard presided at the sixty-fifth annual meeting of the American Tract Society, on May 7, in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York. The report showed that the receipts of the benevolent department during the year were $140,940.68, of which $75,772.21 was from donations and legacies. The expenditures were $134,160.89, leaving a surplus of $6,779.79. The receipts of the business department were $257,750.27. The expenditures were $264,414.57, leaving a balance overdrawn from the benevolent department of $6,664.30.

A MESSAGE FOR HUMBLE FOLKS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

'Surely I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man.' Prov. 30:2.

Agur's Modesty—Acknowledged the Source of His Knowledge—I. A Sense of Inferiority no Impediment to Faith—The Excellences of Good Men Depressing Those Who Have Them Not—Their Weaknesses Not Perceived—Faith Producing Excellence—Humility a Reason for Faith—Fierce Conflicts Not Necessary—Not Desirable—II. A Sense of Inferiority Should Not Prevent Learning—III. Inferiority no Disqualification for Service—May be Compensated by Intensity—By Spirituality—IV. No Hindrance to Joy—Does Not Invalidate the Promise.

SOMETIMES it is necessary for a speaker to refer to himself, and he may feel it needful to do so in a way peculiar to the occasion. When Elihu addressed himself to Job and the three wise men, he commended himself to them, saying, "I am full of matter; the spirit within me constraineth me"; but when Agur instructed his two disciples, Ithiel and Ucal, he spoke in the lowliest terms of himself, and declared that he was "more brutish than any man." Wisdom is justified of her children. Neither of these men was to blame for his opening words to his hearers. Elihu was a young man, talking to elderly men of great note for learning; he saw that they had blundered terribly; he felt convinced that he had the right view of the matter under discussion, but he thought it discreet to introduce himself by modestly stating the reasons why he thought he should be patiently heard. Agur was probably a man of years and honor, and possibly his two young friends looked up to him more than was meet, and therefore his principal endeavor was to wean them from undue confidence in himself. I can suppose that both Elihu and Agur were equally humble—the one so modest that he felt that he needed to commend himself to gain a hearing; and the other so lowly that he feared the hearing he should win would place his personal influence in too high a place.

Especially, I think the truth of our text relates to one particular line of things. This man was a naturalist. We have nothing of his save this chapter, but his allusions to natural history all through it are exceedingly abundant. He was an instructed scientist; but he felt that he could not, by searching, find out God, nor fashion an idea of Him from his own thoughts. He had in thought climbed to heaven, and come down again; he had listened to the speech of winds, and waves, and mountains; but he protested that in all this he had not discovered God's name, nor His Son's name by his own understanding. This I take to be his meaning; but I shall not use the text in that way this morning.

Inferiority no Bar to Faith.

I. The first is this—a sense of inferiority must not keep us back from faith in God. I will suppose that some one here is saying, "Surely I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man:" our text brings before us a wise man, who said this of himself, and yet had firm faith in God. If we have to say what Agur said, let us also trust as Agur did. If only wise men might put their trust in God, what would become of nine out of ten of us?

I will have a word, first, with those who say, "We cannot hope to be saved, because we cannot reach the heights of other men." You have marked the holy conduct of certain godly men, and, setting your own imperfections side by side with their excellences, you have not only been humbled, but greatly discouraged. You have concluded that you could be saved if you were like these gracious men; but that, since you fall so far short of their noble character, you must be lost. You have seen them in sickness, and marked their patience and joy, and their acquiescence in the divine will, and you have been greatly humbled, which was well; but you have also fallen into unbelief, which was not well. Since you cannot play the man under fire as these champions do, you fear that you may not hope for eternal life.

You have been even more cast down when you have heard them talk of their high joys. The other day you met with one who wore heaven on his face, and you said to yourself, "I wish I knew such joy as beams in this man's countenance." You heard your minister describe the deep peace and holy calm which come with full assurance of faith; and every word he spoke about his own joy in the Lord was like a dagger at your heart; for you felt that you could not speak of such a blissful experience. You were never on the top of Tabor; never did you behold the transfigured Lord. You are afraid to trust God because you cannot compare with other men in their heights.

Carefully notice two or three little points which I will mention. First, remember that you see these good people at their best. You have not seen their seamy side. Perhaps they have not told you of how, at times, their feet were almost gone, their steps had well-nigh slipped. You see their days, and not their nights. I think it is a very sweet trait in your character that you do so. In this you differ from the wicked world. The ungodly always notice the bad points in the saints.

Graces Follow Faith.

Recollect, also, that you now see men who have faith in God, and you see in them the result of that faith. Do not imagine that their graces existed before their faith. If you have not the result of faith before you have faith itself, do not be astonished; they had not these excellences before they believed in Jesus. Some of the brightest of them were once the blackest of sinners. "Such were some of you," said Paul; "but ye are washed." Can it be a wise thing to say, "I have not those fruits of the Spirit, and therefore I will not cultivate the tree of faith from which they grow"? Nay, rather say, "The Lord, who made these men what they are, can make me what they are."

Do you not think it would be very great folly on your part if you should refrain from believing in the Lord Jesus, on the ground that you had greater need to seek Him than other men? Because you lack these things which you see in the saints, and know that you can only have them of the Lord by faith, is that a reason why you should not go to God in faith? This is a grand argument for going at once. Should a man plead his poverty as a reason why he should not ask an alms? Is nakedness a reason for refusing to be dressed? Is hunger a motive for rejecting food? or sickness a motive for shutting out the physician? I argue in the opposite way. Your urgent need is the strongest reason why you should claim of the Lord by faith these promises which He has made to needy souls. If you are more brutish than any man, go to the Lord, that He may instruct you! God grant that the heights to which other men reach may never keep you back from faith in God, but may they rather urge you on to believe great things of God!

A Common Mistake.

But, further, I said—and perhaps I surprised you—that the depths of other men have often kept tremblers from a simple faith in God. I know many who say, "I cannot feel as others feel: my heart is hard and insensible, and when I listen to what believers tell me of their sharp distresses, I fear that I cannot be saved; for into these deep places I have never gone." These depths are of many kinds; but the mention of one or two may suffice. Some believers have been brought to the Lord through fearful conviction of sin, conviction most overwhelming: they seem to have found their way to heaven round by the brink of hell. Perhaps some of you escape these agonies, and know but little of the grinding process. Will you, therefore, fear to believe, because you think you are more unfeeling than other men? Will you refuse the cup of life because God has not infused all His bitters into it?

Hearken to me, ye that are so readily cast down: some of these depths you never need wish to know; for they would not be to your advantage, but to your loss. The dark side of much that is called Christian experience is not the work of the Holy Spirit at all. In many instances the mental distress which attends the work of the Spirit is produced by sickness of body; it is not repentance, but indignation or some other evil agency depressing the spirits. A sluggish liver will produce most of those fearsome forebodings which we are so ready to regard as spiritual emotions. There is such a blending of the physical with the mental that it is hard to name our feelings. All the experience of a Christian man is not Christian experience.

The Troubled Man

experiences a good deal, not because he is a Christian, but because he is a man, a sickly man, a man inclined to melancholy. Why will you envy such a person? Do you want to feel his despondency? Do you really desire disease? Do you think you could trust God better if you had a morbid mind and a disordered body? What nonsense! I do not admire your taste; I think you are very foolish.

In multitudes of instances the strange depressions which befall some excellent people are the result of external trouble, of grinding poverty of frequent bereavements, or of excessive labors. These things may greatly intensify the bitterness of spiritual distress. Do you want affliction? you really think that poverty or bankruptcy will help you to believe in God? Give some men a day by the sea, and their dark thoughts vary. Were they ever desirable? In desiring what will only grieve you, you remind me of a child who would always cry until its mother said, "Will you cry for nothing? You shall have something to cry for before long." If you covet grief, even dare to threaten the Lord that you will believe Him unless He vexes you, it may be He will deal with you according to your desire, and then you will cry in earnest on the other side of your mouth.

Remember that all Christians are not, and not be of the same calibre. We are all sold brethren; but we are not all champions. God upon every one that believes in Christ to fight battles; but many of us are happy to belong to rank and file. We cannot all be captains. Here and there shall we find a David, who, with sling and his stone, shall go forth, a solitary champion, against gigantic Philistines. For David was needful that he should fight lions and bear his youth, or he would not have faced the giant. God sends us less of inward and outward trials than others, He knows best. We need enough so to drive us from self and carnal confidence; when that is effected it would be folly to sigh more. Seek not to copy another man's ups and downs; but wait on God, and put thy trust in Him, even though thou shouldst seem to thyself to be more foolish than any other living man.

No Impediment to Learning.

II. Secondly, and very briefly: A sense of inferiority must not keep us from learning. Suppose you have to say, "I am more brutish than any man," you have so much the more need of being taught the things of God. If you have not understanding of a man, there is so much more that you should go to school to the Holy Spirit, till the eyes of your understanding shall be enlightened, and you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

Vital truth is simple. A great many things are hard to understand; but that which is essential to salvation is not difficult. To know thyself a sinner and Christ a Saviour, is this a deep mystery? quit thine own self, and thine own trusts, simply upon the person and work of the Son of God; is this exceedingly difficult to understand? The safest truth is the simplest. If thou art staggered by the sublimity of heavenly learning, consider these things are revealed to babes.

Remember, also, that the Holy Ghost is a great Teacher. The best earthly teachers may be able to do very little with such slow scholars as we are; therefore let us go to our heavenly Teacher, that may give us of His Spirit, wherewith we may know the truth. He can teach young men wisdom, give to babes knowledge. When the Lord teaches it is wonderful how quickly we learn.

No Disqualification for Service.

III. I have been very brief upon that subject, and I must be much the same on the other side. A sense of inferiority must not keep us back from serving God. What if, like Agur, we take the lowest place? yet, like him, let us speak on God's behalf. Who knoweth, He may prophesy by also? Agur's simple word is called "the prophecy." If God shall speak by thee, my friend, thy thing so little of thyself will give a charm to speech. If God shall use such as thou art, He have all the glory of it, will He not? When the Lord uses a very clever man, there is always fear that people will ascribe the success to human instrument. But when the Lord uses a man who owns himself to be a poor, foolish creature, then the honor is not divided, but all men that this is the finger of God. The Lord loves to use tools which are not rusted with self-conceit. An axe which boasteth itself shall not be used on the thick trees.

Suppose you feel that you are more brutish than any man, shall I give you a little advice? If you can do but little, make the best of yourself by intensity. In the natural world, that creature is not to be feared which is the most energetic, rather than that which is the greatest. You shall find your life more in danger from the slender viper than from the huge ox. That which is the fullest of life and energy will achieve the most.

ake up by spiritual force what you lack in nat-ability. If you lack talent, get all the more e, and you will be no loser. If you love God e, even though you know less of science, you live a successful, because a holy, life. If you a greater love for the souls of your hearers the man who has ten talents, you may be ten s more a soul-winner than he. It is spiritual, mental power, which avails in conversion.
ur, a little further on in his one chapter, cheers ie humbler sort of people by his talk about lit-ings. In his twenty-fourth verse, he says:
ere be four things which are little upon the e, but they are exceeding wise: the ants are ple not strong, yet they prepare their meat in ummer." You that cannot do very much, care never to lose an opportunity. Make hay the sun shines: seize the seasons, and turn to account.

Power in Number.

st, if you are very little, you should, like the s, associate with others, and go forth in an ly way to work. Make yourself useful by drop-into rank, and in holy companionship doing part in connection with the rest. One locust ing to be laughed at; but when they go forth ids they make nations tremble. One believer accomplish little; but in the ranks of the Sun-chool the many can do wonders.
pose you are as little thought of as a spider,
py the spider in the two things which Agur ons. Take hold with your hands. Always be g hold upon the promise of the great King by nd of faith. Let your faith come out of your heart, as the spider spins her web out of her owels. Be always hanging on to one promise other, and constantly add to your holding.
also a holy courage like the spider, who is in palaces. She is not satisfied with being hid-way in a barn or a cottage; she pays a visit to on, and makes her abode in his painted halls.
can go anywhere for Christ, go and spin your gospel from your inmost soul. Make up ind that, whatever company you are in, you egin to spin about Christ, and spin a web in to catch a soul for your Lord.

No Hindrance to Joy.

Lastly: a sense of inferiority must not hinder y in the Lord. Suppose you have to say this ng, very groaningly, "I am more brutish ny man; I have not the understanding of a What then? Are you going to fret and about it? Will you, therefore, refuse to bea your God? I do not see, if it be true to llest extent, that there is any reasonable or being cast down in reference to the Lord
od. Would you expect to be saved because you ot brutish? Would you look for heaven be-you had a fine understanding, and could place l of the letters of the alphabet at the end of ime? If everybody said, "What a highly culman this is!" do you think heaven's gate open any the more readily to you? You are wrong tack, my friend, if you think so. Cass and attainments put plumes into the hat,
y do not protect the head from error.
ember, that if, by reason of our inferiority,
d I have to take a back seat, the back seats in the house. Our littleness does not alter promise. It is the same promise to the small re great; to the weak as to the strong. Our ncy does not alter our God. He is as full of nd truth as ever. He does not increase be-ve are enlarged; neither is He diminished
e we have declined.

Children are Heirs.

makes no difference to the covenant of Babes in their long-clothes, if they are ave quite as sure a right to their inheri-have those who are of full age. One is as protected as one-and-twenty. The children yet take full possession, by reason of their years; but the law defies a rogue to rob even nt heir of his lawful patrimony. Enjoy you, re, O you little ones, the infinite wealth of enant, and doubt not your right and title in Jesus!
ever little you may be, this makes no differ-God's love to you. Ask yourselves, do you at full-grown son of yours of twenty-five hat you have the less love left for your chubboy at home, of two or three? Bless his art! when he climbs your knee to-day, and ether you have a kiss for him, will you an-"No, Johnny, I cannot love you, for you are so little that I give all my love to your older brother, because he knows so much more than you do, and can be so useful to me?" Oh, no; you love the last one, perhaps, better than any of them;

certainly not less. They say, that if there be a child in the family who is a little weak, the mother always loves it most. It is so with our God; He is most tender and gracious to the weakest and least known.

Lastly, be more tender to others who, like yourself, are feeble. It is wonderful how gracious little ones care for other little ones, sympathize with them, pray for them, and comfort them. I believe that the saying is strictly true, that

"The Poor Help the Poor;"

and I know that it is so among the spiritually poor. High and mighty ones cannot help downcast saints; only those who have been afflicted can console the afflicted. In the East, among the Bedouins, in a shepherd's family, the little children, as soon as they can walk, learn to keep the lambs.
You see, the little boy who can only go slowly can lead the little lambs admirably, for he and they go well together. The big father would have taken long strides, and so have tired the little lambs; but his little son can only go at a slow pace, and that pace suits the lambs. So, dear friends, if the Lord permits you to be among the little ones, look after the little ones; and, whereas some would have to bend their backs too much to look after the lowly, you are on their level, and will naturally care for their state. Thus will you find your sphere of usefulness, and in it you will earn to yourselves a good degree. Though, like Agur, you feel more brutish than any man, you will so live that nobody would have thought so if you had not told them; and few will believe it when you do tell them. To God alone be glory. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Money Lent to the Lord.*

WHEN Bray took some of the money that he had so hardly earned by his labor in the mine to pay for something wanted for the chapels which he did so much to build, his wife, whom he called "Joey," angrily declared, "We shall be brought to the Union Workhouse, if you go on in this way."
"Never mind, my dear Joey, the Lord will provide;"
and so He did always, often marvellously. Here is one incident from his own lips. He says:

"At one time I had been at work the whole of the month, but had no wages to take up when payday came; and as we had no bread in the house,
'Joey' advised me to go up and ask the 'captain' to lend me a few shillings, which I did, and he let me have 10s. On my way home I called to see a family, and found they were worse off than myself, for, though we had no bread, we had bacon and potatoes, but they had neither. So I gave them five shillings, and went towards home. Then I called on another family, and found them, if possible, in greater distress than the former. I thought I could not give them less than I had given the others; so I gave them the other five shillings and went home. And Joey said, 'Well, William, have you seen the "captain"?' 'Yes,' I answered. 'Did you ask him for any money?' she inquired. 'Yes;
he let me have ten shillings,' I said. 'Where is it?'
I was asked. 'I have given it away,' I replied. 'I never saw the fellow to you in my life. You are enough to try any one,' responded my gentle wife.
'The Lord isn't going to stay in my debt very long,'
I said, and I then went out. For two or three days after this Joey was mighty down; but about the middle of the week, when I came home from the mine, Joey was looking mighty smiling, so I thought something had happened. Presently Joey said, 'Mrs. So-and-so has been here to-day.' 'Oh!'
I remarked. 'And she gave me twenty shillings,' she continued. 'There, I told you the Lord wasn't going to stay in my debt very long; there's the ten shillings, and ten shillings interest,' was my glad answer. My wife was delighted, also."

A Conflict with Satan.

[Bray, like Luther, Bunyan, and other men of strong natures and earnest piety, had an idea that he was often in combat with the enemy of souls in material form. Following is his own account of one such duel:]

* From The King's Son; or, a Memoir of Billy Bray, the famous Methodist preacher, who was at one time an irreligious miner. This book has reached its twenty-eighth edition. It is stated on good authority than no less than six hundred persons have attributed their conversion to the blessing of God on the reading of this simple narrative. Pp. 159. Price 75c. Published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 13 Cooper Union, New York.

"Friends, last week I was a-diggin' up my 'tatures.' It was a wisht poor yield, sure 'nough;
there was hardly a sound one in the whole lot. An' while I was a-diggin' the devil come to me, and he says, 'Billy, do you think your Father do love you?' 'I should reckon He do,' I says. 'Well, I don't,' says the ould tempter in a minute. If I'd thought about it I shouldn't ha' listened to 'en, for his 'pinions ben't worth the leastest bit o' notice.
'I don't,' says he, 'and I tell 'ee what for: if your Father loved you, Billy Bray, He'd give you a pretty yield o' 'tatures; so much as ever you do want, and ever so many of 'em, and every one of 'em as big as your fist. For it ben't no trouble to your Father to do anything; and He could just as easy give you plenty as not, an' if He loved you He would, too.' Of course, I wasn't goin' to let he talk o' my Father like that, so I turned round 'pon 'en.
'Pray, sir,' says I, 'who may you happen to be, comin' to me a-talkin' like this here? If I ben't mistaken, I know you, sir, and my Father, too.
And to think o' you comin' a-saying He don't love me! Why, I've got your written character home to my house; and it do say, sir, that you be a liar from the beginnin'! An' I'm sorry to add that I used to have a personal acquaintance with you some years since, and I served you faithful as ever any poor wretch could; and all you gave me was nothing but rags to my back, and a wretched home and an achin' head, an' no 'tatures, and the fear o' hell-fire to finish up with. And here's my dear Father in heaven. I have been a poor servant of His, off and on, for thirty years. An' He's given me a clean heart, an' a soul full o' joy, an' a lovely suit o' white as'll never wear out; and He says that he'll make a king o' me before He've done, an' that He'll take me home to His palace to reign with Him for ever and ever. An' now you come up here a-talkin' like that!' Bless 'e, my dear friends, he went off in a minute, like as if he'd been shot—
I do wish he had—and he never had the manners to say Good mornin'."

A Struggle with Tobacco.

[Bray had been a smoker all through, and after his conversion he continued the habit for a time, but he soon began to have scruples of conscience.
This is his account of the final struggle:]

"When I took the pipe to smoke, a still, small voice within said to me, 'It is an idol, a lust: worship the Lord with clean lips.' So I felt it was not right to smoke. The Lord also sent a woman to convince me. I was one day in a house, and I took out my pipe to light it at the fire, and Mary Hawke—for that was the dear woman's name—said, 'Do you not feel it is wrong to smoke?' I said I felt something inside telling me it is an idol, a lust; and she said that was the Lord. Then I said, 'Now I must give it up, for the Lord is telling me of it inside, and the woman outside; so the tobacco must go, love it as I may.' There and then I took the tobacco out of my pocket, and threw it into the fire, and put the pipe under my foot, 'ashes to ashes, dust to dust.' I have not smoked since. I found it hard to break off; but I cried to the Lord for help, and He gave me strength, for He has said, 'Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee.' The day after I gave up smoking I had the toothache so bad I did not know what to do. I thought this was owing to giving up the pipe, but I said I would never smoke again if I lost every tooth in my head. I said, 'Lord, Thou hast told us, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light,"' and when I said that, all the pain left me.
Sometimes the thought of the pipe would come back to me very strong; but the Lord strengthened me against the habit; and, bless His name, I have not smoked since."

Bray and a preacher of somewhat the same type of character were holding a missionary meeting at F—. Billy opened the meeting with prayer, and the preacher and others fervently responded to many of his petitions. Observing this, he began to be more minute and pointed in his requests. "O Lord, help the people to give up their idols." The preacher said, "Amen." "May thy children be saved from the love of the world's fashions."
"Amen," again said the preacher. "Help Thy people to give up their ribbons and feathers."
"Amen" was still the response of the preacher; and again "Amen" when he added, "And their cups and drinks." "And their pipes and tobacco,"
but to this there was no "Amen" from the preacher.
Bray at once said, "Where's your Amen, Brother B?
Why don't you say 'Amen' to the pipes as well as the cups? Ah, you won't say 'Amen' to the pipes!"

The Late Marquis Tseng. (See page 309.)

Miss Bradshaw, a Returned Missionary from China, and Her Chinese Friend.

He then proceeded with his prayer. And what would be irreverent in most persons, did not appear so in him. But the preacher afterward remonstrated with Billy on his impropriety in administering this personal rebuke in public. He justified himself by saying, "You were hearty and loud enough with your 'Amen's' for others to give up their idols; but you were not willing to part with your own. Bless the Lord! I have given up all for Jesus."

A CHINESE LADY IN IRELAND.

(See Illustration.)

AN interesting meeting was recently held at Clontarf, Ireland. A few weeks ago Miss Bradshaw, the daughter of the rector of that town, returned from China where she had been laboring as a medical missionary. She was accompanied by a Chinese lady of high rank, who made her home at the Rectory. The Celestial male travels to a limited extent, but etiquette or religion has, until now, compelled the Chinese ladies to stay at home. The visitor, if not the very first, is certainly the second Chinese lady of rank who has ever visited Europe. Her object in making the journey is not only to see European civilization for herself, but to interest the ladies of Europe in the religious welfare of Chinese women. Through an interpreter she made a pretty and graceful speech to an audience in the Clontarf Parochial Hall. She dresses in great taste, and very richly. Her feet, it is stated, have been bound according to the barbarous Chinese custom, and are only three inches long. She and her missionary friend appeared in Chinese costume, and a photograph of them was taken, from which our illustration is drawn.

AN OPPORTUNITY MISSED.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text for May 25, "Notwithstanding, be ye sure of this, that the Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Luke 10: 11.

ONE summer afternoon, as the young ladies in a popular academy were finishing their studies for the day, an elderly lady with a peculiarly quiet, gentle manner, asked permission to speak to them for a few minutes. She handed a card to the principal, on which a well-known clergyman had written a few words of introduction. That was sufficient. She sat down, and in low tones and with a voice singularly soft and gentle, she spoke of the blessings which come from an early decision for Christ. It was not much that she said, and it was more of the nature of testimony than appeal. She had travelled over the greater part of life's journey, she explained; it was a road with many dangerous places in it; in the valleys there were swamps, and on the mountains there were slippery ledges, both of which might prove fatal to the traveller. She would not pass that way a second time, but her experience had taught her the nature of the way, and it might be useful to some who were setting out on the journey, especially as there was one infallible Guide whom she wished to recommend. It was all very simple and plain, and was evidently spoken with the kindest motive. She would like to speak with any who wanted to know more of the road and the Guide.

"I should like to talk with her, Norah," said Florence Hastings. "I never listened to so nice a lady, and she is good; one can see that. Do come with me."

"No, I do not want religion now. It is all very well when one gets old. I shall certainly think of it then, but I want to have some fun and pleasure first. I know several religious girls at home, and they will not go to the theatre, and they will not dance and they object to this and that and the other, till they have no brightness in their lives. Don't go, Florence. I shall not."

But Florence did go, and when she returned to the school that night, she knelt by her bedside and solemnly pledged herself to Jesus, promising Him to follow Him and to obey Him as her King. There were no witnesses to the transaction, but it was definite, fixed, and determined on the girl's part. There were none of the struggles, the tears, and the anxieties that occur in the experience of some as they pass the boundary line of conversion. There was not even any question in Florence's mind about Christ accepting her pledge. It was all so simple. He had invited her to come to Him, and she went, believing in His good faith, and sure that He meant what He said.

The end of the term was approaching, and there was plenty of work preparing for the examinations. No one noticed any change in Florence. She was quiet, studious, and thoughtful, but she had always been that. Only she herself knew how important was the change that had taken place in her, and she did not realize it fully at first. But her motives were new; she did not think of herself so much, or seek her own gratification as before; she thought more of how she could please her King, and of what he wished her to do. Almost insensibly to herself her whole being was permeated by her new relation, and a strange, new love for every one filled her heart. She was to be a teacher, and this term closed the first period of preparation. The next stage was in college life, and then she would begin to earn her own livelihood. Norah, too, was not coming back to school. Her family was wealthy, and she was to have private teachers.

Florence and Norah were, however, destined to have one memorable meeting. Florence heard of her friend from time to time. Heard of her as a belle in society, courted, admired, flattered; heard of her brilliant marriage, of her splendid entertainments, and of her influence in the highest social circles. She heard, too, alas! scandal connected with her name, then exposure, and, finally, disgrace. She mourned for her, and prayed for her, and wished that she could see her old friend to tell her of her Lord, who casteth out none that come to Him. And the opportunity came. As Florence was returning home from a church service one night, she caught a glimpse of the familiar face in the glare of a street lamp, and recognized it instantly.

"Norah!" she exclaimed; "I am Florence Hastings; do you not remember me?"

"Florence! oh, yes! I have never forgotten. But why do you speak to me? All my other friends have cast me off."

"I would never do that, Norah. If you friend let me that to you."

"I am homeless and friendless both, and serve to be," said the desolate creature. "I not the courage to die, or I should have died ago."

"Come with me," said Florence; "I live alone, and you are heartily welcome."

"You do not know my past, or you would say so."

"The past makes no difference; come with me. I will come for this night, but in the morning will tell you all my story, and then you will turn away."

The sad story was told, and Florence heard with an aching heart. "Do you remember," she asked, as she finished it, "that day when we at school when you wanted me to go to see a lady, to talk about religion?"

"Yes, I shall never forget it."

"Nor I," said Norah sadly. "That was opportunity, and I missed it. I once heard a man preach from the text, 'The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.' It was nigh to me then, but I would not enter, and now it is too late. I am ruined for life and for eternity. Shut out is horrible. What might I have been saved! I had gone with you as you wished! Now impossible!"

Not impossible, while life lasts, and that Florence tried to show her friend. But it was hard. She had been deeply injured, and her heart was full of hatred and resentment against one who had injured her. She had learned to pleasure, and the ways of piety seemed dull and cheerless to her. All her habits and tastes were obstacles in the way of redemption. But Florence kept her with her, mindful of her commission from her Lord, and of the power He had given into her hands. Sickness came, and the poor waster trembled in the balance. Florence nursed her, prayed with her. At times she had hope of her soul, especially as the physical life ebbed. But she never knew whether she was really saved, for the last moment, when the soul quitted the body, Norah persisted in her belief that there was no entrance to the Kingdom possible for her.

STANLEY'S MARCH TO THE SEA.

THE history of the famous expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha, the more that is known of it, is one of the most astonishing in the world's annals. The full story, written by Mr. Stanley himself, is shortly to be published by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, of New York, and will be read with much interest. In the meantime, the speeches Mr. Stanley is delivering in Europe afford some slight indication of the difficulties he surmounted in the

Emin and his people
ugh the unknown coun-o the coast. The illus-on here given is taken a sketch made during journey by an artist who panied the expedition, conveys an idea of how long procession must looked as it filed past ley and Emin as they in their mules surveying
oute from a high knoll.
e march commenced
pril 10, 1889. The comin all consisted of persons. Two days
h brought them to mbonis, and that night
ley was prostrated with e sickness. "The n had been too much,"
says; and for twenty-t days he lay hovering
een life and death.
aks to the skill and deon of his surgeon, Dr.
e, he recovered, and on 8 the march was reed. Only fragmentary rts have as yet come to l of that terrible jour-
It is known that Stan-took the direct route
ugh German territory,
he valley of the Semliki
r, crossing it at Awamthrough Usonora and ve to the Victoria
za. Mslala was reach-n September 1, and ampwa on November
On December 4 they out at Bagamoyo,
e a steamer met them carried them to Zanzibar.

Stanley's words indi-
that the journey was one of enormous difficulty.
ne point they had to fight for four days' consely, against savage enemies. Women and ren were sick, and had to be carried in hams, and many died, in spite of the most careful ation. As the great explorer looked back over ast three years, as he stood safely in Zanzibar, his mission triumphantly accomplished, he no words of boasting to utter, but reverently nowledges that his success was due to God's ance and to His overruling hand.

WILL IT LIFT?
THE STORY OF A FOG.
By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray.

(Continued from page 302.)

we must now turn our attention for a little while e Graythorpes, from whom we have been ed for a time, but who all the while are ughly worthy of our interest and esteem.
r apartments at No. 59, and the few house-oods which enabled them to call it "home," till witnessing a chronic struggle with poverty, g mainly to Millie's continued ill-health, for s still on her sofa; and it takes all and more her mother's busy fingers and Mercy's skill earn to provide her with medical attendance, those dainties of a nutritious kind which en-he palate and strengthen the patient—dainties ften far beyond their purse to supply.
e doctor did not appear to do her any good.
ct, he all but acknowledged that he could not honest frankness which, if it were more comin that profession, would go to the saving of y lives. It was "on the nerves," he said, with notony which brought no explanation and no
All she wanted, he declared, was good ng, which she had, and plenty of nourishing such as she could take—which she had not—an entire change of air and scene, which she l not get. Latterly he had dwelt much on If only she could get away into the country, cially to her native air, there was no knowing lasting good might come of that.
e summer's morning the doctor called and d his patient sitting up a little. There was a color in her face and a promising brightness r eye which led the man of skill to speak more ful words than usual. He did not say, perhaps id not know, that it was the clear, bright sun-

A Scene in Stanley's March to the Sea.

shine, and the pleasant breeze that came in upon her through the open window; that it was the pitcher of flowers which Mercy had bought and set upon the table, and the vase of flowers which she had bought and set on the mantelpiece; and the beautiful nosegay of flowers which she had bought and put in her sister's hands; the strawberries and cherries which she had bought and placed in dainty leaves beside her sister's couch—perhaps the doctor did not know that it was these, and other sights, and smells, and surroundings that reminded her of summer in the country, the happy summers of her childhood, that had brought the light to her cheek, and the color to her eye. And at what a cost, and by what self-denial on the part of mother and daughter, had these been provided!

"I'll tell you what, Mrs. Graythorpe, you must try to get your daughter into the country for a little while. Indeed, it is absolutely necessary, and it must be done. If you could get her away to her native village, where she could breathe the pure country air, and have new milk and fresh eggs, and could take exercise among the green fields and country lanes, and that sort of thing, I feel morally sure she would recover. Medicine is of very little use in a case like this. It's on the nerves, you see;
and time and change and Nature are the only cure."

"That sort of thing," said Mercy, with a faint smile, after the doctor was gone; "that sort of thing, unless a miracle were to occur, is beyond our reach."

"Oh dear," said Millie, turning her pale face to her sister; "I think one hour at dear Hilldrop would work a miracle in me. I feel as though I can almost breathe the air now, as it comes through the plantation of larches behind the house."

"Yes," said Mrs. Graythorpe; "there is no place like Hilldrop Farm; no place in the world to worship in like Faringham's little ivy-covered church.
I sometimes think we did quite wrong to come away."

"I don't know about that, mother," said Mercy, who could not dream of her mother doing wrong in anything. "But I do think that we made a mistake in cutting ourselves away so completely from the dear old place and from the many kind friends and neighbors we had when we lived there.
I suppose it would be called a 'little honest pride' that led us to do it; but was it doing as we would be done by?"

Hereupon Mercy rose to her feet under the influence of a "bright idea." "Mother, do you remember dear Mrs. Higginbotham?"
"Don't you?" said Millie;
"and all the toys and gingerbread and ripe pears and rosy apples with which she used to bribe me to sit with her in her cozy little parlor behind the bar?"

"Well, then, listen to me," quoth Mercy. "If we have been foolish in the past, that's no reason why we should be foolish in the future. I fancy we have lost our pride by this time.
If we haven't, we ought to.
I'm going to write to Mrs.
Higginbotham. I know the dear soul will be glad to hear of us again; and I'll ask her what it will cost for mother and you to go and stop at 'Hilldrop Arms' for a few weeks. I will tell her honestly how poor we are,
and ask her to be as reasonable as she can in her charges."

However unwilling Mrs.
Graythorpe felt at exposing the measure of their "coming down in the world" to her former neighbors, neighbors who had looked up to her as their superior, she felt that Millie's restoration to health was a goal worth while running through brake and briar to reach, and so it was decided Mercy was to have her way.

"Now, then," said Mercy, cheerily, "no more grizzling. I earned five shillings yesterday, and I am going to take that pair of screens that Millie painted to my little Dutchman. Who knows?
Perhaps he'll pay for them in gold! Now, little Millie, let me freshen your pillow a bit. Kiss me, mother, and wish me a good wish: nay," she added softly, "pray for me and my letter too, for I am going to write to Mrs. Higginbotham at the 'Hill-drop Arms.'" And when Mercy sat down to write the letter that might bring summer breezes to her ailing sister from the larches and the limes of Hill-drop Farm, hope throbbed high in her own breast and also in the two dearest hearts close by.

They had not to wait long for the answer. This was the missive that the postman brought:

"The Hilldrop Arms, Faringham, July, 11, 18—My dear Mercy,—I am sure you will permit me to call you so, as in the dear days of 'auld lang syne,' when you and 'Little Millie'—not so very little now I imagine—used to be daily and ever welcome visitors here. Do you know, your letter came just at the right time. My husband is called to London on some special business, and I shall be all alone.
My boy, as perhaps you are aware, is over the sea and far away. I shall dearly prize and value a little companionship in these dull parts; and if I had the pick and choice of all the world, there are none that I should choose before your dear mother, little Millie, and yourself. If you can all come, pack up at once and come, and at the very threshold you will see by my face, without a word, how dearly welcome you will be, and how delighted I shall be to have you stay with me just as long as you like.
Indeed, it will be cruel of you, now that you have raised such hopes, if you permit anything to hinder.
I want you, I long for you, and if you delay I shall be compelled to come and fetch you. And as for Millie, we will put the roses on her cheeks and the light of health in her eyes before she has been here a fortnight. Tell her I have some gingerbread-nuts in the little cupboard. Give my love to her and your mother, and accept a full share for yourself, and be quick and come.—Ever your loving friend,— ELIZA HIGGINBOTHAM."

I don't think that even Mercy ever sang a brighter song than she did that day when it was made so clear to her that Millie was to have a change of air, and her dear patient mother, Mrs. Graythorpe, was to see dear old Hilldrop Farm again.

At once they began to sum up their scanty resources, and they found, since that last interview with the little picture-dealer about the fans, that these were in a more hopeful and encouraging state than usual. Still they would not bear the strain of paying up arrears of lodgings, sundry other small items which must be discharged, and the traveling cost for three from London to the midland county, whither they were bound. Mercy was driven at her wit's end to know what to do. One morning, having risen a little earlier than usual, as she said, "to get things ready," for nothing could daunt her indomitable spirit, and she fully meant that they should go, she sat down for a few moments, and began with a sigh—sighs were numerous enough despite her courage—to con the matter of ways and means over and over again. Mrs. Graythorpe and Millie had not yet risen, so she had the little sitting-room all to herself. "Now, Miss Mercy," she said to herself, "you've got your considering cap on again; just for pity's sake help a poor girl to a fresh idea." As she spoke her eye moved slowly round the room in a vain search for something in the way of ornament, picture, drawing, needle-work, that had not yet been appropriated in their long and weary struggle to keep the wolf from the door. Her eye rested on the pianoforte, but only for a moment; off it went again on another vain round of useless search. By-and-by it rested there again.

"I can't let it go," she said; "whatever would Millie do when we come back again, and no dear, sweet friend in the world with a cheery voice to give us welcome? And yet, dear old friend, you must go! I'd almost rather part with my right hand: but Millie must have her roses back. Mamma must have a dose of Hildrop air." She slowly rose, seated herself on the music-stool, and half unconsciously applied her fingers to the keys. It was not until tears hid the keys, and the mahogany fretwork, and the crimson silk from her sight, that she knew she was playing "Should Auld Acquaintance be forgot?"

"No," she said, as her hands dropped listlessly to her side, "you can never, never be forgot. Your tones are too sweetly familiar and dear for that—all the dearer that you have preached me many a hopeful sermon when my heart was sad and sore; but," she said, rising quickly to her feet, "darling Millie shall see the Hildrop cornfields. There!" and dropping the lid that hid the keys with a decisive hand, she resolutely turned to her morning duties. The question was settled; the piano was to go.

How little, how very, very little, does the unthinking world know of the bitterness of sorrow, the poignancy of pain, that sensitive and honest poverty feels in parting with its household treasures, sternly compelled thereto either by the harsh demands of hunger or the plaintive moans and inarticulate longings of dear ones, pining in weakness and pain!

"Oh, Mercy dear! What will you do?" said Mrs. Graythorpe and Millie both in a breath, when the brave girl informed them of her decision. They knew that her music was life, and to lose that means of uplifting her own drooping spirits in the fierce battle she had to wage would be to make her poor indeed.

Poor Mercy's lip quivered a little as she repeated the question to herself; but her decision was made, and she replied quite cheerily, "Oh, don't trouble about me. Don't you see, when Millie's better she can soon earn another by her paintings; and till she does she and I can sing and keep each other's spirits up. Besides, I can try to pawn it first, and if I don't succeed, I dare say I can get the people who buy it to give me a little time to buy it back again. The plain fact is, I want to go to Hildrop, and the piano is going to take me there." It was a still plainer fact to Millie and her mother that the dear girl wanted them to go, and they could but thank her silently with tearful eyes; for Mrs. Graythorpe, at any rate, had no more to say as she looked on Millie's pallid features as she lay back upon the sofa, spent by the exertion of dressing and the excitement of the hour.

The piano which Mercy had resolved to sell was a very good one, and bore the name of a maker whose fame stood high. She managed to make a tolerable bargain, and when the sum she got for it was paid over to her, the chink of the golden coin brought Hildrop so near that she could hear the music of trees, and smell the fragrance of the woodbine on the strength of her purchase, and with wonderful self-control watched its removal by the men, who little knew, as they carried it downstairs, what a wrench they were making, and how knell-like was their tread as they bore their richest treasure away. As this most precious of their household gods disappeared around the corner, the three were standing watching by the window. Mercy put on a cheery face, tried to make a little laugh, and even began to hum the charming Scotch song, "Will ye no' come back again?" But she had over-estimated her ability, and was fain to run upstairs, and closing the door of her room behind her, gain relief by letting her tears flow unrestrained.

At length the never-to-be-forgotten morning dawned, and our three prisoners, who had been so long pent up in a little dingy city cage, were set at liberty, and the coach that bore them away along the white roads, and between the green hedge-rows, and through the ever-varying scenery of hill and valley, dale and plain, and wood and river, never carried three more grateful hearts than theirs from the day it was spic-and-span new out of the coach-builder's manufactory. Millie had been carefully wrapped up so as to defy the unaccustomed coolness of the free winds of Heaven, when she was perched upon the top of the Highflyer, and spinning up hill and down dale at a good ten miles an hour. Prudent Mrs. Graythorpe had had the forethought to provide a small cushion or two, and by the favor of kindly and congenial fellow-passengers, Millie was so placed as to be in a restful and reclining posture nearly all the way.

It brought the tears to her mother's eyes, as she quietly watched her movements, to see her opening her mouth quite wide every now and then, and drawing in a good long breath, as though she was determined to force out the last atomic particle of London smoke, and make the most of her time and opportunity for appropriating the pure, unadulterated article—fresh air. Mercy, seeing that all went well with the invalid, fairly gave herself up to the enjoyment of the hour. She sat in a delicious silence, feeding her eyes with the beauties of Nature, now beginning to don their autumn bloom and aspect, regaling her ears with the songs of the birds, forgetting in the exquisite pleasures of the moment all the long, dreary struggle of the past, and utterly oblivious to the fact that after a few short weeks at most she and her loved ones must turn their faces towards busy, struggling London town.

At last, just as the sun was dipping, casting a sort of crimson glory on Hildrop Mere, and gilding afresh the vane that flashed and gleamed on the spire of Faringham Church, our travellers came in sight of the well-remembered home of long ago. Mrs. Graythorpe surveyed the scene with hushed and chastened feelings. A rush of memories, both sad and bright, came up at the call of each familiar sight. Yonder was the dear old house in which she passed her childhood; yonder was the Grange in which her not too happy married life was spent; and yonder was the orchard, close by the village school, where she and Gilbert Craske exchanged earnest vows when standing "beneath the milk-white thorn," vows which, alas! for youthful hope and promise, were fated never to be kept. Never!

Leave the comely and even beautiful silver-haired widow to her dreams, for "Hildrop Inn" is reached, and there stands God-mother Higginbotham with her eyes shaded with her hands, as she tries to descry her three welcome guests, and cannot readily do so because in them is the light of the setting sun. No sooner does she get a glimpse of them, however, than she clasps her hands, good woman, in unfeigned delight, flings a kiss at each, and then turns to scold the ostler because he is so long in so placing the ladder that Millie can be lifted down from her cushions on the coach.

Safely ensconced in the private parlor, Mrs. Graythorpe finds time to note that so far as furniture and pictures, etc., are concerned, there is little change in her friend's surroundings, but in her face there is a change—the change which time and grief together will work, and none can say them nay. But there was no change in the smile that welcomed them—no change in the light of welcome that shone in the kindly grey eyes. Thank Heaven, in this world of change, that whatever comes to form and feature the love-light of affection knows no dimming and does not fail.

The clear, bright, bracing country air proved even more a wonder-worker than either Mercy or her mother had dared to give it credit for, much as they had hoped for, with respect to their care and comfort, Millie. She had not been at Hildrop many days before the roses began to promise a reappearance on her pallid cheeks, before her appetite did more than promise quite a remarkable advance; and, better still, before long, strength and vigor began to come back to her flaccid and feeble limbs. That mysterious something or other which the doctor mysteriously declared to be "on the nerves," began to act as though it had come to the conclusion to take itself off again. Her mother and sister, too, both felt inclined to sing the praises of the Faringham air, for both were brighter, better, happier for its generous influence, and Millie's rapid progress towards health and strength was a tonic of even a stronger and more effective kind.

It is not to be wondered at that the old-fashioned grand piano in the drawing-room, which Mrs. Higginbotham had had well tuned for her musical friend, Mercy, was not allowed to remain silent for many hours together. Most assuredly that auld-world instrument did never give forth sweeter music, or cheerier, than that which came forth under the skill of Mercy's fingers, and from the deeper fount of Mercy's grateful and trustful heart.

(To be Continued.)

200,000

Estey Organs have been sold in the last fifty years.

An enormous number! No other Organ has been so popular. No other Organ has had such a sale.

We want to secure the best conception of 200,000 Organs. We ask some reader of this paper to give us an illustration of the number 200,000 which will show how great it is.

Here is one specimen illustration.

If the Estey Organ Company had commenced to build organs when Noah began to build the ark, and had finished one organ every week since that time, they would have built just about 200,000 organs to-day.

This is a good illustration. Perhaps you can do better. Will you not try?

ESTEY ORGAN CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

Branch Offices: 159 Tremont Street, Boston. 831 Broadway, New York. 18 North 7th Street, Philadelphia. State and Jackson Streets, Chicago. 916 Olive Street, St. Louis. Marietta and Broad Sts., Atlanta, Ga.

An interesting Book of Facts (containing 24 pages with 46 illustrations) entitled, How Large is 200,000, will be mailed free; one copy to one address.

"MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething" softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

ECONOMY OF FOOTWEAR.

An illustrative treatise interesting to all. Sent FREE on receipt of name and address on postal BOX 551, Brockton, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure biliousness and nervous illness. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

HOOD'S
COMPOUND EXTRACT
SARSAPARILLA
TRADE MARK

Hood's Sarsaparilla has by its peculiar merit a long record of cures in the most difficult cases of the blood, and is the most powerful purifier of the system, strengthening the muscles, curing the skin, and curing the head, kidneys, liver, etc.

plait, catarrh, rheumatism, etc. Be sure to Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself. Hood's Sarsaparilla sold by druggists. For $5. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT
ESTABLISHED 1846

For Internal and External Use. Stops Pain, Cramps, Inflammation in body or like magic. Cures Croup, Asthma, Colds, Catarrh, Era Morbus, Diarrhoea, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Stiff Joints and Strains. Full particulars free. 25 cts. post-paid. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

DOES CURE CONSUMPTION

In its First Stages.

Be sure you get the genuine.

UNION INVESTMENT COMPANY
Capital, - - $1,000,000.
KANSAS CITY, MO.

7 per cent. investment interest semi-annually. The direct obligation of the Company set by business property and recommended by prominent business men and bankers of Kansas. Send for circulars with full particulars.

W. P. RICE, Pres. } Union Investment
O. F. PAGE, Treas. }

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves
VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA
The Original--Most Soluble.
Ask your Grocer for it, take no other.

NEW BOOK. WOMAN AND HEALTH
By M. AUGUSTA FAIRCHILD, M. D. Price, 10 cts. More agents wanted. Address HEALTHY, 537 Broadway, Quincy, Ill. State where you saw this advertisement.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly. Situations procured all pupils when completed for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

A LADY WANTED In every Town. WOMAN'S HAND. Just issued. Quick Sales. Big Profits. Home. Circ'rs Free. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York.

HEN INSTEAD OF RAVENS.
 A recently asked a mission preacher experience he had ever met anything story told in the Bible about Elijah fed by ravens (1 Kings 17: 6). The said that he believed God had many applied his wants directly, but he had used birds as His messengers. A by, however, spoiled the infidels triumphs by a well authenticated incident of messenger from Huguenot history, as so natural as to be quite probable. "At the massacre of St. Bartholomew there was a protestant named Merlin, some means made his escape to a st outside of Paris, and taking refuge ay-loft hid himself among the straw: to remain concealed there until he be able to find a place of permanent He remained there three or four raid to move in search of food or at he should be recognized and killed, elt he could not hold out any longer. imply a question as to whether he come out and perish by the sword or and perish by hunger and thirst. lved to venture out, but just then he noise at the door of the hay-loft. is hiding-place been discovered? a fierce pursuers upon him? He he hay moving. Nearer and came. Tremblingly he gazed in tion of the sound and saw a hen. tly knew its way about and made rtain corner. Could he catch it? ight easily escape him, and besides ying and might return day after day ys leave an egg. He waited until way then went over to where it had ng, and found a large egg. It was en by the famishing man. Next day ext he waited for the hen, but it did n. Then he ventured out and was l in reaching a place of safety. ds he learned that if he had gone that day the hen paid its visit he ost probably have been slain. He the ravens to Elijah sent a hen to d His saints and will still help His to-day who stand in need of it."

CHANGE IN THE TEXT.

minent Dr. Moxey points one of his s on Faith with the following illus- hich shows how essential it is for onvert to be warned against trust- s own feelings, or in anything but His promise: "A widow went to or Whittle speak. His text was 6, 'For God so loved the world ve His only begotten Son that r believeth in Him should not ut have everlasting life.' The stened with rapt attention, waited to the evangelist and was finally o lay hold on the promise and re- When she got home her little boy r happy face, and asked the reason 'have found Jesus, my dear boy,' imed; 'I am saved by his precious How do you know?' asked the ow. 'Listen,' she said, and she verse to him, and tried to make rstand how the words had brought assurance. Next morning Satan's favorite question of 'feelings,' ame down to breakfast with the old expression that her son had been customized to. 'What's wrong now, questioned the boy. 'Everything's ar; I have made a terrible mistake, have you lost Jesus, mother?' She ce to say she had. 'Has the verse then?' continued the boy; No, the not changed. 'Then' said the boy, erse meant anything last night, it e same now.' That was logical other saw it was so, and her faith hold on the word."

IMPEDIMENT REMOVED.

eamen's mission a sailor named who had been on a voyage to East as deeply moved under the Evan- appeals, but he went away quietly: meeting closed, and no one could him. He went to the next meet- he joy and peace of God's people much, and he fled, not to go far, er found him crying and sobbing e outer door, as if his heart would he writer went to him, but he only as he spoke of God's love. He then told him the secret. Charlie bitterly hated one who professed Christ, because, probably in a thoughtless moment, he told this poor sailor that a dog would be more acceptable in God's sight than a wretch like him! This aroused all the blood, and anger, and resentment he possessed. As the days sped on, these passions seem to have grown, and though thousands of miles parted them, it was never forgotten by unhappy Charlie. But now he realized that the anger he felt was an impediment to his own salvation. 'How can I be forgiven if I do not for give?' he asked. 'I cannot tell this man that I forgive him, nor can I write to him, as I do not know his address.' He would not say, 'I forgive,' as he thought it useless when the other could not hear of it, and he could not realize a reconciliation. On the following night, our sailor friend was again present at our meeting; the subject was, 'The Father's Love' (Luke xv. 20). This crushed Charlie down, and he wept loudly. 'The forgiving heart of God humiliated and put Charlie to shame, and Charlie said from the depth of his heart. 'I forgive, I forgive!' He then and there cried for pardon, and rejoiced in his deliverance, and went out singing. He attended almost every open-air and indoor meeting after this until he left the town."

A CROCODILE'S PREY.

In a letter from Stanley Pool, in Africa, Mr. J. L. Rogers, who is laboring for Christ at that station, says: "Mr. Brown and I were just arranging and laying our plans for devoting ourselves more fully to the study- ing of the Kiteki language, and to getting out to do more itinerating work among the towns, when one of the greatest calamities possible happened to us at the present time in the sad death of our mission-boy, whose name was Iya. Last Saturday four of our boys went down to the water to bathe. Not long after they were gone we were startled by hearing an unearthly cry. On running down to the beach we found to our horror that a crocodile had caught Iya, and had taken him off under the water. It was an awful shock to us all. He was our interpreter, and when we went into the towns all the natives seemed fond of the lad. The loss of such is very great; he was very useful. The help he was to us with the language cannot be valued. I often had him helping me with the language, and at such times I spoke to him about his soul. He understood the way of salvation clearly. He told me he had asked Jesus to forgive him all his sins, and that he had given his heart to the Saviour. I believe he had, for his life gave good evidence that he was born again, and was a true follower of Jesus. He was the first Christian among the Bateki race. We hope his death may be blessed to many of his own people. Lately I have had large meetings in the towns, and the people give great attention when we are preaching the Gospel. We are very hopeful that soon a great work will be done among these people. Let the friends at home still pray for us. The windows of heaven will soon be opened, and we shall have the showers we have prayed so much for."

The Census will Show Less Deafness.

It is claimed that there will be considerable falling off in the percentage of deaf people in the Census of 1890, owing to the extended use of the sound disc invented by a citizen of Bridgeport, Conn., named H. A. Wales.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
 When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
 When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
 When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

DO YOU WRITE?

The Nettle Bly Fountain Pen retails at fifty cents. A perfect pen—as good as the best, except that no gold pen is used. Useful to office men, collectors, salesmen, housekeepers, teachers and pupils. Sample sent to any address on receipt of price. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal discounts.
WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
 301 Broadway, New York.

RIDLEY'S

Grand St., N. Y.

HOUSEKEEPING LINENS.

1 CASE WHITE GERMAN LINEN DAMASK, 55-inch wide, at 45c. yard—worth 50c.
 200 PIECES BLEACHED GERMAN TABLE LINEN, 63-inch wide, at 50c. yard—good value 65c.
 CREAM LINEN TABLE DAMASK, 58-inch wide, 45c. yard.
 60-INCH WIDE REAL TURKEY RED DAMASK, 50c. yard—worth 85c.

NAPKINS.

1,000 DOZENS FRINGED LINEN NAPKINS, with red border, 6½c. each—good size.
 ½ LINEN NAPKINS, 300 dozens, 65c. dozen—good value.
 ½ LINEN DAMASK NAPKINS, $1.52, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $7.00 doz.

TOWELS.

2 CASES LINEN TOWELS, size 20 by 28, fringed and colored Borders, 12½c. each.
 500 DOZEN LINEN DAMASK TOWELS, large size, 19c. each.
 LINEN DAMASK TOWELS, extra size, with colored Centre Piece, 25c. each—worth 38c.
 BLEACHED TURKISH TOWELS, large size, 25c. each—worth 40c.
 125 pieces linen toweling. 16 inch. 20 inch.
 7c. yard. 8c. yard.

BED SPREADS.

CROCHET BED SPREADS, 69c., 80c., 95c., $1.25, $1.35, $1.65, $1.89 each.
 WHITE FRINGED BED SPREADS, 80c., $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 each.
 MARSEILLES BED SPREADS, $1.75, $2.10, $2.50, $3.00 to $7.50 each.
 BED COMFORTABLES, 75c., 85c., $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $2.00 to $14.00 each.

Spring and Summer Magazine.

Sample Copy 15 Cents; subscription 50c. a year.

EDWARD RIDLEY & SONS,

309, 311, 311½ to 321 Grand Street.
 56 to 68 ALLEN, 59 to 65 ORCHARD St.,
 NEW YORK.

P. D. & S. Pens

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS. I
 Send 10 cents for Sample Card with 12 Pens. A. S. BARNES & Co., New York.

Winslow

$100 A MONTH and $2 Outfit Free!
 Agents Wanted in every State to collect small pictures to copy and enlarge to a beautiful Oil Painting. The biggest thing out. Send for circulars, etc. Restorative Copying Co. Address, C. WINSLOW & CO., 274 Grand Street, New York.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on 10cts.
 if you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
 HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City.

CARPETS.

AT EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS.

500
 PIECES ROYAL WILTONS.
 PIECES WILTON VELVETS.
 PIECES BODY BRUSSELS.
 PIECES EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.
 TO CLOSE OUT QUICKLY.

MATTINGS.

FINE JAPANESE AND CHINA STRAW MATTINGS. LARGEST STOCK IN THE CITY.
 OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION.
 White, Red Check and Fancy Patterns.
 FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS.
 ALSO FINE SEAMLESS JAPANESE MATTINGS AT $8 PER ROLL.
 100 Pieces Warehouse Samples, Finest Quality, not regularly numbered, at greatly reduced prices.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS

AND
 LACE CURTAINS
 IN GREAT VARIETY AT LOWEST PRICES.

FURNITURE,

Our own upholstering, at moderate prices. Agents for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.
 We make a specialty of furnishing complete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.,

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,

827 and 829 Broadway, New York,

HERMANN SCHAEFFER, President; ERNEST DEWEER, Vice-President.

NONE
 GENUINE WITHOUT

THIS TRADE MARK.

Note our Trade Mark Closely!

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment of

SUMMER UNDERWEAR,

And Especially to our exquisite

All-Wool GAUZE

Underwear for the hot, summer season.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Specialty.
 Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,

827 and 829 Broadway, New York.

BRANCH HOUSES:

119 NASSAU ST., Temple Court Building;
 504 FULTON ST., next to Y.M.C.A. Bldg., Brooklyn, N.Y.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885 1885-1886
 No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An Invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.
 Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.
 THE McDOWELL CO.
 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address.
 CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

AN ANTI-CHRISTIAN RIOT.

THE Chinese Government, in spite of the severity of the punishments which it inflicts on the disobedient, is not always able to restrain the bigoted fury of its subjects. A recent letter from Miss Ord, one of the missionaries of the China Inland Mission, thus describes the destruction last November of her school, and her own escape through the intervention of the Mandarin:

"On Wednesday, November 5, we had a serious riot at Nan K'ang Fu. The riot began at the chapel about six o'clock in the evening, and after the rioters had destroyed the house and everything in it, they then came to my house (Opium Refuge) about eight o'clock. The first intimation we had was a note from Miss McFarlane, begging us to get a boat and start for Ta-k'ang, they being in the ya-men. This was out of the question, as the mob was fast coming, so we went into the landlord's house adjoining ours. In about ten minutes the students (estimated at about 7,000) came along, literally yelling like wild beasts. They soon broke in, smashing and carrying off everything, except a few things in the landlord's house. The dear sisters at the other house—Misses McFarlane and Harding—have saved nothing but what they were wearing. In about an hour's time, nine o'clock, the mandarins came with soldiers to take us to the Prefect's ya-men nearest to our home. We walked, guarded by soldiers on each side, but the students would not let us get in there, and broke the Prefect's chair in pieces, so we were taken through the streets to the district magistrate's ya-men, where we stayed until last night (7th), whence they escorted us to the mandarin's boat, and sent us here under escort. We cannot speak too highly of their kindness; they did everything they could think of for our comfort. Indeed, we received kindness from so many, and the native Christians were just splendid; so bright, kind, and affectionate, and not ashamed to confess the Lord."

A TIGER'S PANIC.

"ONE evening," says Mr. Judd, a missionary in India, "after tea we had worship, and commended our friends and well-wishers and the mission to God. After worship I had to go outside, and right under the window was a tiger about twelve feet off. My first thought was, turn and flee; but fearing that he would jump on my back and shake me by the neck, as the cat does the rat, and seeing that I was too near to flee, I resolved to walk straight up to him, and begged Jesus to go with me and preserve me. The tiger had already been to the cow-house and scratched a hole to get at the cows and calves. The walls, however, were thick and hard, so that after scratching about nine inches deep he gave it up as a bad job. Now he came to the house seeking his supper. On the verandah was lying my Scotch dog, who had been sent to me from friends in Scotland. He had never seen a tiger before, so he rushed at him and barked furiously. The tiger had never seen impudence like this before, but here was a rough and hairy-looking stranger with a deep bass voice, bearding him to his face. He snarled at us and went a few steps on one side, and I made a shave between the wall and the tiger, praying all the time. After walking twenty yards I realized that I was safe. Then I thought of the dog which would lose his life to save that of his master, but the tiger turned and fled into the jungle, and even the brave dog was left unharmed. Surely the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him."

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to the address of BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

A MAN

UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Ry.

Including Lines East and West of the Missouri River. The Direct Route to and from CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, DAVENPORT, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, WATERTOWN, SIOUX FALLS, MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL, ST. JOSEPH, ATCHISON, LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS CITY, TOPEKA, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO. Free Reclining Chair Cars to and from CHICAGO, CALDWELL, HUTCHINSON, and DODGE CITY, and Palace Sleeping Cars between CHICAGO, WICHITA and HUTCHINSON. Daily Trains to and from KINGFISHER, in the Indian Territory.

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

of Through Coaches, Sleepers and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS and OMAHA, and Free Reclining Chair Cars between CHICAGO and DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS and PUEBLO, via St. Joseph, or Kansas City and Topeka. Excursions daily with Choice of Routes to and from Salt Lake, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The Direct Line to and from Pike's Peak, Manitou, Garden of the Gods, the Sanitariums, and Scenic Grandeur of Colorado.

Via The Albert Lea Route.

Solid Express Trains daily between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, with THROUGH Reclining Chair Cars (FREE) to and from those points and Kansas City. Through Chair Car and Sleeper between Peoria, Spirit Lake and Sioux Falls via Rock Island. The Favorite Line to Watertown, Sioux Falls, the Summer Resorts and Hunting and Fishing Grounds of the Northwest.

The Short Line via Seneca and Kankakee offers facilities to travel to and from Indianapolis, Cincinnati, and other Southern points.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders, or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address,

E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN,
Gen'l Manager. Gen'l Tkt. & Pass Agt.
CHICAGO, ILL.

W. S. WYSE, DEAR SIR:—I was a sufferer from kidney disease for several years, and made every effort to obtain relief, but failed in every instance until I procured a bottle of Wyse's New Remedy. I took half of a bottle, which to my great delight relieved me of all the troublesome symptoms in a very short space of time.

I am so much improved that I consider myself out of all danger, if not entirely cured of the disease.

JAMES S. BARRON.
329 West 22d Street, New York.

TESTIMONIALS.

From AMOS J. CUMMINGS, member of Congress; Ex-Senator ALBERT DAGGETT, Ex-Police Commissioner DE WITT C. WHEELER, and others. Sent free by mail.

WYSE'S
NEW REMEDY

FOR DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS AND LIVER.

WYSE'S NEW REMEDY

Has become celebrated for the successful treatment and cure of the following diseases:

Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Brickdust Deposits, Mucous Inflammation of the Kidneys and Bladder, Pain in the Back, Weak Kidneys, Retention of Urine, Gravel and all diseases affecting the Urinary Organs.

WYSE NEW REMEDY COMPANY,

PROPRIETORS,

157 W. 23d St., New York.

For sale by all druggists. Sent by express on receipt of One Dollar. Mention this paper.

LOVELY WOMAN!

HOW CAN YOU TOLERATE Freckles, Pimples, Yellow or Muddy Skin, Moth, Wrinkles, Red Nose, or any other form of facial disfigurements when, by using Dr. Ammet's French Arsenic Complexion Wafers, you can possess a beautiful form, brilliant eyes, and lovely complexion. Perfectly harmless, and the only positive beautifier of the skin and face. $1.00 per box by mail to any address.

Fulton Mfg. Co., 72 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED BY Peck's INVISIBLE TUBULAR EAR CUSHIONS. Whispers heard. Comfortable. Successful where all Remedies fail. Sold by F. HISCOCK, only, 353 Broadway, New York. Write for book of proofs FREE.

WARP AND WOOL

—OR—

New Frames for Old Pictures

An American Historical Novel of the 19th Century

By FRANCES HARTSON WOOD & EVA PAINE WOOD

12mo. Cloth, 431 pages. Price, $1.50.

An exceedingly interesting book, well written, full of earnest, forceful suggestive thought, and a beautiful record of home life. The characters of the story seem to be real human beings from the first to the last page. It is a book which temperance people will enjoy, and yet the whole life is so beautiful that one scarcely realizes the temperance war in which the bright sketches woven, until the book is closed and you find you more enthusiastic and practical in progressive than ever before.

The book deserves success and to be widely not less for the literary ability shown in the story is told, than for the many excellent things it teaches. I am much pleased with the way we weave figures and facts into the narrative, making the same time a valuable text-book, as well as a living and entertaining story."—Gen. John Thomas.

"I have read and listened to extracts of Warp and Wool with increasing interest. The style is lively attractive; the moral tone, high; the material excellent. Of the many side-lights adorning the trail theme of the narrative, the historical incidents, connected with the period of late war, which have a fascination for all, are woven with skill, and cannot fail to please candid reader. Warp and Wool is especially a life, and ought, therefore, to be of special interest to those desiring to see life as it is."—Rev. H. T. M. Union Theological Seminary, New York.

"It is novel in conception, vivid in portrayal of conditions and dangers in which we are placed, moves the heart by its tenderness, and points to remedy with unerring precision. We trust it will have a large circulation, thus doing its work for humanity in numberless homes."—Mrs. M. Woodbridge, Sect Nat. W. C. T. U.

The hits are strong and carefully aimed, yet judiciously drawn out. It lets in the light along social ways, and is wonderfully suggestive, instructive and beautiful. The story is beautiful in simplicity and told in a charming manner. Its representations of the evil effects of the liquor curse are not overwrought. It is just the book to put in the hands of the young.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

STOUT PEOPLE! WEIGHT REDUCED WITHOUT STARVATION! Treatise & instruction for a starve. E. LYNTON, 19 Park Place, New York.

Read About
TRIGESTIN IN next week's Christian Herald

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one specially to be recommended for young, weak, or doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that many more may be benefited by it.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

TO FIND OUT What it is like now send address for a postal for free sample copy of Phrenological Journal, and if you have a boy ask for "TEAT BOY OF MINE, and What to do with Him." Free. Address Fowler & Wells, 771 Broadway, N. Y.

OIOLOGRAPH PORTRAITS AGENTS WANTED.—$5 to $10 per day collecting small pictures for us to copy and enlarge. Satisfaction guaranteed and a $4 outfit free. Address A. DUNNE & CO., 56 Reade St., N. Y. Name Christ'n Herald

"SUNSHINE FOR DARK HOURS"

By CHARLES F. DEEMS, D.D., LL.D.

Author of "Weights and Wings," "Home Altar," and Editor of "Christian Thought."

A book for invalids. The matter of this book drawn from a wide range of reading, observation, experience, and is a genuine aid to contentment, comfort and relief.

The tone of the book is indicative of strength gained by submission, an entire and hearty presence in the will of God. It will brighten hearts by sending a copy of this good and helpful book. It is printed in large type and clear page, and is particularly adapted to the invalid.

"A bright and cheering little volume."—Christian Herald.

"Full of comforting thoughts and incidents."—Advance.

"It is full of such sunshine as Dr. Deems knows how to bring both soul and body."—N. Y. Observer.

The Union Signal says: "This is called a book for invalids; it is equally appropriate for well people, whom dark hours are sure to come. The sunshine in this book is concentrated from many different sources by the strong lens of Dr. Deems' personality."

Price 25 cents: by mail, post-paid, 30 cents.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Vol. XIII., No. 21. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

TRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. HENRY J. VAN DYKE, D. D., and Pictures of His Church.
 OLD FIGHT TO BE SETTLED. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
 BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER: A Bride-room's Mishap, etc.
 LIFE OF THE LATE BISHOP SIMPSON.
 MILLENNIAL REIGN. By Rev. Robert Dell.
 FROM NEW BOOKS: How Nihilism Grew—The Founder of the Moravian Brotherhood.
 GOOD SAMARITAN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE CRUCIAL QUESTION. A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.
 A SUMMARY OF THE EVENTS OF THE WEEK.
 PICTURE OF THE RECENT ATROCIOUS MURDER OF A MISSIONARY IN JAPAN.
 AN UNRECOGNIZED NEIGHBOR. A Story of the S. S. Golden Text.
 WILL IT LIFT? A Serial Story. By Rev. J. Jackson Wray. (Continued.)
 The Deacon and the Preacher—New Light on the Slave-Trade—A Visit to German Prisons—A Fatal Blunder—A Prayer to the Unknown God, etc.

Rev. Henry J. Van Dyke, D. D.—The Second Presbyterian Church, Clinton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON. THE OLD FIGHT TO BE SETTLED.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Matt. 7: 12.

The Struggle Between Capital and Labor—A Hemispheric War—Its Bitterness Increasing—The Menaces of Three Million Hungry Men—The Most Urgent Problem of the Day—Incapable of Settlement by Worldly Wisdom—Futile Remedies—Useless Condemnation of Rich Men—Exasperation of Poor Men by Cynicism—No Settlement by Violence—A Text to Settle It—Its Effect on Employers—How the Men Would Respond—An Incident at Sheffield—The Robber Firm of Supply and Demand—A Word to Each Party.

Two hundred and fifty thousand laborers in Hyde Park, London, and the streets of American and European cities filled with processions of workmen carrying banners, brings the subject of Labor and Capital to the front. That all this was done in peace, and that as a result in many places, arbitration has taken place, is a hopeful sign.

The greatest war the world has ever seen is between capital and labor. The strife is not like that which in history is called the Thirty Years' War, for it is a war of centuries, it is a war of the five continents, it is a war hemispheric. The middle classes in this country, upon whom the nation has depended for holding the balance of power and for acting as mediators between the two extremes, are diminishing; and if things go on at the same ratio as they have for the last twenty years been going on, it will not be very long before there will be no middle class in this country, but all will be very rich or very poor, princes or paupers, and the country will be given up to palaces and hovels.

The Coming Crisis.

The antagonistic forces have again and again closed in upon each other. You may pooh-pooh it; you may say that this trouble, like an angry child, will cry itself to sleep; you may belittle it by calling it Fourierism, or Socialism, or St. Simonism, or Nihilism, or Communism, but that will not hinder the fact that it is the mightiest, the darkest, the most terrific threat of this century. Most of the attempts at pacification have been dead failures, and monopoly is more arrogant, and the trades unions more bitter. "Give us more wages," cry the employes. "You shall have less," say the capitalists. "Compel us to do fewer hours of toil in a day." "You shall toil more hours," say the others. "Then, under certain conditions, we will not work at all," say these. "Then you shall starve," say those, and the workmen gradually using up that which they accumulated in better times, unless there be some radical change, we shall have soon in this country three million hungry men and women. Now, three million hungry people can not be kept quiet. All the enactments of legislatures and all the constabularies of the cities, and all the army and navy of the United States cannot keep three million hungry people quiet. What then? Will this war between capital and labor be settled by human wisdom? Never. The brow of the one becomes more rigid, the fist of the other more clinched.

But that which human wisdom cannot achieve will be accomplished by Christianity if it be given full sway. You have heard of medicines so powerful that one drop would stop a disease and restore a patient; and I have to tell you that one drop of my text properly administered will stop all these woes of society and give convalescence and complete health to all classes. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

I shall first show you this morning how this controversy between monopoly and hard work cannot be stopped, and then I will show you how this controversy will be settled.

Useless Denunciation.

Futile remedies. In the first place there will come no pacification to this trouble through an outcry against rich men merely because they are rich. There is no laboring man on earth that would not be rich if he could be. Sometimes through a fortunate invention, or through some accident of prosperity, a man who had nothing comes to large estate, and we see him arrogant and supercilious, and taking people by the throat just as other people took him by the throat. There is something very mean about human nature when it comes to the top. But it is no more a sin to be rich than it is a sin to be poor. There are those who have gathered a great estate through fraud, and then there are millionaires who have gathered their fortune through foresight in regard to changes in the markets, and through brilliant business faculty, and every dollar of their estate is as honest as the dollar which the plumber gets for mending a pipe, or the mason gets for building a wall. There are those who keep in poverty because of their own fault. They might have been well off, but they smoked or chewed up their earnings, or they lived beyond their means, while others on the same wages and on the same salaries went on to competency. I know a man who is all the time complaining of his poverty and crying out against rich men, while he himself keeps two dogs, and chews and smokes, and is filled to the chin with whiskey and beer!

Victims of Improvidence.

Micawber said to David Copperfield: "Copperfield, my boy, one pound income, twenty shillings and sixpence expenses: result, misery. But, Copperfield, my boy, one pound income, expenses nineteen shillings and sixpence; result, happiness." And there are vast multitudes of people who are kept poor because they are the victims of their own improvidence. It is no sin to be rich, and it is no sin to be poor. I protest against this outcry which I hear against those who, through economy and self-denial and assiduity, have come to large fortune. This bombardment of commercial success will never stop this controversy between capital and labor.

Neither will the contest be settled by cynical and unsympathetic treatment of the laboring classes. There are those who speak of them as though they were only cattle or draught-horses. Their nerves are nothing, their domestic comfort is nothing, their happiness is nothing. They have no more sympathy for them than a hound has for a hare, or a hawk for a hen, or a tiger for a calf. When Jean Valjean, the greatest hero of Victor Hugo's writings, after a life of suffering and brave endurance, goes into incarceration and death, they clap the book shut and say, "Good for him!" They stamp their feet with indignation and say just the opposite of "Save the working classes." They have all their sympathies with Shylock, and not with Antonio and Portia. They are plutocrats, and their feelings are infernal. They are filled with irritation and irascibility on this subject. To stop this awful imbroglio between capital and labor they will lift not so much as the tip end of the little finger.

Violence No Remedy.

Neither will there be any pacification of this angry controversy through violence. God never blessed murder. Blow up to-morrow the country-seats on the banks of the Hudson, and all the fine houses on Madison Square and Brooklyn Heights and Brooklyn Hill and Rittenhouse Square and Beacon Street, and all the bricks and timber and stone will just fall back on the bare head of American labor. The worst enemies of the working-classes in the United States and Ireland are their demented coadjutors. A few years ago assassination—the assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke in Phoenix Park, Dublin, Ireland, in the attempt to avenge the wrongs of Ireland—only turned away from that afflicted people millions of sympathizers. The attempt to blow up the House of Commons, in London, had only this effect: to throw out of employment tens of thousands of innocent Irish people in England.

In this country the torch put to the factories that have discharged hands for good or bad reason; obstructions on the rail-track in front of midnight express trains because the offenders do not like the president of the company; strikes on shipboard the hour they were going to sail, or in printing-offices the hour the paper was to go to press, or in mines the day the coal was to be delivered, or on house scaffoldings so the builder fails in keeping his contract—all these are only of American labor, and cripple its arms, and lame its feet, and pierce its heart. As a result of one of our great American strikes you find that the operatives lost four hundred thousand dollars' worth of wages, and have had poorer wages ever since. Traps sprung suddenly upon employers, and violence, never took one knot out of the knuckle of toil, or put one farthing of wages into a callous palm. Barbarism will never cure the wrongs of civilization. Mark that!

A Hard Blow on the Head

Frederick the Great admired some land near his palace at Potsdam, and he resolved to get it. It was owned by a miller. He offered the miller three times the value of the property. The miller would not take it, because it was the old homestead, he felt about it as Naboth felt about his vineyard when Ahab wanted it. Frederick the Great was a rough and terrible man, and he ordered the miller into his presence; and the king, with a stick in hand—a stick with which he sometimes struck officers of state—said to this miller: "Now, I have offered you three times the value of that property, and if you won't sell it I'll take it anyhow." The miller said, "Your majesty, you won't." "You said the king, 'I will take it.'" "Then," said the miller, "if your majesty does take it, I will sue in the Chancery Court." At that threat Frederick the Great yielded his infamous demand. And most imperious outrage against the working-class will yet cower before the law. Violence and contempt to the law will never accomplish anything, but righteousness and according to law will accomplish

A Sure Remedy.

Well, if this controversy between Capital and Labor cannot be settled by human wisdom, it is for us to look somewhere else for relief, and it goes from my text roseate and jubilant, and puts its hand on the broadcloth shoulder of Capital, and puts the other hand on the homespun-cow-shoulder of Toil, and says, with a voice that grandly and gloriously settle this, and settle everything, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." That is, the head of the household will say: "I must treat the man in the kitchen just as I would like to be treated were down-stairs, and it were my work to wash, cook, and sweep, and it were the duty of the man in the kitchen to preside in this parlor." The man in the kitchen must say: "If my employer were to be more prosperous than I, that is no fault of his; I shall not treat him as an enemy. I will be the same industry and fidelity down-stairs as I would expect from my subordinates, if I happen to be the wife of a silk importer."

The owner of an iron mill, having taken a day of my text before leaving home in the morning will go into his foundry, and, passing into what he called the puddling-room, he will see a man stripped to the waist, and besweated and exhausted with the labor and the toil, and he will say to him: "Why, it seems to be very hot in here. You look very much exhausted. I hear your child is sick with scarlet fever. If you want your wages a little earlier this week, so as to pay the nurse and get the medicines, just come into my office any time."

After awhile, crash goes the money market, there is no more demand for the articles manufactured in that iron mill, and the owner does not know what to do. He says, "Shall I stop the mill, or shall I run it on half-time, or shall I cut down the men's wages?" He walks the floor of the counting-room all day, hardly knowing what to do. Toward evening he calls all the laborers together. They stand all around, some with arms akimbo some with folded arms, wondering what the boss is going to do now. The manufacturer says: "My business is bad; I don't make twenty dollars when I used to make one hundred. Somehow, there is no demand now for what we manufacture, or very little demand. You see, I am at vast expense, and I have called you together this afternoon to see what you would advise. I don't want to stop the mill, because that would force you out of work, and you have always been very faithful. I like you, and you seem to like me, and the boss must be looked after, and your wife will after awhile want a new dress. I don't know what to do."

Help from the Men.

There is a dead halt for a minute or two, then one of the workmen steps out from the ranks of his fellows, and says: "Boss, you have been good to us, and when you prospered we prospered, and now you are in a tight place, and I am so, and we have got to sympathize with you. I don't know how the others feel, but I propose that we take off twenty per cent. from our wages, and then when the times get good you will remember us and raise them again." The workman looks around at his comrades, and says: "Boys, what do you say to this? All in favor of my proposition will say 'Ay!' 'Ay!' 'Ay!' shout two hundred voices."

But the mill-owner, getting in some new machinery, exposes himself very much, and takes cold, and it settles into pneumonia, and he dies. In the procession to the tomb are all the workmen, rolling down their cheeks, and off upon the ground but an hour before the procession gets to the cemetery the wives and the children of those work-the grave waiting for the arrival of the fune-geant. The minister of religion may have read an eloquent eulogium before they started the house, but the most impressive things are that day by the working-classes standing d the tomb.

at night in all the cabins of the working- where they have family prayers, the widow- and the orphanage in the mansion are re- vered. No glaring populations look over the ence of the cemetery; but, hovering over the the benediction of God and man is coming ie fulfilment of the Christlike injunction, itsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so to them."

An Illustration.

h," says some man here, "that is all Utopian, apocryphal, that is impossible." No, I cut out per this: "One of the pleasantest incidents id in a long time is reported from Sheffield, id. The wages of the men in the iron-works field are regulated by a board of arbitration, se decision both masters and men are bound. me time past the iron and steel trade has xtremely unprofitable, and the employers can- outhout much loss, pay the wages fixed by the which neither employers nor employed have ver to change. To avoid this difficulty, the en in one of the largest steel-works in Shef- it upon a device as rare as it was generous. ffered to work for their employers one week t any pay whatever. How much better that than a strike would be."

ou go with me and I will show you—not so as Sheffield, England—factories, banking- store-houses, and costly enterprises where rist-like injunction of my text is fully kept, i could no more get the employer to practice stice upon his men, or the men to conspire the employer, than you could get your right nd your left hand, your right eye and your , your right ear and your left ear, into phys- i antagonism. Now, where is this to begin? homes, in our stores, on our farms—not for other people to do their duty. Is there gence now between the parlor and the ? Then there is something wrong, either arlor or the kitchen, perhaps in both. Are ks in your store irate against the firm? ere is something wrong, either behind the , or in the private office, or perhaps in both.

The World's Need.

great want of the world to-day is the fulfil- this Christ-like injunction, that which He gated in His sermon Olivetic. All the economists under the archivolt of the in convention for a thousand years, can- le this controversy between monopoly and rk, between capital and labor. During the ionary War there was a heavy piece of tim- be lifted, perhaps for some fortress, and a was overseeing the work, and he was giv- mands to some soldiers as they lifted: away, there! ye heave!" Well, the tim- too heavy; they could not get it up. There ntleman riding by on a horse, and he stop- said to this corporal, "Why don't you m lift? That timber is too heavy for them . "No," he said, "I won't; I am a corpor- e gentleman got off his horse and came up ace. "Now," he said to the soldiers, "all —yo heave!" and the timber went to its "Now," said the gentleman to the corporal, you have a piece of timber too heavy for to lift, and you want help, you send to mmander-in-chief." It was Washington! at is about all the Gospel I know—the f giving somebody a lift, a lift out of dark- ft out of earth into heaven. That is the f helping somebody else to lift.

The Diabolic Law.

says some wiseacre," talk as you will, of demand and supply will regulate these til the end of time." No, it will not, od dies and the batteries of the Judgment spiked, and Pluto and Proserpine, king a of the infernal regions, take full pos- of this world. Do you know who Supply and are? They have gone into partner- they propose to swindle this earth, and hing it. 'You are drowning. Supply and stand on the shore, one on one side, the the other side, of the life-boat, and they o you, "Now, you pay us what we ask etting you to shore, or go to the bottom!"

If you can borrow $5,000 you can keep from failing in business. Supply and Demand say, "Now, you pay us exorbitant usury, or you go into bank- ruptcy!" This robber-firm of Supply and Demand say to you: "The crops are short. We bought up all the wheat, and it is in our bin. Now, you pay our price, or starve!" That is your magnificent law of supply and demand.

Supply and Demand own the largest mill on earth, and all the rivers roll over their wheel, and into their hopper they put all the men, women, and children they can shovel out of the centuries and the blood and the bones redden the valley while the mill grinds. That diabolic law of supply and demand will yet have to stand aside, and instead thereof will come the law of love, the law of co- operation, the law of kindness, the law of sympathy.

The Law of Christ.

Have you no idea of the coming of such a time? Then you do not believe the Bible. All the Bible is full of promises on this subject, and as the ages roll on the time will come when men of fortune will be giving larger sums to humanitarian and evangelistic purposes, and there will be more James Lenoxes and Peter Coopers and William E. Dodges and George Peabodys. As that time comes there will be more parks, more picture-galleries, more gardens thrown open for the holiday people and the working-classes.

I was reading some time ago, in regard to a charge that had been made in England against Lambeth Palace, that it was exclusive; and that charge demonstrated the sublime fact that to the grounds of that wealthy estate eight hundred poor families had free passes, and forty croquet com- panies, and on the half-day holidays four thousand poor people recline on the grass, walk through the paths, and sit under the trees.

That is Gospel—

gospel on the wing, gospel out-of-doors worth just as much as in-doors. That time is going to come. That is only a hint of what is going to be. The time is going to come when, if you have anything in your house worth looking at—pictures, pieces of sculpture—you are going to invite me to come and see it; you are going to invite my friends to come and see it, and you will say, "See what I have been blessed with! God has given me this, and, so far as enjoying it, it is yours also." That is gospel.

In crossing the Alleghany Mountains, many years ago, the stage halted, and Henry Clay dismounted from the stage, and went out on a rock at the very verge of the cliff, and he stood there with his cloak wrapped about him, and he seemed to be listening for something. Some one said to him, "What are you listening for?" Standing there, on the top of the mountain, he said: "I am listening to the tramp of the footsteps of the coming millions of this continent." A sublime posture for an Ameri- can statesman! You and I to-day stand on the mountain-top of privilege, and on the Rock of Ages, and we look off, and we hear coming from the future the happy industries, and smiling popu- lations, and the consecrated fortunes, and the in- numerable prosperities of the closing nineteenth and the opening twentieth century.

And now I have two words, one to capitalists and the other to laboring men.

A Word to Capital.

To capitalists: Be your own executors. Make in- vestments for eternity. Do not be like some capital- ists I know who walk around among their employes with a supercilious air, or drive up to the factory in a manner which seems to indicate they are the autocrat of the universe with the sun and the moon in their vest pockets, chiefly anxious when they go among laboring men not to be touched by the greasy or smirched hand and have their broadcloth injured. Be a Christian employer. Remember, those who are under your charge are bone of your bone and flesh of your flesh, that Jesus Christ died for them and that they are immortal. Divide up your estates, or portions of them, for the relief of the world, be- fore you leave it. Do not go out of the world like that man who died eight or ten years ago, leaving in his will twenty million dollars; yet giving how much for the Church of God? How much for the alleviation of human suffering? He gave some money a little while before he died. That was well; but in all this will of twenty million dollars, how much? One million? No. Five hundred thou- sand? No. One hundred dollars? No. Two cents? No. One cent? No. These great cities groaning in anguish, nations crying out for the bread of everlasting life. A man in a will giving twenty millions of dollars and not one cent to God! It is a dis- grace to our civilization.

A Word to Labor.

To laboring men: I congratulate you on your pros- pects. I congratulate you on the fact that you are get- ting your representatives at Albany, at Harrisburgh, and at Washington. This will go on until you will have representatives at all the headquarters, and you will have full justice. Mark that. I congratu- late you also on the opportunities for your children. Your children are going to have vast opportunities. I congratulate you that you have to work and that when you are dead your children will have to work. I congratulate you also on your opportunities of information. Plato paid one thousand three hun- dred dollars for two books. Jerome ruined himself, financially, by buying one volume of Origen. What vast opportunities for intelligence for you and your children! A workingman goes along by the show window of some great publishing house and he sees a book that costs five dollars. He says, "I wish I could have that information; I wish I could raise five dollars for that costly and beautiful book." A few months pass on and he gets the value of that book for fifty cents in a pamphlet. There never was such a day for the workingmen of America as the day that is coming.

The Friend of Both.

But the greatest Friend of capitalist and toiler, and the One who will yet bring them together in complete accord, was born one Christmas night while the curtains of heaven swung, stirred by the wings angelic. Owner of all things—all the conti- nents, all worlds, and all the islands of light. Capitalist of immensity, crossing over to our condition. Coming into our world, not by gate of palace, but by door of barn. Spending His first night amid the shepherds. Gathering afterward around Him the fishermen to be His chief attendants. With adze, and saw, and chisel, and axe, and in a carpen- ter shop showing himself brother with the trades- men. Owner of all things, and yet on a hillock back of Jerusalem one day resigning everything for others, keeping not so much as a shekel to pay for His obsequies. By charity buried in the suburbs of a city that had cast Him out. Before the cross of such a capitalist, and such a carpenter, all men can afford to shake hands and worship. Here is the every man's Christ. None so high, but He was higher. None so poor, but He was poorer. At His feet the hostile extremes will yet renounce their animosities, and countenances which have glower- ed with the prejudices and revenge of centuries shall brighten with the smile of heaven as He com- mands: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

A VICARIOUS DEATH IN CHINA.

AN extraordinary act of devotion is described in the Spirit of Missions, as it was related by Bishop Boone, while on a visit to this country. He said: "I had a very valuable Chinese servant in my em- ploy, upon whom I leaned with implicit confidence, and one day he came to me and said: 'I shall be obliged to ask you to find some one to take my place, as, in the course of a few weeks, I am to be executed in place of a rich gentleman, who is to pay me very liberally for becoming his substitute'—such a mode of exchange, as the reader may know, being in accordance with the law of the em- pire. I then inquired what possible inducement there could be for him to forfeit his life for any amount of money, when he replied: 'I have an aged father and mother, who are very poor, and un- able to work, and the money that I am to receive will make them comfortable as long as they live. I think, therefore, it is my duty to give up my life for the sake of accomplishing this.' What a com- mentary is this on the Apostle Paul's words: "For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet per- adventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth His love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5 : 7, 8.)

"The Christian Herald" Binder.—Numerous applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely. A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

DR. HENRY J. VAN DYKE.

THE well-known Presbyterian clergyman, whose portrait, with pictures of the exterior and interior of his church, appears this week on the first page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has recently been elected Moderator of the Brooklyn Presbytery. The honor of being chosen by his ministerial brethren to preside over their deliberations must be to any man a welcome and gratifying evidence of the esteem in which he is held by those who have the best opportunities of knowing him. In this case especially is it significant, inasmuch as the recipient is a minister of very decided opinions, and the kind of man who necessarily will sometimes arouse energetic discussion in regard to positions he feels called upon to take, and theories he promulgates. His election, therefore, is a mark of respect to his character, and an evidence of recognition of many excellences which are apt to be overlooked when their possessor has been a valorous antagonist in some hard-fought field. The

Personal History

of Dr. Van Dyke has, like that of many earnest and zealous and useful preachers of the gospel, been comparatively uneventful. That is the public view of it. To those who know anything of ministerial life, no minister's career can be uneventful. His pulpit labors involve most momentous issues to those who hear him. The word he speaks must be a savor of life unto life, or death unto death to his audience. The sense of responsibility which any man experiences who realizes that he is the ambassador of Christ is almost crushing. The world hears with comparative indifference that this or that man has been converted, but to the converted man the change is one involving the issue of all eternity; and compared with it, the world with all its wealth, the most decisive of all battles, the rise or fall of the most illustrious dynasties are but trifles. The change is unnoticed here, but in the other world it is not unmarked. The angels of God rejoice over one sinner that repenteth; and he that converteth the sinner from the error of his ways, saves a soul from death, and hides a multitude of sins. The day will come when the preacher's work will be recognized as the most responsible, as well as the most honorable, in which any man could engage.

Henry J. Van Dyke was born in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, March 6, 1822. He is therefore now in his sixty-ninth year. He commenced his classical studies in the University of Pennsylvania, and graduated from that institution in 1843, the year in which he attained his majority. Thence he proceeded to Yale, but having resolved to consecrate his life to the service of God in the ministry he quitted Yale to take a theological course at Princeton. He graduated there in 1845, and in June of that year he was solemnly ordained to the work of the ministry.

His first charge was at Bridgeton, N. J. He devoted himself to that sphere with faith and zeal. It is well for a young minister to enjoy a period of inconspicuous labor at the outset of his ministry. He has larger opportunities for continuing his studies, and more leisure to learn the lessons which every minister has to learn when he comes to apply his theology to the wants and ways of the world, than he would have if he passed from the university to the pulpit of some large church. Dr. Van Dyke gave seven valuable years to that New Jersey church. They were good years for the church, and they were not wasted years for him. God was fitting him there for responsible service when the command should come to go up higher. Many opportunities came to him during those years to attain a more prominent position, but the young preacher did not avail himself of them. He could not recognize in the offer of larger salary and city advantages the voice of God, which, after all, should be the one indispensable condition of a change of sphere. In 1852, however, there came an unavoidable cessation of labor, which seemed to him an intimation that his work at Bridgeton was finished. He was prostrated by illness, and his physicians told him that change of scene was necessary to his health. He went to Germantown, Philadelphia, for a few months, and while there recovering health and strength, the call came to the field which he now occupies. In June, 1853, Dr. Van Dyke accepted the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, and soon afterward entered upon his labors. It was not at that time in a very hopeful condition, but in a short time the energetic pastor had the happiness of seeing large additions to the membership of the church, of seeing the debt of thirty thousand dollars on the church extinguished, and sixty thousand dollars raised for domestic and foreign missions, and other enterprises.

In 1857 Dr. Van Dyke made an extended tour in Europe, a regular record of which was published in a series of bright, entertaining letters which he sent to a religious journal. He returned to find the first clouds gathering on the national horizon which were to darken all the sky and burst in a storm that desolated scores of thousands of homes. At the critical moment, before the first bolt fell—on Sunday, Dec. 9, 1860, Dr. Van Dyke preached which made his name conspicuous in every city of the Union. This sermon was doubtless intended to allay Southern apprehensions, and restrain Northern impetuosity. This discourse, characterized as it was by most emphatic utterance, made great excitement. It was published and circulated far and wide. Twenty newspapers published it in extenso—a novelty in those days—and eleven publishers in as many different cities issued pamphlet editions of it. Every thinking man read it, and while the debaters on one side quoted Beecher, their opponents quoted Van Dyke. Among the wordy conflicts that at that time were waged in all the cities of the Union no ministerial names were so often quoted in the fray as those of the two Brooklyn divines. It provoked, also, direct attacks on the author, the most powerful of which came from Dr. Leonard Bacon, of New Haven, and Professor Taylor Lewis in the New York World.

A Famous Sermon

It was natural after having taken so decisive an attitude, that when the war was over, and men were longing to heal the breaches in brotherly relations which it had made, that the eyes of the Northern Presbyterian ministers should be directed to Dr. Van Dyke when they wanted a representative to carry the olive branch to their Southern brethren. In 1870 he was commissioned by the Northern General Assembly in session in Philadelphia to proceed with a few other ministers to Louisville, Ky., where the Southern General Assembly was in session, to propose a reunion of the churches, and the pacification of the unhappy disunion. Much was hoped from this mission, and profound was the disappointment when the Commissioners returned unsuccessful.

A Threatened Removal

of Dr. Van Dyke from Brooklyn, disturbed shortly afterward the pleasant relations which had existed for nineteen years between pastor and people. A call reached the preacher from Nashville, Tenn., and many reasons prompted Dr. Van Dyke to give it favorable consideration. Ultimately he decided to accept it, and formally resigned his pastorate of the Brooklyn Church. The most urgent entreaties were used by his attached friends to prevent this decision, and it was only when they recognized it as inevitable that they yielded and submitted to the separation. Doubtless Dr. Van Dyke had a severe inward struggle before he arrived at his decision. It involved the rupture of many pleasant relations, and of many bonds precious alike to pastor and people. He found it necessary to take a tour in Europe before entering permanently on his Nashville pastorate, probably in the hope that, beside the rest and recuperation to be expected from the tour, the pain of going directly from one scene of labor to the other, would be avoided. On his return he was detained in New York by the sudden and serious illness of his wife. A prolonged sojourn in the neighborhood was involved in order that she might have the benefit of the attention of the physicians who alone seemed able to deal with the case. Under these circumstances the members of his Brooklyn Church renewed their solicitations to Dr. Van Dyke to resume his pastoral relations. At length he consented, and the Nashville Church was disappointed in its hopes of securing the pastor of its choice. From that time to this, Dr. Van Dyke has gone on with his work in Brooklyn, and has gathered around him a band of men and women attached to him, and united in mutual affection.

One of the most distinguished honors ever conferred on Dr. Van Dyke was his election as Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which met in Brooklyn in 1876. Over that body he presided with affability and talent.

A Graphic Personal Sketch of Dr. Van Dyke was penned a few weeks ago by the reporter of a secular journal, who paid him a visit in his study at the church. He says: Dr. Van Dyke, though over sixty-eight years of age, carries his years wonderfully well. His hair and heavy whiskers are but slightly tinged with gray, and he is hale and hearty. His voice is clear, and his reasoning sound and ripe. He is thoroughly an and fascinating in conversation. His course of lectures before the theological students at Princeton College during the last winter, was received with enthusiasm by the young men, while the members of the faculty would now and then shake their heads, especially when the doctor brought some of his progressive ideas on the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith. Dr. Van Dyke for many years made it his practice to steal for a few days' fishing in the early spring; and he is not likely to depart from his custom this year, the visitor to his study in the church is obliged to discover the story plainly told in a well-trout-basket hanging from the wall, while on and suspended across the horns of stags' heads is a fishing-rod. Dr. Van Dyke is as clever with rifle as with the rod, and during his midsummer vacation he shoots moose up in Maine.

This study of Dr. Van Dyke is a very pleasant room. It is not large, but cosy and full of interest. The floor is covered with heavy moquette and the walls are frescoed in subdued colors. The sides of the room are lined with books. The doctor is evidently prepared to receive visitors, and has half a dozen easy-chairs standing about. There is a large writing-desk in the room, but he does not use it. When writing, he sits in an easy-chair, holstered in green plush; a small table projects from one arm, while to the other is attached a book-support. Thus the doctor is enabled for hours in a half-reclining position and without reading. He never bends forward while writing, and has used this arrangement for thirty-six years.

The Advanced Thought

to which the reporter alludes, in referring to Princeton lectures, may be best understood from a few extracts from some letters of Dr. Van Dyke on the proposed revision of the Confession of Faith, which have been published, together with those from his opponents, Drs. John De Witt, B. B. Warfield, and William G. T. Shedd, by Anson D. F. Randolph and Company, New York. In these letters Dr. Van Dyke strongly advocates the Revision, and shows incidentally how thoroughly evangelical is his own attitude. On the subject of the practicability and expediency of revision, he says: "For one, I do not believe that either science of theology and Scripture exegesis, or art of expressing divine truth in acceptable language has so far declined in the Presbyterian Church that it would be impossible to rewrite the whole, or part of the Westminster Confession. If it were, it would be a sad result of these two hundred years of Biblical study and theological training. It is not necessary to discuss this question. As I know, nobody proposes to make a new Confession, nor to rewrite the old one, nor to make an entire new statement of any doctrine belonging to the system which it contains. It is a reconstruction, but a revision, which is proposed. To revise, according to Worcester, is 'to look at with a view to correct or amend.' After studying the Confession for nearly half a century, and adhering to it to-day with as much loyalty as I ought to feel toward any uninspired statement of divine truth, I am in favor of the proposed revision."

As to the scope and object of the revision, he says: "The object of the proposed revision is to change the system of doctrine taught in the Confession, nor to repudiate, modify, or dilute one doctrine of that system, nor to conform the Confession in all its propositions to individual differences, nor to 'bring each of our idiosyncrasies to expression.' We repudiate all such intentions of our purpose. Our simple object is the correction of certain ambiguities, omissions, and mistaken interpretations of Scripture in our Confession into more perfect harmony with other Reformed Confessions, and to make it complete as the expression 'of the general common faith of the whole body' of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

A Broad Gospel.

Coming to the fundamental question involved in the Revision, Dr. Van Dyke makes the following explicit statement of his own faith: "It is the common faith of the Presbyterian body, and of the whole visible Church of Christ, that the salvation of the Gospel is sufficient for all men, adapted to all, and freely offered to all, and that the eternal decree of God be no one from accepting it. The Scriptures are full of proof-texts to sustain this proposition."

es and pervades all our preaching of the Gos- and is the constraining motive in all the ag- sive work of the Church. And yet there is not, our Confession, one declaration which clearly prehends or alludes to the teaching of Script- in this point. The advocates of revision desire end the Confession in this particular. As to ssertion that it is not possible to frame a new ment on this subject which will correlate with onfession as it is, or which will not mar the ric integrity of the venerable document; this t what the enemies of our Calvinistic system always said, and what Calvinists have always d. If the writer of this paper believed what een said on this point by the opponents of on, he would renounce the Confession as his ard, for the fullness and freeness of the Gospel precious to him than any historic monument. ie does not believe it. He has always read the Confession, as perfectly consistent with ystem of doctrine which it contains, the Script- eclarations that Christ is 'the propitiation for ns of the whole world,' and that 'God is not g that any should perish, but that all should to repentance.'

BIOGRAPHY OF BISHOP SIMPSON.

life of the late Bishop Matthew Simpson, of ethodist Episcopal Church, written by the eorge R. Crooks, D. D., and published by s. Harper & Brothers, New York, should re- at the hands of the press different treat- ment that accorded to other biographies. The has grown familiar with ordinary biographies. uite in order, when any distinguished man or some friend or relative to tell the story of e in print, padding out the narrative of facts opies of the deceased's letters, and reports of eeches or sermons. This is often done in a ictory manner, or with an enthusiasm orig- g in the personal love and admiration of the for the subject of his biography. Anyhow, ty is done, a small circle of the dead man's al friends buy and read the book, but the l public takes little interest in it. Now this happen to the life of Bishop Simpson if the did not inform the public what a remarkable eely interesting work it is. The interest is nined to the personal friends of the Bishop; en to the church of which he was so distin- d a member; it will be felt by every intelli- tizen of the United States who reads it. Crooks has produced a charming work. He ull sympathy with the principles of Bishop on's life, he has a hearty admiration for the e has spared no time nor pains to gain a full dge of facts and incidents, and he has as- sed his material and made a life-like picture eminent preacher and a graphic portrayal of rk and his times. And what times they And what a work he did! Born in 1811 at Ohio, a poor boy with his own way to make, g himself to read, getting only three short t school, learning German and Latin, geom- d trigonometry without a teacher, and with e smallest supply of books, which he could y when their owners were not studying them, sheer hard work and genuine grit, making e proficient in all necessary branches of dge and fitting himself to fill efficiently and bly one of the most conspicuous and difficult as in the country. The leader of his church, ted friend and adviser of President Lincoln, er patriot, the matchless orator, the gifted er, and the shrewd, sagacious manager of ith such a boyhood behind him, must be a dity singularly fascinating to every true an. As pastor, as College President, as and as bishop, Matthew Simpson won for the confidence and respect of all who came act with him, and as the Christian patriot, lays of national darkness, the country loved n whose burning words stirred the hearts of n people and convinced religious men in ds that the cause he loved and advocated itled to their sympathy. e this, the student of history learns from his —letters, entries in his diary, personal com- n passing events, how that great struggle d to a man of intense piety, how those san- battles and fierce conflicts impressed a man ruggled nature and strong patriotism was d and governed by his love of Christ and al- to the Prince of Peace. We have had many drawn of that time, but this one is something new. Bishop Simpson knew more than the general public. President Lincoln repeatedly sent for him to Washington at critical periods and more than once quoted his words in the Cabinet councils. He necessarily felt deeply, and grieved as only a Christian patriot could grieve over, that fratricidal strife. The growth, development, variation of his attitude with the changing situation are an inter- esting psychological study, and this Dr Crooks en- ables us to make.

The book is an excellent biography, simple, cand- id, true to life. But it is much more. It is a va- luable contribution to ecclesiastical literature, sketching with clear and vigorous hand the history of the great church during a momentous period of its life. And it is a gem of national history fit to occupy a place in the archives of the great Republic.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.

Mr. H. M. Stanley's Vow at Midnight in the African forest, is fulfilled by him in his article in Scribner's Magazine for June. He says: "Con- strained at the darkest hour to humbly confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess His aid be- fore men. Silence, as of death, was around about me; it was midnight; I was weakened by illness, prostrate by fatigue, and wan with anxiety for my white and black companions, whose fate was a mys- tery. In this physical and mental distress I be- sought God to give me back my people. Nine hours later we were exulting with a rapturous joy. In full view of all was the crimson flag with the crescent, and beneath its waving folds was the long- lost rear column." The illustrious explorer's avowal is typical of that every believer makes when he makes profession of his faith. He confesses that when he realized that he was helpless, and none but Christ could save him, he called upon Him and was de- livered. (Psa. 34 : 6.)

An Amusing Reminiscence of a Vexatious In- cident was related recently by a husband on the anniversary of his wedding, and is published in a Canadian journal. He said that he and his wife were married at Courtland, and after the ceremony they repaired to the railway station to go to St. Thomas to spend their honeymoon. A large crowd assembled at the station to see them off, and after the groom had assisted his wife into the coach of a Grand Trunk Railway train, he alighted upon the platform to shake hands with some of his friends. While he was doing so the train moved off with the bride. She arrived in the city, and upon telling her story to a fellow-passenger, he assisted her in hunting up friends. On the following morning the husband arrived in the city, and found his wife. The incident must have been annoying to both parties, but especially so to the gentleman, as it was the result of his own carelessness. He must have wished that he had paid less attention to his friends and more to his wife. When men enter into union with the Saviour they do well to avoid elaborate leave-takings with their old associates, unless they engage in them for the purpose of in- ducing their friends to travel in the same direction. (Luke 9 : 61, 62.)

An Unjustly Imprisoned Convict was Released from a prison in Georgia on May 13. It appears that seventeen years ago the body of a man was found in Burke County, under circumstances which clearly indicated murder. Suspicion fell upon a man who was known to have been on bad terms with the deceased, and to have had several violent quarrels with him. There was a lack of evidence connecting the prisoner with the crime, until a witness came forward at the trial, and swore directly to his guilt. The jury convicted the pris- oner, but, as the evidence was chiefly circumstan- tial, he escaped with a sentence of imprisonment for life in the penitentiary. He has been confined there for seventeen years, though all through he has protested his innocence. Two weeks ago the witness on whose evidence the man was convicted lay ill, and was told there was no hope of recovery. He then said that he had a confession to make, and asked that the proper authorities and witnesses should be brought to hear it. He declared sol- emnly that he was the murderer, and that he had sworn as he did at the trial in order to divert sus- picion from himself. He died soon after making the confession. A statement of what the self- accuser said was drawn up and sent to Gov. Gordon, with a petition of citizens for the release of the in- nocent man. The Governor promptly signed his pardon, and last week he walked out of prison, a free man. Precisely opposite are the circumstances under which the sinner trusting in Christ receives His pardon. He admits his guilt, but pleads the merits of his Substitute, who, being innocent, suf- fered in his stead. (11 Cor. 5 : 21.)

A Snake was Mailed to a Lady in Georgia a few days ago. A press dispatch from Gainesville, Ga., says, that among the mail received at that city on May 12, was a box addressed to a lady, and marked "Flowers." It was delivered in due course, but upon opening the box, the lady to whom it was addressed was horrified to find reclining on a bed of crushed roses a half-grown snake, that lay quietly concealed, and sluggish from its confinement. A member of the family noticing her alarm, went to her relief; and again sealing up the package, returned it to the post-office, with a letter describing its contents. There it remained until a report of the case could be obtained. The Inspector con- sulted the Attorney-General on the subject, but learned that the sender of the reptile could not be punished for his wicked act. The snake was un- available, but the law had prescribed no punish- ment for the offender, even if he could be detected. It was evidently the device of some cowardly per- son who had a grudge against the lady. Happily, she escaped the injury it might have inflicted; and in this she was more fortunate than some of her sex, whose moral and spiritual nature is ruined for time and eternity by men whose subtle flatteries and allurements, like the snake among the flowers, are treacherous offerings. (Prov. 29 : 5.)

A Captain's Prejudices Were Disarmed by a Senator's humility some time ago. The Philadelphia Press published last week an anecdote of Senator Bruce, the colored statesman, who represented Mississippi in the United States Senate. When the Senator was about to proceed to Washington to take his place for the first time in the Senate, the captain of one of the Mississippi steamboats ex- pressed himself strongly about Mr. Bruce, and said that if the latter travelled by his boat, and put on any airs, there would be trouble. It happened that Senator Bruce did travel by that boat, and at the first opportunity he went to the captain, and said to him: "Captain, I am going a part of my journey on your steamboat, and I want to say to you that I want my trip to be made as pleasant and agreeable to you as it can be; therefore, if you will assign me to that place on the boat where my people are usually located, and give me a place at the table where the colored people get their meals, I shall be very much obliged to you." "When he said that," said the Captain, "and as modestly and politely as ever a man spoke to me in my life, I looked at him for a moment, and then seized him by the arm, and said: 'Come with me; there is nothing on my boat too good for you, sir; and I insist that you shall sit with me at my own table at meal hours.'" It was a practical illustration of the truth which ap- plies to Christian men of all races, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Luke 14 : 11.)

The Heroic Rescue of Six Shipwrecked Sailors is reported from North Scituate, Mass. On May 9 the schooner Lucy B. Winsor struck on Chest Ledge and sank immediately. The captain and five sailors had barely time to climb up into the rig- ging to the mast-head which was just above the water. The sea was very high, and the men were in great danger of being swept from the rigging be- fore word could be sent to the life-saving station. Captain Sylvester, and his son fifteen years old, put out to the wreck in an ordinary twelve-foot lobster- boat, and reached it after a hard battle with the waves. But after the rescued men were taken into the frail craft, the additional weight of six men proved too much for its floating capacity, and the boat immediately began to sink. In this emergency Captain Sylvester and his son tore up the flooring of the boat and threw overboard all the ballast, and the danger of sinking was thus averted. The re- turn trip to the shore was then commenced, and as the rescued men were all well-nigh exhausted, the work of rowing again fell to the gallant rescuers. After a half-hour's hard pull they landed their hu- man freight safely on the bank. Christian workers who go out to rescue shipwrecked souls are success- ful only when they follow the same method. Some doctrines which experienced Christians dwell on with delight, and which others repudiate, are not necessary in the gospel boat engaged in the work of soul-saving. Ballast may be needed later, but until the soul is saved the gospel invitation to whom- soever will, to enter and be saved, is all that should be carried. (Rom. 14 : 1.)

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN.

By Rev. Robert Dell.

Saints to be Like Angels—Special Dominion Over the Earth—Particular Localities Assigned to Individuals—The Nature of their Reign—Their Residence—The Great Annual Celebration—The Feast of Tabernacles—Features of the Feast as Kept in Palestine—Their Fuller Significance—The First and the Last of the Eight Days.

It is said of those who shall be accounted worthy to obtain the resurrection from the dead, that "they are equal to," or like "the angels." (Luke 20: 35, 36.) And comparing this with the apostle's argument in Hebrews 2: 5-8, "To the angels hath He not put in subjection the world to come" (i. e., the millennial world) and other Scriptures, we conclude that the risen saints will, in the new economy, supply the place of angels, in ministering to men then living on earth. Various Scriptures lead to this conclusion. The future habitable earth will be in subjection to the Lord Jesus, who was once made lower than the angels. He will have dominion over all the earth. But His promise to all who overcome is, that they shall reign with Him. (Rev. 3: 21.) And the apostle Paul says of those who are justified by the Lord Jesus, and clothed in His righteousness, that they "shall reign in life." (Rom. 5: 17.)

And the ascription of praise to the Lamb, of the redeemed from every nation, contains the assurance, "We shall reign over (epi) the earth." (Rev. 5: 10.) Consequently the future earth will be put under the risen saints, in subordination to their risen Lord. And to this the vision the apostle refers, when he says of the redeemed, "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years," who have "part in the first resurrection." (Rev. 20: 4-6.) And that they will have over which to rule, we learn from the parable of the talents, "Have thou authority over ten cities. Be thou also over five cities." (Luke 19: 17, 19.) The saints then will reign over the earth.

Localities Assigned Them,

The nature of this reign is our next inquiry. Another promise to every one that overcometh is, "To him will I give power over the nations; and he shall shepherd them with a staff of iron." (Rev. 2: 26, 27.) The promise is, that believers shall hereafter be shepherds over the nations, under the Chief Shepherd, the Lord Jesus. The mention of the iron staff is an allusion to the shepherd's badge of office, the crook. Here, then, we see the risen saints supplying the place of angels, and becoming ministers to the Lord's people living on the earth. And it may be that those spots where they suffered for Christ's sake contumely, reproach, and death, will be the places allotted them to reign over, even as their Lord will reign where He suffered. We are further induced to think this, because the Scripture speaks of the mutual recognition of saints who have known each other on earth now; and if they know each other, and call to mind the time when they held converse about their absent Lord, we should suppose that they will also know the places where they walked together in this communion. That the risen saints will recognize one another we learn from the apostle's word, "What is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye, in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at His coming?"

But we must inquire, where will be

The Residence of the Saints who reign with the Lord Jesus over the earth? And here, referring again to the account of the transfiguration, we find it said, "Behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them." (Matt. 17: 5.) We believe that this cloud, as one among the other parts of the event recorded, represents the place where the saints will abide. In all the texts where St. Matthew uses the expression, "kingdom of heaven," the word is in the plural number, "kingdom of the heavens." Again, in the vision of the apostle we read, "I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And He showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God." (Rev. 21: 2, 10, 11.) Comparing these together, we conclude that the residence of the saints will be in the air, or heavens, "over the earth;" because this heavenly city of the living God is "the general assembly and church of the first-born, the spirits of just men made perfect." (Heb. 13: 22, 23.) In the vision of the apostle, there is no mention of the city reaching the earth. It is described as "descending out of heaven from God," floating, as it were, in mid-air, between the third heaven, where God dwells, and the earth, over which it is to bear rule. And thus will the prediction of the prophet Daniel be fulfilled: "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." (Heb. 7: 27.)

But there are a few intimations that, even during this period of blessedness, there occasionally will be found those who reject the Messiah as their ruler. When the prophet speaks of Jerusalem being created "a rejoicing, and her people a joy," he also says that "the sinner, being a hundred years old, shall be accursed." (Isa. 65: 18, 20.) The unconverted heart is ever the same, and, left to itself, is always at enmity with God. The binding of Satan will not eradicate this enmity, but only remove an impediment to its being changed into love, and the power of the Holy Ghost to convert the sinner will be as much needed then as now.

But we turn to the consideration of the fact that The Feast of Tabernacles Will be Kept

when the Lord Jesus reigns in Mount Zion. The two other great feasts of the law, the passover and the feast of weeks, have had their antitypes in this dispensation, foreshadowing, as they did, the atonement of the Lamb of God, and the pouring down of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost; but the feast of tabernacles has had no antitype as yet, nor can it under the present economy, for the many reasons

It Was Held After Harvest.

Consequently its antitype must be celebrated after the harvest, which is "the end of the dispensation," when "the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." (Matt. 13: 39-43.) It was not held until the arrival of the Israelites in Canaan, because it was a remembrance of having dwelt in the wilderness. Its antitype, therefore, cannot be celebrated until the attainment of the promised inheritance, the "rest that remaineth," when it will be held in remembrance of the present temporary dwelling, for "we have here no continuing city, but we seek one to come."

Solomon's temple was dedicated at the feast of tabernacles. (1 Kings 8: 2.) At this feast Ezra set up the altar (Ezra 3: 1, 4); and at this feast Nehemiah finished rebuilding the temple. (Neh. 7: 1, 73.) The Lord Jesus has a spiritual temple building, the lively stones of which are believers in Him. He Himself being the chief corner-stone (1 Pet. 2: 5, 6); and "He shall bring forth the head-stone thereof, with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it." (Zech. 4.) The feast of tabernacles will be kept at His advent with a joy hitherto unknown, great as was the rejoicing at that feast of old. It was from the wilderness, and safe arrival in the land of promise; and the psalms used in its services have reference to the mercy of God in these events. But their rejoicing was but the type of a fuller joy to come. Since then the ploughers have ploughed upon the back of Israel; and out of the depths have they cried, and will yet cry. But the Lord will arise into His rest, and their feet shall stand within the gates of Jerusalem, whither the tribes of the land, and the nations of the earth will go up, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord, at the feast of tabernacles. Israel will be there, a redeemed people; and the nations of the earth will be there, rejoicing with Israel, and uniting in the chorus of praise, "for His mercy endureth for ever."

The Commemoration of Deliverance

Drawing water with rejoicing was part of the services of the feast. It was this that brought forth the Lord's invitation, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink" (John 7: 37), when He saw the people drawing the water "in the last day, that great day of the feast;" and to this the prophet has reference when he says, "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation," when "great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." (Isa. 12: 3, 6.) The continuous libations of this day were the emblem of the continued and universal outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the reign of the Lord. The feast lasted eight days.

The First and Last Days

were Sabbaths, in which were holy convocations. (Lev. 23: 35, 36.) This feature of the feast represented the dispensational period of God's dealings with man. The first Sabbath was that of Eden, when God rested from all His work, and the holy convocation of "the sons of God shouted for joy, and the morning stars sang together." (Job 38: 7.) The six intermediate days are the six thousand years intervening between the first Sabbath and the last. And the last Sabbath will be that when "the general assembly and church of the firstborn," of all "kindreds, and peoples, and tongues" shall enter into rest; and Jesus Himself, "the bright morning star," "the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead the unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

It is the privilege of the Christian believer to hope for a participation in this glory. It is the blessed hope which is given to him to experience while passing through this world, and to realize full enjoyment when the journey is over. "I have not followed cunningly devised fables," when we look forward to the Second Coming of the Lord as the time for this full enjoyment. Surely He will come, and quickly. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus Hallelujah! Amen!"

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

How Nihilism Grew. *

IN Russia, notwithstanding a strictly exercised censorship, the philosophico-scientific gospel of materialism and atheism found entrance through the writings of Moleschott, Feuerbach, Büchner, Darwin etc., especially among the students. 1860, Nihilism, springing from this seed, first assumed the character of a philosophical and literary movement. It sought the overthrow of all religious institutions. Then came the women's question, claiming emancipation for the wife. The example of the Paris Commune in 1871 contributed largely to the development of Nihilistic idealism, its political revolutionary socialism. The Nihilist propaganda, like an epidemic, now seized upon the academic youth, male and female, was spread among aristocratic families by tutors and governesses, was secret disciples among civil servants, as well as officers of the army and navy, and was enthusiastically supported by ladies in the most cultured andalted ranks. In order to spread its views among people, young men and women disguised in peasant dress went out among the peasants and artisans, led and wrought like them, and preached their gospel to them in their hours of rest. But their efforts failed through the apathy of the lower orders; and the energetic interference of the Government, imprisonment and banishment thinned the ranks of the propagandists. But all the more closely those left bind themselves together under their central leaders as the "Society for Country and Freedom," and strove with redoubled eagerness to spread revolutionary principles by secretly printing their proclamations and other incendiary publications, and scattering them in the streets and houses.

On January 24, 1878, the female Nihilist, Vera Sassulitsch, from personal revenge, dangerously wounded, with a revolver, General Trepoff, the dreaded head of the St. Petersburg police. Although she openly avowed the deed before a court, and gloried in it, she was acquitted among the acclamations of the public. This was the hour when Nihilism exercised its fellest terrorism. The fair peaceful phrase, "To work, fight, suffer and die, for the people" was silenced; it was now sword and fire, dagger and revolver, dynamite and mine for all oppressors of the people; but above all the agents of police, for their spies, for all informers and apostates.

The Founder of the Moravian Brotherhood.

Count von Zinzendorf and Pottendorf, was born in Dresden, in the year 1700. His father died early, and his mother marrying a second time, the boy richly endowed with gifts of head and heart was brought up by his godly pietistic grandmother, the Baroness von Gersdorf. There in his earliest youth he learned to seek his happiness in the closest personal fellowship with the Lord, and the tendency of his whole future life to yield to the impulses of pious feeling already began to assert itself. In his tenth year he entered the Halle Institute under Francke, where the pietistic idea of the church within the church took firm possession of his heart. Even in his fifteenth year, he sought realization by founding among his fellow-student

* From Church History By Prof. Kurtz, Vol. III. This volume is the completion of a most laborious and useful work on ecclesiastical history. It places at the disposal of the student and the general reader a hand-book of facts clearly and concisely stated. The research it must have involved, and the labor required to give in so small a space so exhaustive a narrative are extraordinary. Prof. Kurtz has laid the public under great obligation, and Mr. MacPherson, who has translated the work from the German, merits from the English-speaking public the warmest thanks. Pp. 544. Price per volume, $2. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York.

the Order of the Grain of Mustard Seed." (Matt. 13:31.) After completing his school course, his father and guardian, in order to put an end to what seemed his pietistic extravagances, sent him to study law at the orthodox University of Wittenberg. He had at first to suffer a sort of martyrdom, rigid pietist swimming against the orthodox current. His residence at Wittenberg, however, beneficial to him in freeing him unconsciously from the Halle pietism, which had restrained his spiritual development. He did, indeed, firmly maintain the fundamental idea of pietism, the church within the church, but in his mind it gained a wider significance than pietism had given it. His endeavors to secure a personal conference, and, if possible, a meeting between the Halle and Wittenberg leaders were unsuccessful.

In the year 1719 he left Wittenberg and travelled for two years, visiting the most distinguished representatives of all confessions and sects. This, too, confirmed his idea of a grand gathering of all who love the Lord Jesus. On his return home in 1721, at the wish of his relatives, he entered the service of the Saxon government. But a religious genius Zinzendorf could find no satisfaction in such employment, and soon an opportunity presented itself for carrying out the plan to which his thoughts and longings were directed. . . . Soon the little colony of Herrnhut arose as the centre of that Christian society which Zinzendorf sought with all his power and strength to develop and promote. . . . Finally he had no special liking for the old Moravian constitution; but the lot decided in his favor, and the idea of continuing a pre-Reformation church was not without a certain charm. Zinzendorf drew up a constitution with old Moravian forms and names, on the basis of which the colony was established, August 13, 1727, under the name of the United Brotherhood.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lesson for June 1, Luke 10:25-37; Golden Text, Lev. 19:18.

Discipline of the Worker—The Lawyer's Question—The New Doctrine of Eternal Life—The Lawyer's Intelligent Answer—Christ's Commendation of Him—Another Question—Touches the Essence of the New Religion—The Boundaries of the Pathway Extended—The Doom of Exclusiveness—The Samaritan's Unstinted Benevolence—The Final Word to the Lawyer.

These inquirers are not among Satan's newest recruits. We complain sometimes in our work that there is so little truth amongst those whom we have to do; that their motives are impure, that we can place so little reliance upon what they say; thus we excuse ourselves for the littleness of our work, saying that we are laboring on a barren soil. Let us not forget that God has an eye, not only to the work, but to the workman; that in the difficulty which He permits us to meet with, He is furthering our education, and affording us opportunities for carrying out in our lives the precepts of Christianity. Our blessed Lord's all its tiny details carried out His teaching, and ours does not do the same our spiritual children will be a poor, weakly, unsatisfactory class. Have before us in our lesson a lawyer, who to Jesus, not to be taught, not to receive anything from Him; but to criticise, to "catch Him in words," and, if possible, prove Him to be wrong. He came "tempting Him." "Master," he said, "what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"

Eternal Life

The new doctrine which men were speaking in those days, just as now some speak of assurance, others against consecration, others against healing. The only ideas of the lawyer were to do and to inherit; he spoke as a Jew, as one who was under the law and an heir of the promise. He knew little of "eternal life," that God has made to be a new creation was to him only a point of doctrine. The apostle John said that which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have touched, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and shew unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us." (1 John 1:2.) We see that eternal life is the very life of the age, of God manifest in our flesh.

Lord Jesus knew the heart of him who stood before him to judge and criticise the only sinless Man in the whole world, and who was his God, though the lawyer knew it not. The Saviour dealt with him on his own ground—the law. "What is written in the law? how readest thou? And he, answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." There they stood, face to face—He in whom that law was fulfilled to the very letter, whose whole being lay already upon the altar of His love to God, and who manifested only love to the would-be antagonist who catechised Him; and there stood the critic, who till now had never made his convictions a personal matter. And Jesus "said unto him, Thou hast answered right; this do, and thou shalt live." The man was in the very act of transgressing this law; he would not willingly be questioned in the spirit in which he was questioning Jesus; the tables being turned upon him, he felt that he had lost ground, and now, instead of continuing to tempt or try Jesus, he took up an attitude of self-defence.

"He, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, Who is my neighbor?"

There were many different views abroad among the Jews of that period about this essential question. A covetous man would find it inconvenient to make the circle of his neighbors a wide one, because he would be so unwilling to answer to any claims which such a relationship might make upon his purse. A proud man would limit the circle to those who held the same position in society. A Pharisee would not let the Sadducees into the number, nor Sadducees Pharisees. And the exclusive spirit reigns now among professing Christians. The Lord Jesus had nothing personal at stake on earth, and, therefore, He could take an unbiassed view of things; and as we live His life the atmosphere clears of all fog, and we can see things and persons as they are in the unclouded light of God.

The Lord, in the parable which follows, supposed an extreme case. "A certain man," no relation, no friend, not even an acquaintance, "went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead." The Lord does not tell us if he were a deserving man, or to which of the many sects among the Jews he belonged; he was in need, and every one who is in need desires to be helped. Who would do to him a neighbor's part? Do we know any who are in need—drunkards, criminals, prostitutes, gamblers? "They don't deserve to be helped," says the un pitying world which has made them what they are. But they are in need, this is their only claim upon those who have been saved by the sinners' Friend.

"By Chance"

There came down a certain priest that way." Oh that this were the only case in which the recognized pastor of a flock came in the way of a distressed one "by chance" instead of intentionally. "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19:10.) He goes out of His way, and leaves the ninety-and-nine in the wilderness to seek after that which is lost, until He find it. The work of men filled with the Holy Ghost is no chance work. The Holy Ghost led Philip into contact with the eunuch, and Peter to Cornelius. (Acts 8:29; 10:19.) Every real laborer in God's vineyard, whether an ordained minister or not, has a right to expect the most intimate and direct leading, if he has surrendered himself to the government of the Holy Ghost, and laid down his own will and way. The priest who came "by chance" was certainly not guided by the Holy Ghost to pass by on the other side. "And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side." What was become of the precious office of both priests and Levites to "bless in the name of the Lord"? (Num. 6:23; Deut. 10:8.) Did it exist in name only? or did these men feel that they did not stand in a direct line between the needy one and God, and so were conscious of their lack of power; or were they so loveless that they were actuated only by indifference?

One passer-by acted out the precept of our golden text, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" he it was from whom the least might have been expected, "a certain Samaritan." "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans" (John 4:9); but in the case before us the need of the poor sufferer was too strong a claim on the Samaritan for his religious prejudices to interfere, and he took the honored place of "neighbor to him who fell among the thieves." The rein once given to his love, and the Samaritan spared no pains, no expense, no fatigue, no time, for the restoration of the stranger. There was no calculation as to how long the man would be a burden upon him, no shrinking from any sacrifice—compassion had taken possession of him. He had nothing to gain by it but the privilege of loving another as himself, a privilege not understood by the world, for "men will praise thee when thou doest well unto thyself." (Psa. 49:18.) Divine love is the very

Eternal Life, Christ in Us,

which the lawyer in his ignorance inquired about; it is a fire which is independent of earthly fuel, for it gives all, and asks for nothing in return. Earthly love soon dies away when it receives no love or no gratitude in return, or when its object is an unworthy one; it is so narrow that it cannot take in many objects at once, and when it gets a new object, it must diminish its supply of love to the old one. Oh how different to the love of Christ, always craving for new objects, always flowing freshly, always full, always equal!

The Samaritan went to the poor stranger and "bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine." "The Lord . . . healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds" (Psa. 147:3); and He says of His lost sheep, "I will . . . bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick." (Ezek. 34:16.) It is never by chance that we become acquainted with the sin of another, and it is our precious office, as the Lord's Levites, to bless and to restore in His name. But oh how often is it that we have too little of the anointing of the Holy Ghost to be in a position to minister the Spirit to others, and to pour oil into their wounds; and too little of the new wine of the Kingdom, too little of Christ's nature, to cleanse wounds without inflaming them.

The Samaritan did not expect too much of the stranger; he did not look for him to walk immediately after his wounds were dressed, but, by walking himself, provided means whereby he should be carried. This is a lesson for us. Sometimes, when a poor lost drunkard or prostitute is brought to Jesus, we expect of them a walk which is firmer and freer from sin than our own. Jesus carries us: we are borne by Him: let us bring these weak ones in contact, not only with His forgiving but His sustaining grace, and then we shall expect from Him, and not from them, that they will be kept. The Samaritan brought him to an inn, and nursed him; made himself a servant to the stranger; and as Jesus' followers we are privileged to make ourselves servants to all, that we might gain the more.

But oh, how this parable opens up to us the love of Christ! Have we not also fallen among thieves? Where are the early years of many of us? The precious time given us by God for His service, where is it? Robbed by the world, the flesh, and the devil—spent in another service, gone beyond recall. Where are all the inestimable gifts and graces provided for us in Christ, during that lost time? Robbed by the unbelief and self which took for its own that which we might have held in partnership with God. And what have the outward institutions of religion done for us? What have the priests and Levites done? Passed by on the other side. But there was One who took our flesh upon Him, that He might come where we were; One who had compassion, who came to us when we were in no position to go to Him, who bound up our wounds with hands which had first been wounded for us, and poured in oil and wine, although, in His sufferings for us, none poured oil and wine into His wounds. And He came down that He might lift us up, and He has watched over and taken care of us.

"On the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee." The Lord Jesus, too, is gone, gone to His Father, but He has left a provision for us, and made Himself surety for all our needs unconditionally; for He has said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." (John 14:13.)

The Lord Jesus was always personal in His dealing with inquirers. He first made the lawyer condemn himself in his answer to the question, "Which now of these three thinkest thou was neighbor to him that fell among the thieves?" And then He who taught as one that had authority said unto him, "Go thou and do likewise."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE, Editor.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be made payable at Station D, New York.

In reply to numerous inquiries, we state that no change has been made in our terms to agents. They are allowed, on all ordinary subscriptions, the same commission as in former years.

HENRY J. VAN DYKE.

IN carrying out our intention to give at different times the faces and the work of prominent ministers of all denominations of Christians, we present in this number my Brooklyn neighbor, Doctor Van Dyke. He made one of the addresses at my Installation twenty-one years ago, and our ministries since that time have been side by side. He also presided as Moderator over the General Assembly that met in my church in 1876; so we have been considerably associated. Doctor Van Dyke is an out-and-out Presbyterian. Some men hold their theories of religion by the tips of their fingers, but this man holds them with the full grasp of both hands. The Doctor said the other day in Presbytery that he is getting old, but that is a delusion. It is with him only about two o'clock in the afternoon, and there are for him many long hours of useful work before sundown. What such a long pastorate as his implies! I warrant that he could give no accurate statistics of the number of sermons he has preached, the number of marriages he has solemnized, the number of the dead he has buried, the number of broken hearts he has comforted, the number of tears he has wiped away, the number of souls he has led into the Kingdom. May the afternoon of his life be as bright as the morning and noon have been busy and useful!

APPROACHING SUMMER.

WE are near the season of the year when our congregations are to be scattered for the summer. We are soon to pass the fifty-second milestone on the road heavenward. In most of the churches we soon close the ecclesiastical year. We must testify that during the past year we have found Christian association most delightful. We have been out in the world and tasted other kinds of association. We have mingled with men of the world. We have heard what they had to say and what they had to propose. We have laughed in their hilarities. We have rejoiced in their secular plans and propositions; but we have to testify that there is more enjoyment in one day of Christian association than in a whole year of worldly frivolity. Oh, how pleasant is Christian association! "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Well for our churches if we can say that during all this past year there have been no words of bitterness, but that we have all stood in one grand harmony of the Gospel; that our churches have been disturbed by no dissensions, rent by no angry discussions, but that we stand in full sympathy for each other's sorrows, and in appreciation of each other's joys, to bless the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men. We have also to testify, as we approach the close of this ecclesiastical year, to the joy that there is in Christian work. We have found the service of God a pleasurable service, with no fearful reactions, and that there is even joy in its fatigues. The more we have talked for God, and the more we have worked for God, the more we have suffered for God, the more happy and rested we have really been. We do not think that anything you have done in your worldly occupations has rendered you so much satisfaction as you have found in the service of God, during these past months, and surely you will admit this yourself. We have also to testify near the close of this ecclesiastical year, to our increased confidence in the Son of God as a personal Saviour. We have tried Him, we have vexed Him many a time, and if He had not been a very large-hearted and very sympathetic Christ, He would long ago have cast us off from His presence. Yes, He is a good Lord. He keeps His promises. Aye, more, He goes out unto the wilderness of our sin to seek and find us and bring us back into His love and under His benediction. We have also to testify that heaven is becoming a gladder reality than it used to be. Once heaven was theoretically beautiful, but we had few personal friends there. We knew it must be a grand and glorious place because the Bible said so. But during these past few years so many of our good friends have gone into that land, that it is becoming a more practical and familiar place, and we really expect to be more at home when we get there, than we are here. When, some time since, a friend of many years went up on the steps of a hotel, sat down and instantly died, only the name on the top of his cane telling who he was and where he resided, we thought they seem to be all going up, our lifelong friends, and heaven will be a very delicious place. It will be a glorious reunion, and the more of our friends who go out of this world into that good land, the more attractive it is getting to be. Let us, then, when the time comes, close the ecclesiastical year in all our churches with the "Hallelujah chorus" and a cheerful benediction.

A GOOD LIFT.

WE had friends who were battering our ears with much talk about their style of exercise. They wished we would try it. Well, the day came for our experiment. We felt unusually dull, full of scepticism, we stepped in to look at the famous health-lift. Our unbelief was increased as we laid hold of the horizontal bar and were told to slightly raise seventy-five pounds, and then lie down on a lounge. We thought the operating doctor was joking. We could lift that weight with two fingers, and objected to lying down, until we found that to be a necessary part of the treatment. In three minutes more we lifted a hundred and twenty-five pounds, and after another interregnum we lifted two hundred pounds, each time taking a few moments' respite. We got up feeling twenty years younger; could hardly act with appropriate gravity till we got into the street, and came away an enthusiastic advocate of the "health-lift." The doctors tell us how it affects the blood, what transformation it works in the liver, how it strengthens the nerves, and what inspiration it gives to the brain. But we tell of the exhilaration to body, mind, and soul. We have one of these machines now standing in the corner of our room. It is a great economizer of time. In twenty minutes one can get as much life and energy out of it as from two hours' walk. We make it the punctuation to the chapter of each day's work. It is as good for a rainy day, when outdoor exercise is almost impossible, as in clear weather.

We commend it as cheap, practical, and a necessity—especially for men and women given to brain work. We were well when we bought it, but we are still better now. It produces rotundity where there is thinness, and solid proportions where there was obesity. As we always had admiration for people, since we have begun to use the health-lift we have been imagining how we will look when we become large at the girth and have come to two hundred and twenty genuine avoirdupois weight. Since our discipleship of this form of recreation we have remembered that all kinds of strength—more the physical than the mental and moral—come through the attempt to lift. There is, in almost every man's occupation or experience, some obstacle or heavy work that must be grappled and raised. The difference between the energy and force of one man and the energy and force of another is the difference in the amount they have been willing to lift. Those men who are flaccid, flesh and nerveless of mind and undecided of soul are the people who have looked on while others pulled and pushed. The heavy things in life are given to develop moral muscle and strengthen your back-bone. Begin with small weights first, and then you will be ready for large ones. Stand with burdens in life that weigh seventy-five pounds and you will gradually be able to take up three hundred pounds. Lay hold of your work in real earnest. Plant your feet firmly, take a long breath, brace yourself, and lift! We give the command the boss carpenter at the country raising, who twenty men in their shirt-sleeves have got the shoulders under the beam, "All together now! Ho! Heave!"

BAD REJOICING.

How little sympathy for a man who misses his mark in life, and falls headlong! Where there is one person to help him up, there are a score to cry "Good for him!" There is a strange element in some natures that rejoices in the downfall of others. Men have the mistaken notion that over the shoulders of the defeated they themselves can climb to victory. No, no. You will gain nothing in life but by hand-to-hand contest with obstacles in your own path. The failure of others will be no assurance of your success. When you see a man fall, take it for granted that in the same circumstance and under the same pressure you would have done just as he did. It is unwise, ungenerous, and unchristian to say, "Good for him!"

MINISTERS OFF THE TRACK.

THERE are secular papers asking, "What are the ministers coming to, when north, south, east and west there are men in canonicals disgracing themselves and the cause?" To the question "What are the ministers coming to?" we answer the most of them are coming to glory. When one of them does wrong his behavior is so in contrast with the general character of his profession that it is the more conspicuous. All professions and occupations have in them naughty people. We would not want to publish the long list of derelict farmers, lawyers, merchants, and mechanics. But let us not fail to make a distinction between a man and his profession. If a span of horses dash down the street, and kill their driver, do not let it be set down to the discredit of all horses. If, next year, a thousand ministers stumbled and fell, that would not hurt the profession. The ministry never stood so honored in the Church and the world as they do to-day. And they will continue to be more and more honored, until the work to which Christ called that profession is consummated, and the Gospel preached to every creature.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Number of Undesirable Immigrants Com- into the country increases, in spite of the stringent provisions of the Alien Contract Labor Law. A letter to the House Committee on Appropriations, Assistant Secretary Tichenor explains how come. He calls attention to the fact that the immigrant law prohibits the landing in country of convicts, lunatics, idiots, and paupers who come by water, in vessels of any description it fails to meet the case of immigrants of this character who may enter this country by land from contiguous territory. The department has received information that a large number of these undesirable immigrants have recently drifted into this country from Mexico and Canada. Mr. Tichenor therefore suggests an amendment to the law to prevent a continuance of this kind of immigration. He recommends that the appropriation for the enforcement of the Alien Contract Labor law, and that for the enforcement of the Chinese Exclusion act be increased, and also that the Secretary be authorized to return to China, at Government expense, all immigrants in the United States in violation of law.

Founding of a National University is Pro- posed in a bill introduced in the Senate on May 14, by Senator Edmunds. Its object is to establish the University of the United States in the city of Washington, and it provides that it shall be governed by a Board of Regents, composed of the President, members of the Cabinet, Chief-Justice of the United States, and twelve citizens, no two of which shall be appointed from the same State. These twelve citizens shall hold office nine years, four to be elected every three years.

The purpose of this University is to institute and carry on a course of education and research in all branches of learning and investigation, and, in the opinion of the Board of Regents, from time to time, be most conducive to the advancement and to the increase and development of knowledge. The Board shall appoint the officers of the corporation, establish professorships, direct the course of instruction. Authority is given to the Board of Regents to secure the necessary land, provide for the construction of the buildings and to fix the compensation of the professors and their employees, for which purpose the bill appropriates $500,000. The bill also appropriates $5,000,000 to be permanently set aside in the Treasury of the United States as the principal and perpetual fund for the maintenance of the institution. No religious doctrine is to be taught.

destructive Cyclone Passed Through Sec- tion of Kansas, Ohio, and Missouri on May 10, doing grievous damage to property, and injuring persons, and killing some outright. A dispatch from Fredonia, Kan., says that in Pleasant Township three persons were killed, and a large number of persons were dangerously hurt. From Akron, O., a dispatch says that the storm with its characteristic shaped trailing cloud moved in almost a straight line through a well-settled part of the city, scarcely a foot of the mile and a half but was followed by its passage with splintered house timbers, uprooted trees, and leveled outhouses. In a trip over the storm's path, nineteen dwellings were counted that were blown into kindling-wood, or so badly wrecked that they cannot be occupied. Eighteen persons were badly hurt, and seventy-five made homeless. In Harrison and Gentry counties, Missouri, fifty buildings were wrecked, and three persons killed.

Terrible Mining Disaster Occurred at Ash- ley, Wilkesbarre, Pa., on May 15. The disaster is known as a "cave-in"—that is, the falling of the roof over an extensive portion of the mine. The colliery is entered by a slope from the town of Ashley, and its workings extend many miles under ground. The cave-in occurred about 8 o'clock in the morning. The mine employs about three hundred men and women who went to their work as usual at 7 o'clock. An hour later some of the men saw signs of a cave-in. The mine began to "work," as the miners call it. The roof cracked, bits of coal and rock chipped off from the sides of the gangways, and such tokens are never disregarded by miners, and those who noticed it at once abandoned their tools and made for the slope. The darkness with which the "working" began convinced them that the danger was imminent, and that it was even more imminent than they had feared. As they fled from their chambers they gave the alarm, but before they could all escape the roof began to fall in. Explosions of gas followed, one of which was caused by the careless lighting of a naked lamp. Heroic efforts were made all day and all night to reach the entombed men. Early next morning nineteen were found—all dead.

The Narrow Escape of an Ocean Steamer from destruction was reported from Quebec on May 13. The dispatch says that the Allan Line steamer Parisian, which arrived there on that day from Liverpool, had been in collision with an iceberg off the banks of Newfoundland. A heavy fog prevailed, and the steamer was proceeding cautiously, at the rate of six miles an hour, when the lookout sighted a huge iceberg about forty yards ahead. The engines were immediately reversed, but the steamer ran on to a portion of the iceberg to a distance of about twelve feet. For a time the ship shivered from the shock and great excitement prevailed on board, a panic being prevented only by the self-possession displayed by the officers. She lay on her broadside a full minute, and the captain ordered all hands on deck, and the crew to stand by the boats. The vessel, however, soon settled back into clear water uninjured. Had the steamer been running at anything approximating her usual speed, nothing could have saved her from complete wreck and great loss of life.

An Effort to Suppress the Louisiana Lottery is enlisting the support of religious men in that State. At a meeting held in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, at Baton Rouge, on May 13, it was stated that there was a strong enough anti-lottery force in the lower House of the Legislature to prevent the carrying of the bill over the veto of the Governor by a two-thirds vote. There are 98 members of the House, and 33 votes are sufficient to prevent the veto being defeated. There are certainly 39 men pledged against the lottery, and nine others who are known to be against it, though they have not come into the anti-lottery caucus. Besides this, there are three vacancies to be filled, and the men opposed to the lottery hope and intend to elect their men in each district. It is stated that the offer this year for the privilege of running the lottery is a million dollars a year for twenty-five years.

The Anti-Slavery Conference at Brussels Which has been almost forgotten is still discussing the subject for which it was called together. It has agreed to adopt measures for repressing slave raids, and will shortly pass the proposition requiring all European countries possessing territories on the African coast to prevent the passage of fire-arms through such countries. Measures for the creation of armed stations on the slave caravan routes, and for the suppression of maritime slave traffic, have been adopted.

Germany's African Policy Was Explained to the Reichstag on May 12 by Chancellor Caprivi, who also incidentally made an ominous remark on the prospects of war. Referring to the success of England as a colonizing nation, he said that Germany could not apply the English system now, because men with proper training to carry it out were lacking. In England private capital was always forthcoming for such enterprises, whereas the German would rather buy the most dubious foreign security than spend his money for the German colonies. A "Bible and rifle" policy, with stations from which missionaries could operate, was necessary as the only way to end the slave trade, and kill the traders. As regarded the international features, the speaker was firmly convinced that the time would come when every soldier and every mark would be needed by Germany, and he therefore opposed sending more men or money to East Africa than was absolutely necessary. He did not believe that Germany could maintain her grip on her colonies in time of war. But as Germany's navy might have to reckon with Powers outside of Europe, it was important to secure coaling stations.

The Emperor of Germany Proposes to Call another labor conference. It is announced that the Emperor will summon delegates from every trade in Germany to discuss trade questions, and he proposes to establish a special permanent operatives' council, under the presidency of Baron von Berlepsch, Minister of Commerce, each member having 2,000 marks yearly, with the title of Arbeitsrath. The members of the council will be selected from the delegates to the conference. The project does not meet with the favor of the workingmen. They think that the prospect of their representatives being in the pay of the government will not be conducive to their independence and concern for the interests of labor. That there is need, however, for the assistance of real workmen in the framing of measures for their benefit is obvious from the flaws in the bills already introduced. Some of the riders to the main proposals tend to make illusory some of the best provisions of the Labor Protection Bill by giving employers means of escaping them. Thus, under special circumstances employers can be authorized to break the rule limiting the work of children under thirteen years to six hours, and of youths under sixteen to ten hours. The bill mentions spinning factories and similar occupations where exceptions may be granted of which the employers may readily avail themselves. Another clause transfers direct responsibility for a breach of the laws from the employers to the managers or foremen, thus opening a way for evasions and making men of straw answerable instead of the principals.

BRIEF NOTES.

Every reader of this journal should read the announcement, on the second page of the cover, this week. The gift of a beautifully bound, gilt-edged New Testament, with an inscription in Dr. Talmage's handwriting, is offered on very easy terms. Such a prize will be highly esteemed by every possessor, and will be a treasure to hand down as an heirloom to children's children.

The Rev. William E. Moore, of Columbus, O., was elected, last Thursday, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly now in session.

Mr. Richard Weaver, the well-known English evangelist, after being laid aside since last August by a severe attack of bronchitis, is again hard at work.

The venerable colored Bishop Crowther has returned to his work in Africa. He was accompanied by a party of eleven missionaries, four of whom were ladies.

Archdeacon Farrar, of London, is founding a brotherhood whose mission it shall be to bring the Church to bear directly upon the masses, to Christianize them.

The many American friends of Mr. William Noble will be glad to learn that he is thought to be favorably progressing toward the recovery of health and strength.

Dr. Joseph R. Cummings, President of the Northwestern Methodist University at Evanston, died suddenly, on May 7, at his home in Evanston, Ill., at the age of seventy-three.

Miss M. F. Cusack, "the Nun of Kenmare," has recovered from her recent severe illness, and will shortly resume her lectures. She has been paying a visit to Bishop Whipple in Florida.

The New York Deaconesses' Home celebrated its first anniversary on May 12. There are thirteen lady volunteers engaged in the work, and the success of the institution during the year has been remarkable.

The work on the Adoniram Judson Memorial church in New York is now begun. On May 2 the tools were first used, and the workmen will push the work along so as to have the basement ready by October next.

At the recent annual meeting of the John F. Slater Fund Trustees in New York, ex-President Hayes, who presided, said that forty-five thousand dollars was paid out last year by the Trustees to advance industrial education among the negroes at the South.

Dr. George F. Pentecost says: "I am going to India next autumn on an evangelistic mission, to the Anglo-Indians, and next to the English-speaking natives." A number of earnest Christians, male and female, accompany him at their own expense.

The Illinois Supreme Court has just rendered a decision that the Y. M. C. A. is not wholly a religious body, but is largely a Christian and benevolent organization, and therefore the law restricting the amount of property to be held by religious corporations does not govern the Y. M. C. A.

The new missionary launch of the American Board made its trial-trip in Boston Harbor on May 15. Dr. Judson Smith conducted the dedicatory services. She will be sent to Ponape, one of the Caroline Islands, for the use of the Rev. F. E. Rand. Her engines attained a speed of eight knots an hour at the trial-trip.

On Sunday evening, May 10, the Quarterly Communion Service was observed at the Hebrew-Christian Church, 17 St. Mark's Place, Rev. Jacob Freshman, pastor. Two converted Hebrews were admitted into the fellowship of the church. On Sunday evening, May 17, another Hebrew convert was baptized. And so the good work goes on.

Evangelist H. R. Keates is having some wonderful meetings in Seventeenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York. There are numerous conversions every night. A revival is springing up in that densely populated district. The church itself is being wonderfully revived, and widening and deepening as the meetings go on. Mr. James H. Cannon, the one-armed singing evangelist, is giving very effective help. The meetings are now in their fourth week.

The National Temperance Society celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary on May 13, in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York. Dr. Theodore Cuyler was re-elected President. The report of the year's work, made by Corresponding Secretary J. N. Stearns, showed the receipts for publication to be $40,769.71; for donations and legacies, $8,073.55; making a total of $48,843.26. The expenditures amounted to $49,512.09, and about $2,800 has been received in contributions toward paying the debt of $4,000.

THE CRUCIAL QUESTION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when He had found him, He said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" John 9: 35.

The Lord's Way of Comforting the Man—A Heart-Searching Question—I. It Needs to be Raised—Must not be Assumed—The Question Pressed on the Healed Man—In Spite of His Obedience—Of His Remarkable Experience—Of His Avowal—A Preacher Converted by His Own Sermon—The Man Had Suffered for Christ—II. The Question Can be Answered—Thousands Have Attained Certainty—The Marks and Evidences—III. Should be Answered at Once—IV. Of Utmost Importance.

"JESUS heard that they had cast him out." Our Lord had done too much for this man to forget him. Where grace has wrought a great work its memory lingers; as it is written, "Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." In this let us take comfort: if anything has happened to grieve us, Jesus has heard of it, and will act accordingly.

Our Lord sought for the outcast one. Unasked, He had opened his eyes; unsought, He looks after him in his hour of trouble. He was not easy to find; but our Lord is great at searching out His lost sheep, and He persevered until He found him. If we, at any time, should seem cast off from Christ as well as cast out by proud religionists, He will find us when we cannot find Him.

Our Lord's object was to do this man real service; he had been cast out of the synagogue, and he therefore needed comfort; but it would be a grand thing so to comfort him as to lead him onward and upward in the divine life.

Our Lord's Way of Comforting

was to ask a question which would lead to heart-searching, and suggest spiritual advance. He helped him by this question to make a considerable advance in faith; for, although the poor man had believed in Jesus up to the measure of his knowledge, his knowledge had been slender; but now he was to learn that the opener of his eyes was the Son of God. The man was excommunicated, and was then placed under the ban of the Jewish church; but trust in the Son of God would quickly remove from him any alarm which he might feel on that account. He that enjoys the favor of the Son of God will not tremble at the frown of the Sanhedrim.

Oh, that the Lord would comfort many this morning, while I press upon each one of you this one personal question, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" To young and old, to rich and poor, I shall direct this solemn inquiry. It is not a perplexing question upon an abstruse point, but a simple and urgent inquiry relating to everybody here present. I wish you each one to think that I now put my hand on your shoulder, and look you in the face, and say earnestly, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

I. I shall begin pressing home the question by making the remark that the question

Needs to be Raised.

It must not be taken for granted that you do believe on the Son of God. "Oh, yes, I am a Christian," says one; "I was born in a Christian country, I was taken to church while a babe, and was duly christened, and I now repeat the creed. Surely this is sufficient proof of my faith!" All this may be so, but it is not to the point. "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" This is a spiritual and vital question which cannot be thus set aside. You reply, "My moral character has always been correct; in business I have always discharged my liabilities, and I have always been ready to help every charitable institution." I am glad to hear all this. Still, it does not touch the matter now in hand; this query goes deeper than outward conduct. Hear it again—"Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

Though this man had been scrupulously obedient, yet our Lord asked the question. It may be, I speak to some who say, "I have been at all times obedient to the duties of religion. Whatever I have found to be commanded of God in His Word, I have carefully carried out." No outward observances, however carefully carried out, will obviate the need of the inquiry, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" I am afraid some of you have not been very careful in fulfilling outward ordinances, and for this you are blameworthy; but if you had been scrupulously exact, yet no outward observances, however carefully followed out, can exempt you from the question, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

This man, in addition, had passed through a very remarkable experience. He could say, "one thing

I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see." He could never forget that long night, while a child, a youth, and a man. All those years no ray of light had ever gladdened him; to him night and day were much the same; he had sat in deep poverty all through that dreary darkness, and learned no art but that of beggary. As the cooling water touched his eyes, and washed away the clay, the sunlight streamed in upon the life-long midnight; and he saw. He had undergone all that change, and yet the Saviour said to him, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" So, my dear hearer, you may be a very altered man, and yet you may not be a believer on the Son of God. I also must take liberty to press home, upon the most remarkable person here, the same personal inquiry—"Dost thou believe on the Son of God?"

The Germ of Faith.

This man, in addition to his reception of bodily sight, had exercised a degree of faith in the Lord Jesus. If you follow the chapter through, you will see that he had some sort of faith in Christ while he was blind, or he would not have gone to Siloam to wash away the clay. And when he saw, he did not doubt that Jesus had really made him whole; and he avowed the fact. He also said, "He is a prophet." He went further still, for he said, "If this man were not of God, he could do nothing." He had believed as far as his light helped him to believe; so that the germs of faith were in him. Yet our Lord Jesus Christ pressed him with the inquiry, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" Beloved friends, you, too, may never have been troubled with scepticism: it may be, you have not even examined the grounds of your faith, because you have never been tempted to suspect them. You have taken in the gospel from your youth as clearly true, and so you have believed it without being much perplexed. I am thankful that you have done so. Still, do you believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God? It is of very small avail to say, "Oh, yes, I believe in Christ, the noblest of examples; I believe in Christ, the most instructive of prophets;" dost thou believe in Him also as the Sacrifice, as the Priest, the Saviour, the Salvation? And gathering all up in one, dost thou believe in Him as the Son of God?

A Shrewd Man.

Furthermore, this man had spoken out bravely for Christ, as you saw in the chapter which we read just now. "He spoke out like a Trojan," said one. Say, rather, "like a Spartan." He was cute, shrewd, sharp, and unanswerable. The learned doctors were nowhere in comparison with the blind beggar whose eyes had been opened. He stood up for the Man who had given him sight, and allowed no charge to lie against Him. His statements were short, but full; and his answers were themselves unanswerable. Who would have thought that a blind beggar could have fashioned such a logical argument as he did? Yet to this bold confessor the Saviour had to say, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" Ah, my friend, as a preacher you may be able to declare the gospel very clearly to others, and you may enforce it with powerful arguments; but "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" Even in your case, the question must be plied.

Some of you may remember that story which is told in one of Krummacher's books. I half forget it myself, but it was somewhat on this wise. The preacher had delivered himself of a solemn discourse, and was waited upon, on the following Monday, by one of his hearers, who said, "Sir, if what you said last Sunday was true,

What Will Become of Us?"

Now, if he had said, "What will become of me?" the preacher would have explained still further to him the gospel, in the usual way. As it was, he parried the word "us;" but his visitor, almost unconsciously, said, "Alas, dear sir! if these things be so, what shall we do?" The Lord used that plural pronoun to the awakening of the preacher, who had not been converted, though he thought he had been. Oh, that we who speak for God may also hear the Lord speak to us!

This man had gone further still; for he had suffered for Christ. He had been put out of the synagogue for bearing witness to the power of Jesus; but none the less for this he had to hear the question, "Dost thou believe?" Yes, you, dear friend, may have been laughed at by your relatives for your religiousness; you may have had to quit a good situation because of your determination to be honest, temperate, and pure; you may at the present moment stand under the ban of some cold-hearted church, because you have been more earnest than was desired; but much as I appreciate your fidelity, you must excuse me if I hit you in the hole you in the Lord's name, and say, as Christ did to this man, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" It is one thing to play the hero before our fellowmen, and another to be true in secret chamber of our own soul. You are bold in your confession, but do you really believe in Lord Jesus? Can that bold confession be supplied by your life?

This question must thus be raised, and raised everybody, because many people nowadays do believe on the Son of God. There are many about who would be mightily offended if we denied the right to the name of Christian, who nevertheless know not "the Son of God." These folks add a man who will concoct a sermon to show that they may be Christians, and not believe on Jesus as God. I shall preach no such sermon until I have my reason; but I shall press upon this unbeliever this vital question, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" Man, if thou dost not so believe, thy faith falls short of that which Christ would have thee possess, and thou hadst need take heed lest it fall short of landing thee in heaven.

II. But, secondly,

The Question Can be Answered.

It were, indeed, a most unhappy thing if this question could not be answered. Suppose we were condemned to live in a state of perpetual doubt to our being believers in the Lord Jesus. That would involve an awakened man in a condition of constant anxiety. If I am not sure whether I am in the favor of God or not, I am in a condition of decided sorrow. I remember hearing a Christian minister say one day in company that no man could be sure that he was saved. Then I wondered what he had to preach that was worth preaching; for, if we cannot know that we are saved, then we cannot be sure that we are at peace with God; and this is to be in jeopardy every hour. There can be no peace to the mind of the awakened man if he does not know that he is saved.

There is a possibility of knowing to a certainty that you believe on the Son of God. Did I say there is a possibility of it? Thousands have attained to this certainty. As sure as mathematical certainty is the confidence of the believer in the Lord Jesus; for we know whom we have believed and we are persuaded that He is able to keep us in which we have committed to Him. There are believers in our Lord Jesus who have gone on for a space of thirty years without a doubt of their faith in Him, because that faith has been in daily, happy exercise upon Him.

You Can Answer the Question,

"Dost thou believe?" because you are at this moment believing; distinctly and intensely believing. If we feel a burning love to God, a growing hatred of sin, a struggle against the evil which is in the world, and somewhat of the likeness of Christ, we may safely infer that these fruits of faith come from the root of faith. By the work of the Holy Ghost upon life and heart we know, and are sure, that we have believed in the Son of God.

It is with some a matter of consciousness. He do I know that I live, breathe, stand, walk? I cannot explain to you the mode by which I arrive at certainty on this matter, but I am quite sure that I do live and breathe, and so on. Indeed, the power to question the fact implies it. So a believer may be sure that he believes that Jesus is the Son of God; and while he may not be able to give logical proof, yet he may be none the less conscious in his own soul that it is even so; and I am correct in his assurance, for even the very power to be anxious after grace is an evidence of grace.

If you want further help to solve the question, there are marks and evidences of true faith which you can readily test yourself. Do you inquire, "Do I believe on the son of God?" the answer this: Is Christ precious to you? For unto you who believe He is precious. If you love and prize Him as the most precious thing in earth or heaven, you could not have this appreciation of Him if you were not a believer. Again, are you obedient to Christ? for faith works by love, and purifies the soul. Is it so with you? Has sin become bitter? Do you loathe it? Has holiness become sweet? Do you follow after it? I do not ask whether you are perfect, but is the whole current of your soul toward being perfect? Can you say that if you could live entirely without sin it would be the greatest delight you could have?

absolute perfection would be heaven to you? then it shows which way your mind goes; it is that there is a change of nature, for no unwed heart pines after perfect holiness. These prove that you have faith in Jesus. Look to them.

Supposing, after using all inquiries and tests, still say, "Sir, this is a grave question, and rests great care. I have not settled it yet;" then view this man in his method. When he was asked, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" turned to the Lord, and replied with another question to the Lord Jesus. We may resort to Him for aid. He who had once been blind eagerly asked, "Who is He, Lord, that I may believe in Him?" Turn, then, O inquirer, in the midst of thy distress, and cry, "Lord Jesus, I charge Thee, teach me to know Thee better, I may have more faith in Thee." Go to for faith in Jesus.

Thirdly, the question should be answered, and should be answered at once.

Could I, would concentrate all your thoughts this one investigation, which to each man so concerns his own self—"Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" Answer this from your own heart. I am no father-confessor; be father-confessor to your own selves. Let each man give his verdict at the bar of his conscience. Answer also as presence of Christ; for, like the man in the Bible, thou art in His presence now. Answer yourself before the heart-searching, rein-trying. Answer it to men also, for this thy Saviour is of thee. Be not ashamed to say outright, "believe on the Son of God." This fact must be hidden away in a corner. Remember how the Word in Holy Scripture always puts open counsel side by side with faith as a part of the plan of salvation. The question ought to be answered; asked before men, and answered at once. Do not delay, but keep thy Lord's command.

Remember, you are losing time while you are in doubt as to your faith. If you are not believing, as you are spending your days in death, and waiting for the Son of God. If it be a question whether you have believed on the Son of God, it is no question that you are Losing Comfort and Happiness.

Dear friend! if thou hast not believed that thou art the Son of God, the hope that thou wilt grow fainter every day. The longer a man remains in any state, the more likely it is that he will continue there. When men have long been doomed to do evil, the prophet cries over them, "The Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?" It is an awful thing to have heard a man long in vain. If even the appeals of Calvary are lost on you, what remains? Gospel-hardened sinners are hardened indeed. Some of you are unbelievers in the Lord Jesus Christ for ever, and, I fear, will die in unbelief; and never! The portion of unbelievers is terrible. Therefore, to this question at once. Do not delay an hour. If the answer is unsatisfactory, it can be altered if attended to at once. It has not as yet believed on the Son of God, it does so. Since eternity can be moulded by prayer, I pray you, arouse yourselves. Look to the Lord Jesus, for if that be right, all is well; that be found wanting, all is wanting.

So I close with my fourth point, which is the question may be

Of the Utmost Importance.

I know that I am saved I shall have no other holy work. A wise man stops at home, looks after his own concerns, while he feels that he is in peril; but when they are all safe, he turns to the interests of his neighbors. When I am saved, and that there is nothing more to do in that matter, for Christ has finished His work, when I inquire what I can do for Him who has done so much for me. Where is the child or man I can talk to about my Saviour? I will go to the upmost ones, and tell them of a present salvation. Perhaps I have never dared to speak to my children about eternal life; but I possess it, and know that I do, because I believe on the Son of God, I will begin to instruct them in this good doctrine.

What a help assurance will be in the time of trial! You have a great affliction coming on; you can say, "I know that I believe in Jesus the Son of God," you will face it with quietness; it is a surgical operation? You will lie still and yourself up to the surgeon's knife, come life or death; and you will do it easily. Is it a cruel persecution which you have to face to-morrow? You will not be afraid; but, believing in Jesus, you will take up His cross. Are you growing old, and thinking of the time when you must die? It will not matter, for you know that you will only be going home, since you believe on the Son of God.

This, I think, will fire you with holy zeal and praise. You have been saying, "I do not know how it is that I am so dull and stupid! I go to the house of God, and I do not feel the power of the Word: I am afraid I am not a Christian." Just so. As long as you have that chilling fear upon you, you will not be sensitive to the cheering truth; but when you know that you believe on the Son of God, and are sure of your salvation, your heart will beat to another tune, and will take possession of your bosom. You will begin to taste heavenly happiness when you have a sense of heavenly certainty. Being thus moved with gratitude, and filled with joy, the result will be a great concern for others who have not believed on the Son of God. You will look upon unbelievers with sorrow and alarm. They are very wealthy, perhaps; but you will despise their gold, because it blinds their eyes. They are very clever, perhaps, but you will not worship their abilities, because the eternal light is hid from their eyes. You will say to yourself, "They may have all their wealth, and all their cleverness, but I have the Son of God." In this respect, you have done more than an angel could do; for an angel has no lost soul to trust with the Son of God, no sin to wash away in the Saviour's blood; but you have trusted Him, and you have been washed in His blood, and you are clean. Go home and sing, my brother. Go home, and tell it out among your fellows, that Jesus is the Son of God, and abundantly able to save. Go home, and weep some poor sinner to Jesus. Go home, and never rest until you can say to God: "Here am I, and the souls that thou hast given me. We are believing on the Son of God." Peace be with you!

The Music of the Upper Spheres

THE DEACON AND THE PREACHER.

IN an account which John Ashworth gives of an old deacon, John Kershan, he tells the following story of his faithful dealing with an inexperienced young preacher:

"I had called to take tea with him one Sunday. During the repast he was silent, and seemed a little troubled. A young man sat at the table who had been preaching that afternoon what he thought to be a most magnificent sermon, from the text, 'All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee.' He opened out his discourse in a grandiloquent style, quoting from Young, 'Morning stars exulting, shouting o'er the rising ball;' from Shakespeare, 'Cloud capped towers on gorgeous palaces;' and that sublime piece from Pollok's Course of Time, beginning, 'Whose garments were the clouds.' Mounting up still amongst what he called the 'stellar worlds,' he expatiated on the satellites of Herschel, Uranus, and Jupiter, and finished his aerial flight in the milky way.

"After tea the old deacon requested the young preacher to go with him into the front parlor. When both were seated, he said, 'My young man, thou hast been flying thy kite high this afternoon, very high, and if thou dost not mind, the string will break, and it will come down; thou hast been walking over the stars on stilts, cloud-capp'd towers shouting o'er the rising ball, satellites, Jupiter, and milky way indeed. It is thin milk in the pulpit. Thou got so high up, thou never saw Calvary where the Maker of all died for those Gospel-hardened sinners that were staring at thee; thou never told us that the work of God that praises Him most was the work of redemption, shedding His blood for a guilty world. My dear young friend, do come down, before thou tumblest down; keep at the foot of the cross; it is he, and only he, that humbleth himself that shall be exalted, either in the pulpit or out.'

"Few can conceive the agony of the young preacher while the old deacon was so crushing him. He had to preach again the same evening, and preach to this terrible old man. He was in great fear, and trembled as he walked up the pulpit steps. In his sermon he never reached the lowest star. During prayer he wept, and the people wept with him. Christ crucified to save perishing mortals was his theme, and God blessed His own Word, as He ever will. The old deacon met him at the church-gate, saying:

"Thou wilt have to pass my house, and must call to take supper with me; let me take hold of thy arm, for thou art younger than I. And now, my dear young brother, God has blessed us all to-night; I have been with Peter, James, and John, on the Mount, and with the Master, for we never get on the mount without the Master. The Lord will make thee a very useful preacher, when He has cured thee of cloud-capp'd towers."

NEW LIGHT ON THE SLAVE-TRADE.

IN a criticism of Prof. Drummond's work on Africa, Captain Hore, of the London Missionary Society, refers to an error that he declares to be as unjust as it is prevalent. He says that the worst sinners of slave-dealers are not the Arabs, as is generally supposed, but the Africans themselves. "If we can deal with the 'African,' the smaller 'Arab' slave-trade must die with it. But even if the 'Arab' trade were entirely cleared away, the 'African' trade will still exist in all its horror and vast extent. The public is prejudiced by a condemnation of these Arabs, the worst part of their character and doings being only brought forward. To them and their religion are attributed all the evil doings of the lower and degraded classes, who, by the wearing of turbans, or for other reasons, may be classed with them. It is a mistaken idea of the Africans being universally oppressed by Arab slave-dealers, whereas the fact is that the greatest slave-traders are the Africans themselves. This is indicated by the phrase; 'The slaves are needed to buy ivory with.' It corresponds with Sir S. Baker's explanation of the commencement of the slave-trade in the Soudan. Natives refused to sell their wares to the Arabs for cloth and beads, and demanded slaves. The Arabs, with no scruples of conscience on this head, yielded to the demand, and became slavers. Livingstone tells the same story of Arabs yielding to requests of Africans to buy slaves where ivory was scarce. The horrors of the slave raids of the far interior are committed, not by Arabs, but by natives and by disreputable half-castes, very likely by strangers mistaken for Arabs; those along the coast, where most visible to us, are no doubt by Arabs. The Arabs of Central Africa are frequently extensive slave-holders, but many extensive slave-holders are honest and benevolent. On the other hand, some of the real criminals, especially on the coast, may not own a single slave themselves.

A VISIT TO GERMAN PRISONS.

THE modern prison philanthropist, Charles Cook, who has visited the prisons of nearly all countries in the world, has this to say of the prisons of Germany, which he recently visited:

What a striking contrast I find in the prisons here to those of other Continental countries. France in her dealings with criminals is excessively severe; Italy is careless alike of their health and their morals, making them work seven days in the week; Austria is intolerant to a degree of anyone but the priests of Rome seeking their spiritual welfare; and Spain, with her filthy gaols, is a disgrace to the nineteenth century; but one and all are identical in never supplying their prisoners with the Word of life. In one prison in Belgium I have seen sixty men in one room all sentenced "for life." In a Spanish prison in North Africa there were nearly 3,000 men, mostly with life-sentences, but in no instance had any of them ever had a copy of the Scriptures, save as I had managed to supply them. Here, after I have visited the prisons of Berlin, I have the joy and pleasure to report that in every cell I found the Scriptures and a hymn-book.

The treatment compares favorably with all other systems. There are light and airy work-shops, well ventilated. Here and there you see a portrait of mother and sister, or perhaps a wife, on the table of the lonely cell. Liberty is given to certain godly people to visit the prisoners, whose efforts to bring them to a sense of their sinfulness, and thus produce conviction, which may lead to conversion, have not been without fruit. There are also societies ready to take in hand the released prisoner, and start him afresh. All this on the Continent was to me novel and pleasing; and there are many things in the system of prison discipline and management as arranged in Germany, that other countries would do well to follow.

In the central prison in Berlin a large stained window in the chapel and the large Bible in the pulpit were the gift of the late Empress Augusta. The signatures of the old Emperor and Empress were pointed out to me in the visitors' book, where the name of the present Emperor is also found.

The Recent Murder of the Rev. T. A. Large, the Canadian Wesleyan Missionary in Japan.

I looked in at the Y. M. C. A., and found a live, healthy Association, apparently in good hands. On Sunday I heard a bright, earnest, evangelical sermon in the American Church.

THE MURDER OF A MISSIONARY IN JAPAN.

(See Illustrations.)

A SHOCKING story has been sent to the New York Herald from Japan. The dispatch states that the Rev. T. A. Large, of the Canadian Wesleyan Mission, has been murdered in the mission building at Azabu, a suburb of Tokio. Mr. and Mrs. Large, it appears, went, in April last, for a brief rest to Nuyanoshita, a health resort near Fujityama. They returned on April 4, and that night retired early to rest after their long journey. Their residence (a picture of which is here given) serves as a Christian school. That night two men, supposed to be burglars, entered with drawn swords and went to Mr. Large's room.

Mr. Large seized one burglar and grappled with him. In the struggle that ensued they reached the head of the staircase, and there the other burglar came to his companion's help. A powerful blow with the sword on Mr. Large's shoulder almost severed his arm, and rendered him powerless. Then the first burglar turned and struck several terrible blows at the missionary's head, crushing in his skull. Mrs. Large rushed between them to save her husband, and grasped the blade of the uplifted sword. It was so sharp that two of her fingers were sliced off.

The noise of the conflict had by this time awakened the other inmates of the house, and the burglars lost no time in making their escape. Pursuit was unsuccessful, and when the teachers returned they found Mrs. Large, unmindful of her own wounds, bathing her husband's face. He was quite dead, and his body was fearfully gashed. Opinion is divided as to the motive for the atrocity. Some think that the object was plunder, as Mr. Large was known to have $800 in the house, which had just been received for school fees. Others, however, believe that the success which has attended Mr. Large's work as a Christian missionary, may have excited the fury of some bigoted Japanese, who took this method of ridding the country of the preacher.

AN UNRECOGNIZED NEIGHBOR.

(See Illustration on page 333.)

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text for June 1. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Lev. 19: 18.

ON the deck of a transatlantic steamer approaching New York a middle-aged gentleman of distinguished appearance stood looking earnestly at the coast which was gradually becoming more clearly defined. With him was a beautiful young lady about twenty years of age, with a lovely oval face and wistful gray eyes.

"Well, Muriel," said the gentleman, "you will soon get your first sight of your new country."

"Yes, papa, but I am not anxious. England will always be home, however pleasant this may be."

"Oh I don't know that. I think we shall soon feel at home here. I shall get naturalized and be a good American citizen."

"You are the dearest and most cheerful of men. I wonder how you can bear the change. And to be driven out, too! Most men would have been embittered by such an experience."

"Oh that is all past. My Irish tenants could not pay. They might have paid a little, but of course they had to stand together, and I had to bear the punishment. I do not blame them."

"I do," said Muriel; "they ought to have remembered your kindness. Why, if it had not been for the legacy that has enabled you to buy this estate, we should have had nothing to live upon when they stopped paying rent. No, papa, you are too magnanimous. I cannot be brought to see any good in the Irish."

A few weeks later saw Mr. and Miss Haldane settled in their new home. The servants, who were engaged in New York, had gone on ahead, and had made preparations for their coming. Muriel had helped in selecting them, and had been very careful that no Irish man or girl should be among them. For some time her days were fully occupied in transforming the interior of the spacious mansion into a duplicate of the home they had left behind in England. Her dear, dead mother's picture was hung in their best room; other pictures occupied places on the walls corresponding to those they had in the old home. The furniture was similarly arranged, and then Muriel said all was as homelike as it could be made. Then she began exploring out-of-doors, and every day took long, solitary walks about the estate, wandering fearlessly about the broad lands, botanizing, looking for specimens of the butterfly race, and generally making herself familiar with nature in her new location. A beautiful, bright picture she looked in her tasteful dress, her large hat shading her face from the sun, and her gentle, wistful eyes dwelling with interest on the lovely scene.

But one day she came home with a cloud on her face, and it was still there when she took her seat behind the urn at the tea-table. Her father, who had been busy with his men all day, inquired as usual where she had been. She told him, and asked, "Who owns that cottage about a mile from the house on the north?"

"Why, my dear?" asked Mr. Haldane.

"Because I want you to buy it, Papa, and get some new tenants. Those people are Irish called there to ask my way to-day. They spoiled me in the broadest brogue. When I heard walked right out of the house and would not any longer. I want you to get rid of them."

"Do not be so prejudiced, Muriel. I know very well. They are a worthy, industrious family. Muriel's face fell. "Well," she said, "their presence spoils the place for me."

"And Mordecai, the Jew, sat in the gate," quoth Mr. Haldane. "Get over this prejudice my dear," he added; "it is unworthy of you."

But Muriel could not get over it. So long as O'Briens were neighbors she felt sure she should be content. She would hold no intercourse with them, that she resolved; but their very presence was an offence.

Spring and summer passed, and Muriel was looking to the hanging of curtains of warmer colors about the house, and preparing it for winter, day she was more than usually active, and hours sped unnoticed by her. She was astonished in looking at her watch to see that it was nearly an hour past the usual time for the evening meal, she hurried down stairs expecting to receive father's good-humored chiding on her unpunctuality. But he was not there. She felt glad of it and hastened her preparations so that when he came in he should not know that she had not been ready at the proper time. At last all was done and she sat in her usual place waiting. Then, the first time she became anxious about him. Where could he be? He was usually so punctual. Another hour passed, and it was growing quite dark, and Muriel was terribly alarmed.

"Dennis O'Brien is at the door, Miss Haldane," said a servant coming into the room where Muriel sat. "He won't give any message; he wants to speak to you."

Muriel was in no mood to see the man. She was worried about her father. Still, as he was away she had better see the Irishman.

O'Brien had a buggy at the door, and he said wanted to drive Miss Haldane over to his cottage. Her father was there. The fact was, he had had a slight accident, and his foot was hurt so he could not walk. Miss Haldane had better come. Mr. Haldane would have much preferred to walk, rather than sit in the buggy with the hated Irishman; but it was dark, and there was no other means of getting to her father, so she went.

O'Brien was serious, and he seemed anxious to talk. Mr. Haldane had been thrown from his horse, he said, Yes, his foot was sprained; his head was hurt too. They had carried him into the cottage, and sent a boy on a horse for a doctor. He was in a sort of a faint; Mrs. O'Brien was attending to him.

All this was told to prepare Muriel for the shock that she must have when she saw her father. It was kindly done, and as necessary, for Mr. Haldane was in a critical state. The doctor told Miss Haldane that he might not live, as he had received no kind and prompt help from the O'Briens. If he had not been just as he was, and carried to the cottage, nothing could have saved him. How the Irishman could have carried him, he did not think. And Mrs. O'Brien was a treasure. Why, a woman had put a bandage on, and stopped the bleeding, as well as the best surgeon could have done it. Oh, no; he could not be dead for some weeks, but the O'Briens seemed kind people; they would not mind the inconvenience of a sick man.

What Muriel would have done if her father been at home she could not imagine. The kindly woman watched beside the bed, was so skilful and dexterous in nursing him, knew so much more of sickness than Muriel, and withal was so untiringly cheerful that the girl clung to her, and depended on her for everything. The whole family in the light of the inconvenience was to them, put their best efforts at the disposal of Mr. Haldane and his daughter, and were as anxious for the injured man's recovery as if he had been their nearest and dearest relative. "He is our neighbor," Mr. O'Brien said; "would we be so neighborly as not to help the gentleman at a pinch?" Muriel thanked her thanks; her heart was full for words.

"Well, Muriel," said Mr. Haldane, as they drove away from the O'Brien's cottage some weeks later, "thankful for his complete recovery, 'do you wish me to buy that cottage and turn those people out?'" "Oh, papa! What can we do for them to show our grateful we are?"

WILL IT LIFT? THE STORY OF A FOG. By the Rev. J. Jackson Wray, (Continued from page 318.)

WHEN Mercy Graythorpe took the pair of screens in the little dealer in such articles, he told her of her repeated failures to obtain an interview; Mercy, always in fear of the sad perils and possibilities of London, laid a strong embargo on the dealer not to do or say anything to help the unknown to execute his purpose. "I do not want to see him," she said. "I do not wish to know him; if you cannot get rid of him I must cease to do so to your shop."

When she said that she hardly meant it, for it was one of her mainstays for subsistence, and was the point of prudently recalling the threat, when the little Dutchman, much to her satisfaction, replied: "No, no, Mees, Heaven forbid!" The little dealer was anxious to keep her custom, and he floundered in bad English until he was able to serve another customer, and had to leave himself unexplained. Mercy understood it, however, and Gilbert Craske did her most unconscious good turn, for she raised her prices, and success, too, from that day.

When next poor Gilbert called at the Dutchman's, that voracious gentleman told him, with shrugs and bows, and an unusual quantity of English, that "the Mees—the young Mees," had painted the "lofty" picture of "what you see in place—oh, ah, Oatlangzine," had gone away long time," and would "nefer come back." So the fog utterly refused to lift—nay, it seemed to settle down more and more; and Gilbert Craske sauntered back to the "Wellington" more anxious than ever to gain a clue to the comely widow with the silver hair.

"I must wait till Gil comes home. Gil's got wit enough for anything. Bless my heart! Why, that girl's the very woman for Gil! He'll have a double-barrelled gun, and he'll bring down one bird for himself and—Gilbert Craske, what doddering nonsense are you talking now?" Then he sighed and sighed again, and walked faster to walk himself into common-sense again. But he could not rid of the "doddering nonsense," whatever it might have been, until he crossed the threshold of the "Wellington," and found letters waiting for him there. As he passed through the hall, he noticed a large portmanteau placed upon the luggage stool, ready to be taken upstairs, and mentally noted that the porter seemed to think it heavy as he shouldered it and ascended the steps. But Gilbert Craske did not know that in that portmanteau lay the box which contained his gold!

Muriel Haldane's Excursion.

We must now cross the ocean once again, and join Gil Craske, Junior and "Dick Allanson" who, it will be remembered, was no other than Frank Higginbotham, the son of the erring and misguided landlord of the "Hilldrop Inn." One morning, knowing that the usual mail steamer had probably arrived, they mounted their horses, and after a long ride reached the lonely shanty which did duty for a post-office in the Australian Bush. Yes; there was a letter, and a long one too, from England. It was none other than the letter we saw Gilbert Craske carry to the mail after his discovery of the robbery. "Dear Dad's" letter distressed the warm-hearted Gil while he read it. Honest, open-hearted Gilbert had always given his son his fullest confidence, and the present communication was no exception to the rule.

He told his son how he had purchased the Hilldrop estate on the strength of the large sum of money he had taken to England with him; how the money had been stolen; how that he had a shrewd idea as to who had done the dishonest deed; how he had put things in train to keep an eye upon his movements; how he felt restrained from taking too instant action because of his uncertainty; his unconquerable aversion to set the law in motion against anybody, and his hope of recovering the treasure by other means. Then he wandered away from the subject to relate how he had failed to find again the faces that had peered out at him from the London fog, and suffered Gil to see that his heart was very sad and sore upon that subject. Finally, he requested his son to proceed with all promptitude in the disposal of the estate, and bring home with him all available capital, that he might be in a position to complete the purchase of Hilldrop within the time agreed upon. The whole tone and tenor of the epistle fairly took Gil's breath away, and for some moments after having twice read it carefully through, he stood silent, looking into vacancy, with the letter in his hand.

"Well, Gil, what news from the gov'nor?" said Frank, with some anxiety in his tone. "All serene, I hope; but you don't look over-jolly, old fellow."

"I daresay not, Frank," answered Gil. "At any rate I don't feel jolly, I can tell you. The fact is, the gov'nor's put his foot in it, and no mistake—aye, both his feet, or I'm a Dutchman. It'll take a long pull and a strong pull to get him out of the swamp, I fancy. Dear old Dad! Why did I ever suffer him to go alone?"

Gil looked so utterly choppfallen, and there was such a despondent tone in his voice, that Frank was seriously alarmed. He felt, however, that nothing was to be gained by following on the same track, so he replied—"But a pull together'll do the business, Gil, no doubt. You and he and I should make a strongish trio. We must hasten our steps and reach him, that's all. What's amiss?"

"Yes, that's what we've got to do," replied Gil, ignoring the question. "It's clear enough about that. We'll ride round by Macdonald's place on our way home, and accept his offer for the estate, and clear out by the next packet. There's no time to be lost."

"Is it so bad as that?" said Frank, now quite unable to prevent his anxiety from appearing in tone and voice. "Bad's scarcely the word for it," said the crestfallen Gil. "But come along, and I'll explain it as we go," and as they cantered along over the young grass, now flushing into green after a long and continuous drought, the young man told his comrade all about it.

"It's a very serious loss," he proceeded, after he had given his companion the salient points of the unwelcome letter, "and Dad's far too soft-hearted to be trusted to get it back again. The fact is, that girl he found in the fog, and all that happened after it, has befogged him to such an extent that he's lost his general bearings. I hope to goodness he won't come to grief before I can reach him. Dear old Dad!" The latter words were as expressive of the young fellow's devotion to his father, as the former were of his confidence to guide him safely if he could only get to his side in time.

For some time the two young men rode on in silence. The fact is, that in his excitement Gil had plied both whip and spur, and they were galloping across the plain at a pace which made conversation impossible.

Dick Allanson had much to think about on his own account. Had matters been left to himself, he would not have chosen to go to England quite so soon, because of his desire to increase his own fortunes by a little longer stay, and this for his erring father's sake. The intelligence that Gilbert Craske had bought the Hilldrop estate had greatly startled him, for he saw that if he and Gil were still to "ride their horses together" in England, which was the understanding between them, it would not be possible to hide from his beloved friends and benefactors the truth about himself, and, which was a good deal the more serious matter, about his misguided father too.

However, there was nothing for it but to swim with the tide, and Dick Allanson was always clear about one thing, and that was to "do the next thing," as the grand old proverb puts it, and to do right in all things by the help of God. He knew full well, as we all may know, by happy experience, that the "help of God" is as sure as sunrise to all who

"Trust in God and do the right."

Alexander Lander Macdonald, Esq., was a wealthy colonial magnate, who had made an offer for the purchase of the Malaloo estate, which had for some time been under consideration. Since the offer was made, a valuable vein of mineral wealth had been discovered in Gilbert Craske's well-managed property, and Gil had deferred his decision on the subject until the new discovery had been fully inquired into and substantiated.

They found the wealthy colonist in close conference with certain mining authorities who had come to present their report upon the subject. This was of so favorable a character that the moneyed Scotchman had made up his mind to give a greatly heightened bid for the territory which the Craskes had to sell. So the business in hand was greatly facilitated. Malaloo was sold for a sum so far in advance of the first price set upon it that the loss consequent on Jared Higginbotham's theft was more than covered, and Gil and his young friend continued their ride homeward a good deal lighter in heart on the financial question than when the letter at the post-office imparted to the son the serious extent to which he had been "fleeced" by the unknown thief.

Nor was this all. The investment which Dick Allanson had made of the money left him by his deceased patron had made him the possessor of a tract of land in which gold had been discovered, and he, too, found himself possessor of a richer heritage than had ever come to him even in his dreams. Not a day nor an hour was lost in completing the transfer of their whole property, and with eager spirits, and rising hopes of reaching England in time to save Gilbert Craske from further loss and harm, the two young men embarked at Sydney for "the mother country," and were soon out upon the high seas, homeward bound.

Home! To Gil Craske that meant mainly to be by his father's side, and to feel that he had full possession of his father's heart, and also, there is no denying it, to have that father, with his honest, unsuspicious mind, his all too kindly heart and open hand, under his peculiar charge again, for the stalwart and prudent young fellow felt somehow as though his main occupation and office was to take particular care of him.

Home! To Frank Higginbotham that meant something widely different. He longed, dearly longed to see his quiet, good and suffering mother again, and to be her protector and support. The thought of his father, however, filled him with feelings that had much of wormwood and of gall. Not that he did not love him. He did, and greatly, but that only made the matter worse; for if he still remained indifferent to his former sin, and refused to make amends for his fall from honesty and rectitude, he felt that the meeting could only be painful in the extreme, and the preparation for a speedy and probably final separation.

The young fellow was resolved that so far as the financial defalcation was concerned, he himself, either openly or secretly, would see justice done; but how could he abide with his friends, the Craskes, when it was known to them who was his criminal and unrepentant sire? Many and many an hour as he lay thoughtfully in his berth in the good ship that bore him home, he prayed to his God to turn his father's heart, induce him to cease to do evil, and learn to do well; and so make it possible for him, his son, to put right the foul wrong which had been committed, and look upon the face of his friend and comrade, Gil, with an unblushing face and a lightened heart. Oh, if he had but known that the father for whom he prayed had dyed his soul in crime of a still deeper red, surely he would have never left the land of his adoption, would never again have called England home! Oh, Jared Higginbotham! No man liveth for himself, and none can measure the heritage of shame and harm of those who have to live and blush, and hide and suffer in silent penance for a parent's unamended, unrepented sin.

In due time the packet in which the young men voyaged across the broad Pacific dropped anchor in the Thames, and their first business was to repair to the address given in the letter which had reached them in the bush, "Gilbert Craske, Esq., 'The Wellington,' Crozier Street, Oxford Street, London."

The Wellington justified the character which the stage driver gave it when he recommended it to Jared Higginbotham on his arrival in London. It was "comfortable"; but it was not comfortable to the wretched Jared, could not be, could not be made to be, for Jared's discomfort was in himself; its seat was in his heart and mind and conscience; and when that is the case, the cosiest and most desirable surroundings are not much better than a bed of thorns.

The fact is, that Jared Higginbotham was as profoundly miserable as every wrongdoer ought to be; and, what was better still, he was profoundly ashamed of himself, and would have welcomed at any cost an opportunity of undoing the wicked and stupid deed which had made his life, despite the possession of the coveted gold, little other than a hell, which seemed to grow hotter every day. His great anxiety was to get out of the country; but then he did not want to leave his wife behind him, and his present trouble was to get her to join him in town; for he felt a growing antipathy to the thought of facing Hildrop and Faringham again, though never a soul at either place had, so far as he knew, the faintest suspicion of his guilt. How this was to be managed he could not tell, and he spent many days in mooning about the great city, cudgelling his muddled brains for a ruse that would induce his wife to forsake Hildrop and embark with him for the Antipodes. He felt pretty sure that she would be glad enough to go across the seas to see her boy again, and at length he resolved to feign severe indisposition, and so bring her to London to look after him.

Meanwhile he would put his interests in Hildrop Inn into the hands of an agent in that line for sale, and then hey for New South Wales, and freedom from the burden of fear and apprehension which now made his life worse than purgatorial in its pain. Poor Jared! Bad as he is, I can't help pitying him with all my heart. It is such a miserable, wretched, trouble-breeding career he has embarked on, and the end of it is so awful in its thick darkness, that—but here—the Book tells me that there is hope for the worst if they will but repent, and I know three people that are praying for him all the time—his long-suffering wife, his manly and noble-minded son, and one other who it might well be thought was far likelier to curse him and to put the "gyves upon his wrist," as soon as he had the chance.

One evening in October, when, especially in smoky, foggy London town, the autumn mist was making the evenings dark and gloomy, Jared was returning from a long and weary day's sojourn in the city. His interests in "Hildrop Inn" were giving him a good deal of trouble. The various agents he applied to were not quite clear as to the nature and reason of the transaction, and all alike seemed to think that the Inn must be visited and reported on, and that Jared had far better go down with the agent for that purpose. But, as we have seen, this was just what Jared did not want to do. Foiled, harassed, tired and sick at heart, he was slowly sauntering back to the "Wellington," through the night shadows, when he was suddenly accosted by the inquiry, "Am I in the neighborhood of Crozier Street?"

The speaker was a tall, well-built man of middle age, who looked down on Jared, who was not remarkable for his inches, with quite a stern visage and with somewhat lowering brows. Jared recognized him directly. Who would not who had once seen him—especially if he had been on the wrong side of the hedge at the time? For this was none other than Captain Legard, the chief constable of the county division of police in which Faringham was situated. Many a time had Jared had occasion to observe him, when either to renew his license or to appear as a witness he had attended quarter sessions, and he had always felt a sort of awe of the chief officer, owing to his commanding visage and his magisterial mien.

To meet him suddenly in a London street, and to hear him ask for Crozier Street in that overpowering way of his, as if he expected to find a thief in it, and meant to pounce on him, set poor Jared in such a flutter that he had to gasp for breath, and for a moment could not get a word out for the life of him. At the "Wellington," in Crozier Street, was that box, that accursed box with its still more accursed gold, and suppose Captain Legard had come for that!

Jared Higginbotham was as white as a ghost. Latterly he had become quite haggard, his hair had whitened, he had permitted himself to go alike unshaven and unshorn, and he looked almost as little like the cheery landlord of Hildrop Inn as it was possible to be, to be him. In his present paroxysm of alarm, the transformation was complete, and I am in a position to tell the reader that Captain Legard did not recognize him. "Ye-ye-yes," Jared managed to say at last. "T-t-turn to the right, near the Mar-Marble."

"Thanks!" said Captain Legard, just as he would have said, "Out you go!" to a prisoner on whom a stupid jury had brought in a verdict of "Not guilty," and wheeled round, saying to himself, "Been up to some mischief, or else not quite right in his head." For a moment Jared stood shivering on the pavement, his knees shaking one against the other. Then he resolved to follow the Rhadamanthus-looking Captain at a respectable distance to see whether it was the "Wellington" in Crozier Street to which he was going. Yes, sure enough, after looking the building carefully over as though he was getting ready to swear to it, Captain Legard went inside, and Jared Higginbotham's heart sank. He dared not follow him inside. As for "taking more ease in mine inn," that was out of the question for Jared. He could not take his ease anywhere, and least of all under the roof that sheltered Rhadamanthus and that accursed box at one and the same time.

Nearly opposite the "Wellington" was an arched passage to some stables, and in that recess Jared took his stand to watch and wait for the reappearance of the man, the sudden sight of whom had so filled him with alarm. Then he began to fear that Captain Legard never would come forth again, but would wait, wait for him, and the wretched man began to count the loose coin he had in his pocket, to see how far it would carry him, and how long it would sustain him if he were then and there compelled to take his flight.

(To be Continued.)

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.

When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.

When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

DO YOU WRITE?

The Nellie Bly Fountain Pen retails at fifty cents. A perfect pen—as good as the best, except that no gold pen is used. Useful to office men, collectors, salesmen, housekeepers, teachers and pupils. Sample sent to any address on receipt of price. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal discounts.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
301 Broadway, New York.

PD & S Pens

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.!

Send 10 cents for Sample Card with 12 Pens. A. S. BARNES & Co., New York.

SHORTHAND Private instruction by practical verbatim reporter. 20 years' experience. No failures. Situations guaranteed. Book and Circulars Free. FRANK HARRISON, Stenographer, 239 Broadway, N. Y., or 721 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

ECONOMY OF FOOTWEAR.

An illustrative treatise interesting to all. Sent FREE on receipt of name and address on postal. BOX 551, Brockton, Mass.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, D. Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, a peculiar combination, proportion and preparation giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Rheumatism, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Eruptions, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Local druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT

Unlike any Other.

Originated by an Old Family Physician. THINK OF IT.

In use over 40 YEARS in one Family. Dr. I. S. JOHNSON & Co.—It is sixty years since I learned of this now celebrated remedy for the most ills of life—Johnson's Anodyne Liniment more than forty years I have used it in my family (unasked by you) I regard it one of the best and safest remedies that can be found, used internally or externally, in all cases it is claimed to relieve or cure. O. H. INGALLS, Dea. 2d Baptist Ch., Bangor, Me. Should have Johnson's Anodyne Liniment for Croup, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains and Pains. Delays may cost a life. Relieves and Cures all Complaints like magic. Price, 35 cts. post paid. Agents, $2. Express paid. I. S. JOHNSON & Co., Boston.

Every Mother

Children

always

Enjoy It

SCOTT'S EMULSION

of pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda—almost as palatable as milk. Children enjoy it rather than otherwise. A MARVELLOUS FLESH PRODUCER. It is indeed, and the little lads and lassies who take cod easily, may be fortified against cough that might prove serious, by taking Scott's Emulsion after their meals during the winter season. Beware of substitutions and imitations.

"ORIGINAL PACKAGES." The full States Supreme Court Decision in the Iowa ported Liquor Case, with the Dissenting Opinion of three Justices, has just been issued, and is one of the most important documents ever published. Every lover of his country should have a copy. 12mo, 72 pages. Price only 25c. Send to J. N. STEARNS, 58 RRADE ST., NEW YORK CITY.

TRUITT'S VEGETABLE LOZENGES

The Great Cure for Dyspepsia. You eat anything you eat at same time cured. 50c a box. 10c a box by mail. TRUITT, Med. Bridgeport, N. J.

AGENTS Proof $100 month made our new Talmage Book Mother, Home and Heart. T. L. Cuyler, $2.75. 10,000 Curiosities Bible, $2. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York.

A FATAL BLUNDER.

LDLY men often despise missionary and speak slightly of its value. As they know nothing about it, and if any records come in their way, they read them. One of these men, the captain of a ship, has been the cause of the life which might have been saved his ignorance of the results of Goshawk in the South Seas. His ship ran aground near the Penrhyn Islands, and was evidently going to pieces. His captain was for his wife, who was sailing with him. He put her in a boat and left the sailors in charge of it to steer the ship. He knew that in such a sea running they ran great danger of being lost; it seemed impossible that the ship could escape being capsized in so rough a sea. But he dare not send her to the nearest land, because, when he was there some years before, that land had been visited by cannibals. "Better that she should be drowned," he said, "than fall into the hands of those savages." After he had gone he busied himself saving the rest and other parts of the cargo as he reached quickly. Then he and his crew, armed and determined to live dearly. To his amazement, when he reached the shore, there was no opposition. He was greeted by a native who shook hands with him in civilized and bade him welcome. He and his crew were kindly treated, and their wants supplied. A missionary had been there for many months, and there was no cannibalism on that island, nor any practice. The natives were worshipping God, and were becoming civilized. Now he wished he had known this when he sent his wife on her perilous voyage. He was lamenting his ignorance, and his dead body was washed ashore, and towards the sailors who had accompanied him in bringing the news of the ship's fate, and their terrible situation in reaching land.

WHAT WAS MOURNED.

pression prevails among some of a wife's condition is improved by herself, and making her husband a wholesome fear of her sharp tongue. A bereaved husband lately mentioned an incident which implied that there was a better way of winning her to kindly ways. "We were married seven years," he said, "and in time my wife never gave me a scolding. But I shall never forget the scolding she gave me. It was one morning when we had been married about two years. I found a button missing, and threw it across the room. 'What on earth is that?' I said, in rough voice. 'Good, Christian woman, and she picked it up and sewed it on. 'And what did you ask a little bristling woman for?' she said, 'who was listening to my husband's tribute to the memory of his dead wife. 'She said, 'I, me, husband, I had a great deal to say to you yesterday, and I forgot it, but it shall be said again.' 'Oh,' said the man, 'I saw the picture of his dear wife in the paper, and his gentle words almost broke my heart. I could have gone down on my knees and asked her forgiveness. She made a man of me, and the world has a different place since she died.' 'I saw a silence as he finished speaking, and a general clearing of the throat. The little woman's snapping tongue was suspiciously dim.

TO THE UNKNOWN GOD.

MAN in Philadelphia noticed strangers at his service one Sunday and was moved to address an earnest appeal to any present who might be able to help. After the service a young man appeared made his way to the speaker. "I was passing by your church," he said, "and having nowhere to go, I felt I must speak to you." Debbily exterior his speech showed an educated gentleman. He said he was connected, and had taken honors in college, and had coached many for their examination, knew the Greek Testa-tament almost by heart, but could not resist the craving for drink. Watch, clothes, all were pawned for drink, so that his friends could do nothing more for him. The preacher pleaded with him to abstain altogether, wrote out a pledge, and then proposed to pray with him and for him. But the young man did not believe in God. He was a disciple of Herbert Spencer. "Then," said the clergyman, "you believe in the Great Spirit of the Universe—let us pray to Him?" The young man consented, and prayer was offered for strength to keep the pledge he was about to sign. Having signed, he looked at the paper with emotion, saying, "Oh, that my mother could have seen this before she died?" More than twenty years elapsed, and the preacher had heard nothing of the young man. He was delivering a temperance address in New York, and, appealing to young men not to rely on culture as a preservative, narrated this case. At the close a middle-aged gentleman, with a young lady, accosted him, saying, "I am the man, and this is my daughter; come and take tea with us and my wife." The preacher found the family next day in an elegantly furnished home; the father was in a high literary position; he had been delivered from the snare of his youth; was a Christian and regular worshipper at church; and when he died, not long after, his funeral was attended by many literary and other friends, to testify to their affection and respect.

RIDLEY'S Grand St., N. Y.

FLOUNCINGS.

22-INCH WHITE EMBROIDERED FLOUNCING AT 30c., 40c., 50c., 60c., 75c., $1.00 YARD.
45-INCH EMBROIDERED SKIRTINGS, NEW PATTERNS, AT 30c., 40c., 50c., 60c., 75c., TO $1.00 YARD.
SWISS EMBROIDERED EDGINGS AT 4c., 5c., 6c., 8c., 10c., 12c. TO 40c. YARD.
COLORED EMBROIDERED EDGINGS AT 4c., 5c., 6c., 8c., 10c., 12c. TO 50c. YARD.
BLACK AND CASHMERE EMBROIDERIES, SUITABLE FOR MAKING CAPES, 15c., 25c., 30c. YARD; WORTH FROM 50c. TO $1.00.
ALL-OVER EMBROIDERIES IN SWISS AND CAMBRIC, 35c., 40c., 45c., 50c. YARD TO $1.50.

The Celebrated Fast Black Crape Finish Henriettas.

THE ONLY POSITIVELY AND ABSOLUTELY "FAST BLACKS" EVER SOLD IN THIS COUNTRY OR IN EUROPE.
NOT AFFECTED BY ACIDS OR PER-SPARATION.

AFTER THE DRESS IS HALF WORN OUT IT CAN BE RESTORED TO ITS ORIGINAL BEAUTY BY WASHING IN SOAP AND HOT WATER.
300 PIECES AT 15c., 21c. AND 25c. YARD.

MILLINERY.

Largest display trimmed and untrimmed Millinery. Ribbons, Flowers, Silks, Velvets, Ornaments, etc. Window Shades. Estimates given on Shades for Flats, Private Dwellings, Stores, Offices and Steamboats.

Spring and Summer Magazine.

Sample Copy 15c.; subscription 50c. per annum.

EDWARD RIDLEY & SONS,

309, 311, 311½ to 321 Grand Street.
36 to 68 ALLEN, 59 to 65 ORCHARD ST., NEW YORK.

Have You? Many Millions Have

suits you, for it will suit you when you try it.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back, 175 JAMES PYLE, New York.

CARPETS AT EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS.

500 PIECES ROYAL WILTONS.
PIECES WILTON VELVETS.
PIECES BODY BRUSSELS.
PIECES EXTRA SUPER INGRAINS.
TO CLOSE OUT QUICKLY.

MATTINGS.

FINE JAPANESE AND CHINA STRAW MATTINGS. LARGEST STOCK IN THE CITY.
OUR OWN DIRECT IMPORTATION.
White, Red Check and Fancy Patterns,
FROM $4 PER ROLL OF 40 YARDS.
ALSO FINE SEAMLESS JAPANESE MATTINGS AT $8 PER ROLL.
100 Pieces Warehouse Samples, Finest Quality, not regularly numbered, at greatly reduced prices.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS

AND
LACE CURTAINS
IN GREAT VARIETY AT LOWEST PRICES.

FURNITURE,

Our own upholstery, at moderate prices. Agents for Hall's Celebrated Bedding.
We make a specialty of furnishing complete Hotels, Churches, Cottages and Summer Residences.

SHEPPARD KNAPP & CO.,

SIXTH AVE., 13th and 14th Sts., NEW YORK.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.

If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from a rooming up, costing from $300 to $5,000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address J. S. OGILVIE, publisher, 57 ROSE ST., New York.

NEW BOOK. WOMAN AND HEALTH. By M. AUGUSTA FAIRCHILD, M. D. Price, $2.50. More agents wanted. Address HEALTHY, 537 Broadway, Quincy, Ill. State where you saw this advertisement.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes can be had. Pamphlet free. Write to Ridge's Food, (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

"MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething" softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,

827 and 829 Broadway, New York,

Note our Trade Mark Closely!

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

We ask attention to our Complete Assortment of

SUMMER UNDERWEAR,

And Especially to our exquisite

All-Wool GAUZE

Underwear for the hot, summer season.

Send for explanatory, descriptive and illustrated Catalogue and price-list, free by mail.

Garments made to order, a Specialty.

Mail orders promptly attended to.

Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woolen System Company,

827 and 829 Broadway, New York.

BRANCH HOUSES:

119 NASSAU ST., Temple Court Building;

504 FULTON ST., next to Y.M.C.A. Bldg., Brooklyn, N.Y.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY. DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

A LADY WANTED in every Town to sell WOMAN'S HAND BOOK.

Just issued. Quick Sales. Big Pay at Home. Circ'lrs Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York.

BERRHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BERRHAM'S PILLS.

"THE EVERLASTING ARMS."

DEUT XXXIII: 27

PILGRIMS on the road to glory,
Pressing to the heavenly prize,
'Mid the ills that now annoy you,
'Mid the dangers that arise;
When your way is dark and dreary,
Rugged, fill'd with rude alarms,
When perplex'd, exhausted, weary,
Trust the "Everlasting Arms."

When the waves of trouble heighten,
When the billows fiercely foam,
All you see conspires to frighten,
Friends and helpers fail to come;
When of human aid despairing,
And no voice the tempest calms,
Think of this, that underneath you
Are the "Everlasting Arms."

When corroding cares oppress you,
When the tempter's darts assail,
When your inbred foes distress you,
When they threaten to prevail;
When you dread the thought of yielding,
When you feel to die is gain,
When your hope seems just expiring,
"Everlasting Arms" sustain.

And when all below is closing,
When you touch the chilling flood,
When you feel the waters rising,
You shall find the promised good.
Timid Christians, venture on it,
Bid farewell to all alarms;
'Tis enough that underneath you
Are the "Everlasting Arms."

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Bilious attacks, with sour stomach, headache, and a miserable feeling generally, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones the stomach and restores the appetite. Take it now.

SENSIBLE WOMEN

all want FERRIS'

GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS.

THOUSANDS NOW IN USE.
Best for Health, Economy and Beauty.
BUTTONS at front instead of CLASPS.
RING BUCKLE at hip for Hose supporters.
Tape-fastened Buttons—won't pull off.
Cord-Edge Buttons—won't wear out.
FIT ALL AGES—Infants to Adults.
Sold by Leading

RETAILERS everywhere.
Send for Circular, FERRIS BROS., Manufacturers.

341 BROADWAY, New York.
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., CHICAGO,
WHOLESALE WESTERN AGENTS.

"The Record of a Noble Life."

That of GEORGE H. STUART,

The Good Samaritan of the War.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN AMERICA
UNITED Mainly Through His Efforts.

Written by himself, with an introduction by Rev. ROBERT ELLIS THOMPSON, D.D.

A large 12mo volume of nearly 400 pages fully illustrated. Fac-simile letters of Lincoln, Grant, etc.

J. M. STODDARD & CO., Publishers,
714 Filbert St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 34 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast, or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P.O. Box 239, 51 and 53 Vesey St., New York.

Save the Babies.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

IN THE PREPARATION OF

ARTIFICIAL FOOD FOR INFANTS.

HUNTER McGUIRE, M.D., LL.D.,

etc., formerly Professor of Surgery in the Medical College of Virginia, Ex-President of the Southern Surgical and Gynecological Association, etc., makes use of it in cases of his own children, etc., etc.

"For some time I have been using Buffalo Lithia Water in the preparation of Artificial Food for Infants. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother is not able to suckle her child and it is impossible to get a wet-nurse. One serious objection, along with many others, to cow's milk, is its acidity. Human milk is always alkaline, but cow's milk, except when the animal is fed entirely upon grass, is almost always acid. This is the principal reason why the milk of cows disagrees with many babies, and lime water is often added to this milk to correct the acidity. I believe the long-continued use of lime water is hurtful to digestion, and last summer, when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colic and intestinal derangement, which the food otherwise produced, I directed her to use No 2 Buffalo Lithia Water in preparing the children's food, with immediate and continued good. The Water was added until the milk lost its acidity and was neutral or alkaline. I have used the Water in this way in many cases in my practice, and find it exceedingly valuable.

Water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5, F. O. B. here.

THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor,
Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

INFLUENZA

OR

'LA GRIPPE.'

As this complaint is raging again in several large cities in Europe, and will no doubt prevail here again, all persons suffering with coughs or any lung complaints should not fail to use

WILBOR'S

COD LIVER OIL

AND

PHOSPHATES.

It gives immediate relief, and a permanent cure in a short time. It will prevent this fell disease from having a fatal termination. Be sure, as you value your health, and get the genuine, manufactured only by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

LADIES!

Use Only

BROWN'S FRENCH DRESSING on your Boots and Shoes.

Awarded highest honors at

Phila., 1876; Frankfort, 1881;
Berlin, 1877; Amsterdam, 1883;
Paris, 1878; New Orleans, '84-5;
Melbourne, 1880; Paris, 1889

and wherever exhibited.

Paris Medal on every bottle.

Beware of Imitations.

Parturition Without Pain.

A Code of Directions for avoiding most of the Pains and Dangers of Childbearing. By M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D. Price by mail, $1.00.

"A work whose excellence surpasses our power to commend."—New York Evening Mail. 1000 Lady agents wanted. M. L. HOLBROOK CO., 25 Bond St., New York.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address.

CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

AGENTS WANTED FOR "THE CHRISTIAN'S LEGACY."

102 sold in one church, 72 in one place of 789 people. W. J. HOLLAND, 107 Duane St., New York.

To Mothers

If for any reason you cannot nurse your child, we can assure you positively that there is but one Food that is a perfect imitation of Mother's Milk in composition and digestion and that is LACTO-PREPARATA. It is made wholly of milk.

All manufacturers of Infant Food make the broad claim that it is the best, but few, if any, tell you what it is made of or of what it is composed. Facts told to any intelligent mother would condemn most of them.

CARNRICK'S SOLUBLE FOOD contains 62 1-2 per cent Powdered Milk and 37 1-2 per cent wheat. Both the milk and wheat are partially digested. It is especially adapted for Infants from six weeks upwards, and for Invalids, Aged, and Dyspeptics.

Before you take the risk of using any other Food, do not fail to ask us for a pamphlet of 64 pages, Our Baby's First and Second Year, by Marion Harland, which also contains a minute description of Lactopreparata and Carnrick's Soluble Food, their mode of manufacture. Send for it.

Read the above pamphlet and ask your Physician which Food is the nearest approach to mother's milk. REED & CARNRICK, New York.

MERIT WILL V

SALES of the Canfield Seamless Rubber Shields for the first four months of 1890, in U. S., Europe, and Canada, have been larger than ever during the same period in any year since we commenced business. This is the only Perfect and Guaranteed Shield made. Have been worn by more than Ten Million Ladies, found at all leading Dry Goods stores in U. S. and Europe.

CANFIELD RUBBER

86 Leonard Street, N. Y.

P. S.—All genuine goods are marked "Canfield" on each Shield. Send for receipt of 25 cents.

THE NEW MODEL,

OUR LATEST and BEST MOWER.

MEN WANTED

Great inducements. Outfit free. Address AUSTIN SHAW, Nurseryman, Brooklyn, N.Y.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS send for our new Catalogue and Free Book of Gospel Tracts, Booklets and Books. TRACT DEPOT, ORLEANS, La.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 EDITED BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

XIII., No. 22. Offices, Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1890.

Price 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

URES OF SCENES IN THE HOLY LAND,
 a Photographs brought by Dr. Talmage.
 AN HUNG. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sun-Morning.
 BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER.
 PROPHETIC DATES. By Prof. Infree.

TEACHING TO PRAY. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
 PICTURE OF THE NEW STATUE OF GEN.
 ROBERT E. LEE, to be unveiled at Richmond, Va.
 A PROMISE KEPT. A Story of the S. S. Golden Text.
 A Missionary Costume—Joseph's Reservoir—The Waning Social System—Protection for Sleepers—
 The Dreaded Conflict—A Spell on a Sorcerer, Etc.

THE ASCENSION. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H.
 Spurgeon.
 PORTRAIT OF STANLEY'S FUTURE BRIDE.
 PORTRAIT OF REV. W. E. MOORE, D. D., Moderator of the General Assembl.
 MR. H. M. STANLEY'S LANDING IN DOVER.
 WILL IT LIFT? By Rev. J. Jackson Wray. (Cont.)

SCENES IN THE HOLY LAND, FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BROUGHT BY DR. TALMAGE.

1. The Jaffa Gate in Jerusalem—2. The Jews' Wailing-Place—3. A Water-Carrier—4. The Tomb of Absalom—5. A Native Lady's Airing.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON.

HAMAN HUNG.

"So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai." Esther 7: 10.

The Offensive Oriental Courtier—The Plot to Avenge a Personal Affront—His Self-Selected Humiliation—The Comedy with the Tragedy—The Lessons of the Story—I. Insignificant Trifles Disturb a Man of Bad Heart—The Effect of Small Vexations—II. Worldly Vanity Courts the Respect of Piety—Satan's Offer to Christ—III. Pride Precedes a Fall—IV. The Boomerang of Wicked Plots—Examples in English History—V. The Speed of Fortune's Wheel—VI. Outward Prosperity Not Sufficient for Happiness—The Miseries of the Rich—The Day of Righteous Triumph Certain.

HERE is an Oriental courtier, about the most offensive man in Hebrew history, Haman by name. He plotted for the destruction of the Israelitish nation, and I wonder not that in some of the Hebrew synagogues to this day when Haman's name is mentioned, the congregation clench their fists, and stamp their feet and cry, "Let his name be blotted out!" Haman was Prime Minister in the magnificent court of Persia. Thoroughly appreciative of the honor conferred, he expects everybody that he passes to be obsequious. Coming in one day at the gate of the palace, the servants drop their heads in honor of his office; but a Hebrew, named Mordecai, gazes upon the passing dignitary without bending his head or taking off his hat. He was a good man, and would not have been negligent of the ordinary courtesies of life, but he felt no respect either for Haman or the nation from which he had come. But he could not be hypocritical; and while others made Oriental salaam, getting clear down before this Prime Minister when he passed, Mordecai, the Hebrew relaxed not a muscle of his neck, and kept his chin clear up. Because of that affront Haman gets a decree from Ahasuerus, the dastardly king, for the massacre of all the Israelites, and that, of course, will include Mordecai.

The Plot Thwarted.

To make a long story short, through Queen Esther this whole plot was revealed to her husband, Ahasuerus. One night Ahasuerus, who was afflicted with insomnia, in his sleepless hours calls for his secretary to read to him a few passages of Persian history, and so while away the night. In the book read that night to the king an account was given of a conspiracy, from which Mordecai, the Hebrew, had saved the king's life, and for which kindness Mordecai had never received any reward. Haman, who had been fixing up a nice gallows to hang Mordecai on, was walking outside the door of the king's sleeping-apartment and was called in. The king told him that he had just had read to him the account of some one who had saved his, the king's, life, and he asked what reward ought to be given to such a one. Self-conceited Haman, supposing that he himself was to get the honor, and not imagining for a moment that the deliverer of the king's life was Mordecai, says: "Why, your Majesty ought to make a triumph for him, and put a crown on him, and set him on a splendid horse, high-stepping and full-blooded, and then have one of your princes lead the horse through the streets, crying, 'Bow the knee, here comes a man who has saved the king's life!'" Then said Ahasuerus in severe tones to Haman: "I know all about your scoundrelism. Now you go out and make a triumph for Mordecai, the Hebrew, whom you hate. Put the best saddle on the finest horse, and you, the prince, hold the stirrup while Mordecai gets on, and then lead his horse through the street. Make haste!"

What a spectacle!

A Comedy and Tragedy.

at one and the same time. There they go! Mordecai, who had been despised, now starred and robed, in the stirrups. Haman, the chancellor, afoot, holding the prancing, rearing, champing stallion. Mordecai bends his neck at last, but it is to look down at the degraded Prime Minister walking beneath him. Huzza for Mordecai! Alas for Haman! But what a pity to have the gallows, recently built, entirely wasted! It is fifty cubits high, and built with care. And Haman had erected it for Mordecai, by whose stirrups he now walks as groom. Stranger and more startling than any romance, there go up the steps of the scaffolding, side by side, the hangman, and Haman the ex-chancellor. "So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai."

Although so many years have passed since cowardly Ahasuerus reigned, and the beautiful Esther answered to his whims, and Persia perished, yet from the life and death of Haman we may draw living lessons of warning and instruction. And, first, we come to the practical suggestion that, when the heart is wrong, things very insignificant will destroy our comfort. Who would have thought that a great Prime Minister, admired and applauded by millions of Persians, would have been so nettled and harassed by anything trivial? What more could the great dignitary have wanted than his chariots and attendants, and palaces and banquets? If affluence of circumstances can make a man contented and happy, surely Haman should have been contented and happy. No; Mordecai's refusal of a bow takes the glitter from the gold, and the richness from the purple, and the speed from the chariots. With a heart puffed up with every inflation of vanity and revenge, it was impossible for him to be happy. The silence of Mordecai at the gate was louder than the braying of trumpets in the palace. Thus shall it always be if the heart is not right. Circumstances the most trivial will disturb the spirit.

The Little Vexations.

It is not the great calamities of life that create the most worriment. I have seen men, felled by repeated blows of misfortune, arising from the dust, never desponding. But the most of the disquiet which men suffer is from insignificant causes; as a lion attacked by some beast of prey turns easily around and slays him, yet runs roaring through the forest at the alighting on his brawny neck of a few insects. You meet some great loss in business with comparative composure; but you can think of petty trickeries inflicted upon you, which rouse all your capacity for wrath, and remain in your heart an unbearable annoyance. If you look back upon your life, you will find that the most of the vexations and disturbances of spirit, which you felt, were produced by circumstances that were not worthy of notice. If you want to be happy you must not care for trifles. Do not be too minute in your inspection of the treatment you receive from others. Who cares whether Mordecai bows when you pass, or stands erect and stiff as a cedar? That woodman would not make much clearing in the forest, who should stop to bind up every little bruise and scratch he received in the thicket; nor will that man accomplish much for the world or the church, who is too watchful and appreciative of petty annoyances. There are multitudes of people in the world, constantly harrowed because they pass their lives not in searching out those things which are attractive and deserving, but in spying out with all their powers of vision to see whether they cannot find a Mordecai.

Piety Courted.

Again: I learn from the life of the man under our notice that worldly vanity and sin are very anxious to have piety bow before them. Haman was a fair emblem of entire worldliness, and Mordecai the representative of unflinching godliness. Such were the usages of society in ancient times that, had this Israelite bowed to the Prime Minister, it would have been an acknowledgment of respect for his character and nation. Mordecai would, therefore, have sinned against his religion had he made any obeisance or dropped his chin half an inch before Haman. When, therefore, proud Haman attempted to compel an homage which was not felt, he only did what the world ever since has tried to do, when it would force our holy religion in any way to yield to its dictates. Daniel, if he had been a man of religious compromises, would never have been thrown into the den of lions. He might have made some arrangement with King Darius whereby he could have retained part of his form of religion without making himself so completely obnoxious to the idolaters. Paul might have retained the favor of his rulers and escaped martyrdom if he had only been willing to mix up his Christian faith with a few errors. His unbending Christian character was taken as an insult.

No Obeisance to Satan.

Fagot and rack and halter in all ages have been only the different ways in which the world has demanded obeisance. It was once, away up on the top of the temple, that Satan commanded the Holy One of Nazareth to kneel before him. But it is not now so much on the top of churches as down in the aisle and the pew and the pulpit that Satan tempts the espousers of the Christian faith to kneel before him. Why was it that the Platonic philosophers of early times, as well as Toland, Spinoza, and Bolingbroke of later days, were so madly posed to Christianity? Certainly not because favored immoralities, or arrested civilization, dwarfed the intellect. The genuine reason, when admitted or not, was because the religion of Christ paid no respect to their intellectual vanity. Blount, and Boyle, and the host of infidels hate out by the vile reign of Charles the Second, as tiles crawl out of a marsh of slime, could not keep their patience because, as they passed along, they were sitting in the gate of the church such men as Matthew, and Mark, and Luke, and John would not bend an inch in respect to their philosophies.

Satan told our first parents that they would come as gods if they would only reach up and taste of the fruit. They tried it and failed, their descendants are not yet satisfied with the periment. We have now many desiring to be gods, reaching up

After Yet Another Apple.

Reason, scornful of God's word, may foam and rage with the proud wrath of a Haman, and attempt to compel the homage of the good, but in the presence of men and angels it shall be confounded. "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." When science began to make its brilliant discoveries that seemed to overthrow the truth of the Bible. The architect with his crowbar, and the geologist with his hammer, and the chemist with his batteries charged upon the Bible. Moses' account of the creation seemed denied by the very structure of the earth. The astronomer wheeled round his telescope and the heavenly bodies seemed to marshal themselves against the Bible, as the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. Observatories and universities rejoiced at what they considered the extinction of Christianity. They gathered new courage at their considered past victory, and pressed on to conquest into the kingdom of nature until, alas! they discovered too much. God's word only been lying in ambush that, in some unguessed moment, with a sudden bound, it might

Tear Infidelity to Pieces.

It was as when Joshua attacked the city of Jericho. He selected thirty thousand men, and concealed most of them; then with a few men he assailed the city, which poured out its numbers and strewn upon Joshua's little band. According to previous plan, they fell back in seeming defeat, but, after the proud inhabitants of the city had been brought out of their homes, and had joined in the pursuit of Joshua, suddenly that brave man halted in flight, and with his spear pointing toward the thirty thousand men bounded from the thicket, the panthers spring to their prey, and the pursuers were dashed to pieces, while the hosts of Joshua pressed up to the city, and with their light torches tossed it into flame. Thus it was that discoveries of science seemed to give temporary victory against God and the Bible, and for a while the church acted as if she were on a retreat; when all the opposers of God and truth had joined in the pursuit, and were sure of the field, Christ gave the signal to His church, and, turning, He drove back their foes in shame. There was to be no antagonism between nature and revelation. The universe and the Bible were found to be the work of the same hand, two strokes of the same pen, their authorship the same God.

Again: learn the lesson that

Pride Goes Before a Fall.

Was any man ever so far up as Haman, and tumbled so far down? Yes, on a smaller scale every day the world sees the same thing. Again their very advantages men trip into destruction. When God humbles proud men, it is usually at the moment of their greatest arrogance. If there is a man in your community greatly puffed up by worldly success, you have but to stand a little while and you will see him come down. You wonder that God allows that man to go on tripping over others' heads and making great assumptions of power. There is no wonder about it. Haman has not yet got to the top. Pride is a command well plumed and caparisoned, but it leads forth dark and frowning host. We have the best authority for saying that "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." The arrows from the Almighty's quiver are apt to strike a man when on the wing. Goliath showed his great spear in defiance, but the small stone from the brook Elah made him stagger and fall like an ox under the butcher's bludgeon. Have lown cannot fall. Vessels scudding under bare es do not feel the force of the storm, but those h all sails set capsized at the sudden descent of tempest.

Again: This Oriental tale reminds us of the fact t wrongs we prepare for others return upon our- es. The gallows that Haman built for Morde- became the Prime Minister's strangulation. bespierre, who sent so many to the guillotine, his own head chopped off by that horrid in- ument. The evil you practice on others will oil upon your own pate. Slanders come home. pressions come home.

Cruelties Come Home.

will yet be a lackey walking beside the very rger on which you expected to ride others n. When Charles the First, who had destroyed afford, was about to be beheaded, he said, "I ly ratified an unjust sentence, and the similar justice I am now to undergo is a sensible retri- on for the punishment I inflicted on an inno- t man," Lord Jeffries, after incarcerating many cent and good people in London Tower, was self imprisoned in the same place, where the es of those whom he had maltreated seemed aunt him so that he kept crying to his attend- : "Keep them off, gentlemen! for God's sake, p them off!" The chickens had come home to st. The body of Bradshaw, the English Judge, had been ruthless and cruel in his decisions, taken from his splendid tomb in Westminster ey, and at Tyburn hung on a gallows from ney until night in the presence of jeering mul- des. Haman's gallows came a little late, but ame. Opportunities fly in a straight line, just touch us as they pass from eternity to eter- , but the wrongs we do others fly in a circle, however the circle may widen out, they are to come back to the point from which they ed. There are guns that kick!

The Turn of the Wheel.

urthermore, let the story of Haman teach us quickly turns the wheel of fortune. One day, pting the king, Haman was the mightiest man ersia; but the next day, a lackey. So we go and so we come down. You seldom find any twenty years in the same circumstances. Of e who, in political life twenty years ago, were most prominent, how few remain in conspicuity. tical parties make certain men do their hard t, and then, after using them as hacks, turn out on the commons to die. Every four years e is a complete revolution, and about five thou- men who ought certainly to be the next Presi- are shamefully disappointed; while some, who day are obscure and poverty-stricken, will ride the shoulders of the people, and take their at admiration and the spoils of office. Oh, quickly the wheel turns! Ballot-boxes are the on which men come down as often as they go. Of those who were long ago successful in the ac- uilation of property, how few have not met reverses! while many of those who then were tened in circumstances now hold the bonds the bank-keys of the nation. Of all fickle gs in the world, fortune is the most fickle. y day she changes her mind, and woe to the who puts any confidence in what she promises oposes! She cheers when you go up, and she as when you come down. Oh, trust not a ent your heart's affections to this changeful l! Anchor your soul in God. From Christ's anionship gather your satisfaction. Then, e sorrow or gladness, success or defeat, riches verty, honor or disgrace, health or sickness, r death, time or eternity, all are yours, and ye Christ's, and Christ is God's.

Misery in Wealth.

ain: this Haman's history shows us that out- possessions and circumstances cannot make a happy. While yet fully vested in authority he chief adviser of the Persian monarch, and thing that equipage and pomp and splendor sidence could do were his, he is an object-les- f wretchedness. There are to-day more aching ws under crowns of royalty than under the ed caps of the houseless. Much of the world's ence and gaiety is only misery in colors. Many man seated in the street at her apple-stand is ier than the great bankers. The mountains orldly honor are covered with perpetual snow. erlane conquered half the world, but could not ue his own fears. Ahab goes to bed, sick, be- e Naboth will not sell him his vineyard. Herod agony because a little child is born down in Bethlehem. Great Felix trembles because a poor minister will preach righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. From the time of Louis the Twelfth to Louis the Eighteenth was there a straw-bottomed chair in France that did not set more solidly than the great throne on which the French kings reigned?

Were I called to sketch misery in its worst form, I would not go up the dark alley of the poor, but up the highway over which prancing Bucephali strike the sparks with their hoofs and between statuary and parks of stalking deer. Wretchedness is more bitter when swallowed from gemmed goblets than from earthen pitcher or pewter mug. If there are young people here who are looking for this position and that circumstance, thinking that worldly success will bring peace of the soul, let them shatter the delusion. It is not what we get,

It Is What We Are.

Daniel among the lions is happier than Nebuchadnezzar on his throne. And when life is closing, brilliancy of worldly surroundings will be no solace. Death is blind, and sees no difference between a king and his clown, between the Nazarene and the Athenian, between a bookless hut and a national library. The frivolities of life cannot, with their giddy laugh, echoing from heart to heart, entirely drown the voice of a tremendous conscience which says: "I am immortal. The stars shall die, but I am immortal. One wave of eternity shall drown time in its depths, but I am immortal. The earth shall have a shroud of flame and the heavens flee at the glance of the Lord, but I am immortal. From all the heights and depths of my nature rings down, and rings up, and rings out the word 'immortal.'" A good conscience, and assurance of life eternal through the Lord Jesus Christ are the only securities.

The soul's happiness is too large a craft to sail up the stream of worldly pleasure. As ship-carpenters say, it draws too much water. This earth is a bubble, and it will burst. This life is a vision, and it will soon pass away. Time! It is only a ripple, and it breaketh against the throne of Judgment. Our days! They fly swifter than a shuttle, weaving for us a robe of triumph or a garment of shame. Begin your life with religion and for its greatest trial you will be ready. Every day will be a triumph, and death will be only a King's servant calling you to

A Royal Banquet.

In olden time the man who was to receive the honors of knighthood was required to spend the previous night fully armed, and with shield and lance to walk up and down among the tombs of the dead. Through all the hours of that night his steady step was heard, and, when morning dawned, amid grand parade and the sound of cornets the honors of knighthood were bestowed. Thus it shall be with the good man's soul in the night before heaven. Fully armed with shield and sword and helmet, he shall watch and wait until the darkness fly and the morning break, and amid the sound of celestial harpings the soul shall take the honors of heaven amid the innumerable throng with robes snowy white streaming over seas of sapphire.

Mordecai will only have to wait for his day of triumph. It took all the preceding trials to make a proper background for his after-successes. The scaffold built for him makes all the more imposing and picturesque the horse into whose long white mane he twisted his fingers at the mounting. You want at least two misfortunes, hard as flint, to strike fire. Heavy and long-continued snows in the winter are signs of good crops next summer. So, many have yielded wonderful and energy because they were for a long while snowed under. We must have a good many hard falls before we learn to walk straight. It is on the black anvil of trouble that men hammer out their fortunes. Sorrows take up men on their shoulders and enthrone them. Tonics are nearly always bitter. Men, like fruit-trees, are barren, unless trimmed with sharp knives. They are like wheat—all the better for the flailing. It required the prison darkness and chill to make John Bunyan dream. It took Delaware ice and cold feet at Valley Forge, and the whizz of bullets, to make a Washington. Paul, when he climbed up on the beach of Melita, shivering in his wet clothes, was more of a Christian than when the ship struck the breakers. Prescott, the historian, saw better without his eyes than he could ever have seen with them. Mordecai, despised at the gate, is only predecessor of Mordecai, grandly mounted.

Harvests of Benevolence

JOSEPH'S RESERVOIR.

